

NETWORK OF CONCERNED
HISTORIANS

COMPILATION OF *ANNUAL REPORTS

1995–2024

INTRODUCTION

This thirtieth Annual Report of the Network of Concerned Historians (NCH) contains news about the domain where history and human rights intersect, in particular about the censorship of history and the persecution of historians, archivists, and archaeologists around the globe, as reported by various human rights organizations and other sources. It mainly covers events and developments of 2023 and 2024.

Disclaimer. The fact that the NCH presents this news does not imply that it shares the views and beliefs of the historians and others mentioned in it.

- Download this report at:

<https://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/24.pdf>.

- Cite this report as:

Network of Concerned Historians, Annual Report 2024

(<https://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/24.pdf>).

- All NCH Annual Reports (1995–2024) are available at:

<https://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar>.

- The complete set of NCH Annual Reports in one pdf file is available at:

<https://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/compilation.pdf>.

- Or click:

2024	2023	2022	2021	2020	2019	2018	2017	2016	2015
2014	2013	2012	2011	2010	2009	2008	2007	2006	2005
2004	2003	2002	2001	2000	1999	1998	1997	1996	1995

This year's report was compiled and edited by Antoon De Baets and Ruben Zeeman.

Please send any comments to antoondebaets@concernedhistorians.org.

AFGHANISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2016, 2018, 2021–2023.

In July 2023, restrictions were imposed on the Ashura commemoration (a day of mourning for Husayn, the Prophet Muhammad’s grandson), which is mainly observed by Shia Muslims, citing security reasons. On 28 July, four Shia Hazaras, including a child and a woman, were killed and six others were wounded by Taliban forces shooting to disperse Ashura commemorations in Ghazni province.¹

In late July 2023, following a decree by the Ministry of Higher Education, the National Examination Authority (NEXA) banned all female students, including students of history, archaeology and archival sciences, from participating in the university entrance examination for the next academic year [See NCH Annual Report 2023].²

In February 2024, researchers from the University of Chicago’s Center for Cultural Heritage Preservation analyzed satellite imagery of archaeological sites and identified 162 ancient settlements (mainly mounds, fortresses, caravanserais, and canal systems) that had been “devastated at an astonishing rate of one a week” between 2018 and 2021, a practice that continued at 37 sites under the Taliban regime. The sites had been bulldozed to allow systematic looting. Most of the sites identified were in northern Afghanistan’s Balkh region, the heartland of the ancient civilization of Bactria (third millennium BCE–first century CE). It was unclear who was behind the destruction. The Taliban’s Acting Deputy Minister for Information and Culture, Atiqullah Azizi, rejected the claims that looting was taking place. The Taliban’s defense ministry also said that three people had been arrested in September 2023, accused of trying to smuggle a stash of antiquities worth about US$27 million (£21.4 million), including statues, mummies, a golden crown, a book and swords, and that the items were handed over to the national museum while an investigation was continuing.³

¹ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 72.

² “Only Male Students Will be Taking University Entrance Examination: Official,” TOLO News (19 July 2023).

³ Kawoon Khamoosh, “Afghanistan: Archaeological Sites ‘Bulldozed for Looting’,” BBC News (21 February 2024).

ALBANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2012, 2015–2023.

On 3 July 2023, the European Union ambassador to Tirana, Christiane Hohmann, urged members of parliament from the Partia Socialiste e Shqipërisë (PSSH; Socialist Party) to review proposed changes to two laws on archival access to documents about the Communist-era security police Sigurimi (1944–1991) [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023], urging them to be aligned with criteria outlined by the Council of Europe’s Venice Commission. The legal changes had been criticized for allegedly targeting former President Ilir Meta (in office between 2017–2022) and for not including the declassification of and access to all the Sigurimi documents [See NCH Annual Report 2023].⁴

See also North Macedonia.

ALGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001–2019, 2021–2023.

In August 2023, authorities promulgated Law 23–14 on information. It included vague and broad provisions that banned journalists from, among other things, publishing “false information” or information that might “advocate colonialism, undermine national memory and the symbols of the war of national liberation [1954–1962].”⁵

On 20 August 2023, according to the National Committee for the Liberation of Detainees, at least forty activists were arrested to prevent a peaceful gathering in Ifri in eastern Algeria to commemorate the 1956 Soummam Congress, a historic event in Algeria’s fight for independence (1954–1962). They were released later that day. There was no official commemoration day for the Soummam Congress, despite its importance in formulating a set of foundational principles for the to-be independent Algerian State. Some argued that this was the case, because one of the principles – “the primacy of politics over the military” – could be read as a criticism of the power of the military in current-day Algerian politics.⁶

⁴ Gjergj Erebara, “Albania Ruling Party Postpones Controversial Lustration Legislation,” Balkan Insight (10 July 2023).

⁵ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 75.

⁶ Belkacem Elguettaa, “The Military’s Political Role in the New Algeria,” Carnegie Middle East Center (17 March 2021); Hichem Aboud, “Algeria: Prison for a Journalist and a Researcher, and Kidnapping of a Former Gendarme,” Atalayar (24 August 2023); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 76.

On 28 August 2023, Swiss judicial authorities issued an indictment against former Defense Minister (1990–1993) Khaled Nezzar for alleged war crimes and crimes against humanity committed during the Civil War (1992–2002) under the principle of universal jurisdiction [See NCH Annual Report 2013, 2018]. The trial was considered the only chance at justice for victims of the Civil War, also due to the 1999 Civil Concord Law and the 2006 Charter for Peace and National Reconciliation providing amnesty for security forces and members of armed groups [See NCH Annual Reports 2006–2009, 2011–2013, 2017, 2019].⁷

ANGOLA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2009, 2017, 2020, 2023.

In August 2023, the government-led Comissão para a Implementação do Plano de Reconciliação em Memória das Vítimas dos Conflitos Políticos (CIVICOP; Commission for the Implementation of Measures of Reconciliation and Memory for the Victims of Political Conflict) stirred up controversy after a delegation set out for a televised mission to locate the remains of disfavored members of the União Nacional para a Independência Total de Angola (UNITA; National Union for the Total Independence of Angola; the current opposition party), who were killed on the orders of UNITA founder and former leader Jonas Savimbi (1934–2002) during the Civil War (1975–2002). CIVICOP had been established by presidential decree in 2019 to provide reconciliation and honor the victims of the Civil War. Although President João Lourenço was praised for the initiative, considered by many as long overdue, CIVICOP was also criticized for the overrepresentation of government officials, its short mandate (initially two years) and lack of transparency, the influence of the M27 group [See NCH Annual Report 2023], and the lack of attention to other Civil War victims. The delegation was perceived by some as further evidence that CIVICOP was mostly focused on crimes committed by UNITA members, strengthened by the fact that UNITA representatives at CIVICOP claimed not to have been aware of the delegation's mission. Additionally, the fact that the mission was led by the head of the security services (SINSE) was considered a sign of the politicized nature of CIVICOP, even more so since the SINSE had played a leading role in the 27 May 1977 massacre [See NCH Annual Report 2023].

On 15 January 2024, various United Nations Special Rapporteurs expressed concern about the reported excessive representation and influence of government officials in CIVICOP and the lack of transparency and communication in its operations, as well as about the reports regarding the reliability of the process of exhumation and identification of remains of alleged victims of the 27 May 1977 killings.⁸

⁷ Julia Crawford, "Assad and Nezzar: Swiss Justice Finally Moving, but Not so Convincingly," Justiceinfo.net (2 October 2023).

ARGENTINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2023.

In the lead-up to the 22 October 2023 presidential election, far-right candidate Javier Milei repeatedly questioned the number of victims of the military dictatorship (1976–1983), during which approximately 30,000 people were killed. His comments were severely criticized by NGOs and human rights activists, including the Madres de Plaza de Mayo (Mothers of May Square), a human rights association set up in 1977 to demand the return of their disappeared children [See NCH Annual Reports 2001, 2003, 2012–2015, 2017]. Milei’s running mate, Victoria Villarruel, had been a defense lawyer for multiple military officials accused of human rights violations during the dictatorship, and had publicly attacked groups such as the Madres. Villarruel’s father had participated in so-called anti-guerrilla operations, and her uncle had been an intelligence officer in a clandestine prison. Milei and Villarruel’s remarks had immediate effects, when in early October vandals spray-painted “Videla volv e” (“Videla come back,” after the military dictator Jorge Rafael Videla [in power between 1976–1981]) on a Buenos Aires college. After Milei won the elections on 22 October, Villarruel was expected to become minister of defense, security and justice. On social media, Milei supporters sent photos of green Ford Falcons without license plates (the vehicles used by security forces in abductions under the dictatorship) to people critical of Milei.⁹

On 17 March 2024, the non-fiction publishing house Marea (established 2003), specializing in journalism and human rights, became the victim of a troll attack on its Facebook account. The aim of the attack was to discredit the biography Delia, basti n de la resistencia (Delia, bastion of resistance), by Soledad Iparraguirre, about Delia Giovanola (1926–2022), one of the founders of the group Abuelas de Plaza de Mayo (Grandmothers of May Square). The attack, which consisted of more than 800 hate messages and comments, occurred on the eve of the Day of Commemoration for Truth and Justice on 24 March (commemorating the 24 March 1976 military coup). The majority of these messages defended the military dictatorship (1976–1983), supported the new President Javier Milei, contained hate speech against the

⁸ Maarten van Munster & Joris van Wijk, “Polarized Reconciliation in Angola,” Justiceinfo.net (9 October 2023); United Nations Special Rapporteurs, Allegations Letter AL AGO 3/2023 (15 January 2024).

⁹ Tom Philips & Uki Go ni, “Argentina’s Far-Right Frontrunner Reopens Wounds of Dictatorship,” Guardian (19 October 2023); Amy Booth, “Argentina’s Milei Ushers in Atrocity Denialism, Trolling and Attacks on the Media,” Index on Censorship (22 November 2023).

Abuelas de Plaza de Mayo, and included threats of disappearance or death against the editor or the contributors.¹⁰

On 27 March 2024, Defense Minister Luis Petri dismissed ten out of thirteen collaborators of the Equipos de Relevamiento y Análisis (EryA; Survey and Analysis Teams of the army archives). Established in 2010, the EryA had combed the archives for forensic evidence of crimes against humanity committed under the military dictatorship (1976–1983). Petri declared that the military had been demonized for their operations during the dictatorship and that EryA’s tasks would be taken over by officials of his ministry. The measure, widely criticized at home and abroad, was seen as an attempt by the new government of President Javier Milei to halt the process of transitional justice in the country.¹¹

On 11 April 2024, the highest criminal court, Cámara Federal de Casación Penal, ruled that the Shia militant organization Hezbollah carried out the 1994 bombing of the Asociación Mutual Israelita Argentina (AMIA) Jewish community center [See NCH Annual Reports 2011, 2014, 2016–2021], following a “political and strategic design” of the Iranian government. The ruling was hailed as “historic” by representatives of the Jewish community and was considered to open the possibility of filing lawsuits against the Iranian regime.¹²

See also Italy, Mexico.

ARMENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2006, 2010, 2014–2016.

See also Azerbaijan, Türkiye.

¹⁰ Silvina Frieria, “Un atentado digital contra una editorial especializada en derechos humanos,” Página 12 (20 March 2024); PEN International, “Argentina: Milei’s First Six Months Threaten Freedom of Expression and Cultural Rights,” Ifex (10 June 2024).

¹¹ Luciana Bertoia, “Denuncia internacional contra Luis Petri por obstaculizar las investigaciones sobre los crímenes de la dictadura,” Página 12 (7 April 2024); International Council on Archives Section on Archives and Human Rights, “Note of Concern about the Measures Taken by the Argentine Government Concerning the Archives of the Ministry of Defense” (12 April 2024); “Javier Milei desmantela un área clave que aporta pruebas en juicios por los crímenes de la dictadura argentina,” El País (15 April 2024); Luciana Bertoia, “Otra denuncia internacional contra Luis Petri por obstaculizar las investigaciones por crímenes de la dictadura,” Página 12 (17 April 2024).

¹² “Argentina Court Blames Iran for Deadly 1994 Bombing of Jewish Center,” Guardian (12 April 2024).

AUSTRALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2001, 2003, 2007–2009, 2014–2016, 2018–2023.

On 8 August 2023, the Western Australia government scrapped the Aboriginal Cultural Heritage Act, which had come into force on 1 July, because its “complicated regulations” and placed a “burden on everyday property owners.” The decision was criticized by the Puutu Kunti Kurrama and Pinikura (PKKP) Aboriginal Corporation. The law had been drafted following the 2020 destruction of the 46,000-year old Juukan Gorge caves by the Rio Tinto mining firm [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2022].¹³

On 25 January 2024, on the eve of Australia Day (marking the anniversary of the arrival of Britain’s first settlers on 26 January 1788), a statue of Captain James Cook (1728–1779) was cut down and a monument for Queen Victoria (1819–1901) covered in red paint in Melbourne. The vandals wrote “The colony will fall” on the Cook statue’s plinth. In 2018 the statue (erected in 1914) had been graffitied with the words “no pride” and an Aboriginal flag placed next to it; in 2022 it had been splashed in red paint. Many indigenous Australians and others said that it was wrong to celebrate a date which represented the displacement and dispossession of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people; they called Australia Day “Invasion Day” [See NCH Annual Reports 2016, 2018 under Australia; NCH Annual Report 2020 under New Zealand; NCH Annual Report 2017 under United Kingdom].¹⁴

On 14 May 2024, former military lawyer and whistleblower David McBride ([1964]–) was sentenced to five years and eight months of prison on charges of stealing Commonwealth property, breaching the Defence Act and disclosing confidential information that endangered national security and foreign policy. McBride had helped expose allegations of Australian war crimes in Afghanistan between 2007 and 2013 and pleaded guilty to stealing and leaking military secrets revealing these crimes to the Australian Broadcasting Corporation (ABC), calling it his moral duty after his internal complaints had been in vain [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023]. In 2017, ABC journalists Dan Oakes and Sam Clarke had published a series of reports (“The Afghan Files”) based on McBride’s leaked records. After a 2019 raid of ABC’s headquarters to seize documents, a case was started against the journalists, then dropped as not being in the public interest.¹⁵

¹³ “Western Australia to Scrap New Law Protecting Aboriginal Heritage Sites,” Al Jazeera (8 August 2023).

¹⁴ Hannah Ritchie, “Captain Cook Statue Vandalised in Melbourne on Eve of Australia Day,” BBC News (25 January 2024); Hannah Ritchie, “Australia Day: The ‘Quiet Rebranding’ of a Controversial National Holiday,” BBC News (26 January 2024).

¹⁵ Tiffanie Turnbull, “David McBride: Australian Army Whistleblower Jailed for Leaking Documents,” BBC News (14 May 2024); “The Afghan Files,” ABC (10 July 2017; updated 11 July 2017).

See also Russia, United Kingdom.

AUSTRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2005–2007, 2009, 2018, 2020.

AZERBAIJAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–1998, 2008–2013, 2015–2023.

Nagorno-Karabakh

A June 2024 report by Caucasus Heritage Watch found a 75% increase in the destruction of cultural heritage sites and a 29% increase in sites under threat in the Nagorno-Karabakh region since ethnic Armenian forces agreed to be disarmed and disbanded in a ceasefire agreement in September 2023. These included the destruction of the Ghuze T'agh Cemetery near Garabulag/Aknaghbyur; the Ghazanchetsots Cemetery in Shusha/Shushi; and the threat to the Ptkat'aghi Vank' cemetery and its adjacent seventeenth-century church and to the Surb Astvatsatsin village cemetery and its adjacent nineteenth-century church by the construction of a mosque.¹⁶

¹⁶ Ian Lindsay and Others, Caucasus Heritage Watch: Monitoring Report #7 (Ithaca, N.Y.: Caucasus Heritage Watch, 2024), 7–8, 17, 27, 35; Michael Ertl, "Nagorno-Karabakh: Conflict between Azerbaijan and Armenians Explained," BBC News (28 September 2023).

BAHRAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2008–2012, 2015–2017, 2021–2022.

In February 2023, the government summoned several family members of Bahrainis imprisoned or killed in the past by government forces and warned them against protesting around the anniversary of the 2011 uprising.¹⁷

On [10] November 2023, historian Jassim Hussein Al-Abbas was arrested on charges of “working to stir up sedition and threaten civil peace.” Two days later he was detained for one week. His arrest was reportedly related to a 2 October 2023 lecture about the Ancient History of Bahrain and the emergence of Islam and Shiism. Following the 7 October 2023 Hamas attacks on Israel and the ensuing Israel–Gaza War (2023–), he had also authored a series of articles about crimes committed by Israeli forces in the Gaza Strip on his popular blog “Sanawat Al-Jareesh.” In December 2023, authorities issued Al-Abbas with a travel ban.¹⁸

BANGLADESH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2019, 2021–2023.

On 5 June 2022, the NGO Affairs Bureau refused to renew the license of Odhikar – a human rights group set up in 1994 to record extrajudicial killings and enforced disappearances allegedly perpetrated by security forces and working closely with the United Nations (UN) – accusing it of “tarnishing the image of the state to the world.” In December 2021, Odhikar had documented alleged human rights violations by the Rapid Action Battalion, which had been accused of involvement in hundreds of disappearances and nearly 600 extrajudicial killings since 2018. The bureau’s decision was fiercely criticized by Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International.

On 14 September 2023, a Dhaka court sentenced the two leaders of Odhikar, Adilur Rahman Khan and Nasiruddin Elan, to two years in prison on charges of “publishing and circulating false information, hurting religious sentiments and undermining the image of the State” in relation to a report on extrajudicial killings they compiled in 2013.

¹⁷ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 90–91.

¹⁸ “Authorities Arrest Owner of ‘Sanawat Al-Jareesh’ Account after Summoning Him to CID,” Bahrain Mirror (11 November 2023); “BCHR: MoI Statement on Jassim Al-Abbas Arrest against Law,” Bahrain Mirror (15 November 2023); “ADHRB Condemns Arrest of Bahraini Researcher Jassim Al Abbas, Demands His Release,” Bahrain Mirror (15 November 2023); “Security Authorities Arrest 4 Citizens, Renew Detention of Ayatollah Qassim’s Grandson and Prevent Jassim Al Abbas from Traveling,” Bahrain Mirror (12 December 2023).

On 30 August, the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances, human rights groups stated that more than 600 people had disappeared since the Awami League government led by Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina had come to power in 2009. On 5 September, UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Turk called on authorities to create a “safe and enabling environment” for civil society organizations and activists.¹⁹

On 7 October 2022, during a memorial ceremony for a student who was beaten to death in 2019 by the Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL; the student wing of the ruling party Awami League), BCL members attacked members of the political student group Chhatra Odhikar Parishad with sticks and metal pipes. At least twelve people were injured and fifteen detained.²⁰

On 23 July 2024, Hridoy Chandra Tarua ([2002/3]–2024), a third-year student of the Chittagong University history department, died in a Dhaka hospital after being hit on 18 July by bullets while protesting at Baddarhat, a suburb of Chittagong, during the so-called quota protests. The protests, which cost at least 300 lives (the tally on 4 August 2024), started peacefully in early July 2024 but turned violent on 16 July. They were directed against the government jobs quota system that disproportionately benefited the descendants of the 1971 liberation war fighters.²¹

BARBADOS

Previous Annual Report entries: —.

On 1 August 2023 – also known as Emancipation Day marking the end of slavery in the British Empire in 1834 – Barbados, Jamaica and other former British colonies renewed their calls for reparations and fuller recognition of the legacies of slavery [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. The call followed a conference in late July, attended by representatives from Caribbean and African nations in Bridgetown, on the effects of slavery, colonialism and racism on Black people around the world. Already in 2013 the ¹⁹ Faisal Mahmud, “Bangladesh Scrapping Rights Group’s Licence a ‘Chilling Message’,” Al Jazeera (8 June 2022); Faisal Mahmud, “‘Wait Never Ends’ for Families of the Forcibly Disappeared in Bangladesh,” Al Jazeera (30 August 2023); “UN ‘Concerned’ by Harassment of Human Rights Defenders in Bangladesh,” Al Jazeera (5 September 2023); “Bangladesh Court Jails Prominent Rights Activists for Two Years,” Al Jazeera (15 September 2023).

²⁰ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2023: Report of the Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (New York: SAR, 2023).

²¹ “Quota Reform Movement: Death Toll Reaches 197 as CU Student Dies under Treatment,” Prothom Alo (24 July 2024); “Quota Protests: Ctg Student, 2 Others Die from Wounds,” Daily Star (24 July 2024).

Caribbean Community (CARICOM) had set up a reparations committee and formulated a ten-point plan calling for a formal apology by the former colonizer, debt relief, and support for public health services. In February 2023, the African Union decided to create a similar “program of action.”²²

BELARUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2000, 2005–2007, 2009–2011, 2014–2023.

On 5 January 2022, President Aliaksandr Lukashenko signed the Law “On the Genocide of the Belarusian People.” The law stated that “atrocities committed by Nazi criminals and their accomplices ... during the Great Patriotic War [1941–1944] and the post-war period” amounted to genocide, as they “aimed at the systematic physical destruction of the Belarusian people.” The law was introduced by deputy Lilia Ananich “in order to preserve historical memory, strengthen national security and combat falsification of events and results of World War II,” and obliged the Council of the Republic to “preserve the memory of the victims of the genocide of the Belarussian people,” “to condemn the genocide ... at the international level,” and to “disseminate reliable information ... as well as to educate citizens.” The law was severely criticized for establishing an official monopoly on the interpretation of history, stifling the freedom of historical debate, creating tools to criminally prosecute contrary opinions; using vague language (leaving open, for example, whether discussion of crimes committed by Soviet authorities or antisemitism in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics [USSR] could be prosecuted as “denial”), and equating crimes committed against the Belarussian people to the Holocaust.

In August 2023, officials of the Education Ministry issued recommendations for the 2023/2024 academic year. These included advising teachers to discuss the “genocide of the Belarussian people” to students of grades V–XI, including in non-history courses; and selecting material for courses as varied as Social Studies and History, computer science and chemistry, that contributed to “the formation of a sense of patriotism... [and] respect for the historical past.” The Education Ministry further adopted a resolution outlining excursions for students grades I–IX to foster “patriotism” and “respect for the cultural and historical heritage of their people,” the “Great Patriotic War” and the “genocide of the Belarusian people” [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023].²³

²² “Former British Colonies Renew Calls for Reparations on Emancipation Day,” Al Jazeera (1 August 2023).

²³ Liza Rozovsky, “Belarus under Fire for Law Equating Holocaust With Nazi Crimes against Nationals,” Haaretz (19 December 2021); “‘On the Genocide of Belarusian People’ – Legal Overview of the New Law,” Human Constanta (13 July 2022); “Теноцид - тут, патриотизм - там: как идеология проникает в школьные предметы,” Euroradio (9 August 2023); Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science (August 2023), 6–7; Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science (September 2023), 6.

The dismissal, arrest and detention of historians and history producers, in the context of the protests against President Aliaksandr Lukashenko's landslide 9 August 2020 re-election, which the opposition and many governments had denounced as fraudulent, continued throughout 2023 [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2023]:

- On 23 May 2023, ten people were detained in Navapolatsk, including Viktor Chareuka, a candidate of history and associate professor at the Polatsk State University Department of History and Tourism.²⁴
- In late July 2023, Alexei Batyukov, historian and former director of the Mogilev History Museum, was detained. The reasons for his detention were unknown. He had previously been detained in 2020 and fined for “participation in an unauthorized mass event.” In 2021, his contract at the Mogilev History Museum was not renewed.²⁵
- On 16 August 2023, officers from the State Security Committee of the Republic of Belarus (KGB) detained at least seven people at the National Historical Archives of Belarus, including the Deputy Director for Research and the heads of several departments.²⁶
- On 31 August 2023, journalist, historian and cultural activist Larysa Shchyryakova ([1973]–), was sentenced by the Homel Regional Court to 3,5 years in a general-security penal colony for discrediting Belarus and promoting “extremist activities of the Viasna information resource and the Belsat extremist formation,” under the form of allegedly disseminating disinformation online. She was also fined 1,365 euros. The trial, which lasted four days, was held behind closed doors [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2023].²⁷

In June 2023, libraries across the country removed the books from 2015 Nobel Laureate in Literature and oral historian Svetlana Alexievich from the shelves [See NCH Annual Reports 2016, 2021, 2023].²⁸

On 17 August 2023, the prosecutor's office in Minsk announced that two poems, The Winds are Floating and Conversation of an Elderly Man, by Vincent Dunin-Martynkevich (1808–1884), relating to the January 1863 nationalist uprising against the Russian Empire, were declared “extremist materials,” along with a foreword to the author's collected works by literary critic Yazep Yanushkevich [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023].²⁹

²⁴ M. Zafranski & L. Dauhulevich, State of Belarusian Academia 2023 (No place: Belarusian Students' Association [2024]), 9.

²⁵ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya's Office on Education and Science (August 2023), 4.

²⁶ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya's Office on Education and Science (August 2023), 4.

²⁷ “Belarus: Solidarity with Larysa Shchyryakova, Imprisoned on Fabricated Charges,” European Federation of Journalists (6 September 2023).

²⁸ PEN International, War, Censorship and Persecution: PEN International Case List 2023/2024 (London: PEN, 2024), 74.

²⁹ Robert Greenall, “Belarus Declares 19th Century Nationalist Poems ‘Extremist’,” BBC News (17 August 2023).

On 25 January 2024, the Republican Council for Historical Policy signed a memorandum of understanding with the Interdepartmental Commission for Historical Education of the Russian Federation with the aim of creating unified history textbooks for elementary and high school education. Senior analyst of education at the Belarusian Institute for Strategic Studies in Lithuania, Andrei Lavruhin, called the memorandum a “colonization of history” and warned for the erasure of historical periods that would not fit the idea of the historical affinity of Russian and Belarussian people, such as the Grand Duchy of Lithuania (1236–1795).³⁰

See also Poland.

BELGIUM

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2008, 2010–2012, 2021–2023.

On 30 January 2024, more than two hundred historians and others called upon the federal Parliament to officially publish the final 700–page report of the parliamentary Commission spéciale chargée d’examiner l’État Indépendant du Congo et le passé colonial de la Belgique au Congo, au Rwanda et au Burundi (Special Commission on the Colonial Past), including the numerous hearings and extensive experts’ reports on which it was based. On 19 December 2022, the commission’s work had ended inconclusively because no agreement could be reached over the 128 political recommendations in its report [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023]. Although meanwhile the report was ready for official publication, two parliamentarians who were commission rapporteurs refused to officially endorse the report because they disagreed with the recommendations, particularly the issuance of an official apology for colonial atrocities.³¹

BELIZE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

³⁰ “Эксперт: Агульня з Расіяй падручнікі па гісторыі — гэта прэтэнзія на будаўніцтва новай імперыі.” Novy Chas (5 February 2024).

³¹ “L’Appel de plus de 200 personnalités pour la publication du rapport décolonisation.” Le Soir (30 January 2024); Ketrin Johecová, “Belgium Still Struggling with Its Colonial Ghosts.” Politico (30 March 2024).

BENIN

Precious Annual Report entries: 2023.

BOLIVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2023.

BOSNIA and HERZEGOVINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2023.

In a report published on 23 November 2023, Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights Dunja Mijatović concluded that there was serious backsliding in efforts to deal with the past over recent years across the region of the Former Yugoslavia. Key challenges and trends that underpinned this backsliding were the denial of genocide and other atrocities, the glorification of war criminals and attempts to restore the credibility of persons convicted of war crimes in the 1990s, including at the highest political levels. Other negative trends included an increase in hate speech and interethnic violence, the teaching of polarized narratives about the past and segregation in schools, and a long-lasting failure to address the root causes of the wars of the 1990s. She added that local academics and historians contributed to keeping divisive and nationalist ideologies alive and engaged actively in historical revisionism, particularly around World War II, but also in the relativization of the atrocities committed in the region in the 1990s. Their media interventions aimed to legitimize narratives of ethnic-centered victimhood through a facade of pseudo-scientific and historical knowledge. An example cited was the Bosnian Serb Center for War Research, War Crimes and the Search for Missing Civilians. The Commissioner also noted that academics and historians had already played a critical role in crafting and spreading nationalist ideologies at the end of the 1980s and during the wars of the 1990s and that some of the twisted historical narratives they helped create were still reflected today, albeit to a lesser extent, in some textbooks and history teaching in the region.³²

³² Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, Issue Paper: Dealing with the Past for a Better Future: Achieving Justice, Peace and Social Cohesion in the Region of the Former Yugoslavia (Strasbourg: Council of Europe, 2023), 59, 64; Vuk Tesija, "Failure to Confront Wartime Past Imperils Peace in Balkans: Council of Europe," Balkan Insight (23 November 2023).

On 23 May 2024, the United Nations General Assembly adopted resolution A/78/L.67/Rev.1, designating 11 July as the International Day of Reflection and Commemoration of the 1995 Genocide in Srebrenica, by a vote of 84 in favor to 19 against, with 68 abstentions. The resolution, which had been initiated by Germany and Rwanda and co-sponsored by more than a dozen countries, condemned denial of the Srebrenica genocide, the glorification of war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide, and urged member states to “preserve the established facts, including through their educational systems.” The voting was initially to take place on 15 May, but drew strong opposition from Serbian President Alexander Vučić and Republika Srpska President Milorad Dodik. The latter denied that a genocide had taken place and said his administration would not recognize the resolution. At Montenegro’s request, the resolution contained a clause saying that culpability for the genocide is “individualized and cannot be attributed to any ethnic, religious or other group or community as a whole.” A previous resolution had been vetoed at the Security Council by Russia in 2015.³³

See also Montenegro.

BOTSWANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

BRAZIL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2023.

On 28 December 2023, a law curtailing indigenous people’s right to reclaim lands from which they were displaced came into force. The law upheld the marco temporal (timeframe) theory, stating that indigenous people could only lay claim to lands they physically occupied at the time of the promulgation of the current Constitution on 5 October 1988 – despite the fact that many indigenous groups had been displaced from their ancestral lands before that date, notably during the military dictatorship (1964–1985).

In September 2023, the Supreme Court had ruled the law unconstitutional in a 9–2 vote, and President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva had attempted to veto parts of the law. The environmental watchdog Climate ³³ United Nations General Assembly, International Day of Reflection and Commemoration of the 1995 Genocide in Srebrenica (A/78/L.67/Rev.1; 20 May 2024); “A UN Resolution on the Srebrenica Genocide Ignites Old Tensions,” Al Jazeera (14 May 2024); “UN Approves Resolution to Commemorate 1995 Srebrenica Genocide,” Al Jazeera (23 May 2024).

Observatory dubbed it the “indigenous genocide law” for the detrimental impact it would have on indigenous lands, due to the rights of mining, dam construction and agricultural and infrastructural projects it stipulated. indigenous organizations, leftist political parties, and the Minister for indigenous peoples vowed to ask the Supreme Court to block the law.³⁴

On 25 January 2024, the Mãe Oxum monument, a historical and cultural site of followers of Afro-Brazilian spiritual traditions in Porto Alegre, was vandalized with graffiti saying “pagan” and “Christ lives.” The perpetrators were not identified by the police. Bàbá Hendrix de Òrúnmilà, a historian, afro-theologian and babalorixá (priest), called the rise in violence against these traditions “religious racism.”³⁵

On the sixtieth anniversary of the 1964 coup d’état that installed a military dictatorship (1964–1985), 31 March 2024, President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva blocked attempts to organize official commemorations. During a cabinet meeting, Minister of Human Rights Silvio Almeida had proposed a ceremony and awareness campaign with the slogan “Without remembrance there is no future.” However, Lula had reportedly given explicit orders against any national commemoration, supposedly to avoid upsetting the military, some of whose senior figures were on trial for plotting to overturn the 2023 Presidential election results and keeping former President Jair Bolsonaro in power. In an interview leading up to the anniversary, Lula stated: “I’m more worried about the January 2023 coup [when supporters of Bolsonaro stormed the Presidential palace, Congress and the Supreme Court] than the 1964 one ... This belongs to history now.” Human rights groups, academics and relatives of the victims of the military dictatorship expressed disbelief over Lula’s decision. João Roberto Martins Filho, a history professor at the Universidade Federal de São Carlos, said that the decision had caused “unanimous dissatisfaction” among academics. Relatives of the deceased were further angered, because a special investigative commission into political deaths and disappearances, which had been dismantled by Bolsonaro shortly before his departure from office, had not yet been reinstated by Lula.³⁶

BULGARIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2002, 2006, 2009, 2012, 2015–2017, 2019–2020, 2022.

On 12 December 2023, authorities decided to remove the Monument to the Soviet Army in Sofia, citing

³⁴ Constance Malleret, “Controversial Brazil Law Curbing Indigenous Rights Comes into Force,” Guardian (28 December 2023).

³⁵ Simone Dias Marques, “Silencing the Faithful,” Index on Censorship, 53 no. 1 (2024), 26–27.

³⁶ Tom Philips, “Lula Dismays Relatives of Dictatorship’s Victims by Ignoring Coup Anniversary,” Guardian (29 March 2024).

the February 2022 invasion of Ukraine by Russian forces. The monument had been erected in 1954, to commemorate the entering of the Red Army in Bulgaria in 1944. The authorities' decision was accompanied by demonstrations in favor and against the removal. Already in [February] 2022, a plaque had been vandalized and part of the monument painted red. It was unclear what would happen with the 37-meter high statue.³⁷

BURKINA FASO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2004, 2005, 2013, 2015–2018, 2021–2023.

BURUNDI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2015, 2017–2021, 2023.

In March 2023, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission [See NCH Annual Report 2023] began public hearings. Its president told the media that the role of these hearings was to “reinforce and confirm the truth already found in the archives through mass graves and testimonies, but also in doctrine and published works” and to allow more people to express themselves. Accusations of bias against the commission, due to its focus on the 1972 Ikiza (“Catastrophe”) or Ubwicanyi (“killings”) – a series of mass killings, often characterized as a genocide, by the Tutsi dominated armed forces against primarily the Hutu population, leading to the deaths of between 100,000 and 300,000 people – continued.³⁸

See also Belgium.

³⁷ Svetoslav Todorov, “After 30 Years of Debate, Bulgaria Dismantles Red Army Monument,” Balkan Insight (12 December 2023).

³⁸ Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 114.

CAMBODIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2018, 2020–2023.

CAMEROON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2012–2014, 2016, 2020–2021, 2023.

CANADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000, 2002–2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2009, 2012–2023.

In 2023, the Independent Special Interlocutor for Missing Children and Unmarked Graves and Burial Sites recommended the creation of a legal framework to protect unmarked graves and support indigenous-led search operations for missing children. Despite a legal agreement in April 2023 providing a framework for the search of burial sites, the Kanien'kehá:ka Kahnistensera (Mohawk Mothers) experienced difficulties in accessing the necessary archives and a lack of collaboration from stakeholders [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022].³⁹

In May 2024, the graphic novel, Rocking Spurs: The Anti-Bullying Tour, investigating indigenous identity in Canada and produced within the framework of a third-year history seminar at Dalhousie University, Halifax, taught by historian Lisa Binkley, prompted outrage from Métis groups. The Métis – one of the three indigenous peoples, alongside Inuit and First Nations, recognized in the Constitution Act – said that the novel, sent to schools across Canada, undermined their history and represented an attack on their sovereignty. The Métis National Council would ask schools to remove the novel. There was a controversy over the question whether the Eastern Métis, to which Binkley belonged, should be recognized as Métis.⁴⁰

See also China, Eritrea, Poland, Rwanda, Syria, United States.

³⁹ Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 120–121.

⁴⁰ Leyland Cecco, “‘One Hell of a Storm Is Coming’: Canadian Graphic Novel about Indigenous Identity Sparks Outrage,” Guardian (19 May 2024).

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2009, 2011–2012, 2014–2023.

On 21 September 2023, former President François Bozizé was among twenty individuals who were sentenced in absentia to life imprisonment with hard labor on charges of “conspiracy,” “rebellion,” and “murder.” The indictment did not specify the timeframe within which the accusations had taken place. Bozizé, who had become president through a coup d’état in 2003, lived in exile in Chad and later Guinea-Bissau after he had been deposed in 2013 by the Union des Forces Démocratiques pour le Rassemblement (Union of Democratic Forces for Unity) in the context of the Bush War (2004–2007) and the Civil War (2012–). In exile, Bozizé presided over the Coalition des patriotes pour le changement (Coalition of Patriots for Change), a coalition consisting mostly of Christian and animist armed groups. In August 2022, the United Nations Independent Expert on Human Rights in the Central African Republic had urged all parties to engage in political dialogue and to ensure accountability under the auspices of the Truth, Justice, Reparation and Reconciliation Commission (CVJRR).

On 27 February 2024, the Bangui-based Cour pénale spéciale de la République Centrafricaine (CPS; Special Criminal Court), a hybrid court set up in 2015 and backed by the United Nations, issued a separate arrest warrant for Bozizé on charges of crimes against humanity, including murder, enforced disappearance, torture, rape and other inhumane acts, committed by his presidential guard between February 2009 and March 2013. The CPS called on the government of Guinea-Bissau to extradite Bozizé.

On 16 June 2023, the CPS had passed its first decision on reparation for victims in the trial against three members of the Return, Reclamation and Rehabilitation armed group (known as 3R). The defendants had been convicted in November 2022 of crimes against humanity and war crimes committed during the massacre of at least 46 civilians in 2019. In October 2023, they were ordered to pay compensation to the victims or their heirs.⁴¹

⁴¹ United Nations Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights, “Central African Republic: UN Expert Calls for End to Impunity, Urges Armed Groups to Lay Down Arms” (press release; 5 August 2022); “CAR Authorities: Former President Bozize Sentenced in Absentia,” VOA Africa (22 September 2023); “Central African Republic Sentences Ex-President Bozizé to Life Imprisonment,” Africa News (22 September 2023); “Arrest Warrant Issued for Central African Republic’s Former President over Crimes against Humanity,” Guardian (30 April 2024); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 32, 123.

CHAD

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2015–2016, 2023.

On 20 October 2023, the first year anniversary of the 2022 crackdown on demonstrators protesting against the extension of military rule (2021–), Amnesty International called on the government to ensure justice by conducting an investigation and fair trials. The Commission nationale des droits de l’homme (CNDH; National Human Rights Commission) estimated that 128 people died during the crackdown, with nearly a thousand injured. On 23 November 2023, the National Transitional Council adopted a general amnesty law for those involved in the demonstrations and the ensuing crackdown. Though presented as a step toward “national reconciliation,” the law sparked outcry among NGOs and the opposition who accused the government of shielding police and military personnel from accountability for the crackdown.⁴²

In early January 2024, the headquarters of the Direction de la documentation et de la sécurité (DDS; Directorate of Documentation and Security), the political police of dictator Hissène Habré (1982–1990), were demolished despite the government’s repeated promises to thousands of victims–survivors of the dictatorship to turn it into a site of memory and museum.⁴³

See also Central African Republic

CHILE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2023.

In 2023, a bill was introduced to conditionally lift the secrecy over the testimonies of torture victims collected by the Valech Commission, a national commission mandated to document political detentions and torture during the Pinochet era (1973–1990) [See NCH Annual Reports 2010–2012, 2016, 2018].⁴⁴

In July 2023, Amira Arratia, head of the Documentation Department of Televisión Nacional de Chile (TVN; National Television of Chile), was celebrated because fifty years previously, she had started organizing the rescue of TVN audiovisual archives at risk of destruction. The footage regarded events during the Unidad Popular government (1970–1973) and the repression under the military dictatorship (1973–1990).⁴⁵

⁴² “Chad: Amnesty Calls for ‘Justice’ One Year after Bloody Demonstration,” Africa News (20 October 2023); “Chadians Seek Justice One Year after Deadly Protests against Junta,” Africa News (21 October 2023); “Demonstration Bloodily Repressed in Chad in 2022: General Amnesty,” Africa News (24 November 2023).

⁴³ “Au Tchad, le siège de la DDS rasé, la ‘piscine’ d’Hissène Habré encore présente,” RFI (5 January 2024).

⁴⁴ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 126.

In the lead-up to the fiftieth anniversary of the 11 September 1973 coup that overthrew and led to the death of the democratically elected President Salvador Allende (1908–1973) and established a junta (1973–1990) led by General Augusto Pinochet (1915–2006), the government of President Gabriel Boric called on the United States to release the remaining classified records related to the coup that were “important for us to reconstruct our own history.” The call was supported by the director of the National Security Archive’s Chile Documentation Project Peter Kornbluh [See NCH Annual Report 2023, under United States].

On 25 August 2023, the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) released the President’s Daily Brief (PDB) of 11 September 1973, considered among the most historically relevant PDBs related to the coup, and partially released another PDB dated 8 September 1973. The move was hailed, but pleas for further declassification remained.

On 30 August 2023, the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances, Boric unveiled the National Search Plan, which confirmed Chile’s state responsibility for uncovering the whereabouts of the remains of the disappeared and the identity of perpetrators [See NCH Annual Report 2023]. The quest for justice was complicated by the 1978 amnesty law, that had exonerated perpetrators and accomplices of all crimes committed between 11 September 1973 and 10 March 1978.⁴⁶

In the lead-up to the 11 September 2023 anniversary of the 1973 coup, it emerged that a growing number of people approved the coup, while some even justified, minimized or denied the crimes that had taken place under the Augusto Pinochet dictatorship (1973–1990). On 22 August 2023, far-right Member of Parliament Gloria Naveillan had dismissed the sexual crimes of the dictatorship as an “urban legend,” notwithstanding massive evidence to the contrary.⁴⁷

⁴⁵ Joana Carvalho, “‘Una heroína anónima que permitió resguardar la memoria’: INDH realiza homenaje a Amira Arratia,” Diario UChile (10 July 2023).

⁴⁶ Peter Kornbluh, “Chile’s Coup at 50: Kissinger Briefed Nixon on Failed 1970 CIA Plot to Block Allende Presidency,” National Security Archive (8 August 2023); Peter Kornbluh, “After 50 years of Secrecy, Archive Applauds Release; Calls on Biden Administration to Declassify Remaining Secrets on Chile,” National Security Archive (25 August 2023); “Chile Launches Push to Find People Disappeared in Pinochet Era,” Al Jazeera (30 August 2023); John Bartlett, “Chile Announces Much-Anticipated Plan to Search for Pinochet’s Victims,” Guardian (30 August 2023); Lucia Newman, “‘Like a Phantom’: Chile Grapples with Ghosts of the Disappeared,” Al Jazeera (8 September 2023); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 146; Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 126.

⁴⁷ Marcial Cabezas González, “Diputada Naveillán aseguró que denuncias por violencia sexual en dictadura son ‘parte de la leyenda urbana’,” T13 (23 August 2023); Eva Vergara & Daniel Politi, “A Half-Century after Gen. Augusto Pinochet’s Coup, Some in Chile Remember the Dictatorship Fondly,” AP News (5 September 2023); Charis McGowan, “Chile Marks 50 Years since Pinochet’s Brutal Coup,” Al Jazeera (11 September 2023); Juan Carlos Ramírez Figueroa, “Pinochet’s Ghost Still Haunts,” Index on Censorship, vol. 52 no. 3 (2023), 18–20; Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 125.

On 11 September 2023, marking the fiftieth anniversary of the 1973 coup that overthrew and killed democratically elected President Salvador Allende (1908–1973) and established a junta (1973–1990) led by General Augusto Pinochet (1915–2006), a peaceful procession of people commemorating the victims of the dictatorship was attacked by a group of vigilantes, throwing stones at the protesters and attempting to break into the presidential palace La Moneda. At the cemetery housing a memorial to the victims of the dictatorship, some mausoleums were damaged. Fifty years after the coup, there still existed no law to protect memorial sites or a national memory archive (although the government had announced a National Memory and Heritage Policy for the protection of memorial sites related to the Pinochet era).

President Gabriel Boric, along with all living former presidents, signed a commitment to promote and defend human rights “regardless of political ideology.” All political parties in the Senate supported a declaration on the promotion of democracy and human rights while acknowledging the impossibility of a “common vision of history.”⁴⁸

In September 2023, the 1973 documentary The Battle of Chile, the Struggle of an Unarmed People, in which director Patricio Guzmán and his film crew gave an account of the events that took place in Chile between February 1972 and September 1973 in three parts (The Insurrection of the Bourgeoisie; The Coup d’État; and “The People’s Power”), was released fifty years after the film was shot. After the coup of 11 September 1973, amid raids on the homes of the film crew, eighteen hours of footage had been moved to the Swedish embassy and, after the military had been dissuaded from confiscating it at Valparaiso port, shipped as diplomatic cargo by boat to Sweden via Cuba. While several crew members went into exile, Jorge Müller Silva ([1947]–1974), in charge of camera and photography, was arrested and disappeared on 29 November 1974: the documentary was dedicated to his memory.⁴⁹

See also United Kingdom.

⁴⁸ “Chile March to Commemorate Pinochet Victims Marred by Violence,” Al Jazeera (10 September 2023); Amnesty International, “Chile: 50 Years since the Coup d’État, Exercising Historical Memory Is Vital for the Country’s Future” (Press release; 8 September 2023); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 146; Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 39, 126.

⁴⁹ Global Voices Advox, “An Emblematic Documentary Salvaged during Chile’s Dictatorship Has Been Restored,” Ifex News (12 September 2023).

CHINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2023.

At the end of August 2023, search engine platform Baidu rolled out its chatbot Ernie. Presented as Baidu’s answer to ChatGPT, it was prone to censorship, responding to actions that entered the date of the Tiananmen Square massacre (4 June 1989), the name of imprisoned former senior Communist Party figure Bo Xilai, or the name of the 2010 Nobel Peace Prize laureate Liu Xiaobo who died in prison, with “Let’s talk about something else.”⁵⁰

In early September 2023, two people were arrested in Shanxi province, after they had widened a gap in the Great Wall (dating back to the third century BCE), a UNESCO World Heritage Site, as a shortcut to their work, reportedly causing “irreversible damage.” The section in Shanxi province was built during the Ming Dynasty (1368–1644). They were charged with destroying a cultural relic.⁵¹

On 16 October 2023, the book distributor Dook Media Group recalled the second edition of the biography Chóngzhēn: Qínzhèng de Wángguó Jūn (The Chongzhen Emperor: Diligent Ruler of a Failed Dynasty; Wenhui publishing house; first edition 2016) by Chen Wutong (1935–2023). The Chongzhen Emperor (personal name: Zhu Youjian) (1611–1644) was the last emperor of the Ming dynasty; when rebels reached the capital Beijing, he committed suicide. It was speculated that the book’s withdrawal was due to a new title and cover design, which could be construed as critical of Xi Jinping. The blurb read: “The diligent ruler of a failed dynasty, Chongzhen’s repeated mistakes were the result of his own ineptitude. His ‘diligent’ efforts hastened the nation’s destruction.” The cover art also featured a noose wrapped around the first character in Chongzhen’s name, a reference to his suicide. Since the Chinese constitution was amended in 2018 to allow Xi Jinping to maintain power indefinitely, allusions to “Xi as emperor” abounded. He was compared, among others, to Yuan Shikai (see NCH Annual Report 2018).⁵²

On 22 November 2023, Human Rights Watch reported that under the header of “mosque consolidation,” the government closed, destroyed and repurposed many mosques in the Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region and Gansu Province in a systematic effort to curb the practice of Islam since President Xi Jinping had called for the “sinicization” of religions in 2016. For example, since 2020, an estimated 1,300

⁵⁰ Stephen McDonnell, “Elusive Ernie: China’s New Chatbot Has a Censorship Problem,” BBC News (9 September 2023).

⁵¹ “Two People Arrested in China for Smashing a Hole in the Great Wall,” Al Jazeera (6 September 2023).

⁵² Cindy Carter, “Xi Parallels Suspected Behind Withdrawal of Book on Ill-Fated Chongzhen Emperor,” China Digital Times (18 October 2023).

mosques in Ningxia had been closed or converted, a third of the total in the region. Additionally, local authorities had reportedly installed surveillance systems in the remaining mosques. Since 2017, about two-thirds of the mosques in Xinjiang had also been damaged or destroyed [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2023].⁵³

In January 2024, a court in Changchun, Jilin, sentenced historian Yuan Keqin ([1956]–), charged with espionage in 2020, to six years' imprisonment [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022].⁵⁴

Authorities were reportedly erasing the memory of the so-called White Paper protests of November 2022, when thousands took to the streets across China to protest against strict Covid-19 controls in an unprecedented wave of civil disobedience. Some reportedly chanted: “Down with the Chinese Communist Party,” while others held up blank sheets of paper to mock the regime’s censorship. Weeks later, the government abruptly ended its “zero-Covid” policy. However, it began censoring online reporting of the event and silencing those who dared to document or commemorate it. Among them was Chen Pinlin, a film director who released a film about the demonstrations on YouTube and X, both inaccessible in China, to mark the first anniversary of the protests. Arrested in Shanghai in January 2024, Chen was charged on 18 February with “picking quarrels and provoking trouble,” which carried a sentence of up to five years in prison.⁵⁵

On 14 May 2024, Amnesty International reported that the government threatened Chinese students overseas when they took part in commemorations for the 1989 Tiananmen Square student-led protests, the 2019 pro-democracy protests in Hong Kong, the 2022 Sitong Bridge protest, or the 2022 White Paper protests. It also used threats against relatives at home to control and silence them.⁵⁶

Hong Kong

In September 2023, Zeng Yuxuan ([2000]–), a mainland Chinese postgraduate law student at the Chinese University of Hong Kong, pleaded guilty to sedition and was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for planning to display a banner depicting the Pillar of Shame, a statue commemorating

⁵³ Kelly Ng, “China: Human Rights Watch Accuses Beijing of Closing and Destroying Mosques,” BBC News (22 November 2023); “China: Mosques Shuttered, Razed, Altered in Muslim Areas,” Human Rights Watch (22 November 2023).

⁵⁴ Suvendrini Kakuchi, “Scholar’s Jailing for Spying Set to Dampen Bilateral Ties,” University World News (16 May 2024).

⁵⁵ Jessie Lau, “China Erases Memory of ‘White Paper’ Protests in Further Threat to Journalism,” Guardian (1 May 2024).

⁵⁶ Amnesty International, “On My Campus, I Am Afraid”: China’s Targeting of Overseas Students Stifles Rights (London: AI, 2024), 5, 13–14, 36.

the Tiananmen crackdown [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. Zeng was due to be released in October having served most of her sentence in pretrial detention, but was deported to mainland China where she was believed to be held incommunicado. Her transfer was thought to be the first time someone from mainland China was deported from Hong Kong after being convicted of sedition.⁵⁷

In early September 2023, authorities accused Kurt Leung Kui-ming of “inciting violence” and “importing seditious publications” after he had received books from the United Kingdom that included Sheep Village, a series of children’s books (called Yangcun) in which a village of sheep fights back against a group of wolves trying to take over their settlement, in what was seen by some as a reference to the attempt of the pro-democracy movement to maintain Hong Kong’s autonomy against the Chinese government [See NCH Annual Report 2023]. He faced up to two years in prison.⁵⁸

On 24 October 2023, the Immigration Department of Hong Kong rejected the work visa renewal application of Canadian national Xiaoqing Rowena He, an associate professor since 2019 at the history department of the Chinese University of Hong Kong (CUHK), a research associate of the Fairbank Center for Chinese Studies at Harvard University in the United States, and a fellow at the National Humanities Center, after more than a year’s delay. The immigration authorities had questioned her connections with NGOs and foreign governments – activities that were criminalized as “collusion with foreign powers” under Hong Kong’s national security law. On 27 October 2023, CUHK dismissed her. In 2014, He had published Tiananmen Exiles: Voices of the Struggle for Democracy in China (removed from Hong Kong libraries in May 2023) [See NCH Annual Report 2023].

In February 2023, the Beijing-backed Ta Kung Pao and Wen Wei Po newspapers had published a commentary calling on CUHK to “eliminate anti-China forces trying to disrupt Hong Kong,” naming He for “slandering” the Chinese government in a politics course she had taught at Harvard. They reported that the National Humanities Center “use[d] academic freedom as an umbrella term to smear China and Hong Kong,” and accused her of “using history as a political weapon to brainwash students” into anti-China and anti-Hong Kong thinking. Since the post-2019 crackdown on dissent, denunciations such as these often preceded official action against individuals. He was also a temporary senior research fellow at the University of Texas (2022–).⁵⁹

⁵⁷ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 133.

⁵⁸ Sophie Richardson, “Hong Kong Unleashes Courts against Children’s Sheep Fiction,” Human Rights Watch (13 September 2023); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 153.

⁵⁹ Gigi Lee & Siyan Cheung, “Hong Kong University Fires Tiananmen Historian after Visa Denial,” Radio Free Asia (30 October 2023); Mimi Leung, “Dismay over University’s Sacking of Scholar Denied a Visa,” University World News (1 November 2023); Grace Tsoi, “Hong Kong’s Universities Shivel in Beijing’s Grip,” BBC News (13 December 2023).

On 23 November 2023, the Hong Kong Education Bureau announced a new humanities curriculum for primary schools to be implemented from 2025 onward. It would emphasize “patriotic education,” including modules on national identity and national history, including the Opium Wars (1839–1842 and 1856–1860) and the Second Sino-Japanese War (1937–1945), two historical events that featured prominently in the Communist Party’s (CCP) nationalist narrative of a “century of humiliation.” Pupils would further learn about significant Chinese historical figures and CCP achievements. Any mentions of the 2019–2020 pro-democracy protests were scrapped from the curriculum [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023].⁶⁰

On 28 and 29 May 2024, during the lead-up to the 35th anniversary of the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre, eight people were arrested. These included Chow Hang-tung, a prominent pro-democracy activist and former vice chairperson of the disbanded Hong Kong Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements who had been sentenced to fourteen months for organizing the 2020 annual vigil at Victoria Park, and had already been in custody since 2021 on charges of subversion for her role in organizing the 2021 annual vigil [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022], and on charges of sedition under the new domestic national security law “Article 23” (Safeguarding National Security Ordinance) over social media posts related to the massacre.

Already on 3 April, Xu Guang, a 1989 student leader, was sentenced to four years in prison for “picking quarrels and provoking troubles” after he had demanded, in May 2022, the government’s acknowledgment of the massacre and protested with a sign at a local police station calling for redress for the victims.

On 3 June 2024, performance artist Sanmu Chen was arrested after she drew the Chinese characters for 8964 (4 June 1989) in the air. She was reportedly released afterward. Various pro-democracy activists were under heightened police surveillance, including Zhan Xianling, one of the founders of the Tiananmen Mothers, a group of relatives of the victims of the massacre [See NCH Annual Reports 2004–2006, 2008–2009, 2017, 2023]; Pu Zhiqiang, a former student representative at Tiananmen and human rights lawyer; and Ji Feng, a student leader in Guizhou.⁶¹

⁶⁰ “Hong Kong to Restructure Primary Education to Make It More ‘Patriotic’,” Guardian (24 November 2023); Kelly Ng, “School Children Sang Anthem too Softly – Hong Kong,” BBC News (27 June 2024).

⁶¹ “China: Closing Off Memory of Tiananmen Massacre,” Human Rights Watch (2 June 2024); “Taiwan’s Lai Says Tiananmen ‘Will Not Disappear in Torrent of History’,” Al Jazeera (4 June 2024); Louisa Lim, “China’s Crackdown on Tiananmen Memorials Shows Its Obsession With Security – and Growing Paranoia,” Guardian (4 June 2024).

Inner Mongolia

On 3 May 2023, ethnic Mongolian historian Lhamjab A. Borjigin (1944–) [See NCH Annual Reports 2019–2020] was arrested by Chinese police at his exile residence in Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia, and deported to China. He had been sentenced to a one year suspended sentence in September 2019 and put under “residential surveillance” in late 2020. In March 2023, he had fled to Mongolia, where he worked on three books about Mongolian culture and history.⁶²

Following a 25 August 2023 directive from the Inner Mongolian branch of the official Books and Periodicals Distribution Association, the authorities banned “A General History of the Mongols,” a 2004 book written by scholars in the Mongolian Studies department of the Inner Mongolia Institute of Education, citing “historical nihilism” as a reason [See NCH Annual Reports 2017–2018, 2021]. The book was previously lauded for its work in “connecting the history of Mongolia from ancient times to the medieval period, making the history of Mongolia more complete.” Analysts said that although the book was already nationalistic in tone, describing the Mongols as part of the Chinese nation, it was now considered to contribute to a pan-Mongolian identity because it did not go far enough in making the Mongols appear to be historically part of the Chinese nation.⁶³

Xinjiang

Among the historians and related professionals imprisoned since 2015 and mentioned on a 31 December 2022 List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present were the following [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022 for related lists]:

- Writer and historian Omerjan Osman Suzuk.⁶⁴
- Historian and chairman of the Yengisheher Political Consultant Conference, Kashgar Prefecture, Abdughopur.⁶⁵
- Writer and historian Ghalip Barat Erk.⁶⁶
- Yusupjan Yasin, historian at Urumchi No.14 High School.⁶⁷

⁶² “Chinese Police Makes Arrest on Mongolian Soil, Deporting Prominent Writer,” Southern Mongolian Human Rights Information Center (11 May 2023); “Pen America Condemns China’s Arrest of Exiled Mongolian Writer and Historian Lhamjab A. Borjigin,” PEN America (12 May 2023).

⁶³ Gao Feng, “China Bans Book about the Early History of the Mongolian People,” Radio Free Asia (3 September 2023).

⁶⁴ Abduweli Ayup, “List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present,” Uyghurhjelp.org (last updated 31 December 2022).

⁶⁵ Abduweli Ayup, “List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present,” Uyghurhjelp.org (last updated 31 December 2022).

⁶⁶ Abduweli Ayup, “List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present,” Uyghurhjelp.org (last updated 31 December 2022).

⁶⁷ Abduweli Ayup, “List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present,” Uyghurhjelp.org (last updated 31 December 2022).

On 21 September 2023, a reliable source in the Chinese government confirmed that an intermediate people's court in Xinjiang has sentenced folklorist and historical anthropologist Rahile Dawut [See NCH Annual Reports 2019, 2021–2022] (1966–) to life imprisonment for “splittism” (a crime of endangering state security) in a secret trial in December 2018 and that this was confirmed on appeal in September 2023.⁶⁸

In November 2023, a modern historian (name unknown) who had been researching, among other things, the history of the Chinese Communist Party's (CCP) policing politics and counterterrorism in the Xinjiang region, was looking for a research position outside of China after s/he had been sacked and expelled from the CCP, due to the critical nature of her/his research and teaching.⁶⁹

An 18 June 2024 report by Human Rights Watch found that between 2009 and 2023 the government had replaced the names of at least 630 towns and villages with religious, cultural or historical meaning to Uyghurs with names that reflected government propaganda in a move aimed at erasing Uyghur Muslim culture. Words such as “hoja” (a title for a Sufi religious teacher), “sultan,” “beg,” “haniqa” (a type of Sufi religious building), and “mazar” (shrine) were disappearing from place names and replaced with terms such as “harmony,” “unity,” and “happiness.” Most of the changes, which also included the replacement of names of local leaders, republics, and kingdoms that preceded the establishment of the People's Republic of China in 1949, had taken place between 2017 and 2019. One example was the renaming in 2018 of Qutpidin Mazar in Kashgar – named after the Persian polymath and poet Qutb al-Din al-Shirazi (1236–1311) – to Rose Flower village. Renaming places was first practiced in Tibet. In 2023 the government began referring to Tibet as “Xizang” on official documents. Since 2017 it also issued official Chinese names for locations in Arunachal Pradesh, the disputed Himalayan region where China claims territory.⁷⁰

See also Japan, Thailand.

⁶⁸ “‘Cruel Tragedy’: Uyghur Scholar Sentenced to Life in Prison in China,” Al Jazeera (23 September 2023); “China Sentences Uyghur Scholar to Life in Jail,” BBC News (24 September 2023); Yojana Sharma, “Life Sentence for Uyghur Scholar Shocks Academics, Activists,” University World News (28 September 2023); Scholars at Risk, “Rahile Dawut, China” (s.d. [September 2023]); Scholars at Risk, Letter to Xi Jinping (31 October 2018); Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2023: Report of the Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (New York: SAR, 2023); Network of Concerned Historians, Campaign for Rahile Dawut (23 February 2024).

⁶⁹ “Monthly Newsletter,” Scholars at Risk (November 2023).

⁷⁰ “China: Hundreds of Uyghur Village Names Change,” Al Jazeera (18 June 2024); “China Accused of Erasing Religion, Culture from Uyghur Village Names,” Al Jazeera (18 June 2024); Helen Davidson, “China Has Renamed Hundreds of Uyghur Villages and Towns, Say Human Rights Groups,” Guardian (19 June 2024); Anna Lamche, “China Changed Village Names ‘to Erase Uyghur Culture’,” BBC News (20 June 2024).

COLOMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2004, 2006–2023.

In 2023, the Jurisdicción Especial para la Paz (JEP; Special Jurisdiction for Peace) [See NCH Annual Reports 2016–2021] made significant strides in investigating and prosecuting war crimes and crimes against humanity, charging top former commanders of the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia (FARC; Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces) guerrilla movement and several army officers. In August 2023, the JEP indicted General Mario Montoya, who commanded the army between 2006 and 2008, for his role in 130 extrajudicial executions when he led a brigade. Defendants who fully cooperated with the JEP and confessed to their crimes were subject to up to eight years of “special sanctions,” including restrictions on liberty but no prison time. It remained unclear how the “special sanctions” would operate in practice. The JEP further charged FARC members for war crimes and crimes against humanity against indigenous peoples, Afro-descendants and peasant communities and crimes against nature and ancestral and collective territories, including in Tolima, Huila, Quindío, Cauca and Valle del Cauca provinces. In late 2022, Congress had passed a law sponsored by the government of President Gustavo Petro that allowed the government to negotiate a peace accord, including new transitional-justice mechanisms, with parties to the armed conflict such as the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN; National Liberation Army), as well as with organized crime groups.⁷¹

In [July] 2023, President Gustavo Petro appointed Salvatore Mancuso, a former senior commander of the Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (AUC; United Self-Defense Forces of Colombia) – the country’s largest rightwing death squad (1997–2006/8) during the armed conflict (1964–present) – as “peace manager” to lead negotiations with the Clan del Golfo drug cartel. Mancuso previously testified to the Jurisdicción Especial para la Paz (JEP; Special Jurisdiction for Peace), providing details about the ties between military, business and political elites with right-wing paramilitary groups during the conflict and helping authorities to discover mass graves near the Venezuelan border. He also encouraged other paramilitary leaders to join the peace process. He admitted to 300 killings and was accused of having committed about 75,000 crimes during the armed conflict. In 2008 he had been extradited to the United States on drug trafficking charges, was sentenced to prison, and as of 2023 remained in detention there for a war crimes investigation.⁷²

⁷¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 164–165; Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 137–138.

⁷² Luke Taylor, “Insult to His Victims’: Outrage as Warlord Appointed ‘Peace Manager’ in Colombia.” Guardian (25 July 2023).

In mid-September 2023, Helena Urán Bidegain, the daughter of court magistrate Carlos Horacio Urán, who was killed in the 1985 Palace of Justice attack [See NCH Annual Reports 2007–2008, 2011–2012, 2016], and a special adviser on matters of non-repetition at the Foreign Ministry, called on President Gustavo Petro to officially request the declassification of all United States (US) records related to the massacre, in line with a 2014 verdict of the Inter-American Human Rights Court [See NCH Annual Report 2016] and a March 2021 “Request for Expedited Declassification for Colombia’s Truth Commission” to US President Joe Biden by the 2016 Comisión para el esclarecimiento de la verdad, la convivencia y la no-repetición (Commission for Clarification of the Truth, Coexistence and Non-Repetition) [See NCH Annual Report 2018]. The call was backed by the US-based National Security Archive.⁷³

See also Peru, United States.

CONGO (Democratic Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2000, 2003–2023.

On 2 August 2023, the Plateforme d’actions de jeunes Congolais (Congolese Youth Action Platform) organized the first-ever official ceremony for the victims of human rights violations in the Second Congo War (1998–2003) – also known as the Great African War or “Genocost” – in Kinshasa. Founding member Mimie Witenkate called on the government to ensure that the recommendations of the 2010 United Nations Mapping Report, which documented human rights violations between 1993 and 2003, were applied [See NCH Annual Report 2012].

Since the election of Félix Tshisekedi as President in August 2020, who had campaigned on an agenda of transitional justice, few steps toward accountability and reparations had been taken [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022]. In December 2022 the government issued a new law on the protection of and reparation for victims of conflict-related sexual violence. It was estimated that tens of thousands of mostly women had been victims of sexual violence at various times since 1998.

The government had also set up two institutions responsible for reparations. The Fonds spécial de répartition et d’indemnisation aux victimes des activités illicites de l’Ouganda en République Démocratique du Congo (FRIVAO) Special Fund for the Compensation of Victims of Illicit Activities of Uganda in the Democratic Republic of Congo) was created in May 2023 for the victims of the ⁷³ Commission de la Verdad, Request for Expedited Declassification for Colombia’s Truth Commission (March 2021); Michael Evans, “‘After Black November’: The U.S. and the 1985 Palace of Justice Tragedy,” National Security Archive (19 September 2023).

Ugandan occupation of parts of eastern Congo during the 1998–2003 war. Although the Ugandan government had paid the first installment of reparations in September 2022, in accordance with a ruling by the International Court of Justice [See NCH Annual Report 2023], nothing had been paid out to the victims as of September 2023 and FRIVAO had reportedly not enough funds to set up reparation mechanisms. The Fonds national des réparations des victimes des violences sexuelles liées aux conflits et des victimes des crimes contre la paix et la sécurité (FONAREV; National Fund for Reparations for Victims of Conflict-Related Sexual Violence and Victims of Crimes against Peace and Security) set up to compensate victims of all human rights violations that were not covered by FRIVAO, had not received any of the US $100 million promised to it as of September 2023.⁷⁴

See also Belgium.

CONGO (Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004–2006, 2008, 2010–2012, 2019.

COSTA RICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

CÔTE D’IVOIRE

See Ivory Coast.

CROATIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2001, 2003–2013, 2015–2023.

Women victims of wartime rape faced numerous barriers when applying for the status of civilian victims of sexual violence during the war (1991–1995), which guaranteed certain welfare benefits. According to civil rights organizations, victims had to provide excessive and difficult to obtain documentation and witness testimonies, while some applicants were wrongfully rejected because they were suspected of being related to members of the Serb military or because the perpetrator was a member of the Croatian forces. The United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination expressed concern that some provisions of the Law on Civilian Victims of War were being interpreted in a discriminatory way against members of the Serb ethnic minority group and prevented them from exercising their rights as war victims.⁷⁵

⁷⁴ Caleb Kazadi, “When Will Congolese “Genocost” Victims Receive Reparations?” Justiceinfo.net (31 August 2023); “What is the Geno-Cost,” Genocost.org ([no date]).

On 8 December 2023, the Ministry of Science and Education announced the removal of the history textbook “Why Is History Important? 4,” edited by historian Miljenko Hajdarovic and published by Profil Klett, from its catalog of officially approved textbooks for use in primary and secondary schools. The textbook was unanimously approved in an unchanged version by the ministerial authorization committee in May 2021 and had been in use in the final grade of high school since the 2021–2022 year. In a press release, the ministry said that the textbooks did not sufficiently follow the official history curriculum: it gave interpretations of historians about historical events rather than teaching the history of humanity through six officially prescribed concepts; it contained historical maps with incorrect information; it did not adequately explain specific primary historical sources and the accompanying questions were not well formulated; it contained many suggestive questions and photographs that led students to wrong conclusions, especially in the chapter about the creation of the modern Republic of Croatia, its multi-party system and the Homeland War (1991–1995); it contained incorrect facts and data, as well as wrong interpretations of historical processes. However, the statement did not mention any specific examples.

The decision to remove the textbook came after an online vilification campaign of the three textbook authors and their publisher, and a series of critiques in the conservative media outlet narod.hr – characterized by the main fact-checking organization Faktograf in 2022 as a platform that spread “incorrect information.” The publisher, the authors, some historians, organizations and a member of parliament asked the Education Ministry to publish the full findings that led to the removal. This was reportedly the first case of a history textbook ban in Croatia since 1996.⁷⁶

See also Montenegro.

⁷⁵ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 142.

⁷⁶ Branimir Janković, “Branimir Janković: Iza pozivanja na “činjenice” i “greške” stoje brojne imputacije i neskriveni interpretativni zahtjevi,” Historiografija.hr (19 December 2023); Miljenko Hajdarovic, personal communication (28 December 2023); Darko Markusic, “Croatian Fact-Checkers’ War on Fake News Draws Bias Charge,” Balkan Insight (24 March 2022).

CUBA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2002, 2006, 2010–2012, 2015–2016, 2018, 2021–2023.

On 26 April 2023, the Ministry of Culture suspended the screening of the documentary Fito's Havana, written and directed by art historian and film director Juan Pin Vilar (1963–), in which the official version of the death of revolutionary Camilo Cienfuegos (1932–1959) was questioned and the shooting of three young men in 2003 who hijacked a boat to flee to Miami criticized. On 10 June 2023, the official television showed the documentary without the authorization of its director or producers, but not in its final version, which sparked complaints from the director.⁷⁷

On 27 November 2023, historian and Afro-descendant activist Alexander Hall Lujardo (1998–) was subjected to police surveillance at his home, following his public support for academic and writer Alina López Hernández after she was convicted of disobedience and fined for not attending extrajudicial summonses from State Security. Hall wrote for magazines such as Sin Permiso and Rialta Magazine, and was the co author and coordinator of the book Cuba 11J: Perspectivas contrahegemónicas de las protestas sociales (Cuba 11J: Counterhegemonic perspectives on social protests). Also on 27 November 2023, police prevented anthropologist Dmitri Prieto Samsónov from leaving his home, threatening him with the crime of disobedience. Prieto also attributed the police harassment to his support for López. He was the author of Transdominación de Haití (1791–1826) (Domination of Haiti, 1791–1826), for which he received the 2010 Pinos Nuevos prize.⁷⁸

See also Chile, Mexico.

CYPRUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2005, 2008–2011, 2013, 2015–2018, 2021–2022.

On 5 December 2023, in a reply to a question of European Parliament member Costas Mavrides about the continuing desecration of churches in northern Cyprus, including the Agia Anna in Kythrea, European Union (EU) Commissioner Elisa Ferreira, while acknowledging the example, wrote that the European

⁷⁷ PEN International, War, Censorship and Persecution: PEN International Case List 2023/2024 (London: PEN, 2024), 33.

⁷⁸ PEN International, War, Censorship and Persecution: PEN International Case List 2023/2024 (London: PEN, 2024), 32–33.

Commission's leverage was limited due to the suspension of the acquis (the body of common rights and obligations binding on all the EU member states) in the areas not under the effective control of the Cypriot government, but that it supported the bi-communal Technical Committee on Cultural Heritage in its protection and restoration of monuments.⁷⁹

CZECH REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2010, 2013–2023.

On 21 December 2023, David Kozák ([1999]–2023), a masters history student at Charles University's Institute of World History, Prague, shot 17 people dead and injured 25 others, before killing himself. Among the fourteen victims at the Faculty of Arts, Charles University, on Jan Palach Square, were Lenka Hlávková, the head of the Institute of Music Sciences and an expert in the musical culture of medieval central Europe, and Klára Holcová, an athlete and student of archival science and Bohemian studies.⁸⁰

⁷⁹ Costas Mavrides, "Desecration and Cultural Genocide of Church Monuments in Occupied Cyprus" (Question to the European Commission) (13 October 2023); Elisa Ferreira, "Joint Answer Given by Ms Ferreira on Behalf of the European Commission" (5 December 2023).

⁸⁰ Paul Kirby, "What We Know about Prague Shooter," BBC News (21 December 2023); Ivana Kottasová, "Czechs Mourn the 14 Killed in University Mass Shooting," CNN (23 December 2023); "Victims of Prague Shooting Remembered as Nation Mourns," Expats.cz (23 December 2023).

DENMARK

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2007, 2013, 2016–2020, 2022–2023.

Greenland

On 4 March 2024, a group of 143 women sued the state for having been fitted an intrauterine device (IUD) without their consent or knowledge as part of a government birth control campaign to reduce the birthrate of Greenlanders between 1966–1974. After the incorporation of Greenland, a former Danish colony, into Denmark in 1953, mortality rates dropped and birth rates increased. In response to the island’s population increase, central authorities, without informing the Landsrådet (Greenland’s highest representative political body), initiated a family planning campaign in which half of the female population, approximately 4,500 women and girls some reportedly as young as twelve, received IUDs. The number was likely higher since registration was stopped after 1970. The IUD campaign was one of many scandals in Greenlandic-Danish relations. In the spring of 2022, Danish prime minister Mette Frederiksen had apologized for the removal of 22 Greenlandic children from their parents as part of the so-called “Experiment” – a failed attempt to educate a new Greenlandic elite by removing the children from their parents and bringing them to Denmark to learn how to speak Danish and understand Danish culture [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. On 9 June 2022, Frederiksen and Greenland’s Prime Minister Múte Bourup Egede signed a joint declaration to investigate their mutual historical relations since World War II [See NCH Annual Report 2023]. The IUD campaign was said to be included in this investigation.⁸¹

DJIBOUTI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2023.

⁸¹ Martine Lind Krebs, “Denmark and Greenland Confront a Traumatic Birth Control Campaign,” Justiceinfo.net (21 July 2022); Miranda Bryant, “Greenlandic Women Plan to Sue Danish State over Historical Contraceptive ‘Violation’,” Guardian (2 October 2023); Miranda Bryant, “Greenlandic Women Sue Danish State for Contraceptive ‘Violation’,” Guardian (4 March 2024).

ECUADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2007, 2009–2021.

EGYPT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2001, 2003, 2006–2007, 2010–2023.

In 2023, authorities continued to carry out forced evictions and house demolitions, including in Cairo’s informal settlements and the historic “City of the Dead” cemetery, home to tens of thousands of residents, and arrested residents for protesting.⁸²

On 14 August 2023, marking the tenth anniversary of the 2013 Rabaa massacre in which police and security forces began attacking protesters holding a sit-in at Rabaa al-Adawiya Square and al-Nahda Square in Cairo to protest against the coup that had deposed democratically elected President Mohamed Morsi, Amnesty International criticized the lack of accountability and described the period since the massacre as a “decade of shame.” No official or state entity had been held accountable for the massacre, despite a government fact-finding mission concluding that security forces used excessive force. Moreover, some of the authorities who had ordered the massacre remained in power, including President Abdel Fattah el-Sisi, who was defense minister at the time. An estimated 904 people were killed: 817 at al-Adawiya Square and 87 at al-Nahda Square, but the remaining unidentified bodies and missing people likely placed the death toll above 1,000.⁸³

EL SALVADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2023.

⁸² Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 159.

⁸³ “I Saw Many Bodies That Day’: Protester Recounts Rabaa Massacre 10 Years On,” Al Jazeera (14 August 2023); “Turning Point’: What Happened During Egypt’s Rabaa Massacre 10 Years Ago?,” Al Jazeera (14 August 2023); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 157.

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2019.

ERITREA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008, 2016, 2018.

Annual “cultural festivals” held by Eritrean diaspora communities in cities around the world were criticized as forms of intimidation by the dictatorship of President Isaias Afewerki (ruling since 1991) against Eritrean refugees, and as a way of instilling loyalty and collecting taxes from the diaspora communities. The festivals, which often included the participation of government officials, reportedly consisted of hate speech against the refugees, and military displays that included children in uniforms being encouraged to act out violent scenes. From mid-2022 onward, violent protests in various cities against the festivals broke out, with significant escalations during the summer of 2023. On 2 September 2023, the thirtieth anniversary of Eritrean independence, violent clashes between diaspora groups broke out in Canada, Germany, Israel and Sweden.⁸⁴

See also Ethiopia, United Kingdom.

ESTONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2010, 2015, 2017, 2023.

⁸⁴ Kaamil Ahmed & Miranda Bryan, “Eritrean Diaspora Vow to Continue Disrupting Festivals That ‘Promote Dictatorship’,” Guardian (12 August 2023); “Israel’s Netanyahu Calls for Deportation of Eritrean Refugee ‘Rioters’,” Al Jazeera (3 September 2023); Roshni Majumdar, “Germany: Dozens Injured in Unrest at Eritrean Event,” Der Welt (17 September 2023); Yohannes Woldemariam, “Protests by the Eritrean Diaspora Have Highlighted Repression at Home and Dividing Lines Abroad,” Africa at LSE (18 September 2023); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 208.

ESWATINI

Previous Annual Report entries under Swaziland: 2011, 2013, 2016–2018; under Eswatini: 2023.

In 2021, King Mswati III agreed to hold a national dialogue with the aim of deliberating on the democratic challenges confronted by Eswatini. He then decided that the multi-stakeholder national dialogue would be held through the Sibaya or “people’s parliament,” an annual traditional gathering of the nation. Human rights activists in Eswatini argued that the Sibaya format had traditionally been a monologue where the king talked down to his people while they sat in silence, rather than a meaningful and constructive dialogue. They also said that the royal kraal, where the Sibaya took place, was not a neutral venue for a national conversation about Eswatini’s democratic future. Two years later, the dialogue still had not taken place and there appeared to be a lack of political will to hold this much-awaited dialogue.⁸⁵

ETHIOPIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2011, 2015–2023.

Following the November 2022 peace treaty between the federal government and the Tigray People’s Liberation Front (TPLF), the government committed to implement a national transitional justice policy framework. In January 2023, it released a draft Green Paper, “Policy Options for Transitional Justice,” as a starting point for public consultations. The government began seeking public input in February, including in the Amhara region and parts of the Oromia region still affected by fighting. In September 2023, the second report of the United Nations-mandated International Commission of Human Rights Experts on Ethiopia (ICHREE) found that the government “failed to effectively investigate violations” and “initiated a flawed transitional justice process.” Political opposition groups, civil society groups, human rights experts, and consultation participants criticized the Green Paper, pointing to its focus on the principle of sovereignty, and the lack of inclusiveness of the consultations. They also questioned the timeliness of the discussion while the fighting was ongoing. In Tigray, participants reportedly raised concerns about the document’s failure to address Eritrean forces’ accountability.⁸⁶

⁸⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 213–214.

⁸⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 219–220.

On 21 September 2023, the British government returned a lock of hair of Prince Alemayehu, but continued to decline repatriating his remains [See NCH Annual Report 2023].⁸⁷

On 28 December 2023, a report by the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Office and the Ethiopian Human Rights Commission (EHRC) called on the government to ensure that efforts to address the country's legacy of human rights violations were grounded in international human rights law. The report set out findings of fifteen community consultations held from July 2022 to March 2023 with more than 800 participants in all regions of the country. The aim was to develop a national transitional justice policy in line with the Cessation of Hostilities Agreement signed in Pretoria in November 2022.

In the last five decades, Ethiopians had gone through different political transitions: from the imperial regime to the Derg in 1974, from the Derg to the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front (EPRDF) in 1991, and from the EPRDF to the Prosperity Party in 2018. During these transitions, Ethiopians grappled with the legacies of past gross human rights violations. Historically, the prevailing approach for addressing them largely involved drawing a line under the past. After the 1990s, this view gradually shifted to the need to confront legacies of the repressive past through a transitional justice approach.⁸⁸

See also United Kingdom.

⁸⁷ “Ethiopian Prince’s Hair, Artefacts Returned 155 Years after British Plunder,” Al Jazeera (23 September 2023).

⁸⁸ Report of the Ethiopian Human Rights Commission (EHRC) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) on the Findings of Community Consultations on Transitional Justice (TJ) with Victims and Affected Populations in the Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia (Geneva: OHCHR, 28 December 2023), §§ 42–43; United Nations Human Rights Office & Ethiopian Human Rights Commission, “Ethiopia: Justice for Past Abuses Must Be Victim-Centred and Include Criminal Prosecutions, Reparations, Truth-Seeking and Institutional Reforms – UN report” (press release; Geneva: OHCHR, 28 December 2023).

FIJI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006, 2010.

FINLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2017, 2020, 2022.

On 15 March 2024, Fabián Salvioli, United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice reparations and guarantees of non-recurrence, urged Finland to undertake more transitional justice measures to address the legacy of human rights violations endured by the Sámi people. He said that the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and the Sámi Psychosocial Support Unit (Uvja) were hallmarks of this process and must receive full support. Salvioli also underscored the reparation carried out by Uvja and the repatriation and reburial initiatives carried out by the National Museum of Finland and the Sámi Museum Siida. He noted a scarcity of measures aimed at memorializing the legacy of assimilation and related policies.

The Sámi people had been the subject of assimilation policies adopted by the state and church in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, including the forced accommodation of Sámi children in boarding schools, where they were forbidden to speak the Sámi language and forced to integrate into the majority culture. The Sámi were also subjected to religious conversion, removed from their land, and stripped of their culture [See NCH Annual Reports 2017, 2020, 2022].⁸⁹

FRANCE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1999, 2001–2009, 2011–2014, 2016–2018, 2020–2023.

Throughout 2023, mosques, synagogues and cemeteries were subjected to racist attacks, often being vandalized with racist symbols and messaging promoting extremist political groups. After the escalation of violence in Israel and occupied Gaza, reports of attacks increased as schools and walls were defaced with Nazi and antisemitic symbols.⁹⁰

⁸⁹ Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence, Fabián Salvioli, Preliminary Observations: Visit to Finland (11 to 15 March 2024); United Nations Office of the High Commissioner of Human Rights, “Finland Must Address Legacy of Human Rights Violations against Sámi people, Says UN Expert” (Press release; 15 March 2024).

⁹⁰ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 171.

On 27 November 2023, six minors went on trial in a children’s court behind closed doors, accused of involvement in the beheading of history and geography teacher Samuel Paty by suspected Islamist Abdullakh Anzorov in 2020 [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. The children were aged between 13 and 15 at the time. One of them, a girl who allegedly told her parents that Paty had shown caricatures of the Prophet Muhammad in her class, was charged with false accusation after it was established that she was not in the class when it happened; the others were charged with premeditated criminal conspiracy or ambush because they allegedly pointed out Paty to the murderer or helped monitor his exit from the school. On 8 December, all six were sentenced to up to 18 months suspended prison sentence. Eight adults were also charged, including two for “complicity in a terrorist murder,” and would appear before a special criminal court in 2024. Anzorov was shot dead by police soon after the attack.⁹¹

In early December 2023, teachers at the Jacques-Cartier school near Paris refused to work after first-year high school pupils, aged 11 and 12, had said that they were offended by “Diana and Actaeon,” a Renaissance-era painting by Italian painter Giuseppe Cesari (1568–1640) portraying a mythical scene from Roman poet Ovid’s Metamorphoses, because it contained nude women. They also accused the teacher of making racist and Islamophobic remarks, which the school denied. Staff felt they had been left unsupported and were working in a “degraded climate.” On visiting the school, Education Minister Gabriel Attal said that the pupils behind the complaints would face disciplinary measures and a team would visit the school to make sure it adhered to “values of the republic.” On 12 December 2023, classes at the school restarted after several days’ interruption.⁹²

On 14 May 2024, the anniversary of the first major round-up of French Jews under the Nazis in 1941, the Wall of the Righteous at the Shoah (Holocaust) Memorial in Paris, which honors people who saved Jews during the Nazi occupation of France, was vandalized with red hand graffiti. President Emmanuel Macron wrote on X that the vandalism “damage[d] the memory” both of those who saved Jews in the Holocaust and the victims. Around ten other spots in Paris were similarly targeted.⁹³

On 1 July 2024, more than a thousand French historians sent a letter to newspaper Le Monde calling on voters not to elect the far-right Rassemblement National (RN; National Rally). Among many reasons, the historians outlined threats to the freedom of historical research and teaching if the RN were elected, citing its education manifesto’s “instrumentalization of the past ... entirely focused on the return to a teaching of history that is national, even nationalistic, and nostalgic.”⁹⁴

⁹¹ “Six Teenagers in Court over Beheading of French Teacher,” Reuters (27 November 2023); “Samuel Paty: Six French Teenagers on Trial over Teacher’s Murder,” BBC News (27 November 2023); Angelique Chrisafis, “Six Teenagers Convicted in France over Teacher’s Beheading in 2020,” Guardian (8 December 2023); Stéphane Simon, Les Derniers jours de Samuel Paty: Enquête sur une tragédie qui aurait dû être évitée (Paris: Plon, 2023); Valérie Igounet & Guy Le Besnerais, Crayon noir: Samuel Paty, Histoire d’un prof ([No Place]: StudioFact Éditions, 2023).

⁹² Ido Vock, “Nude Painting Row at French School Sparks Teacher Walkout,” BBC News (12 December 2023).

⁹³ “Paris Holocaust Memorial Hit with Red Hand Graffiti,” France24 (14 May 2024).

French Guiana

On 1 February 2024, the Institut Francophone pour la Justice et la Démocratie (IFJD) published a report recommending the establishment of a Truth Commission on “Indian Homes” – a series of Catholic boarding schools that, under the guise of religious education, interned 2,000 Amerindian and Bushinengue children between 1935 and 2023 – in French Guiana. The report linked structural colonial violence, cultural practices of forced assimilation, and physical violence against the children in the Homes. The project had been initiated in 2019 and on 13 January 2023 the Grand Customary Council of the Amerindian and Bushinengue populations of French Guiana – a council set up in 2017 to enable indigenous populations to participate in local decision-making bodies – had mandated the IFJD to investigate the Homes. However, two months later the partnership was suspended without reason, reportedly because the French prefect of Guiana canceled it, allegedly in an attempt to block accountability [See NCH Annual Report 2023].⁹⁵

See also Mexico, Russia, Syria, United States.

⁹⁴ Patrich Boucheron, Antoine Lilti, et al., “The French Republic Is Under Threat: We Are 1,000 Historians and We Cannot Remain Silent,” Guardian (6 July 2024).

⁹⁵ Clémentine Méténier, “Indian Homes in French Guiana: Truth Commission Project Not Yet Ripe,” Justiceinfo.net (22 February 2024).

GABON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016, 2018.

GAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016–2018, 2021–2023.

In April 2019, the Truth, Reconciliation and Reparations Commission (TRRC) – set up in 2017 to investigate human rights violations committed during the rule of Yahya Jammeh (1996–2017) [See NCH Annual Reports 2018, 2021–2023] – embarked on an excavation at the Yundum Barracks, finding the bodies of seven soldiers who were among those extrajudicially executed on 11 November 1994, after an attempted coup against Jammeh. As of August 2023, however, the human remains continued to be in storage in unknown conditions and without any DNA testing for their identities having been conducted. In June 2022, experts from the NGO Justice Rapid Response had criticized the TRRC for performing the exhumations without proper technical knowledge, plans for post-exhumation analysis, and with limited participation of victim’s families.⁹⁶

In April 2023, a study commissioned by Journalists for Justice, a not-for-profit organization, highlighted shortcomings in the Truth, Reconciliation and Reparations Commission (TRRC)’s reparation program, including lack of communication, a limited definition of “victim,” the exclusion of some survivors of sexual and gender-based violence, and inadequate monetary compensation.

In May 2022, and again in May 2023, the government issued White Papers to implement the TRRC’s recommendations, including the creation of a Special Prosecutor’s Office and a hybrid court in collaboration with the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) “to try those with the greatest responsibility” during Yahya Jammeh’s presidency (1996–2017) [See NCH Annual Report 2023]. In July 2023, the government stated that it would establish a taskforce, which would include members of civil society, to expand the work already done by the TRRC on enforced disappearance. In the same month, the ECOWAS Court of Justice ruled that Gambia had violated the right to life of Saul Ndow, a critic of Jammeh’s government – who was subjected to enforced disappearance – and that despite the establishment of the TRRC, the almost ten-year delay in prosecuting those suspected to be responsible was unreasonable. The court also ordered the government to implement the TRRC’s recommendations

⁹⁶ Joyce Mutoka, “Opinion: The Search for the Gambia’s Disappeared Must Use a Victim-Centred Approach,” Justice Rapid Response (28 June 2022); Mariam Sankanu, “Gambia: Why After Four Years Identity of the Exhumed Remains Unknown,” Justiceinfo.net (24 August 2023).

[See NCH Annual Reports 2018, 2021–2023].

On 22 April 2024, Parliament passed bills to set up a Special Prosecutor's Office (SPO) and a Special Accountability Mechanism, the latter consisting of a set of principles for the SPO, the Special Criminal Division of the High Court (a court for trying domestic crimes) and the Special Tribunal (a hybrid court to try international crimes, in cooperation with the Economic Community of West-African States [ECOWAS]) on how to implement the TRCC recommendations. The two bills were hailed as a step in the right direction, but also criticized because they did not include a timeline or a budget.⁹⁷

GEORGIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2003, 2010–2012, 2014, 2016, 2019, 2023.

On 9 January 2024, a glass-covered icon in the Holy Trinity (Sameba) Cathedral in Tbilisi depicting Russian-Orthodox Saint Matrona of Moscow (1881–1952) blessing Soviet dictator Joseph Stalin (1878–1953), was splattered with paint by activist Nata Peradze. Afterward, she published a video of her act, saying it was a protest against the glorification of a tyrant. The next day, protesters including priests from the far-right Alt Info movement surrounded her home. She also received death threats and went into hiding. Police launched a petty hooliganism investigation into the paint splattering but guarded her home. Leaders of the pro-Russian political party, Alliance of Patriots, had donated the icon to the cathedral several months previously. Later in January 2024, the Georgian Church ordered the removal of the icon from the cathedral as there was insufficient evidence that Stalin and Saint Matrona had ever met.⁹⁸

GERMANY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–2000, 2003, 2006–2013, 2015–2017, 2019–2023.

On [24] January 2023, Gabriele Krone-Schmalz, former Moscow correspondent (1987–1991) for the German television network ARD, demanded a cease-and-desist declaration from historian Franziska Davies, a lecturer of Eastern European history at the Ludwig Maximilian University in Munich, ⁹⁷ Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 175; Mariam Sankanu, "Gambia: The End of the Wait-and-See Strategy?," Justiceinfo.net (17 May 2024).

⁹⁸ Ido Vock, "Georgian Orthodox Church Calls for Stalin Religious Icon To Be Changed," BBC News (11 January 2024); Sophia Kishkovsky, "Stalin Religious Icon Splattered with Paint in Georgia," The Art Newspaper (15 January 2024); Rayhan Demytrie & Robert Greenall, "Georgia: Stalin Icon Removed from Tbilisi Church," BBC News (19 January 2024).

regarding fourteen (later: three) statements the latter had made. Krone-Schmalz was known for her view that the “West” was also to blame for the Russian invasion of Ukraine because it had ignored Russia’s interests and expanded NATO. Davies had called Krone-Schmalz “a defender of the criminal Putin regime” and criticized her books, lectures and media appearances in writings and on Twitter, saying they contained disinformation (that is, distortions, half-truths, manipulation of sources, and false statements). She had also argued that Krone-Schmalz did not meet minimum journalistic standards and ignored the existing expertise and literature available on the “Putin System.” Davies refused to issue a cease-and-desist declaration and sued Krone-Schmalz before the Cologne Regional Court. In her turn, Krone-Schmalz sued Davies before the Düsseldorf Regional Court. The Cologne Regional Court ruled that the statements were statements of opinion and therefore a legitimate use of Davies’s freedom of expression. On 8 March 2023, Krone-Schmalz withdrew her complaint.⁹⁹

In February 2023, seven UN Special Rapporteurs expressed grave concerns at the alleged “lack of effective reparative measures afforded” to Ovaherero and Nama peoples in Germany’s former colony of “Southwest Africa” (1884–1915; now Namibia), including lack of “an unqualified recognition of the genocide committed” against them between 1904 and 1908 [See NCH Annual Report 2021 under “Germany” and Annual Report 2023 under “Namibia”].¹⁰⁰

In May 2022 and April–May 2023, demonstrations on and around Nakba Day (a day to commemorate the expulsion of hundreds of thousands of Palestinians from Israel in 1948) were banned pre-emptively and in a blanket manner in Berlin. The ban was based on stigmatizing and discriminatory stereotypes of expected participants, whom the police characterized as having a “tendency toward violent acts.”¹⁰¹

On 11 October 2023, the Hamburg District Court imposed a temporary ban on sales of The Compatriots: The Brutal and Chaotic History of Russia’s Exiles, Émigrés, and Agents Abroad (2019) [alternative subtitle: The Russian Exiles Who Fought Against the Kremlin], a history of espionage against Russian émigrés since the late nineteenth century written by London-based Russian journalists Andrei Soldatov and Irina Borogan. The ban was limited to the English-language e-book version. Berlin-based Russian businessman Alexey Kozlov had claimed that allegations in the book that his wealth had been partially based on his family's historical links to the Russian secret service KGB (his grandmother, great-grandfather and step-great-grandfather had all been KGB officers, the latter of whom was the spy Nahum Eitingon, who had organized the murder of Leon Trotsky [1879–1940]) were false and defamatory. Soldatov and Borodan claimed that the disputed passages had come from Kozlov himself, made during a 2018 interview in Moscow.

⁹⁹ “Ex-Moskau-Korrespondentin Krone-Schmalz geht mit Anwälten gegen Kritikerin vor,” Der Spiegel (10 November 2022); Julian Seifert, “‘Muss sich das gefallen lassen’: Gabriele Krone-Schmalz verliert vor Gericht gegen Kritikerin,” t-online (Nachrichten für Deutschland) (13 February 2023); Julian Seifert, “Krone-Schmalz klagt nicht weiter gegen Kritikerin Franziska Davies,” t-online (Nachrichten für Deutschland) (9 March 2023); Franziska Davies, “Desinformationsexpertin: Russland, die Ukraine und Frau Krone-Schmalz,” Osteuropa, 72 nos. 9–10 (2022), 245–265; Stellungnahme des VOH zum Versuch von Gabriele Krone-Schmalz gegen ihre Kritikerin, die Osteuropahistorikerin Franziska Davies, mit juristischen Mitteln vorzugehen (11 November 2022).

¹⁰⁰ United Nations Special Rapporteurs, AL NAM 1/2023 (Allegations Letter) (23 February 2023); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 180.

¹⁰¹ Amnesty International, Under Protected and Over Restricted: The State of the Right to Protest in 21 European Countries (London: AI, 2024), 95.

Following the court verdict, a statement by Index on Censorship backed by fifteen other freedom of expression groups including PEN International and Article 19 expressed extreme concern over what it saw as “intimidatory tactics.” Around the time of Kozlov's defamation claim, Soldatov was declared a “foreign agent” by the Kremlin, had his Russian bank accounts frozen, and was charged with discrediting the armed forces for his criticism of the 24 February 2022 Russian invasion of Ukraine. The appeal to the verdict was to be heard on 8 December 2023. In the meantime, Kozlov's lawyers were seeking the withdrawal of all versions of the book worldwide.¹⁰²

On 13 October 2023, the LitProm association – a literary organization active in the promotion of literature from Africa, Asia, Latin America and the Arab world – postponed the awarding of the so-called LiBeraturpreis at the Frankfurt Book Fair to the Palestine-born novelist and essayist Adania Shibli (1974–) “due to the war started by Hamas, under which millions of people in Israel and Palestine are suffering.” Shibli was awarded the prize for her historical novel Minor Detail, telling the true story of the 1949 abduction and gang rape of a Palestinian Bedouin girl by Israeli soldiers in the Negev (Naqab) desert. Already in the summer of 2023, one of the jury members had resigned in protest against the award. Following LitProm's decision, an open letter signed by more than 350 authors admonished the book fair's organization, citing its responsibility to create spaces for Palestinian authors to share their stories, “not shut them down.” Human rights organizations, including PEN America, joined the criticism, stating that “any literary organizations worldwide should affirm their commitment to free expression and pluralism even amid conflict.”¹⁰³

In December 2023, the police of Nordrhein-Westfalen issued an information brochure for students, teachers and parents on how to deal with the Israel–Gaza War (2023–). It contained, among other things, ¹⁰² “Anti-SLAPP Campaigners from across Europe Stand in Solidarity with the Russian Dissident Authors after an Injunction Was Secured against Their Publisher in Germany.” UK Anti-SLAPP Coalition (press release; 24 November 2023); Luke Hardin & Kate Connolly, “Free Speech Groups Criticize German Ban on Russian Journalists' Book.” Guardian (28 November 2023).

¹⁰³ Fatima Bhutto, “Minor Detail by Adania Shibli Review – Horror in the Desert.” Guardian (30 May 2020); Philip Oltermann, “Palestinian Voices ‘Shut Down’ at Frankfurt Book Fair, Say Authors.” Guardian (15 October 2023); “PEN America Calls on LitProm to Reconsider Postponement of Shibli Award.” Guardian (16 October 2023); Daisy Ruddock, “Art Institutions Accused of Censoring Pro-Palestinian Views.” Index on Censorship (12 December 2023).

a prohibition to refer to the Israeli military campaign in Gaza as a “genocide” or compare it to the Holocaust, and called on children, parents and teachers to report on them as breaches of the German Criminal Code offense of incitement to hatred (“Volksverhetzung.”)¹⁰⁴

See also Bosnia and Herzegovina, Eritrea, France, Palestine, Russia, Tanzania, United States.

GHANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2004–2008, 2017, 2019, 2022.

See also United Kingdom.

GREECE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2004–2011, 2013–2019, 2022–2023.

In August 2023, the Culture Ministry announced the eviction of the Σύλλογος Ελλήνων Αρχαιολόγων (SEA; Association of Greek Archaeologists) from their government-rented offices in Athens. On 14 June, the SEA had organized an event titled “Justice in the Crime of Pylos,” after a fishing vessel carrying approximately 750 people seeking asylum sank that day, killing up to 646 people. After the shipwreck, some survivors claimed that the coast guard had towed the boat, causing it to capsize in what is known as “pushbacks.” The Culture Ministry claimed that the event had been in violation of the terms of contract, but the SEA accused the ministry of censorship. The SEA and the Culture Ministry repeatedly came into conflict in the past, including over the illegal licensing of construction activities on archaeological sites on the island of Mykonos [See NCH Annual Report 2023].¹⁰⁵

In early June 2024, Zeynep Boz, the Turkish culture ministry’s top anti-smuggling official, said that there was no “firman” (official evidence of a legal sale) in the Ottoman archives to prove that Lord Elgin had been given a permit in 1801–1816 to strip the fifth-century BC Greek Parthenon on the Acropolis in ¹⁰⁴ Polizei Nordrhein-Westfalen, Nahost-Konflikt: Informationsbroschüre für Schulen, Lehrkräfte und Eltern (Düsseldorf: Landeskriminalamt Nordrhein-Westfalen, December 2023), 3, 6, 9.

¹⁰⁵ “Greece: Disparities in Accounts of Pylos Shipwreck Underscore the Need for Human Rights Compliant Inquiry,” Human Rights Watch (3 August 2023); Eleni Stamatoukou, “Greek Culture Ministry Evicts Archeologists’ Association From its HQ,” Balkan Insight (17 August 2023); Eleni Stamatoukou, “Greece to Probe Mykonos Building Violations After Archaeologist Attacked,” Balkan Insight (4 April 2023).

Athens of its marbles (the so-called Elgin marbles) to take them to Britain – thereby rebutting the argument that they were bought legally. The marbles, held in the British Museum since 1816, were reclaimed by Greece [See NCH Annual Report 1998].¹⁰⁶

GRENADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2022.

GUATEMALA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2023.

See also Nicaragua.

GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2023.

On 4 November 2023, an armed commando extracted four people from Conakry’s central prison, including former President Moussa Dadis Camara (in office between 2008–2010) and former Minister of Presidential Security Claude Pivi. Camara and two others were recaptured the same day, but Pivi remained a fugitive. The four men were on trial for the 2009 Conakry Stadium massacre [See NCH Annual Reports 2015–2016, 2018–2023]. On 12 February 2024, in a new phase of the trial which had begun in September 2022, civil party witnesses were to be heard. According to lawyers, the escape of Pivi, who had been charged with murder, rape and destruction of property, added to fears among witnesses that their lives could be at risk if they were to testify at the trial. Before the trial, a law had been passed providing for the protection of “persons at risk,” but it had not been implemented yet.

On 31 July 2024, the court sentenced Camara and seven military commanders to twenty years in prison for crimes against humanity.¹⁰⁷

¹⁰⁶ Helena Smith, “Turkey Rejects Claim Lord Elgin Had Permission to Take Parthenon Marbles,” Guardian (7 June 2024).

¹⁰⁷ “Guinea Stadium Massacre: Minister Claude Pivi Charged,” BBC News (28 June 2013); “Commando Operation in Guinea: Reward Offered for the Capture of the Last Fugitive,” Africa News (9 November 2023); Matthias Raynal, “Guinea Stadium Massacre: Jailbreak Undermines the Trial,” Justiceinfo.net (13 November

GUINEA-BISSAU

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2012, 2015.

See also Central African Republic.

GUYANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2022.

See also Venezuela.

2023); Matthias Raynal, "Guinea: Frightened Witnesses Desert the Trial," Justiceinfo.net (12 February 2024); Paul Njie, "Guinea's Ex-military Ruler Jailed over Stadium Massacre," BBC News (1 August 2024).

HAITI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2000–2003, 2006, 2008–2009, 2013–2023.

HONDURAS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998, 2001–2002, 2009–2015, 2022–2023.

HONG KONG

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996. From 1997: See China.

HUNGARY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997, 2004, 2007–2023.

In [September] 2023, the refurbished Trianon Museum reopened in Varpalota. The state-funded museum, the gift shop of which sold anti-Trianon merchandise and irredentist board games, commemorated the 1920 Treaty of Trianon, in which two-thirds of Hungary's pre-World War I territory was incorporated into other countries in the region, a fact which was felt (and actively propagated by the successive Fidesz governments of Viktor Orbán [2010–present]) as a trauma by many Hungarians. Adjacent to the museum lay the Greater Hungary Park featuring a flowerbed in the shape of pre-World War I Hungary and the Carpathia Hotel whose rooms were named after cities that were part of Hungary before the war.¹⁰⁸

On 3 September 2023, during a ceremony for the thirtieth anniversary of the reburial of former regent Miklós Horthy (in power between 1920–1944), Minister of Construction and Transportation Janos Lazar praised Horthy as “an exceptional statesman who was a true heroic soldier and a true Hungarian patriot.” His comments caused outrage among foreign ministers and ambassadors and was criticized by chief rabbi of the Dohány Street Synagogue, Hungarian's largest synagogue, Robert Frölich, who referenced Horthy's antisemitism and his promises to Adolf Hitler to "gradually phase out the Jews" in Hungary during World War II. Repeated Fidesz governments of Viktor Orbán (2010–present) had pushed a campaign of reappraisal for the Horthy regime, including an overhaul of the history curriculum and support for revisionist historical research [See NCH Annual Reports 2019–2023].¹⁰⁹

¹⁰⁸ Lili Rutai, “Why Is Viktor Orbán Keeping the 100-Year-Old Treaty of Trianon Alive?,” RFE/RL (24 April 2024); Edit Inotai, “How Hungary's 'Trianon Trauma' Inflames Identity Politics,” Balkan Insight (25 November 2019).

¹⁰⁹ Bela Szandelsky, "Hungary's Transportation Minister Gets Sharp Criticism for Comments Praising Nazi-Allied WWII Leader," Associated Press (6 September 2023).

INDIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1997, 2000–2023.

Between May and July 2023, amid ethnic violence between the Hindu Meitei and Christian Kuki-Zo people in Manipur, more than 220 churches and 17 Hindu temples were destroyed. Human Rights Watch accused the Bharatiya Janata Party state authorities of facilitating the violence through “divisive policies that promote[d] Hindu majoritarianism” [See NCH Annual Report 2023].¹¹⁰

In July 2023, the University of Kashmir and the Cluster University Srinagar (CUS) decided to drop poems of critically-acclaimed Kashmiri-American poet Agha Shahid Ali and the memoirs of author and journalist Basharat Peer from their curricula. One of Shahid’s poems, “I See Kashmir from New Delhi at Midnight,” taken out of CUS’s Integrated Masters in English program, explored the experience of the Kashmiri people during the Insurgency in Jammu and Kashmir (1989–). The advisers on education in New Delhi and Srinagar claimed that “resistance literature” sustained a “secessionist mindset, aspiration and narrative” among university students.¹¹¹

In [early August] 2023, amid ethnic tensions between the Hindu majority and Muslim minority in Haryana, a mosque in the 57th district was set on fire and the imam (the prayer leader) killed. He was one of at least seven who were killed in violent attacks throughout the state. In Haryana’s only Muslim-majority district of Nuh, the local Bharatiya Janata Party government demolished hundreds of buildings between [4 and 7 August]. On 8 August, the Punjab and Haryana High Court ordered a halt to the destruction of property and questioned whether the demolitions were “an exercise of ethnic cleansing ... conducted by the State.”¹¹²

On 3 August 2023, the Allahabad High Court in Uttar Pradesh ruled in favor of Hindu petitioners that the Archaeological Survey of India could survey the structure of the Gyanvapi mosque in Varanasi – which had supposedly been built on the ruins of destroyed Hindu temples [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023]. Muslim petitioners expressed fear that the survey would damage the structure of the mosque and pointed out provisions of a 1991 Indian law protecting places of worship.¹¹³

¹¹⁰ “Why Ethnic Violence in India’s Manipur Has Been Going on for Three Months,” Al Jazeera (9 August 2023).

¹¹¹ “‘Curfewed Night’, Agha Shahid Ali’s Poetry To Be Removed from Curriculum at KU,” Kashmiriyat (19 July 2023); Jehangir Ali, “Two Leading Kashmir Universities Drop Agha Shahid Ali, Basharat Peer from English MA Courses,” The Wire (23 July 2023).

¹¹² “India Court Asks if Nuh Demolitions Were ‘an Exercise of Ethnic Cleansing’,” Al Jazeera (8 August 2023).

¹¹³ “India Court Allows Survey of Historic Mosque To See If It Stands on Temple,” Al Jazeera (3 August 2023).

On 10 September 2023, a Hindu mob attacked Muslim worshippers in Pusesavali, Maharashtra, killing one person, damaging the mosque and burning the Quran and other religious books. The violence reportedly erupted after a Hindu man had hacked into a Muslim minor's Instagram account, posting derogatory remarks in the latter's name about Chhatrapati Shivaji (1630–1680), the first Hindu king of the Maratha Empire (1674–1818) [See NCH Annual Reports 2004, 2010–2011, 2014, 2020–2022]. According to the Association for the Protection of Civil Rights, the attack fitted a surge of anti-Muslim violence in the Kolhapur region, Maharashtra.¹¹⁴

On 1 November 2023, political scientist and former head of the University of Delhi political science department, Achin Vanaik, delivered a lecture, “The history and politics of the Palestinian present,” at OP Jindal University in Sonapat, Haryana. Some leaders of the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) claimed that the lecture was organized in support of Hamas (the Palestinian organization governing the Gaza Strip of the Occupied Palestinian Territory) and contained critical remarks about Hindutva's anti-Muslim stance. Viral clips of the lecture showed Vanaik making a comparison between Zionism and Hindutva, arguing that the former was not Islamophobic while the latter was. The university asked Vanaik to express regret but the latter refused saying that his words had been taken out of context and that he viewed Hamas's action on 7 October 2023, in which approximately 1,200 Israelis were killed by Hamas's military arm, as a terrorist activity and did not support it. On 14 November, a radical right-wing faction of students at the Indian Institute of Technology Bombay (IIT Bombay) opposed a lecture by Vanaik on the Israel–Palestine conflict. IIT Bombay subsequently canceled it.¹¹⁵

On 30 January 2024, the Delhi Development Authority (DDA) – a federally-run urban planning organization – demolished the Akhoondji Mosque in Mehrauli, Delhi, estimated to be at least 600 years old, in order to save the forest in which it was located, alleging “illegal encroachment.” Along with it, the madrassa (religious school), an adjacent graveyard and a shrine of one of the first Sufi saints (an Islamic mystic) in Delhi located inside the mosque complex were also razed. Preservationists and historians called the demolition a “mindless” destruction of collective heritage, arguing that the mosque was older than the forest and therefore no “encroachment,” and that its demolition unfairly targeted Muslim heritage. On 8 February 2024, at least four people died in violence in Haldwani, Uttarakhand, after authorities demolished a mosque and adjoining madrassa, similarly alleging “illegal encroachment.”¹¹⁶

¹¹⁴ Kaisar Andrabi, “‘Shattered’: Muslim Engineer Killed by Mob at Mosque in India’s Maharashtra,” Al Jazeera (15 September 2023).

¹¹⁵ Shuriah Niazi, “Academic Who Lectured on Palestine Rejects Anti-Hindu Claim,” University World News (24 November 2023); Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project, Casesheet (no date).

¹¹⁶ Zoya Mateen, “Mehrauli: A Mosque Demolished, and Orphans Displaced in India,” BBC News (9 February 2024); “Haldwani: Uttarakhand on Alert after Four Dead in Clashes over Mosque Demolition,” BBC News (9 February 2024).

On 2 February 2024, members of the Akhil Bharatiya Vidyarthi Parishad (ABVP) unit in Pune, Maharashtra, disrupted the play Jab We Met (Ramleela) on the campus of Savitribai Phule Pune University (SPPU). A day later, ABVP leader Harshwardhan Harpude filed a complaint to object against the depiction of Lord Ram, Sita, Laxman, and Ravan in it. Consequently, Pravin Dattatraya Bhole, professor of theater arts and head of the SPPU Lalit Kala Kendra (Center for Performing Arts); Bhavesh Rajendra Patil, student and the play's author; Jay Pedhnekar, student and the play's director; and the actors (three other students) were arrested under Sections 295A (insulting religious beliefs), 294 (obscene acts and songs), 143/149 (unlawful assembly), 147 (rioting), and 323 (voluntarily causing hurt) of the Indian Penal Code. They were later released on bail. SPPU apologized for the play, stating that "Parody of any person, legend or historical figure is completely wrong and prohibited," and forming a fact-finding committee to investigate the incident. A group of protesters linked to the Bharatiya Janata Party defaced the sign-board of Lalit Kala Kendra by smearing ink on it. A huge police force was then deployed in the SPPU premises. Videos of the play reportedly went viral on social media.¹¹⁷

[On or around 16] February 2024, the right-wing Hindu organization Vishwa Hindu Parishad launched a court petition in West Bengal to stop a lion named Akbar, after the sixteenth-century Mughal Emperor Abu'l-Fath Jalal-ud-din Muhammad Akbar (1542–1605), being put in a zoo enclosure with a lion named Sita, after the avatar of the Hindu deity Lakshmi, claiming that it constituted blasphemy.¹¹⁸

INDONESIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2001–2002, 2004–2013, 2015–2019, 2021–2023.

On 8 August 2023, the District Court of Jayapura, Papua province, found Yoseph Ernesto Matuan, Devio Tekege and Ambrosius Fransiskus Elopere guilty of treason under Articles 55 and 106 of the Criminal Code and sentenced them to ten months' imprisonment each. The three students had been arrested in November 2022 while participating in a vigil at Jayapura University of Technology and Science to commemorate the 21st anniversary of the abduction and killing of pro-independence leader Theys Eluay (1937–2001), at which the Morning Star flag, a symbol of Papuan independence, was raised. All three were released in September having served their sentences.¹¹⁹

¹¹⁷ "Play with 'Objectionable Scenes' on Lord Ram, Sita Disrupted at Pune University Campus; Head of Performing Arts Dept, Students Arrested," Indian Express (3 February 2024); "Parody of Historical Figures, Legends Wrong, Condemnable': Pune University Apologises for Ram Leela Play; Arrested Students, HoD Get Bail," Indian Express (5 February 2024); Shraddha Kumbhojkar, "Chitta Jetha Bhayashunyo...." Loksatta, (6 February 2024).

¹¹⁸ "Hindu Nationalists Go to Court Over Lion Named After Muslim Emperor in India," Guardian (8 February 2024).

On 14 February 2024, Prabowo Subianto was elected President. A former commander of the Kopassus special forces during the authoritarian rule of President Suharto (1967–1988), he had been accused of involvement in human rights violations in Papua and Timor-Leste, including the 1983 Kraras massacre, and had been discharged from the military after his alleged involvement in the 1998 kidnapping and torture of 22 pro-democracy activists, 13 of whom were still missing. Human rights organizations, including Amnesty International, expressed concern that Subianto’s election would further limit accountability for past atrocities.¹²⁰

IRAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2023.

In 2023, authorities continued to prevent Baha’i burials in a cemetery they had used for decades in Tehran and forcibly bury several deceased Baha’is at the nearby Khavaran mass gravesite, believed to contain the remains of victims of prison massacres in 1988, without their families’ prior knowledge and in violation of Baha’i burial practices [See NCH Annual Report 2023].¹²¹

An August 2023 report by Amnesty International found that authorities had “imposed cruel restrictions on peaceful gatherings at gravesites” and destroyed the graves of some of those who were killed during the protests that had erupted after the death of law student Mahsa (Zhina) Amini (1999–2022), including that of Amini herself. On 16 September 2022, Amini had been detained by the morality police for allegedly wearing her hijab “improperly” and died in detention that day [See NCH Annual Report 2023]. On 15 and 16 September 2023, security forces were deployed in several cities, especially in the Kurdish regions, to prevent commemorations for the first anniversary of Amini’s death. On 16 September, security forces arrested Amjad Amini, Mahsa’s father in Saqqez, and warned him not to hold a vigil at his daughter’s graveside. He was later released. Police seriously injured at least one man near Amini’s grave. In Evin prison, human rights activist Narges Mohammadi (who would be awarded the Nobel Peace Prize less than a month later) and three other women detainees burned their headscarves in the courtyard to mark the anniversary. In Mahabad, security forces reportedly opened fire on people holding a vigil, injuring at least one. Security forces also arrested several people in the lead-up to the anniversary, claiming that they were part of “networks of rioters and saboteurs.” Vandals had attacked Mahsa Amini’s grave twice in the spring of 2023.

¹¹⁹ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 199.

¹²⁰ Rebecca Ratcliffe & Richaldo Hariandja, “‘Winter Is Coming’: Activists’ Fears as Prabowo Subianto Likely Wins Indonesia Election,” Guardian (15 February 2024).

¹²¹ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 204.

An independent United Nations fact-finding mission came to similar conclusions in February 2024: the authorities threatened grieving families with burying the bodies of their loved ones in unidentified locations, unless the families remained silent and complied with severe restrictions on funerals and commemorations. Families were pressured to bury their loved ones swiftly, without funeral ceremonies and in the presence of only immediate family, with bans on chanting slogans. In many cases, security and intelligence forces were present during burial ceremonies. State security forces raided family homes or cemeteries and violently assaulted, injured, arrested and detained family members of the victims and other mourners.¹²²

On 4 August 2023, agents of the ministry of intelligence ransacked the house of historian Hashem Aghajari (1957–), confiscated his laptop and other electronic devices, and summoned him to appear in the Revolutionary Court, likely on charges of threatening state security. Two weeks earlier, Aghajari, who was an affiliate of the Green Movement, had participated in a “Dialogue to Save Iran” conference, where he had signed a statement calling for the end of clerical rule. In 2002, he had been sentenced to death after urging Iranians to “not blindly follow” Islamic clerics. In 2004, his sentence had been reduced to five years in prison [See NCH Annual Reports 2003–2005, 2007–2008].¹²³

On 13 August 2023, one person was killed and eight wounded in a terrorist attack at the Shah Cheragh mausoleum in Shiraz. The mausoleum included the tombs of two sons of the seventh Shia Imam Musa al-Kazim (745–799 CE), who were also the brothers of the eighth Imam Ali al-Rida (766–818 CE). No group claimed the attack. On 26 October 2022, thirteen people had been killed in an attack on the mausoleum that was claimed by the Islamic State (IS) group. IS has claimed previous attacks in Iran, including the deadly twin bombings in 2017 that targeted the parliament and the tomb of Islamic Republic founder, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini [See NCH Annual Reports 2017, 2023].¹²⁴

¹²² Amnesty International, Iran: Harassment of Families of Victims Unlawfully Killed During Protests Must End (21 August 2023); Maziar Motamedi, “Iran: One year after the Death of Mahsa Amini,” Al Jazeera (16 September 2023); “Iran Cracks Down on Protests on Mahsa Amini’s Death Anniversary,” Al Jazeera (17 September 2023); Fiona Niomi, “Mahsa Amini: Protesters Mark One Year since Death of Iranian Student,” BBC News (17 September 2023); David Gritten, “Iran Protests: Mahsa Amini’s Grave Attacked by Vandals,” BBC News (23 May 2023); Parham Ghodabi, “Iran Stops Families Marking Anniversaries of Protesters’ Deaths,” BBC News (21 September 2023); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 311; Report of the Independent International Fact-Finding Mission on the Islamic Republic of Iran (UN Doc. A/HRC/55/670) (2 February 2024), §§ 35, 65–66, 124; Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 62, 202, 205.

¹²³ “Dissident Iranian Historian Summoned After Agents Search His House,” Iran International (5 August 2024).

¹²⁴ Graeme Baker, “Iran Attack: Shiraz Shrine Shooting Leaves at Least One Dead,” BBC News (14 August 2023).

On or around 26 August 2023, Dariush Rahmanian, an associate professor of history at the University of Tehran College of Literature, was suspended, along with six other professors, and had his lessons removed from the course schedule for the 2023/2024 academic year. His suspension was reportedly due to his support of the “Woman, Life, Freedom” student movement after the killing of law student Mahsa Amini (1999–2022) on 16 September 2022. Rahmanian’s removal was part of a wave of suspensions of university professors in the lead-up to the first anniversary of Amini’s death.¹²⁵

On 29 September 2023, at least 23 people were reportedly injured in Zahedan, Sistan–Baluchistan, when police clashed with people commemorating the first anniversary of the 30 September 2022 Zahedan massacre (also known as “Bloody Friday”) in which security forces reportedly killed at least 104 people.¹²⁶

On 18 October 2023, Franco-Iranian Fariba Adelkhah (1959–), social and political anthropologist, specialist in Shia Islam, and director of research at Sciences Po’s Center for International Studies (CERI) in Paris returned to France, after she had been in and out of prison since June 2019 [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2023].¹²⁷

See also Argentina, China, Netherlands.

IRAQ

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2023.

On 25 June 2024, five large-scale explosive devices were found hidden in a wall in the Prayer Hall of the twelfth-century al-Nuri Mosque in Mosul by members of a UNESCO restoration mission. The mosque and its distinctive minaret that gave Mosul its nickname al-Ḥadbā (“the hunchback”) had been a focal point of UNESCO’s restoration efforts since 2020, after it had been destroyed by the Islamic State in the Levant (ISIL; also known as Daesh) during the 2017 Battle of Mosul. The mosque had also been the site where ISIL leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi proclaimed the establishment of a Caliphate in

¹²⁵ Tzvi Joffe, “Iranian Anti-Government Professors Fired Ahead of Mahsa Amini Anniversary,” Jerusalem Post (27 August 2023); “Iranian Government Replaces University Professors Accused of Backing “Woman, Life, Freedom” Protests with Regime Loyalists,” Center for Human Rights in Iran (13 September 2023).

¹²⁶ “Iran: ‘Bloody Friday’ Crackdown This Year’s Deadliest,” Human Rights Watch (22 December 2022); “Protesters Confront Security Forces as Iran Marks Anniversary of Crackdown,” Al Jazeera (29 September 2023).

¹²⁷ “French-Iranian Academic Imprisoned for Years in Iran Returns to France,” AP News (18 October 2023).

June 2014. The explosives had reportedly been concealed by ISIL members within a specially rebuilt section of the wall [See NCH Annual Report 2017].¹²⁸

See also Kuwait, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States.

IRELAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000, 2002, 2004, 2006, 2013, 2015–2016, 2021, 2023.

See also United Kingdom.

ISRAEL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000–2003, 2008–2014, 2016–2023.

In early October 2023, an American tourist was arrested for smashing two ancient Roman statues from the second century, in the Israel Museum in Jerusalem. Upon his arrest, he declared that “they were against the Torah” (the compilation of the first five books of the Hebrew Bible) and represented “idol worship.” In February 2023, a Jewish American tourist had vandalized a statue of Christ with a hammer at the Church of the Flagellation on the Way of the Cross in Jerusalem.¹²⁹

On 18 October 2023, history and civics teacher Meir Baruchin was dismissed from his high school teaching job in Petach Tikvah. Shortly after his arrest by police officials on treason charges, his home was searched and two laptops and six hard drives confiscated, and he was put in solitary confinement in the notorious “Russian Compound” prison in Jerusalem. After two series of interrogations he was released pending trial. The treason charges were related to a series of his Facebook posts after the 7 October 2023 attacks by Hamas in Israel and the ensuing Israeli military campaign into Gaza. The posts included pictures mourning the civilians killed in Gaza, criticizing the military, and warning against revenge actions. Already in 2021, similar criticism of the military had cost him his teaching job in Rishon LeZion.

Baruchin’s arrest was criticized by a Haaretz newspaper editorial stating that the arrest “was used as a political tool ... silencing any criticism or any hint of protest against Israeli policy.” In early January 2024, Baruchin had a hearing at an educational tribunal claiming that his right to free speech had been violated and that municipal authorities had no right to dismiss him.¹³⁰

¹²⁸ “Iraq: 5 Big ISIL Bombs Found Hidden in Mosul’s al-Nuri Mosque,” Al Jazeera (29 June 2024).

¹²⁹ Alex Smith, “American Tourist Arrested for Smashing Israel Museum Statues,” BBC News (6 October 2023).

In November 2023, the website of the Israel State Archives, which are a part of the Prime Minister's Office, was infiltrated by pro-Palestinian hackers, who disabled its search functions, erased some databases (but not the backups), and prevented users from viewing files. The hackers also obtained the personal details of the site's users, including researchers, historians and ordinary citizens, and leaked them online. On 11 March 2024, the National Cyber Directorate warned at a session of the Knesset Science and Technology Committee that all online records were in danger of permanent deletion.¹³¹

In December 2023, historian Omer Bartov, professor of Holocaust and genocide studies at Brown University, United States, criticized the government for invoking false memories of the Holocaust after the 7 October Hamas attacks on Israel. Bartov stated that calling the attacks a "second Holocaust" and comparing Hamas to Nazis was a "propagandistic turn of phrase" and risked stoking antisemitism and Islamophobia. Hamas forces killed 1,200 people and took 240 hostages. Since then, Israeli bombardments and its military campaign reportedly killed 20,000 people as of 20 December 2023.¹³²

See also Argentina, Bahrain, Eritrea, France, Germany, India, Netherlands, Palestine, United Kingdom, United States.

ITALY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2003, 2008, 2010, 2012, 2016–2019, 2021–2022.

On 2 March 2022, the University of Milan–Bicocca announced that a course on the Russian novelist Fyodor Dostoevsky (1821–1881) which had been canceled due to Russia's invasion of Ukraine would go ahead as scheduled. Lecturer Paolo Nori had called it a case of unwarranted censorship.¹³³

On 12 January 2023, Justice Minister Carlo Nordio vetoed the extradition of Reverend Franco Reverberi to Argentina, where he was accused of crimes against humanity during the military dictatorship (1976–1983). Reverberi faced charges of murder and torture during his time as military chaplain. He had fled ¹³⁰ Emma Graham-Harrison & Quique Kierszenbaum, "‘It Is a Time of Witch Hunts in Israel’: Teacher Held in Solitary Confinement for Posting Concern about Gaza Deaths," Guardian (13 January 2024).

¹³¹ Ofer Aderet, "National Cyber Directorate Warns State Archive: Israel's Digital History Could Be Erased," Haaretz (12 March 2024).

¹³² Gulcin Kazan Doger, "Israel Legitimizes Killing Gazans by Comparing Hamas to Nazis, Says Israeli Professor," Andalou Agency (5 December 2023).

¹³³ "Dostoevsky Course Reinstated after Cancellation," Ansa (2 March 2022).

Argentina in 2011 after trials against pro-junta individuals had started. In October 2022, the criminal court had ruled in favor of Reverberi's extradition.¹³⁴

In April 2023, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on environmental defenders under the Aarhus Convention criticized a government-backed bill, under discussion in parliament, to criminalize the defacing or damaging of heritage buildings and artifacts during demonstrations, urging the authorities to refrain from disproportionately restricting peaceful acts of civil disobedience by climate justice protesters.¹³⁵

On 20 April 2024, in the lead-up to the 25 April celebrations of the movement of Italian resistance to Nazism and Fascism (also known as Liberation Day), Antonio Scurati (1969–), a professor of comparative literature at IULM University of Milan and best-selling author of M: Il figlio del secolo (2018; M: Son of the Century; the first of a planned tetralogy about Benito Mussolini [1883–1945] and Italian fascism), had his talk that he was due to read out in the RAI3 television program Chesarà... canceled “for editorial reasons.” The show's presenter Serena Bortone protested online and read out the monologue in full during the show. Rai sent her a letter of disciplinary complaint.

In the monologue, which was widely republished in the press and online, Scurati claimed that Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni had “stubbornly stuck to the ideological line of her neo-Fascist culture of origin: she distanced herself from the indefensible brutalities perpetrated by the regime (the persecution of the Jews) without ever repudiating the fascist experience as a whole.” He also warned that “the specter of Fascism haunt[ed] the house of Italian democracy” and asked the government, led by the Fratelli d'Italia party (that had strong roots in the postwar neo-Fascist Movimento Sociale Italiano), to recognize that the Fascist regime had used systematic violence. Meloni responded by publishing Scurati's speech in its entirety on her Facebook page, while attacking Scurati for charging a high fee for his appearance on the show, which she called “propaganda.”¹³⁶

See also France, Poland.

¹³⁴ Lorenzo Tondo, “Italy Refuses to Extradite Priest Accused of Murder and Torture to Argentina,” Guardian (12 January 2024).

¹³⁵ Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 216.

¹³⁶ Nick Vivarelli, “Italy's RAI Slammed for Pulling Anti-Fascist Monologue From Writer of Bestseller ‘M,’ which Reconstructs Mussolini's Rise to Power,” Variety (22 April 2024); “Scurati Case, Rai Sends a Letter of Disciplinary Complaint to Serena Bortone,” Agenzia nova (8 May 2024).

IVORY COAST (Côte d'Ivoire)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006–2021.

JAMAICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017–2018.

See also Barbados.

JAPAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2023.

In early 2023, plans emerged to institutionalize the revised appointment procedure for the Science Council of Japan (SCJ) in an amendment to the law on the SCJ [See NCH Annual Reports 2021, 2023], but in April 2023 the plans were canceled. Instead, in August 2023 a commission to reorganize the SCJ was installed.¹³⁷

On the centenary anniversary of the September 1923 Kantō Massacre, in which 6,000 predominantly ethnic Koreans were killed by Japanese police forces and vigilantes, the government refuses to recognize the massacre and issue an apology.¹³⁸

In May 2024, a Chinese man living in Japan [name unknown] desecrated a pillar of the controversial Yasukuni shrine (a memorial for 2,5 million victims of war, including since 1978 fourteen convicted war criminals) in Tokyo. Footage of the incident went viral. On 9 July 2024, the man was arrested on suspicion of damaging property and desecrating a place of worship [See NCH Annual Report 2021 under Japan, Annual Report 2022 under China, Annual Report 2023 under Japan].¹³⁹

See also Korea, South.

JORDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003–2004, 2015, 2018, 2022–2023.

¹³⁷ Hashimoto Nobuya, personal communication (2 October 2023).

¹³⁸ Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 219.

¹³⁹ Yvette Tan, "Japan Arrests Chinese Man for Alleged Shrine Vandalism," BBC News (9 July 2024).

KAZAKHSTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999–2001, 2007, 2012, 2022.

On 31 May 2023, four activists, including professor of history Yesengaz Kuandyk, of the so-called “31 May Committee” were detained in Almaty ahead of a planned commemoration for the victims of Soviet repression. They were released the same day. Two other activists were reportedly put under house arrest. The committee had planned to hold a “March of Memory and Sorrow” and called on “all Kazakhstanis to honor the memory of innocent victims not only from repression, but also from the Asharshylyk [Kazakh famine of 1930–1933].” One month later, in June, Kuandyk was fined 200,000 tenge (around €400) for attending a meeting of the “People’s Parliament,” an association of people who were not elected for the 2023 parliamentary elections, which they protested against as unfree and unfair.

On 14 December 2020, unknown people had set fire to Kuandyk’s car near his house in Almaty. He linked the arson attack to his civil activism and criticism of the authorities.¹⁴⁰

See also Moldova.

KENYA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2000, 2002–2005, 2007, 2009–2018, 2020–2023.

On 7 August 2023, marking the twenty-fifth anniversary of the 1998 al-Qaeda claimed attack on the United States (US) embassy in Nairobi, survivors and relatives of the victims renewed their demands for reparations from the US government. The attack killed 213 people and wounded over 5,000, most of which were passers-by or workers in buildings around the embassy. Forty-four members of the embassy were killed, including twelve US citizens.¹⁴¹

¹⁴⁰ Andrei Grishin, “Репрессии в наследие,” Kazakhstan International Bureau for Human Rights and Rule of Law (31 May 2023); “Полиция Алматы оштрафовала профессора Есенгазы Куандыка за участие в собрании ‘Народного парламента’,” Radio Azattyk (19 June 2023); “No Real Space for Opposition Activities in ‘New Kazakhstan’,” Civics Monitor (25 July 2023); “Активист Есенгазы Куандык сообщил о поджоге его автомобиля неизвестными,” Radio Azattyk (14 December 2020).

¹⁴¹ “Families of Victims of 1998 Attack on US Embassy Nairobi Renew Demand for Reparations,” Africa News (7 August 2023).

KOREA, NORTH

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2006–2007, 2009–2011, 2013–2015, 2017, 2019.

On 16 January 2024, Supreme Leader Kim Jong-un announced a change to the Constitution that would identify South Korea as the “number one hostile state,” breaking with a decades-old commitment to unifying the Korean peninsula. Days later, the Monument to the Three Charters for National Reunification (also known as the Arch of Reunification) – a monument built after the 2000 inter-Korean summit as a symbol of the intentions for reunification, showing two women holding an emblem of the Korean peninsula – on the Reunification Highway linking Pyongyang with the South-Korean border, was reportedly demolished.¹⁴²

See also Japan; Korea, South; Zimbabwe.

KOREA, SOUTH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998–2001, 2003, 2006, 2008–2010, 2012–2013, 2016–2023.

On 31 May 2023, police demolished a memorial altar to Yang Hoe-dong, a labor leader who self-immolated on 1 May 2023 after he refused anti-union charges against him. They injured four people, and threatened to use pepper spray to break up a peaceful rally organized by the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions.¹⁴³

On 26 October 2023, the Supreme Court found historian Park Yu-ha, author of Comfort Women of the Empire (2013) and emeritus professor of Sejong University in Seoul, not guilty of criminal defamation after deliberations that lasted six years [See NCH Annual Reports 2016–2018]. Park had portrayed some comfort women as prostitutes or collaborators with the Japanese military. The Court noted that Park’s opinion did not amount to a denial of the crime against the comfort women or to defamation of the comfort women, and that the examination of academic work should take place in a public debate rather than in criminal courts. The Supreme Court’s decision meant that the case would be sent back for retrial to Seoul High Court [See NCH Annual Report 2018]. Park further faced a civil lawsuit filed by the former sex slaves due for 2024.¹⁴⁴

¹⁴² Justin McCurry, “Unification with South Korea No Longer Possible, Says Kim Jong-un,” Guardian (16 January 2024); Justin McCurry, “North Korea Demolishes Symbol of Hope for Reunification with South – Report,” Guardian (24 January 2024).

¹⁴³ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 343.

On 24 November 2023, the Seoul High Court overturned a ruling of the Seoul District Court in the case of the comfort women (the system whereby the Japanese army forced an estimated 200,000 women into sexual slavery during the Pacific War of 1931–1945). In 2021, the Seoul District Court had dismissed a 2016 case filed by a group of sixteen surviving comfort women, citing sovereign immunity [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. The High Court now ruled that it recognized South Korea’s jurisdiction over the Japanese government because the women lived there and sought compensation for acts deemed “unlawful.” It declared that “[i]t is reasonable to consider that there is a common international law which does not recognize state immunity for an illegal act ... regardless of whether the act was a sovereign act.” Japan’s Foreign Minister Yoko Kamikawa called the ruling “extremely regrettable and absolutely unacceptable.”¹⁴⁵

See also Japan.

KOSOVO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2021–2023. For previous entries: see Serbia.

In April 2023, the trial of former Kosovo President and Prime Minister Hashim Thaçi and three other former senior Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) officials began in The Hague before the Kosovo Specialist Chambers. The accused, who spent almost 2.5 years in pretrial detention, were charged with war crimes and crimes against humanity allegedly committed during the Kosovo War (1998–1999). All four men pleaded not guilty [See NCH Annual Report 2021].¹⁴⁶

In a July 2023 report, the United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence recommended that the UN provide full and effective reparations, including a fully funded reparation program, to Roma, Ashkali, and Balkan Egyptian victims of lead poisoning who had resided in contaminated camps for displaced people run by the UN

¹⁴⁴ Yumi Jeung, “Academic Charged with Defaming Sex Slaves Acquitted,” University World News (2 November 2023); Pola Lem, “Historian’s Comfort Women Trial Was ‘Cancel Culture on Steroids’,” Times Higher Education (21 November 2023).

¹⁴⁵ Lou Newton, “Japan Ordered to Compensate Wartime ‘Comfort Women’,” BBC News (24 November 2023).

¹⁴⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 366; Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 228.

Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK). A 2016 report by the Human Rights Advisory Panel, an independent body established to investigate complaints of abuses by UNMIK, had recommended that the UN pay individual compensation and apologize to victims [See NCH Annual Report 2018].¹⁴⁷

On 26 October 2023, the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) condemned the desecration of graveyards at an early 20th-century Serbian Orthodox cemetery in North Mitrovica, due to the construction of a road next to the cemetery.¹⁴⁸

KUWAIT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2000, 2004–2005, 2018, 2021.

In 2023, authorities forbade public commemorations of Ashura – the tenth day of Muharram, on which Shiites commemorate the death of Husayn, the Prophet Muhammad’s grandson, who died at the Battle of Karbala in 680. At the same time, the Interior Ministry deployed 4,000 security personnel to protect 110 people commemorating Ashura in mosques.¹⁴⁹

KYRGYZSTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010–2013, 2016–2017, 2021–2022.

¹⁴⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 366, 369.

¹⁴⁸ Milica Stojanovic & Xhorxhina Bami, “OSCE, Serbian Church Criticize Damage to Serb Cemetery in Kosovo,” Balkan Insight (26 October 2023).

¹⁴⁹ United States Department of State, 2023 Report on International Religious Freedom: Kuwait ([no date]).

LAOS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2023.

LATVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2006, 2008, 2015–2016, 2019, 2022–2023.

LEBANON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2003, 2006–2023.

In January 2023, the United Nations (UN) extended the mandate of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon until the end of December 2023 to allow it to finalize its work [See NCH Annual Reports 2010–2011, 2013–2015, 2021–2022].¹⁵⁰

On 2 February 2023, United Nations human rights experts expressed deep concern at the lack of progress to ensure accountability for the assassination of archivist Lokman Slim (1962–2021), who was found shot dead on 4 February 2021 in his car in southern Lebanon [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2023].¹⁵¹

On 3 August 2023, the day prior to the third anniversary of the 2020 Beirut port blast [See NCH Annual Reports 2021, 2023], 300 organizations, including Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International, renewed a call for the United Nations to establish a fact-finding mission. Although in February 2021 the lead investigator of the domestic inquiry, Tarek Bitar, had been suspended [See NCH Annual Report 2023], he suddenly resumed his investigation in January 2023, charging eight suspects including high-level security officials and top prosecutor Ghassan Oueidat.¹⁵²

¹⁵⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 388.

¹⁵¹ “Lebanon: UN Experts Concerned at Slow Progress in Investigation and Continued Impunity for Killing of Prominent Intellectual Lokman Slim” (Press release; 2 February 2023); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 238.

¹⁵² “Lebanon Marks Three Years since Catastrophic Beirut Port Blast,” Al Jazeera (4 August 2023).

LIBERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2004–2015, 2018, 2021.

On the twentieth anniversary of the end of the Second Civil War (1999–2003), no war crimes court had been established despite recommendations of the 2009 Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) and promises in 2018 by then presidential candidate (and later President) George Weah. On 20 November 2023, former Vice President and head of the Unity Party Joseph Boakai was inaugurated as President. In the lead-up to the national elections, Boakai had chosen Jeremiah Kpan Koung, a reported protégé of warlord-turned-senator Prince Yormie Johnson, as his running mate, despite the TRC’s recommendation to bar Johnson from holding public office due to crimes committed during the First Civil War (1989–1997). In the presidential campaign, Johnson had vocally opposed the establishment of a criminal court on multiple occasions. In early March 2024, the proposal to create a War and Economic Crimes Court was backed by a majority of legislators (42 to 30), and in April it passed through the Senate.¹⁵³

LIBYA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2005–2021, 2023.

In February 2023, the Internal Security Agency in Benghazi arrested singer Ahlam al-Yamani and content creator Haneen al-Abdali for “offending the traditions of Libya.” They were released in April without charge or trial.¹⁵⁴

In March 2023, the Tarek Ben Ziyad Brigade and Brigade 20/20 of the Libyan Arab Armed Forces (LAAF), the armed group controlling eastern and much of southern Libya, forcibly evicted on short notice more than 20,000 residents of Benghazi and forced them to rescind their property or ownership documents without an appropriate compensation scheme for residents, according to six United Nations (UN) experts and the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention. The Brigades’ members demolished scores of residential units, including historic neighborhoods and protected heritage sites in the Benghazi center to make way for new residential and commercial building developments, and briefly arrested several residents and at least two activists protesting the evictions, the experts said.¹⁵⁵

¹⁵³ Azeekat Olaoluwa & Yūsuf Akínpèlú, “Liberia Election: George Weah Faces Demands for War Crimes Court,” BBC News (7 October 2023); Dounard Bondo, “The Key Issues at Stake in Liberia’s Presidential Election,” Al Jazeera (9 October 2023); Aaron Weah, “George Weah’s Politics of Silence,” Justiceinfo.net (12 October 2023); Aaron Weah, “Liberia Has a New President: Is There Renewed Hope for Justice?,” Justiceinfo.net (27 November 2023); “Liberian Senators Back Creation of War and Economic Crimes Court,” Africa News (10 April 2024); “Liberia ex-Warlord Prince Johnson in Leader Race,” BBC (24 September 2010).

¹⁵⁴ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 242.

LITHUANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005, 2009, 2015, 2018, 2021–2022.

See also Belarus.

¹⁵⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 391.

MACEDONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2006–2008, 2010–2015, 2017–2018.

From 2021: See North Macedonia.

MADAGASCAR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

MALAWI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2019, 2021.

In 2024, the Malawi Prisons Service successfully sent five candidates to the university. They included Paul Tembo from Lilongwe Prison who would pursue a Bachelor of Arts in Humanities at the University of Malawi and George Chipwanthe from Blantyre Prison who was selected for a Bachelor of Education in History and Social Studies.¹⁵⁶

MALAYSIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2002, 2007–2008, 2010–2011, 2016–2017, 2019–2023.

In February 2023, police arrested two teenagers under Communications and Multimedia Act section 233, on the “improper use of network facilities or network service,” and the Minor Offenses Act 1995 over a TikTok video in which they criticized a history exam using “abusive words.”¹⁵⁷

On 4 January 2024, the International Institute of Advanced Islamic Studies Malaysia (IAIS) canceled the planned book launch of Islam, Authoritarianism, and Underdevelopment: A Global and Historical Comparison (English 2019; Malay 2024), by Turkish scholar Ahmet T. Kuru, director of Islamic and Arabic Studies at San Diego State University, United States. IAIS gave no official reason for canceling the launch, which was supposed to take place on 8 January 2024. However, there had been online accusations of “liberalism,” a term sometimes used to discredit fellow Muslims. The Turkish ambassador to Malaysia allegedly also pressured IAIS to cancel the event. Kuru had previously participated in protests against the Turkish government’s growing influence on universities. The launch was relocated to the University of Nottingham Malaysia campus, Semenyih, Selangor.¹⁵⁸

¹⁵⁶ Ben Bongololo, “Five Prisoners Selected for Public Universities,” Malawi24 (13 June 2024).

¹⁵⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 404.

MALDIVES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2009–2010, 2013, 2020–2021.

In the lead-up to the presidential elections on 9 September 2023, human rights activists and lawyers expressed concern over the country’s transitional justice process. In November 2018, sitting President Ibrahim Mohamed Solih had set up the Presidential Commission on Deaths and Disappearances (DDCom) to probe unresolved cases of murder and enforced disappearances between 1 January 2012 and 17 November 2018. In December 2020, the government further passed the Transitional Justice Act, installing an Ombudsperson’s Office for Transitional Justice (OTJ) to investigate human rights violations between 1 January 1953 and 17 November 2018.

Both DDCom and the OTJ experienced difficulties. Victims felt frustrated about the slow pace of the DDCom and feared for their safety if they participated in investigations. The DDCom also had a number of investigations ongoing, but as its mandate was set by Solih, it was unclear whether it would continue after his term ended. The OTJ suffered from too broad a mandate, being required to investigate all human rights violations between 1953 and 2018, ranging from socio-economic rights (like the appropriation of houses then allocated to the tourism industry), to the August 1953 coup that deposed the first President Mohamed Amin Didi (1910–1954), the 162 military interventions into Thinadoo island, which was accompanied by human rights abuses. The OTJ further lacked sufficient resources and legal expertise, and its mandate lacked clear legal definition. As of September 2023, the OTJ had completed 230 cases, mostly related to housing issues. Human rights lawyers feared that its mandate would end before the bigger historic cases were decided.¹⁵⁹

¹⁵⁸ Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project, “Ahmet Kuru” (4 January 2024).

¹⁵⁹ Julia Crawford, “Justice in Paradise,” Justiceinfo.net (8 September 2023).

MALI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011, 2013–2021, 2023.

On 26 June 2024, the International Criminal Court convicted Al Hassan Ag Abdoul Aziz, a key member of the Al-Qaeda linked Ansar al-Din, for war crimes and crimes against humanity, including torture, rape and the destruction of religious and historical buildings in Timbuktu between 2012 and 2013. He faced up to life imprisonment.¹⁶⁰

MALTA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2012, 2021.

On 9 November 2023, parliament approved the construction of an apartment block within the so-called “buffer zone” (the area surrounding a World Heritage Site that gives it added protection) of the megalithic Ġgantija Temples (built ca. 3600–2500 BCE during the Late Neolithic era), that was established by UNESCO in 2015. The approval ignored UNESCO’s request for a Heritage Impact Assessment of the temple. The construction project was criticized by World Heritage Watch for disrupting the ancient skyline and obstructing archaeological research, including through the building of a large underground parking garage.¹⁶¹

MARSHALL ISLANDS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2015.

MAURITANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2002, 2009, 2011, 2017, 2019–2020.

On 12 September 2023, the United Nations Committee on Enforced Disappearances raised questions over the establishment of reparations for alleged disappearances and other abuses committed during the era of the Passif Humanitaire (1989–1992; era of humanitarian liability), and over the State’s cooperation with civil society organizations, and called for the investigation of all disappearances in this period and the prosecution of those responsible, including military and civilian leaders. A 14 June 1993 Amnesty Law had granted full amnesty to members of the armed forces and security forces for crimes committed between 1989 and 1992.¹⁶²

¹⁶⁰ “ICC Convicts al-Qaeda-Linked Leader of War Crimes in Mali’s Timbuktu,” Al Jazeera (26 June 2024).

¹⁶¹ World Heritage Watch, World Heritage Watch Report 2024 (Berlin: WHW, 2024), 15–16.

MAURITIUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2012.

See United Kingdom.

MEXICO

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999, 2001–2023.

In June 2023, authorities placed metal fences around the Roundabout of Women who Fight in Mexico City to remove the memorial, but after pressure from civil society organizations and activists, Martí Batres Guadarrama, Mexico City’s head of government, agreed to keep the memorial.¹⁶³

On 4 July 2023, writer, journalist and historian Adolfo Gilly (1928–2023) died. From April 1966 to March 1972, the Argentinian-born Gilly, then a left-wing journalist expelled from Cuba in October 1963 for his Trotskyist ideas, was imprisoned in Lecumberri prison on a charge of conspiracy against the State. During the first five years of his prison term, he wrote La revolución interrumpida: México, 1910–1920; Una guerra campesina por la tierra y el poder ([The Interrupted Revolution: Mexico 1910–1920, A Peasant War for Land and Power] México 1971; translated as The Mexican Revolution, London 1983). After scores of political prisoners were assaulted in prison on 1 January 1970 and the manuscript was in danger of loss, he began smuggling it out of prison. The book, appearing while Gilly was still in prison, became a bestseller (most recent revised edition: 1998; translations in English and

¹⁶² United Nations Office of the High Commission on Human Rights, “Experts of the Committee on Enforced Disappearances Commend Mauritania on Prospective Bill Criminalising Enforced Disappearance. Ask Questions on the State’s Cooperation with Civil Society and Reparations for Alleged “Passif Humanitaire” Era Abuses.” (press release; 12 September 2023); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 257.

¹⁶³ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 260.

French). In March 1972, Gilly was released in accordance with the new policy of democratic liberalization and expelled to France. Later, the Supreme Court annulled the charge. Returning to Mexico in November 1976, he became a professor at the Faculty of Economics and the Escuela Nacional de Antropología e Historia (National School for Anthropology and History) (1977–1978) and at the Department of Political and Social Sciences of the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM) (1979–). He received the Mexican nationality in 1982. From 1976, Lecumberri prison housed the National Archives. In 2022, Gilly published Paths of Revolution: Selected Essays. Adolfo Gilly was a patron of the Network of Concerned Historians.¹⁶⁴

On 11 July 2023, six people of the State Attorney General’s Office and the municipal police were killed by improvised explosive devices (IEDs) near Tlajomulco, Jalisco. They were accompanying a volunteer search group helping to locate bodies of disappeared people. The group had received an anonymous call locating a hidden burial site. When they arrived near the site, eight IEDs set up around it reportedly detonated. The attack was blamed on an unnamed drug trafficking group. On 20 July 2023, the United Nations Committee on Enforced Disappearances (CED) condemned the attack and called on the government to implement a National Policy for the Prevention and Eradication of Disappearances. More than 110,000 people remained missing as of August 2023. In April 2022, the CED had issued a report calling on the government to guarantee the permanent protection of public servants dedicated to the search and investigation of disappeared people and to establish a protection program for them, as well as for victims and family members of the disappeared [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. On 15 September 2023, the CED expressed concern over the increase in enforced disappearances, the high levels of impunity (reportedly up to 98%), the lack of protection for those involved in searches and indications that this was usually left to victim’s families without the help of state institutions.¹⁶⁵

On 25 July 2023, the Grupo Interdisciplinario de Expertos Independientes (Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts), created by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights in 2014 to investigate the 2014 Ayotzinapa case of 43 disappeared and murdered students [See NCH Annual Reports 2015, 2021–2023], published its final report stating that it was no longer possible to continue its research, because authorities were hiding information and “prevented getting to the truth” [See NCH Annual Report 2023]. The group then left the country. Leaked emails suggested that senior military officials had pressured the government to drop charges against soldiers implicated in the case.¹⁶⁶

¹⁶⁴ Adolfo Gilly, personal communication (August–September–December 2000); Adolfo Gilly, Arriba Los de Abajo: Perfiles Mexicanos (Mexico 1986), cover; Adolfo Gilly, La Revolución Interrumpida: Edición Corregida y Aumentada (originally 1971; México 1998), 9–13; Octavio Paz, “Letter to Adolfo Gilly,” in Octavio Paz, The Other Mexico: Critique of the Pyramid (New York 1972), 113–148; David C. Bailey, “Revisionism and the Recent Historiography of the Mexican Revolution,” Hispanic American Historical Review (1978), 77; Sheldon B. Liss, Marxist Thought in Latin America (Berkeley and Los Angeles 1984), 235–237.

¹⁶⁵ United Nations Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights, “Roadside Bombings in Mexico Kill Six People in ‘Act of Terror’,” Al Jazeera (12 July 2023); “Mexico: UN Committee on Enforced Disappearances Condemns Violence against Authorities Searching for Disappeared People” (press release; 20 July 2023); UN Office of the High Commission on Human Rights, “Experts of the Committee on Enforced Disappearances Welcome Mexico’s Cooperation with the Committee’s Country Visit, Raise Issues Concerning Apparent Rise in Enforced Disappearances, High Levels of Impunity and the Slow Progress of Investigations,” (press release; 15 September 2023).

In August 2023, the 2021 truth commission investigating military abuses against leftist activists during the Guerra sucia (“Dirty War”; 1964–1982) said the military and intelligence services had refused to give it access to key documents. Additionally, Pegasus spyware was detected in the phone of the commission’s coordinator Camilo Vicente Ovalle. In September, the commission investigators withdrew after discovering that military officials had hidden, altered and destroyed documents.¹⁶⁷

On [24] August 2023, Karla Quintana, head of the Comisión Nacional de Búsquedas (CNB; National Search Commission) stepped down. Her resignation came after the government of President Andrés Manuel López Obrador had announced a census of the number of disappeared people, in what critics considered an attempt to “present a fictitious decrease” ahead of the 2024 presidential elections. Human rights groups expressed concern that the resignation of Quintana fitted in a policy of López Obrador to backtrack on accountability for disappearances [See NCH Annual Report 2022–2023].¹⁶⁸

See also United States.

MOLDOVA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2003, 2010, 2022–2023.

On 6 July 2023, the seventy-fourth anniversary of a mass deportation campaign of local elites and political opponents from Bessarabia to Siberia and the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic ordered by Joseph Stalin between 5 and 9 July 1949, the government inaugurated an exhibition at the Chisinau railway station. In response, the Russian ambassador to Moldova Oleg Vasnetsov called the exhibition a “purposeful incitement of hatred toward Russia and everything Russian” and criticized exhibitions

¹⁶⁶ “2014 Ayotzinapa Case of 43 Disappeared and Murdered Students,” Reading Chronicle (25 July 2023); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 424.

¹⁶⁷ Oscar Lopez & Mary Beth Sheridan, “He’s Leading Mexico’s Probe of the Dirty War: Who’s Spying on Him?,” Washington Post (3 June 2023); Daniel Shailer, “Mexican Official Says Military Obstructs Probe Into Human Rights Abuses during Country’s ‘Dirty War’,” Associated Press (12 October 2023); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 424.

¹⁶⁸ “Official Leading Search for Thousands of Missing People in Mexico Resigns,” Al Jazeera (24 August 2023).

that “honor the Romanian accomplices of Nazi Germany,” without specifying the allegations. The Foreign Ministry responded to Vasnetsov’s comments, urging him to refrain from interfering in matters of Moldovan history and invited him “to find out the historical truth about the Soviet-induced famine and the massive deportations to the Gulags.” Between 1941 and 1951, in three waves of deportations, between 80,000 and 150,000 persons were estimated to have been deported from Besarabia.¹⁶⁹

See also Romania.

MONGOLIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2013.

See also China.

MONTENEGRO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2017, 2021–2023.

A legislative amendment adopted in May 2023, which denied compensation to civilian victims of the war (1991–1995) killed or forcibly disappeared outside Montenegro, was withdrawn in December 2023, and a new amendment was proposed to include all civilian war victims.¹⁷⁰

On 11 August 2023, historian Boban Batrićević (1988–), professor at the Faculty of Montenegrin Language and Literature in Cetinje, published an article on the independent Montenegrin portal Antena M, in which he detailed examples of hateful narratives spread by priests of the Serbian Orthodox Church in Montenegro, including the glorification of war criminals. A lawyer affiliated with the church filed a criminal complaint against Batrićević, accusing him of inciting religious hatred. The Supreme State Prosecutor’s Office of Montenegro subsequently initiated misdemeanor proceedings against Batrićević, accusing him of violating Article 19 of the National Law on Public Order and Peace, which prohibited national, racial, or religious insults and carried a fine or imprisonment for up to sixty days. Batrićević’s statement and his ensuing prosecution came against the backdrop of a controversial population census, eventually begun on 3 December 2023 after several delays, which opposition parties had threatened to boycott over fears that pro-Russian forces, including the Serbian Orthodox Church, would spread propaganda and inflate the numbers of people identifying as Serbian. Batrićević's trial opened on 22 January 2024. Batrićević was a specialist in the history of propaganda and totalitarian movements, as well as cultural identity theory.¹⁷¹

¹⁶⁹ Madalin Necsutu, “Moldova Commemorates Victims of Soviet Deportations,” Balkan Insight (6 July 2023); Madalin Necsutu, “Moldova Denies Soviet Deportation Exhibition is ‘Russophobic’,” Balkan Insight (14 July 2023).

¹⁷⁰ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 265.

On 15 May 2024, the Croatian government delivered a note of protest after the President of the Montenegrin parliament and leader of the Nova srpska demokratija (New Serb Democracy) party, Andrija Mandić, announced that representatives of the Serbian people in Montenegro would propose a resolution in parliament about the Jasenovac concentration camp in Croatia, along the lines of the then pending (and later adopted) United Nations General Assembly Resolution on Srebrenica (see under Bosnia and Herzegovina). The note reportedly condemned the “manipulation of the Jasenovac victims for political purposes and the instrumentalization of Croatia for internal politics.” Between August 1941 and April 1945, the Jasenovac camp was run by the Croatian fascist Ustaše organization. Almost 85,000 victims, predominantly ethnic-Serbs, Romani and Jewish people, were identified, with the final number estimated to be much higher [See NCH Annual Reports 1996, 2017 2020 under Croatia, Annual Report 2023 under Serbia].¹⁷²

See also Bosnia and Herzegovina.

MOROCCO / WESTERN SAHARA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2013, 2015–2018, 2020–2023.

In September 2023, journalist and historian Maâti Monjib (1962–) [See NCH Annual Reports 2016, 2020–2023] was dismissed as a historian at Mohammed V University, following an interview with al-Araby21 news website in which he had criticized King Mohammed VI. In July 2023, he was subjected to a smear campaign by pro-government media who accused him of supporting a Quran burning in Sweden. The smear campaign pushed Monjib into hiding over fears of attack by people who believed the false news.¹⁷³

¹⁷¹ PEN International, War, Censorship and Persecution: PEN International Case List 2023/2024 (London: PEN, 2024), 76.

¹⁷² Borislav Visnjic, “Croatia Protests Montenegrin Push for Jasenovac Resolution,” Balkan Insight (15 May 2024).

¹⁷³ Website: <https://maatimonjib.net>; PEN International, War, Censorship and Persecution: PEN International Case List 2023/2024 (London: PEN, 2024), 101–102. Background in Human Rights Watch, “They’ll Get You No Matter What”: Morocco’s Playbook to Crush Dissent (Washington: HRW, 2022), 54–68.

MOZAMBIQUE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018, 2020, 2023.

Members of the Southern African Development Community Mission in Mozambique (SAMIM), a regional peacekeeping mission deployed in July 2021 to assist the national armed forces fighting the Al Shabaab insurgency (2017–), were implicated in the mutilation and other mistreatment of the dead in Cabo Delgado. In January 2023, a video appeared on social media showing SAMIM soldiers throwing corpses onto a pile of burning rubble. The Southern African Development Community, the organization overseeing SAMIM, condemned the acts in the video and announced an investigation, but as of January 2024 had to provide any updates on the investigation.¹⁷⁴

MYANMAR (BURMA)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2001, 2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2023.

In May 2023, history student Thaik Tun Oo ([2001]–) was released from prison. On 12 March 2021, he was arrested for participating in the protests against the February coup, detained in Obo prison, Mandalay, and sentenced to three years' imprisonment. When he tried to organize the prisoners against the appalling prison circumstances, he was tortured and isolated. His family believed he was dead. In [May] 2022, he was transported to Myingyan prison. After his release, Thaik Tun Oo went into hiding and later fled to the liberated border area in eastern Myanmar and to Thailand. He then worked for the Political Prisoners Network Myanmar.¹⁷⁵

¹⁷⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 436–437.

¹⁷⁵ Minka Nijhuis, "In overvolle cellen koelt de Myanmarese junta haar woede op politieke gevangenen," NRC Handelsblad (1 February 2024).

NAMIBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 2006–2009, 2011, 2016–2018, 2023.

See also Germany.

NEPAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007–2021.

In March 2023, the government presented an amended transitional justice bill regarding human rights violations committed during the Civil War (1996–2006). The bill was in response to a 2015 Supreme Court ruling that found existing legislation unlawful, particularly because it allowed amnesties for serious crimes under international law. In late 2023, a parliamentary committee proposed further amendments. Supporters hailed the bill’s guaranteeing of the right to reparation and interim relief for some victims who were left out of earlier relief packages. It also mandated the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) to study the root causes of the conflict and recommend institutional reforms to guarantee the non-recurrence of abuses. However, victims and United Nations Human Rights Experts voiced concerns that unless it was appropriately amended, the bill would continue to enable amnesties for murder, sexual violence not amounting to rape, “beating and mutilation,” and “any inhuman act[s] that are against international human rights and humanitarian law.” The bill failed to establish a special investigation unit to collect evidence of these crimes, and it included a statute of limitations that severely limited access to justice for survivors of sexual violence. Throughout 2023, the TRC and the Commission of Investigation on Enforced Disappeared Persons, which had respectively collected more than 60,000 and 3,000 complaints from victims, had failed to resolve a single case.¹⁷⁶

NETHERLANDS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 2004–2005, 2007–2023.

Two lectures on freedom at the Westerbork Memorial (a former Nazi prisoner camp), one by Emmy Drop-Menko, a Holocaust survivor, and one by Wahhab Hassoo ([1995]–), a refugee who in 2014 escaped the genocide of the Yazidis by Islamic State in Iraq, scheduled for 29 October 2023, were canceled because Hassoo, also a politician for the new political party Nieuw Sociaal Contract (NSC; New Social Contract), received threats against him and his family. In 2018, Hassoo had also received death threats.¹⁷⁷

¹⁷⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 449–450; Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 276.

In early January 2024, the Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam (VU; Free University Amsterdam) removed a trigger warning in the online course presentation of Iranian-born cultural anthropologist Younes Saramifar, lecturer of the second-year history course “History and Social Sciences,” on the grounds that it was biased and political. The warning – calling Israel an Apartheid state and saying that the prosperity in most European countries was based on colonialism, genocide and repression – had led to a complaint in late December 2023 from one or some students (and public praise for Saramifar’s record from many others and from colleagues who spoke of a breach of academic freedom). The public debate accompanying the removal was fed, among others, by erroneous media reports. On 26 January 2024, the VU Faculty of Arts and Saramifar issued a joint declaration saying that the latter was not censored, surveilled, or otherwise sanctioned. During the row, Saramifar received hate letters and threatening emails, including at his home address.¹⁷⁸

On 26 January 2024, a lecture series about the Holocaust and antisemitism at the Hogeschool Utrecht (University of Applied Sciences Utrecht), scheduled to start on 12 February 2024, was postponed indefinitely due to concerns about the safety of speakers and audience. On 29 January, the decision was reversed. The decision and its revocation were influenced by publicity about pro-Palestinian and pro-Jewish groups trying to influence the Hogeschool’s decision. During the commotion, some members of the Utrecht NGO New Neighbours, involving both Palestinian and Jewish Utrechters, were intimidated.¹⁷⁹

¹⁷⁷ “Lezing in Westerbork afgelast wegens bedreiging spreker: ‘Echt nooit gedacht in Nederland dit mee te maken’,” Het Parool (24 oktober 2023).

¹⁷⁸ David Bremmer, “VU-docent bestraft na omstreden Israël-uitspraak,” Algemeen Dagblad (19 January 2024; updated 26 January 2024); “Formal Complaint Letter to Rector Magnificus Jeroen Geurts” (Letter from students and staff in support of Saramifar; no date); Welmoed Visser, “VU-docent in de problemen wegens Israël-uitspraak,” Ad Valvas (23 January 2024); Niels Debonne, “VU-docent over berispte collega na Israël-uitspraak,” Het Parool (23 January 2024); Peter Breedveld, “VU-docent is niet berispt en staat niet onder curatele,” Ad Valvas (26 January 2024); “Gezamenlijke verklaring Geesteswetenschappen, VU en Younes Saramifar” (Press release; 26 January 2024); Claudia Kammer, “De docent waarschuwde voor zijn ‘dekoloniale benadering’, de universiteit greep in,” NRC Handelsblad (30 January 2024).

¹⁷⁹ Laura Wismans, “Uitstel lezingen over antisemitisme leidt tot verontwaardiging en vreugde,” NRC Handelsblad (28 January 2024); “Outrage over Holocaust Lecture Delay at Utrecht Higher-Ed; No Problems at Leiden Univ.,” NL Times (29 January 2024); Claudia Kammer & Rosa Uijtewaal, “In Utrecht gaat Holocaustlezing tóch door: wat ging aan dat besluit vooraf,” NRC Handelsblad (30 January 2024); Laurien Vastenhout, “Een lezing over de Holocaust is een politiek statement,” NRC Handelsblad (1 February 2024); “Lezingencyclus Holocaust en Antisemitisme” [program of lecture series] (no date).

On 30 January 2024, the Koninklijk Nederlands Historisch Genootschap (Royal Netherlands Historical Society) issued a press release saying that historian and independent researcher Anne-Lot Hoek (1978–), an expert on colonialism and the Indonesian war of independence (1945–1949), was insulted and intimidated with threatening content from activists related to the foundations Histori Bersama (an online platform) and Komite Utang Kehormatan Belanda – Stichting Comité Nederlandse Ereschulden (KUKB; Foundation Dutch Debt of Honor Committee), invading Lot’s privacy, defaming her, and threatening her safety. Lot had published De strijd om Bali (The fight for Bali) (2021), about imperialism and resistance in Bali, Indonesia, in 1846–1950, and participated in the officially commissioned history project Independence, Decolonization, Violence and War in Indonesia, 1945–1950. The foundations called her work government propaganda that neglected critical voices.¹⁸⁰

In a 26 June 2024 newspaper interview, Leo Lucassen, historian of migration, professor of social history at the University of Leiden and director of the International Institute of Social History in Amsterdam, said that since at least 2015 he had been the target of a barrage of almost daily online intimidation attempts, especially on Twitter/X, because he tried to refute radical-right prejudices about migrants, refugees, and asylum seekers with historical and statistical arguments in frequent newspaper columns. On one occasion, the intimidation included the publication of pictures of his daughters.¹⁸¹

See also Syria, United States.

NEW ZEALAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2003, 2005, 2007, 2017, 2019–2021.

On 24 July 2024, the Royal Commission of Inquiry into Abuse and Care – a 2018 commission set up to investigate abuse in state and religious care institutions between 1950–2019 – found that one in three people (200,000 children, young people and vulnerable adults) had suffered from abuse, including sexual abuse, physical abuse and neglect. It further found that Maori and Pacific Islanders were targeted because of their ethnicity and that they were prevented from engaging with their cultural heritage and practices. Prime Minister Christopher Luxon promised to implement the final report's 130 recommendations and to issue an apology in November 2024.¹⁸²

¹⁸⁰ Koninklijk Nederlands Historisch Genootschap, Statement against Harassment Anne-Lot Hoek (Press release; 30 January 2024 in Dutch; 1 February 2024 in English); Bart Funnekotter, “Historica Anne-Lot Hoek geïntimideerd om Indonesië-onderzoek,” NRC Handelsblad (30 January 2024); “Independence, Decolonization, Violence and War in Indonesia, 1945–1950,” NIOD webpage (no date); Histori Bersama, “Statement Concerning Anne-Lot Hoek and Her Husband” [2022]; Anne-Lot Hoek, personal website (<https://www.annelothoek.com>); Arjen Fortuin, “Eerbiedwaardige historici hekelen intimidatie, maar waar doelen ze precies op?” NRC Handelsblad (9 February 2024).

¹⁸¹ Jannetje Koelewijn, “Twee wetenschappers vertellen hoe ze geïntimideerd werden: ‘Bérgen beledigingen en bedreigingen, echt bérgen’,” NRC Handelsblad (26 June 2024), 3.

See also Australia.

NICARAGUA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2020–2023.

On 9 February 2023, politician and historian Dora María Téllez was released after having spent twenty months in El Chipote Prison, Managua, and forced into exile in the United States. As comandante in the Frente Sandinista de Liberación Nacional (FSLN; Sandinista National Liberation Front), Téllez had fought during the 1979 revolution that ousted dictator Anastasio Somoza Debayle (in power between 1967–1972 and 1974–1979). Between 1979 and 1990, she served as Minister of Health, but in 1995 she co-founded the Movimiento Renovador Sandinista (MRS) in protest against corruption and lack of democracy in the FSLN. Her historical work included publications on Nicaraguan history for which she was admitted to the Academy of Geography and History of Nicaragua and made a corresponding Member of the Academy of Geography and History of Guatemala. In 2004, she was appointed Robert F. Kennedy Visiting Professor in Latin American studies at the Harvard Divinity School, but in [March] 2005 she was barred from obtaining an entry visa to the United States because of her involvement in “terrorist attacks” [See NCH Annual Report 2005 under United States]. In June 2008, she went on hunger strike against the dictatorship of President Daniel Ortega (in power since 2006). In June 2021, she was arrested in a wave of arrests, including opposition party leaders, journalists and social activists, in the lead-up to the 2021 presidential elections. In February 2022, she was sentenced to prison on bogus charges of political conspiracy in a closed-door trial. Her nationality, together with that of 222 other prisoners who were released and forced into exile with her, was revoked.¹⁸³

On 16 August 2023, the government of President Daniel Ortega confiscated the Instituto de Historia de Nicaragua y Centroamérica (IHNCA) in Managua, considered the last independence space for historical research in the country. The IHNCA had been founded in 1987 by two Jesuit priests to promote the study of regional history and contained in its online catalog 70,000 documents from as far back as the seventeenth century [See NCH Annual Report 2023]. Following the confiscation, 36 historians signed a letter condemning the government's actions and hailing the IHNCA as "the champion of safeguarding history sources." Already in August 2021, the government had closed the newspaper archive of La Prensa, containing ninety years of documents published in the country, leaving only two libraries – the library of the Central Bank of Nicaragua and the National Library – both of which were controlled by the government and allowed limited access for historical research.

¹⁸² “New Zealand Inquiry Finds 200,000 Abused in State and Religious Care,” Al Jazeera (24 July 2024).

¹⁸³ Linda Mannheim & Mike Lanchin, “Dora María Téllez Is Free at Last – and Able to Speak Freely!,” The Nation (2 March 2023); “Dora María Téllez,” Wikipedia (last updated 13 February 2024); Duncan Campbell, “US Bars Nicaragua Heroine As ‘Terrorist’,” Guardian (4 March 2005); “Nicaragua Arrests More Opposition Figures in Crackdown,” Der Welt (14 June 2021); Tom Phillips, “Legendary Sandinista Commander Sentenced as Ortega Crushes Dissent,” Guardian (4 February 2022).

A week later, on 23 August, the Ortega government inaugurated the Heroes of Nicaragua History Institute in the IHNCA facilities, announcing it as a "space to show ... our history through the archives and documentary memory." A researcher at the institute criticized the new institute as being "dedicated to highlight the narrative of the Sandinista Front and to the cult of this party's memory."¹⁸⁴

NIGER

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2013, 2021.

NIGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2006, 2008, 2010–2013, 2016–2023.

In May 2023, the case against two suspects accused of student Deborah Samuel's murder [See NCH Annual Report 2022–2023] and charged with "criminal conspiracy and inciting public disturbance," was struck from the roll for lack of diligent prosecution.¹⁸⁵

On 27 July 2023, the Media Foundation for West Africa (MFWA), the International Press Centre (IPC) and Media Rights Agenda (MRA) launched a thirty-day social media campaign to demand justice for Pelumi Onifade ([1999 or 2000]–2020), a history student and journalist killed by police on 24 October 2020 [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023]. The campaign marked the countdown to the thousandth day of his death.¹⁸⁶

¹⁸⁴ "Ortega and Murillo 'Confiscate History' by Seizing Nicaragua's Last Independent Libraries," Divergentes (30 August 2023).

¹⁸⁵ Afeez Bolaji, "Case Dropped against Suspects Accused of Student's Murder," University World News (24 May 2023).

¹⁸⁶ "Demands for a Thorough Investigation into Death of Pelumi Onifade Intensify," Ifex News (31 July 2023).

In [late] January 2024, in the context of armed clashes between the predominantly Muslim Fulani people and the predominantly Christian Mwanghavul people in Plateau State, six mosques and two churches were burnt down in Mangu.¹⁸⁷

NORTH MACEDONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2021–2023. For previous entries: see Macedonia.

On 2 October 2023, the Defense Ministry announced the erection of three memorials for Macedonian soldiers and police officers who were killed by ethnic Albanian guerrilla forces during the armed conflict between April and August 2001, after similar efforts had been repeatedly obstructed by local mayors. The brief armed conflict between ethnic Albanian insurgents of the Ushtria Çlirimtare Kombëtare (UÇK; National Liberation Army) and Macedonian security forces took the lives of 68 Macedonian security forces. The number of UÇK members killed ranged between 64 and 105.¹⁸⁸

NORWAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2012, 2016–2017, 2022–2023.

¹⁸⁷ “Churches and Mosques Burnt in Nigeria as Curfew Imposed in Mangu,” Africa News (24 January 2024).

¹⁸⁸ Sinisa Jakov Marusic, “North Macedonia Vows to Finally Build Memorials to Troops Killed in 2001,” Balkan Insight (3 October 2023).

OMAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2017, 2019, 2021.

On 15 July 2024, the night before Ashura – a day of mourning for Husayn, the Prophet Muhammad’s grandson – at least six people were killed and thirty wounded at a mosque in Wadi Kabir. The responsibility for the attack was claimed by Daesh (also known as the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant [ISIL]).¹⁸⁹

¹⁸⁹ “ISIL Claims Oman Mosque Attack, Six Killed,” Al Jazeera (16 July 2024).

PAKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2004, 2006, 2009–2012, 2014, 2016, 2018–2019, 2021, 2023.

On 29 March 2022, Safoora Bibi, a teacher at the all-girl Jamia Islamia Falahul Binaat madrassa in Dera Ismail Khan, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, was killed by a female colleague and two students who accused her of “blasphemy.” The students reportedly told police officials that one of their relatives had dreamed that Bibi had committed blasphemy against the Prophet Muhammad.

On 5 August 2023, Abdul Rauf ([2000/1]–2023), an English teacher in at a language center in Turbat, Balochistan, and student at Turbat University, was shot dead by unknown men while he was on his way to a jirga (a council meeting common among the Pashtun to settle disputes) of ulema (religious scholars) to confront charges of “blasphemy” issued against him by some of his students.¹⁹⁰

On 14 August 2023, the Pakistan Cricket Board released a video on social media commemorating the 76th anniversary of Pakistan’s independence on 14 August 1947. The video, showing the national cricket team’s successes since 1947, was widely criticized for omitting any footage of former Prime Minister Imran Khan, who had been the team’s captain during its 1992 World Cup win, despite showing imagery of the 1992 tournament. On 9 May 2023, Khan was deposed as prime minister on corruption charges, arrested and barred from politics for five years. Since then, a de facto ban had reportedly been place on broadcasters mentioning his name or showing his image.¹⁹¹

On 16 August 2023, armed mobs attacked and set ablaze five churches, including the Salvation Army Church and the Saint Paul Catholic Church, in Jaranwala, Punjab, after a Christian community had been accused of “blasphemy” after pages torn out of the Quran and inscribed with “blasphemous” content were found near the Isa Nagri (Christian colony) area. A Christian graveyard was also desecrated. One hundred and forty-six people were arrested. On 18 August, police arrested two Christian residents on “blasphemy” charges. Punjab’s Minister of Information Amir Mir unsubstantially claimed that the torn Quranic pages were a “well thought-out conspiracy to inflame public sentiments.” Pakistan’s blasphemy laws had been repeatedly criticized for allowing majority groups to attack minorities with impunity [See NCH Annual Report 2023].¹⁹²

¹⁹⁰ “Pakistani Teacher Killed for Alleged Blasphemy: Police,” Al Jazeera (30 March 2022); Behram Baloch, “Teacher Killed on Blasphemy Allegation in Turbat,” Dawn (7 August 2023).

¹⁹¹ “Pakistanis Slam ‘Shameful’ Cricket Board Video Omitting Imran Khan,” Al Jazeera (15 August 2023).

¹⁹² “Mobs Burn Christian Churches, Homes in Pakistan after Blasphemy Allegations,” Al Jazeera (16 August 2023); “Pakistan Arrests 146 as It Launches Probe into Church Attacks,” Al Jazeera (17 August 2023); “Two Christians Arrested in Pakistan over Blasphemy Accusation,” Al Jazeera (18 August 2023).

On 25 September 2023, the Human Rights Commission of Pakistan stated that at least 34 attacks on religious places of the Ahmadi (Ahmadiyya) people – a Sunni Islam messianic movement – had taken place since January 2023. In 1974 the approximately 500,000 member Ahmadi community had been officially declared “non-Muslim,” and enshrined in the Constitution as such. Later, during the dictatorship of Zia ul-Haq (in power between 1978–1988), Ahmadis were barred from “posing as Muslims,” for example by publicly referring to themselves as Muslims. Ahmadi representatives claimed that at least fourteen mosques and 197 graves had been damaged in 2021, and that at least 74 graves and two minarets had been vandalized in Daka, Punjab, in one week alone, in what they considered a systematic and coordinated hate campaign [See NCH Annual Report 2023].¹⁹³

On 29 September 2023, a suicide bombing killed at least 52 participants of the Eid-e-Milad an-Nabi (or Mawlid an-Nabi; a procession celebrating the birthday of the Prophet Muhammad [570–632]) in the Mastung District, Balochistan province, and wounded another 58. A second blast killed at least five people and injured twelve at a mosque in Hangu, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province. No one claimed immediate responsibility for the attacks.¹⁹⁴

PALESTINE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998–2002, 2008–2010, 2013–2015, 2018, 2021–2023.

Since 2017, the Eyes on Heritage team – a group of nine volunteering women in the Gaza Strip – had begun digitizing hundreds of documents, some dating back hundreds of years, related to the history, culture and heritage of the Gaza Strip. However, due to the frequent and prolonged closure of border crossings by Israeli officials, the delivery of essential resources, tools and machines for restoration and archiving often fell short.¹⁹⁵

On 6 September 2023, officials from the European Union, Germany and Israel condemned Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas for comments he made about the Holocaust. In a speech to the Fatah Revolutionary Council and aired on Palestine television in August, he said that Adolf Hitler had ordered the mass murder of Jews because of their “social role” as moneylenders, rather than out of genocidal racism. Abbas had a history of ambiguity vis-à-vis the Holocaust, calling it “the most heinous crime in modern human history” but also repeatedly seeming to deny it or to defend long abandoned historical theories about the Jews [See NCH Annual Reports 2009, 2023].¹⁹⁶

¹⁹³ Abid Hussain, “Pakistan’s Ahmadis Living in Fear as Graves, Religious Sites Attacked,” Al Jazeera (27 September 2023).

¹⁹⁴ “Blast at Pakistan Procession to Mark Prophet’s Birthday Kills At Least 52,” Al Jazeera (29 September 2023); Abid Hussain, “At Least Five Killed as Another Blast Hits Pakistan on Prophet’s Birthday,” Al Jazeera (29 September 2023).

¹⁹⁵ Abdelhakim Abu Riash, “Meet the Research Team Working to Save Gaza’s History, Heritage,” Al Jazeera (18 August 2023).

On 7 October 2023, during the attack on Israel by the al-Qassam Brigades of Hamas (the Islamic Resistance Movement), Holocaust historian Alex Danzig (Alex Dancyg) (1948–) was abducted and taken as a hostage to an unknown destination in the Gaza Strip. In late November 2023, he sent a message to his family through one of the hostages that were released. He gave history lectures to the other hostages who were imprisoned together with him. Born in Warsaw, Poland, to Jewish Holocaust survivors, he migrated with his parents to Israel in 1957. In 1986, he was a member of one of the first groups of young Israelis to visit Poland. Working for Yad Vashem, Israel’s Holocaust remembrance center, since about 1993, he spent most of his life educating about the Holocaust and training educators. He lived with his family in kibbutz Nir Oz in Israel, close to Gaza. His health was precarious.¹⁹⁷

Among those killed during the Israel-Gaza war since 7 October 2023 were the following:

- [Between 7 October and 6 December 2023], Iman Abu Saeed, oral historian at the Tamer Institute for Community Education, was killed with her two children and her husband.¹⁹⁸
- [Between 7 October and 22 December 2023], an archaeology student (name unknown) working for the Gaza Maritime Archaeology Project (Gazamap) was killed in an Israeli airstrike, together with two media collaborators who were training students and obtaining aerial footage from Gaza’s coastal archaeology.¹⁹⁹
- On 17 October 2023, historian Jihad Suleiman Al-Masri [El Masry] (?–2023) died of his injuries inflicted by the shelling of Khan Younis by Israeli forces. He worked as a university professor ¹⁹⁶ Yolande Knell, “Outrage over Abbas’s Antisemitic Speech on Jews and Holocaust,” BBC News (7 September 2023); “Holocaust Row: Abbas Accused of Anti-Semitism,” BBC News (1 May 2018); Jonathan Freedland, “It’s Right to Condemn Mahmoud Abbas for His Antisemitic Remarks,” Guardian (2 May 2018); Oliver Holmes, “Netanyahu Accuses Palestinian President of Antisemitism,” Guardian (2 May 2018); “Palestinian Leader Abbas Apologises for Holocaust Remarks,” BBC News (4 May 2018); David Gritten, “Israel and Germany Condemn Palestinian Leader’s ‘50 Holocausts’ Claim,” BBC News (17 August 2022).

¹⁹⁷ Robert Greenall, “Alex Danzig: Fears Grow for Much-Loved Historian Kidnapped by Hamas,” BBC News (18 October 2023); “‘We Miss Them a Lot, We Want Them to Come Back Home’ – Interview with Matty Dancyg,” Arolsen Archives (13 November 2023); “A Great Relief: How One Hostage Sent Regards to His Family,” Israel National News (28 November 2023); “Hamas Hostages: Stories of the People Taken from Israel,” BBC News (27 February 2024).

¹⁹⁸ Librarians and Archivists with Palestine, Israeli Damage to Archives, Libraries, and Museums in Gaza, October 2023–January 2024: A Preliminary Report (No place: Librarians and Archivists with Palestine, 2024), 12.

¹⁹⁹ Sarvy Geranpayeh, “Gaza City Archives among Heritage Sites Destroyed in Israel-Hamas War,” The Art Newspaper (22 December 2023).

specialized in Islamic history and Palestinian oral traditions and as director of the Al-Quds Open University's Khan Yunis branch.²⁰⁰

- On 19 October 2023, Marwan Tarazi (?–2023), archivist of Photo Kegham – the first photography studio in Gaza, set up in 1944 by Kegham Djeghalian Kegham – was killed with his wife and infant granddaughter while sheltering at the Saint Porphyrius Orthodox Church.²⁰¹
- On 23 October 2023, Abdul Karim Hashash (?–2023), a writer and advocate for Palestinian heritage and collector of Palestinian rare books, was killed with many members of his family.²⁰²

During the war that broke out between Hamas and Israel (7 October 2023–), airstrikes damaged or destroyed multiple cultural heritage sites in Gaza and the West Bank:

- Israeli forces targeted several memorials, including the monument for the Al-Jundi Al-Majhool (Unknown Soldier) in Memorial Park, Gaza City, the Memorial of the Martyrs of the Marmara Ship in Gaza Port, the memorial of late journalist Shireen Abu Akleh in the Jenin Refugee Camp, and the memorial of late President Yasser Arafat (1929–2004) in Tulkarm, in the West Bank.²⁰³
- On 11 October 2023, an Israeli airstrike destroyed the Rafah Museum, containing a collection of ancient coins, copper plates and jewelry, which was considered Gaza's main museum of Palestinian heritage.²⁰⁴
- On 19 October 2023, the twelfth-century Greek Orthodox Church of St. Porphyrius (ca. 347–420) in Gaza-City was severely damaged by an Israeli airstrike. At least seventeen people who had taken shelter in the church were killed.²⁰⁵
- On 22 October 2023, the Gaza-based Endowments and Religious Affairs Ministry claimed that 31 mosques had been destroyed by Israeli airstrikes since 7 October. On the same day, the Al-Ansar Mosque in Jenin was severely damaged by an Israeli airstrike.²⁰⁶

²⁰⁰ Dan Sheehan, "These Are the Poets and Writers Who Have Been Killed in Gaza," Literary Hub (21 December 2023); Nadda Osman, "War on Gaza: Some of the Prominent Palestinian Academics and Scientists Killed by Israel," Middle East Eye (17 February 2024); Librarians and Archivists with Palestine, Israeli Damage to Archives, Libraries, and Museums in Gaza, October 2023–January 2024: A Preliminary Report (No place: Librarians and Archivists with Palestine, 2024), 12; PEN International, War, Censorship and Persecution: PEN International Case List 2023/2024 (London: PEN, 2024), 104.

²⁰¹ Librarians and Archivists with Palestine, Israeli Damage to Archives, Libraries, and Museums in Gaza, October 2023–January 2024: A Preliminary Report (No place: Librarians and Archivists with Palestine, 2024), 13.

²⁰² Librarians and Archivists with Palestine, Israeli Damage to Archives, Libraries, and Museums in Gaza, October 2023–January 2024: A Preliminary Report (No place: Librarians and Archivists with Palestine, 2024), 11.

²⁰³ "Israel Destroyed Central Archives of Gaza City': Head of Gaza Municipality," Middle East Monitor (29 November 2023).

²⁰⁴ Indlieb Farazi Saber, "A 'Cultural Genocide': Which of Gaza's Heritage Sites Have Been Destroyed?," Al Jazeera (14 January 2024).

²⁰⁵ Eleni Stamatoukou, "Greece Voices 'Deep Sorrow' over Bombing of Church in Gaza," Balkan Insight (20 October 2023).

²⁰⁶ "Israel Has Destroyed 31 Mosques in Gaza Strip since 7 October: Ministry," Middle East Monitor (22 October 2023); "Israel Strikes Mosque in Occupied West Bank Refugee Camp," Al Jazeera (22 October 2023).

- On 7 November 2023, the Heritage for Peace NGO published preliminary findings indicating that 104 historic sites had been damaged or destroyed. These included 8 mosques, 4 churches, 9 archaeological sites, 73 historical houses, 5 shrines, 3 cemeteries and 2 museums.²⁰⁷
- On 29 November 2023, Israel bombed and destroyed the Central Archives of Gaza City, which contained thousands of historical documents dating back one century, and the main public library. Also targeted was the Rashad Al-Shawwa Historical Cultural Center.²⁰⁸
- On 6 December 2023, the Palestinian branch of the International Council on Monuments and Sites (ICOMOS) confirmed the complete or partial destruction of nine heritage sites, adding that the number was likely to be far greater. The sites included: the Gaza City Central Archives [See above]; the El Saqqa House, a cultural center established in a traditional Islamic Mamluk period house dating back to 1661; the Al Ahli Baptist Hospital founded in 1882; and the Souq Al Zawiya market. It further awaited imagery confirming damages done to the thirteenth-century Pasha's Palace Museum, the thirteenth-century Othman bin Qashqar Mosque, the Souq Al Qaysariyya market and the Tell Umm Amer (Tell Umm el-'Amr) in Al Nusairat – an archaeological site containing the Saint Hilarion Monastery (founded ca. 340 CE) and part of the UNESCO Tentative Heritage List. On 14 December the UNESCO Committee for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict granted Tell Umm Amer the highest level of protection under the 1954 Hague Convention on the Protection of Cultural Heritage in the Event of Armed Conflict.²⁰⁹
- On 8 December 2023, the seventh-century Great Omari Mosque in Gaza City was destroyed in an Israeli strike. The strike also damaged the mosque's library, established by Sultan Zahir Baybars (1223/8–1277). The library consisted of old copies of the Quran, biographies of Prophet Muhammad and ancient books on philosophy, medicine, and Sufi mysticism, many of which had been destroyed by Christian Crusaders and during World War I (1914–1918). The 62 books that remained in the library were at risk after the strike, according to the United States-based Hill Museum and Manuscript Library.²¹⁰

²⁰⁷ Ahmed al-Barsh, Report on the Impact of the Recent War in 2023 on the Cultural Heritage in Gaza Strip – Palestine (Heritage for Peace; 7 November 2023).

²⁰⁸ “Israel Destroyed Central Archives of Gaza City”: Head of Gaza Municipality,” Middle East Monitor (29 November 2023); “Statement of the International Council on Archives on the Destruction of the Central Archives of the Municipality of Gaza,” (press release; no date [ca. 3 January 2024]); Librarians and Archivists with Palestine, Israeli Damage to Archives, Libraries, and Museums in Gaza, October 2023–January 2024: A Preliminary Report (No place: Librarians and Archivists with Palestine, 2024), 3.

²⁰⁹ Sarvy Geranpayeh, “Gaza City Archives among Heritage Sites Destroyed in Israel-Hamas War,” The Art Newspaper (22 December 2023).

²¹⁰ “Images Show Major Damage to Gaza’s Oldest Mosque,” BBC News (8 December 2023); Sarvy Geranpayeh, “Gaza City Archives among Heritage Sites Destroyed in Israel-Hamas War,” The Art Newspaper (22 December 2023); Indlieb Farazi Saber, “A ‘Cultural Genocide’: Which of Gaza’s Heritage Sites Have Been Destroyed?,” Al Jazeera (14 January 2024).

- On 11 December 2023, the 13th-century Qasr Al-Basha, or Pasha's Palace, was hit by Israeli air strikes damaging its walls, courtyard and gardens.²¹¹
- On 19 December 2023, the University of London-based Forensic Architecture Research Group found that Israeli aerial strikes had severely damaged the Al-Balakhya port and the Anthedon Harbor, the first known seaport of Gaza dating back to the ninth to sixth century BCE. In April 2012, the ancient archaeological site of Anthedon had been listed as a UNESCO Tentative World Heritage Site.²¹²
- On 10 April 2024, UNESCO issued a preliminary damage assessment verifying 43 damaged cultural heritage sites in the Gaza Strip, including 24 buildings of historical and/or artistic interest, one museum and three archeological sites. A [21 December 2023] report by the International Council on Monuments and Sites (ICOMOS) had found that over 200 of the 350 listed cultural heritage sites in Gaza had been partially or completely destroyed. On 6 February 2024, the United Kingdom-based Institute of Conservation issued a statement calling for the cessation of violence and the adherence to international law, including the 1954 Hague Convention on the Protection of Cultural Heritage in the Event of Armed Conflict and the 2003 Convention for the Safeguarding of the Intangible Cultural Heritage. In March 2024, the European Association of Archaeologists (EAA) issued a statement calling for the safeguarding of human lives and cultural heritage, reportedly after pressure from heritage scholars to do so.²¹³

See also Bahrain, France, Germany, India, Israel, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States.

PANAMA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2008, 2013, 2015–2017.

²¹¹ Indlieb Farazi Saber, "A 'Cultural Genocide': Which of Gaza's Heritage Sites Have Been Destroyed?," Al Jazeera (14 January 2024).

²¹² Dania Akkad, "100 Days of War in Gaza: More than 23,000 Dead and a Society in Ruins," Middle East Eye (13 January 2024).

²¹³ ICOMOS, "Press Release on the Situation in Gaza and Israel" (21 December 2023); Indlieb Farazi Saber, "A 'Cultural Genocide': Which of Gaza's Heritage Sites Have Been Destroyed?," Al Jazeera (14 January 2024); The Institute of Conservation, "Icon's Statement on the Destruction of Cultural Heritage in Gaza" (press release; 6 February 2024); Clothilde Mraffko & Samuel Forey, "Israeli Bombs Are Wiping Out Gaza's Heritage and History," Le Monde (14 February 2024); European Association of Archaeologists, "EAA Statement on Threats to Archaeology and Archaeologists Arising from the Israel/Gaza Crisis" (press release; March 2024); Hilary Morgan Leatham, "Why Archaeologists Must Speak Up for Gaza," Al Jazeera (25 March 2024); UNESCO, "Gaza Strip: Damage Assessment" (press release; 10 April 2024).

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014, 2023.

PARAGUAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2005, 2007, 2009–2010, 2012, 2015, 2020, 2022.

PERU

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2023.

In January 2023, Congress modified the immigration law, making it easier for authorities to deny migrants entry and transit; adding vague obligations for foreigners, such as to “respect Peru’s historic and cultural legacy”; and erecting obstacles to migrants’ access to housing. The Ombudsperson’s Office filed a lawsuit opposing the changes, as they “criminalized migration, validated discrimination, and affected foreigners’ fundamental rights.”²¹⁴

On 5 December 2023, the Constitutional Court ruled in favor of granting a humanitarian pardon to former President Alberto Fujimori (in office between 1990–2000), in the latest episode of a long-lasting legal battle involving national courts and the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACtHR) [See NCH Annual Reports 2002–2021]. In 2009, Fujimori had been sentenced to 25 years in prison for corruption and crimes against humanity committed during the armed conflict (1980–2000). In 2003, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission had estimated that almost 70,000 people were killed or subject to enforced disappearance by the Shining Path, other armed groups, or state agents during the armed conflict. Additionally, Fujimori’s administration oversaw a forced sterilization campaign in which over 350,000 women and 25,000 men were sterilized against their will as part of a plan to reduce the birth rate in rural and indigenous communities. In 2017, then-President Pedro Pablo Kuczynski (in office between 2016–2018) had granted a humanitarian pardon to Fujimori on health grounds, which was later overturned due to pressure from the IACtHR. In 2022, the Constitutional Court upheld the pardon.

The United Nations High Commissioner on Human Rights called the court ruling “a concerning setback for accountability.” The IACtHR requested the government to “refrain from executing the order.” The government of President Dina Boluarte was itself facing accusations of human rights violations for its deadly response to anti-government protests between December 2022 and January 2023, in which at least sixty people were killed.²¹⁵

²¹⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 499.

On 5 July 2024, Miguel Ángel Beltrán Villegas (1965–), a historian, sociologist and professor at the Universidad Nacional in Bogotá, Colombia, and his wife, Natalia Caruso López, an anthropologist and historian at the Universidad Pedagógica de Colombia, and their children were detained for various hours at Lima airport when they wanted to enter the country for a vacation. The reason given was that Beltrán constituted a risk for the “national security and public order” of Perú. Previously, Beltrán had been detained at the airports of Panamá (2016) and Mexico (2021) on similar charges. In 2009–2011, Beltrán had been imprisoned in Colombia on false charges of membership of the guerrilla movement Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia (FARC; Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces) [See NCH Annual Reports 2010, 2012, 2017 under Colombia].²¹⁶

PHILIPPINES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2015, 2019–2023.

In early January 2024, it was reported that persons involved in seeking justice for those who were killed during previous President Rodrigo Duterte’s “war on drugs” (2016–2022) and their families, such as Father Flavie Villanueva and forensic pathologist Raquel Fortun, were harassed. Villanueva was charged with conspiracy to commit sedition over an alleged plot to oust Duterte. Fortun, a professor in the College of Medicine and chair of the Department of Pathology at the University of the Philippines, who had autopsied the remains of more than ninety victims since July 2021 and discovered multiple inconsistencies, got some threatening visits from the police and the state prosecutor. According to the International Criminal Court, crimes against humanity were likely to have been committed during the Duterte campaign. The government estimated that more than 6,252 people had been gunned down during the drugs war but rights groups said that the numbers could actually run into the tens of thousands.²¹⁷

See also Singapore.

²¹⁵ Dan Collins, “International Court Urges Peru Not to Release Ex-President Fujimori From Jail,” Guardian (6 December 2023); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 305.

²¹⁶ Editora Bogotá, “Liberados el profesor Miguel Ángel Beltrán y su familia,” Colombia Informa (6 July 2024); Miguel Ángel Beltrán Villegas, “Estudiantes de la Nacho víctimas de represión,” Voz (13 June 2024).

²¹⁷ Linda Pressly, “Philippines: Bone Diggers Seek Justice for Dead in Duterte’s Drug War,” BBC News (3 January 2024).

POLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2000–2001, 2004–2005, 2007–2011, 2014–2023.

On 30 May 2023, Polish-Canadian historian Jan Grabowski was about to give a lecture at the German Historical Institute in Warsaw about “The (Growing) Polish Problem with the Holocaust.” Far right-wing member of parliament Grzegorz Braun disrupted Grabowski’s lecture by grabbing his microphone, slamming it several times on the lectern, and cutting off the power. Braun declared that he did not want to be told about Polish history at an event at the German Historical Institute. Since Grabowski felt unable to continue his paper, the event was ended. Braun’s supporters then celebrated with him on the street in front of the institute. The University of Warsaw invited Grabowski to give his lecture the next day. Although there were disruptions there also, the lecture and the ensuing academic discussion went ahead [See NCH Annual Reports 2017–2022].²¹⁸

In September 2023, Agnieszka Holland’s movie Zielona granica (“The Green Border”) – depicting the abuse of migrants and asylum seekers on the border with Belarus – premiered. It was subsequently attacked by then Minister of Justice Zbigniew Ziobro, who described the movie as “anti-Polish Nazi propaganda.” The Interior Ministry announced it would broadcast a clip prior to screenings of the movie to inform viewers of “untruths and distortions.”²¹⁹

On 29 December 2023, Minister of Culture and National Heritage, Bartłomiej Sienkiewicz, of the new Donald Tusk government canceled the planned exhibition of artist Ignaz Czwartos (1966–) at the 2024 Venice Biennale Polish Pavilion. The exhibition – a set of more than 35 paintings and objects about twentieth-century Polish history titled Polish Practice in Tragedy: Between Germany and Russia and presenting a Polish state victimized throughout the twentieth century at the hands of its neighbors Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia – had been selected in an open competition on 31 October 2023 under the previous government of the nationalist-populist Law and Justice party (PiS). It was controversial for several reasons: it did not fit the Biennale’s inclusive theme Stranieri Ovunque (Foreigners Everywhere); it followed a narrative of anti-European and anti-Russian “right-wing, martyrdom-oriented cultural policy,” close to PiS history politics; some of the paintings contained controversial symbols or historical figures (including alleged war criminals) or suggested anachronistic historical comparisons; and the PiS-appointed jury chairman was accused of lack of impartiality because he had curated a similar exhibition by Czwartos earlier in 2023. On 18 September 2023, three out of fourteen jury members had publicly disapproved the nomination. Czwartos called the cancellation “censorship.”²²⁰

²¹⁸ Wilhelm Krull & Thomas Brunotte, The Future of Democracy and Academic Freedom in Central Europe: A Neo-Nationalism and University Brief (UC Berkeley Research and Occasional Papers Series) (6 November 2023), 2–3; Wilhelm Krull & Thomas Brunotte, “University Legitimacy: A Strong Defence of Academic Freedom,” University World News (18 November 2023); European Parliament, EP Academic Freedom Monitor 2023: Study (Brussels: Scientific Foresight Unit of the European Parliamentary Research Service, 2024), 176.

²¹⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 511.

See also Palestine, Russia.

PORTUGAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017, 2021.

See also United Kingdom.

²²⁰ Gareth Harris, “Polish Pavilion Selection at Venice Biennale Gets Political as Rejected Artist Cries Censorship,” The Art Newspaper (1 January 2024); Richard Unwin, “Three Members of Jury that Voted on Poland’s 2024 Venice Biennale Pavilion Show Hit out at Plans,” The Art Newspaper (7 November 2023); Philip Oltermann, “‘An Anti-European Manifesto’: Poland’s Venice Biennale Entry Defies Inclusive Theme,” Guardian (12 November 2023).

QATAR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

ROMANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000, 2003, 2005, 2007–2008, 2010, 2019, 2021–2023.

On 15 November 2023, Prime Minister Marcel Ciolacu expressed irritation over Ukrainian textbooks for fifth-grade students that employed references to the “Moldovan language” – a term that Romanians alleged denoted a political tool invented by the Soviet Union after it seized Bessarabia (present-day Moldova) from Romania in June 1940, and that was a contentious marker of identity in Moldova and among ethnic Moldovans in Ukraine. On 16 March 2023, Moldova’s parliament had voted in favor of a draft law that would replace the phrase “Moldovan language” with “Romanian language.”²²¹

On 7 March 2024, journalist and assistant professor of journalism at the University of Bucharest, Emilia Șercan, won a retrial lawsuit at the Bucharest Court of Appeal against the Police Academy to get full and free access to all doctoral theses from the institution. It was one of several court cases in which Șercan had successfully claimed that her access to information of public interest had been unlawfully restricted under Law 544/2001, including access to information of the Serviciul Român de Informații (SRI; Romanian Intelligence Service). In recent years, she had exposed plagiarism in the doctoral theses of many high dignitaries who had pursued their education at police and intelligence service academies. In April 2019, Șercan had received death threats from an officer of the Alexandru Ioan Cuza Police Academy in Bucharest.²²²

On 3 April 2024, the Prosecutor General requested presidential approval to start a renewed investigation into the role of former President Ion Iliescu (in office between 1989–1996 and 2000–2004) and four others in crimes against humanity committed during the so-called mineriade protests (thrice in 1990, once in 1991 and twice in 1999), in which anti-government protesters were violently attacked by miners. In 2020 the High Court of Cassation and Justice had found that the indictment was invalid and returned the case to the Military Prosecutor’s Office for reinvestigation. On 26 April 2024, Iliescu was questioned by prosecutors [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023].²²³

See also Moldova.

²²¹ Madalin Necsutu, “Ukraine’s New ‘Moldovan’ Schoolbooks Raise Hackles in Romania,” Balkan Insight (16 November 2023).

²²² Madalin Necsutu, “Romania Journalist Wins Right to Search Police Academy Archives,” Balkan Insight (8 March 2024).

²²³ Madalin Necsutu, “Romanian Prosecutor Seeks to Investigate Ex-President for 1990 Crackdown,” Balkan Insight (4 April 2024); Madalin Necsutu, “Romania’s Ex-President Iliescu Grilled Over ‘Mineriada Case’,” Balkan Insight (26 April 2024).

RUSSIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1998, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2023.

In August 2021, Marc Fogel (1961–), an American history teacher at the Anglo-American School of Moscow since 2012, was arrested at Sheremetyevo airport in Russia for illegal possession of cannabis (he carried a small amount of medical marijuana, which had been prescribed in the United States to treat chronic pain). In June 2022, he was convicted of drug trafficking and sentenced to fourteen years in prison. While serving his sentence, he reportedly taught English to fellow inmates. Fogel was not included in the 1 August 2024 prisoner swap [See below under Kara-Murza, Orlov].²²⁴

After Russia invaded Ukraine in February 2022, the Deutsches Historisches Institut (DHI; German Historical Institute) in Moscow suspended its scholarship programs and event activities, and halted its cooperation with state institutions. Later, the Justice Ministry branded the DHI as “undesirable” and “a foreign agent” (meaning that cooperation with it was punishable by law). The central library continued to operate and a decentralized network was reportedly established so that researchers could continue to study Russian and Soviet history.²²⁵

In [2023], several people were sentenced, indicted, or detained for their supposed affiliation with Nurdzhular, a group of followers of the Turkish theologian Said Nursi (1877–1960) that Russia banned as extremist in 2008 even though it had no history of incitement or violence.²²⁶

In January 2023, a publishing house referred to the legislation against the “rehabilitation of Nazism” to censor sections of a book by an American author that compared the Soviet army’s conduct in Poland during World War II to that of Nazi Germany.²²⁷

On 24 April 2023, the Education Ministry announced a new compulsory high school history textbook across Russia and the Russia-occupied territories of Ukraine, which heavily focused on the “Great Patriotic War” (World War II; 1939–1945) and the so-called “Special Military Operation” (referring to the 24 February 2022 invasion of Ukraine) and repeated the baseless claims that it had been a measure against the threats posed by Western countries and the “growing Nazi sentiments” in Ukraine [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. On 10 August 2023, Russian Education Minister Sergei Kravtsov presented the

²²⁴ Carl Nasman & Emily McGarvey, ““Betrayal”: Detained US Teacher’s Sister Upset Russia Prisoner Swap Left Him Out,” BBC News (4 August 2024); “Marc Fogel,” Wikipedia (retrieved 5 August 2024).

²²⁵ Table Media, “Repression Grows in Russian Universities,” Science/Business (1 August 2024).

²²⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 524.

²²⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 519.

textbook for the eleventh grade (17- and 18-year-olds), entitled “Russian History, 1945–Early 21st Century,” to be used from 1 September 2023 and co-authored by presidential adviser and historian Vladimir Medinsky [See NCH Annual Reports 2016–2022]. Amnesty International criticized the textbook for its attempt to whitewash the historical human rights record of Russian and Soviet authorities, while also falsely justifying Russia’s war of aggression in Ukraine as an act of self-defense. It condemned the textbook as indoctrination of propaganda, which was a violation of the right to education. History teachers who refused to follow the Russian curriculum were at risk of violence, arbitrary detention and ill-treatment.²²⁸

On 1 April 2023, Fedor [Fyodor] Solomonov, a student at the Faculty of History of Saint Petersburg State University (SPBU), died on the front in the war against Ukraine. He had praised the “special military operation” on social media, decided not to use the deferral granted to him by law, and on 22 October 2022, joined the ranks of the Russian Armed Forces. A memorial for him appeared at SPBU [See below under Belousov].²²⁹

In May 2023, a court sentenced human rights activist and member of Memorial Bakhrom Khamroyev (Hamroev; Khamroev) to fourteen years in prison on terrorism-related charges reportedly for social media posts and for preparing materials related to Hizb ut-Tahrir, a pan-Islamist movement that sought to establish a caliphate but publicly repudiated violence to achieve that goal [See NCH Annual Report 2023].²³⁰

On 5 May 2023, long-time member of Perm Memorial and chair of the Center of Historical Memory, Aleksandr Chernyshov, was arrested at the airport just before his departure to Germany, on charges of “attempted smuggling of cultural artifacts.” Chernyshov allegedly attempted to smuggle to Germany Memorial’s local archives, which were ordered by authorities to be sent to Moscow after his arrest. In March 2023, authorities had searched his house and confiscated personal equipment and documents.

²²⁸ Anastasiia Vorobiova, Education as Indoctrination: Mnemonic Constitutionalism and History Teaching in Russia, Verfassungsblog.de (25 April 2023); Pjotr Sauer and agencies, “Russia Releases History Schoolbook Praising Ukraine Invasion,” BBC News (8 August 2023); Vitaly Shevchenko, “Russia’s New Schoolbook Aims to Justify War on Ukraine,” BBC News (10 August 2023); Amnesty International, “Ukraine/Russia: New History Textbook Is a Blatant Attempt to Unlawfully Indoctrinate School Children in Russia and Russian-Occupied Ukrainian Territories” (London: AI, 1 September 2023); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 53, 319–320; Amnesty International, “Russia: ‘Your Children Will Go To an Orphanage’: Children and the Crackdown on Protest” (EUR 46/8085/2024; London: AI, 31 May 2024), 6.

²²⁹ Mary Ilyushina, “To Please Putin, Universities Purge Liberals and Embrace Patriots,” Washington Post (7 May 2024).

²³⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 523.

Chernyshov was sentenced to three years of suspended prison time. On 18 April 2024, prosecutors in Perm filed an appeal to overhaul the suspended quality of the sentence.²³¹

On 17 May 2023, various United Nations Rapporteurs wrote a so-called letter of allegations concerning the search of the homes of members of the NGO Memorial as well as their offices, and the criminalization of historian Oleg Orlov [See below] in connection with his legitimate human rights work, the exercise of his freedom of expression and freedom of association.²³²

On 2 June 2023, Mikhail Belousov, an associate professor at the History Institute of Saint Petersburg State University (SPBU), was dismissed for criticizing Russia's invasion of Ukraine and "insulting" the Russian armed forces. Screenshots of Telegram messages between him and a group of history students reportedly showed his opinion that "There is some evidence that some topics related to World War II are distorted; however, it is forbidden to discuss the matter as it is punishable by law." The rector of SPBU stated that his behavior was "immoral and incompatible with the implementation of educational functions and the continuation of this work." At a meeting with the university's Ethics Committee prior to his dismissal, Belousov reportedly denied having sent the messages, stating that someone had created a Telegram account in his name without his knowledge. On 16 June 2023, seven history students were expelled from the Faculty of History in the same case. Pro-Kremlin and pro-war channels published the screenshots, commenting that SPBU was harboring "a cell of nascent Russophobes" and accusing the students that they had desecrated the memory of their fellow SPBU history student Fedor Solomonov [See above]. On 26 June 2023, the Regional Branch of the Investigative Committee of Russia initiated a criminal investigation against Belousov for "rehabilitating Nazism" [See NCH Annual Report 2023].

Among the expelled history students was Michael Martin, a student at the SPBU history department and leader of the student council, who was supposed to defend his thesis a few days later. On 24 February 2022, the day of Russia's invasion of Ukraine, Martin had issued an antiwar manifesto quickly drafted in a cafe. Martin went into exile after warnings that he and the other students could be charged with discrediting the army, a crime punishable by up to fifteen years in prison. In 2024 he was accepted into a master's program abroad and continued his research into 19th-century Australian federalism.

In August 2023, officials of the SPBU opened proceedings against Aleksandra Zaitseva, editor of the student magazine Studen. The university's Ethics Committee summoned her because of her written defense of the history students and Belousov Committee members argued that her conduct “showed disregard for the reputation” of the SPGU and that she was “undeserving of being a student.” Her case was ongoing as of October 2023.

²³¹ Perm Center for Historical Memory, "Free Aleksandr Chernyshov! Statement by Perm Memorial," (press release; 7 May 2023); "Head of Successor to Russian Rights Group Memorial Placed in Pretrial Detention," Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty (22 May 2023); "Russian Prosecutors Appeal Suspended Sentence For Ex-Memorial Chief," Radio Free Europe/Radio Liberty (18 April 2024); Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 318.

²³² United Nations Special Rapporteurs, Allegations Letter AL RUS 7/2023 (17 May 2023).

In October 2023, Dmitry Kuzmin, one of the seven expelled history students, was expelled from the history department of Herzen Pedagogical University where he had been studying after his expulsion from SPNU. Kuzmin had appeared in the center of Saint Petersburg carrying a banner reading “For Your Freedom and Ours. Peace To Ukraine. Freedom To Russia.” The second expulsion was reportedly based on a letter sent by the director of the Interior Ministry’s anti-extremism center (“Center E”).²³³

Among the historians who went into exile after the February 2022 invasion of Ukraine [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023] was Alexandra Kolesnik, a senior research fellow at the Poletaev Institute for Theoretical and Historical Studies in the Humanities (IGITI) and associate professor at the Faculty of Humanities School of History, both at the HSE (National Research University Higher School of Economics), Moscow (2011–2022). She worked in the fields of public history and heritage studies, including on the memory of victims of political repressions and the heritage associated with underground culture in the USSR. She became an independent scholar in Germany and France.²³⁴

On 31 July 2023, the appeal of Russian-British opposition activist, journalist and historian Vladimir Kara-Murza (1981–) [See NCH Annual Report 2023] was quashed. In September 2023, he was moved to an isolation cell in a maximum-security prison in Omsk, Siberia. On 29 January 2024, he disappeared, only to reappear later in solitary confinement in an even harsher prison. In May 2024, he won the Pulitzer prize for his Washington Post columns written and smuggled from prison. On 4 or 5 July 2024, Kara-Murza was taken to a prison hospital. On 1 August 2024, Kara-Murza was released in a prisoner swap between Russia and several Western countries. He went into exile in Germany.

A former adviser to opposition leader Boris Nemtsov (shot dead in 2015), Kara-Murza survived two poisonings (2015, 2017), allegedly by Russian authorities. The attempts on his life left him with a nerve condition called polyneuropathy. In February 2024, Kara-Murza tried to get the Investigative Committee to open a criminal case into the poisonings.²³⁵

²³³ Andrii Nekoliak & Elizaveta Klochkova, “Weaponizing Russia’s Memory Law: On Russia’s Mnemonic Dissidents,” Verfassungsblog (11 July 2023); Scholars at Risk, Mikhail Belousov (2 June 2023) and Mikhail Belousov (16 June 2023); Robert Coalson, “‘Cultural Pogrom’: Putin’s St. Petersburg Alma Mater Purges Dissident Students, Faculty,” RFE/RL News (22 October 2023); Mary Ilyushina, “To Please Putin, Universities Purge Liberals and Embrace Patriots,” Washington Post (7 May 2024).

²³⁴ “Alexandra Kolesnik” (2023 biography at the Fondation Maison des sciences de l’homme).

²³⁵ Francis Clarke, “Vladimir Kara-Murza: ‘Putin Has Elevated His Status’,” Index on Censorship (7 September 2023); “Vladimir Kara-Murza: Putin Opponent in Isolation Cell in Siberian Jail,” BBC News (24 September 2023); “Location of Jailed Russian Activist Vladimir Kara-Murza Unknown, Say Backers,” Guardian (29 January 2024); Sarah Rainsford, “Alexei Navalny: Dissent Is Dangerous in Russia, but Activists Refuse to Give Up,” BBC News (25 February 2024); Ido Vock, “Jailed Russian Dissident Moved to Prison Hospital,” BBC News (5 July 2024); Nate Ostiller & Kyiv Independent News Desk, “Who Was Released from Russian Prisons”

On 29 September 2023, Moscow city authorities banned a vigil to commemorate victims of Soviet-era repressions (1917–1991) while allowing a large pro-government rally to proceed on the same day. The authorities' decision was seen as part of a national trend of obstructing peaceful rallies on discriminatory grounds.²³⁶

On 17 October 2023, Alexander Demidenko ([1963]–2024), a pacifist history and geography teacher, was arrested, disappeared for ten days, then kept in pre-detention custody in Belgorod, and tortured by forces of the Chechen Akhmat battalion. He awaited trial on politically motivated charges of illegal weapon possession (allegedly confiscated during a search of his home) and treason. Demidenko was a vocal opponent of the 24 February 2022 invasion of Ukraine and was reputed to have helped some 900 Ukrainian refugees return home since the invasion. On 27 October, his wife photographed signs of torture on his body during a police house search in which he was present. On 5 April 2024, he died in prison. Prison officials said that he committed suicide but on his official death certificate it was stated that the cause of death “was not yet established.”²³⁷

On 19 October 2023, Andrei Shalayev [Shalaev], the founder of Immortal Barracks – a Russian project set up in 2015 to collect documents, photographs and memories of victims of political repressions in the USSR – disappeared for two days of interrogation after being detained at a railway station in Tver. Back in Moscow, he was followed and received threats. He was called a “traitor and enemy of the people.” In November, it became apparent that Shalayev had gone into exile to save the website.²³⁸

In November 2023, the authorities opened a criminal case against the local head of an opposition party in the Kamchatka region for social media posts comparing images of “patriotic” singer Shaman (Yaroslav Dronov) with images of a Nazi youth from Cabaret (a 1972 movie taking place in Weimar Germany). He faced up to four years' imprisonment for display of Nazi symbols. In June, a court in Blagoveschensk, Amur Oblast, fined a former deputy of the local legislative assembly on similar administrative charges for reposting on social media a parody video showing clips from a video by

in Historic Swap?” Kyiv Independent (1 August 2024); Martin Bright, “Vladimir Kara-Murza: The Dissident Spirit of Russia,” Index on Censorship (2 August 2024); Sarah Rainsford, “Russian Dissident Kara-Murza Tells BBC He Thought He Would Die in Prison,” BBC News (5 August 2024).

²³⁶ Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 317.

²³⁷ Benoît Vitkine, “Russian Who Helped Ukrainians Cross Border Dies in Prison,” Le Monde (10 April 2024); “Russischer Aktivist in Untersuchungshaft verstorben,” Memorial Deutschland (11 April 2024); Pjotr Sauer, “A Russian Pacifist Helped Ukrainians Flee the Country: Then the Kremlin Caught Him,” Guardian (13 April 2024).

²³⁸ Immortal Barracks (website); Kateryna Tyshchenko, “Activist Who Ran Project Commemorating Political Repression Victims Disappears in Russia after Being Detained,” Ukrainska Pravda (21 October 2023); “The Founder of the ‘Immortal Barracks’ Andrei Shalaev Left Russia,” NeMoskva (9 November 2023).

Shaman side by side with a clip from Cabaret. Shaman shot to fame after the start of the full-scale invasion of Ukraine in February 2022 with a number of “patriotic” music video releases.²³⁹

On 26 November 2023, historian Oleg Orlov [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023] appealed his 11 October 2023 sentence to pay a large penalty. The prosecutor’s office counter-appealed, charging him with an aggravated “discrediting” offense, after which the case was sent to retrial. On 2 February 2024, the Justice Ministry designated Orlov a “foreign agent.” Orlov’s legal team was given three days to examine the seven-volume case file. On 27 February 2024, the appeals court sentenced him to thirty months’ imprisonment. In his closing speech to the court, Orlov maintained that he had committed no crime and regretted nothing, instead castigating the “totalitarian” and “fascist” Russian state. He compared his trial to Franz Kafka’s Der Prozess (1925; The Trial). On 1 August 2024, Orlov was released in a prisoner swap between Russia and several Western countries.²⁴⁰

Specific content for the “Important Conversations” lessons introduced in September 2022 [See NCH Annual Report 2023] was provided at the national level. For example, for the “Important Conversations” lesson for six- and seven-year-olds on 18 March 2024, the teachers were mandated to “support the feelings of joy and celebration associated with” the tenth anniversary of the (illegal) annexation of Crimea, which the official lesson guidance document called “reunification of Crimea and Sevastopol with Russia.” The document instructed teachers to discuss Crimea’s history, geography and culture as the proof that the “reunification” (also called “return home”) signified “restoring historical justice, because the history of Russia, the history of the Russian world, [we]re inseparable from Crimea and Sevastopol.” The document did not once mention Ukraine, and avoided mention of Crimea’s internationally recognized status as part of Ukraine. In another example, for the “Important Conversations” lesson on 18 December 2023 aimed at older children, there was a publication titled “Our Heroes” which gave a long list of short biographies of individuals, starting with a tenth-century ruler of Kyiv (Kiev), who were meant to epitomize Russia’s history and its military, cultural, scientific

²³⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 519.

²⁴⁰ Memorial, “Open Letter of Historians and Slavists in Defense of Oleg Orlov” (13 September 2023); Memorial, Преследование Олега Орлова за антивоенную позицию (petition for Oleg Orlov; s.d. [May] 2023); Network of Concerned Historians, Campaign for Oleg Orlov (27 September 2023); Veerle Schyns, “Hoger beroep tegen Russische mensenrechtenactivist Oleg Orlov uitgesteld,” NRC Handelsblad (14 December 2023); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 520; Tanya Lokshina, “The Price of Defiance in Russia” (Press Release; Human Rights Watch, 5 February 2024); “Closing Statement by Oleg Orlov, Co-chair of Memorial, at His Second Criminal Trial on Politically Motivated Charges of ‘Discrediting Russia’s Armed Forces’” (New York: Human Rights Watch, 26 February 2024); Human Rights Watch, “Russia: Sham Trial of Human Rights Leader Draws to a Close” (press release; 26 February 2024); Human Rights Watch, “Russia: Court Convicts Human Rights Leader in Sham Trial” (press release; 27 February 2024); Pjotr Sauer, “Russian Human Rights Campaigner Sentenced to Jail for Denouncing War,” Guardian (27 February 2024); Nate Ostiller & Kyiv Independent News Desk, “Who Was Released from Russian Prisons in Historic Swap?” Kyiv Independent (1 August 2024).

and other achievements. In the last section of the list, “Modern Russia,” there were biographies of eleven persons, most of whom were prominent supporters of Russia’s military intervention in Ukraine starting in 2014, and three were included in the list because of their active military role in it.²⁴¹

On 12 January 2024, Boris Akunin (pseudonym of Grigory Chhartishvili / Grigori Tsjchartisjvili) (1956–), author of historical novels and historical works, was designated a “foreign agent” and added to a register of “terrorists and extremists” by the Justice Ministry over his objections to Russia’s invasion of Ukraine. In 2012, he became involved in the large-scale protests against the fraudulent re-election of Vladimir Putin as president. In 2014, after the annexation of Crimea, he left Russia and went to live in Western Europe. His books were banned in Russia.²⁴²

On 12 February 2024, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs announced sanctions, including entry bans, on British and American scholars and researchers who were accused of “contributing sabotage operations in Russia.” Among them were Orlando Figes, professor emeritus of history at Birkbeck College, University of London; Norman Davies, professor emeritus of history at the University of London; Timothy Garton Ash; a historian and professor of European Studies at the University of Oxford; David Abulafia, a professor emeritus of Mediterranean History at the University of Cambridge; and Calder Walton, assistant director of the Belfer Center’s Applied History Project and Intelligence Project at Harvard University.²⁴³

Following the death in prison of opposition leader Alexei Navalny (1976–2024) on 16 February 2024, hundreds of mourners who gathered at improvised memorials or in the proximity of monuments to victims of Soviet-era repression in Moscow, Saint Petersburg, and elsewhere, were harassed or intimidated. Dozens were detained for up to two weeks and some were beaten while imprisoned.²⁴⁴

On 28 February 2024, the Vyborgsky district court of Saint Petersburg sentenced history teacher Boris Romanov ([1986]–) in absentia to six years’ imprisonment for “discrediting the army” and banned his website management for four years. The criminal case had been instituted in May 2022 because of a video he had posted on the social media platform Vkontakte of his speech at a meeting of the municipal council in Svetlanovsky, Saint Petersburg, in which he allegedly spread “knowingly false information

²⁴¹ Amnesty International, Russia: “Your Children Will Go To an Orphanage”: Children and the Crackdown on Protest (EUR 46/8085/2024) (London: AI, 31 May 2024), 5.

²⁴² Lipika Pelham, “Boris Akunin: Russia Designates Author ‘Foreign Agent’,” BBC News (13 January 2024); Eva Cukier, “Poetin regeert desnoods tot zijn dood” (interview with Akunin), NRC Handelsblad (24 October 2017), 12.

²⁴³ Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project, “Travel Restrictions” (12 February 2024).

²⁴⁴ Alexandra Domenech, “Navalny Told Them Not To Give Up – And They Didn’t,” Index on Censorship (8 March 2024); “Information on Protests in Memory of Alexei Navalny,” OVD-Info (22 February 2024).

about the armed forces of the Russian Federation.” When in July 2022 the district court released Romanov from the pre-trial detention center, he went into exile with his family in Germany.²⁴⁵

On [4 March] 2024, historian Ivan Kurilla [See NCH Annual Report 2015] was dismissed from the European University in Saint Petersburg for alleged “absenteeism.” Kurilla, who specialized in Russian-American relations, had arranged to go on academic leave, but the rector refused permission at the last moment. The university’s official explanation was that Kurilla had intended to work for a United States university during his sabbatical, but Kurilla suspected that the university could have been pressured after he had signed a 2022 open letter in protest against the February 2022 invasion of Ukraine. His name had previously been found on a leaked government list of “potential foreign agents.”²⁴⁶

On 13 March 2024, a new textbook – entitled “The Russian Army in Defense of the Fatherland” – was presented. Aimed at 15-to-18-year-olds, it was designed for a new compulsory subject “Fundamentals of Security and Defense of the Motherland,” which would replace “Fundamentals of Safe Living” from 1 September 2024 in Russia and five Russian-occupied territories in Ukraine and would be taught by former soldiers. The 368–page textbook was filled with stories describing the “heroic achievements of Russian soldiers” from the thirteenth century to the present day, grossly falsifying history. It also promoted military service for anyone over eighteen and included a link to an application form for signing up to the Russian army.²⁴⁷

In [April] 2024 the Kremlin-funded film The Master and Margarita by the Russian-American director Michael Lockshin, after the satirical and metaphorical novel by Mikhail Bulgakov (1891–1940), came under attack for being anti-regime but became a box-office hit. In 2020, the state cinema fund had contributed 40% of the production money to Lockshin’s film. After the Russian invasion of Ukraine in February 2022, however, he posted his support for Ukraine on social media while editing the film. When the film finally opened in Russia in 2024 – after a two-year struggle to get it finished and released, and with Lockshin’s name taken off any promotional material – the attacks by influential supporters of the Kremlin began. A large Telegram channel called him a Russophobe, and the right-wing group Call of the People said he should be criminally charged with promoting falsehoods. Many noted the irony that Bulgakov’s novel about a writer fighting state oppression and Stalinist censorship in the 1930s – written in 1928–1940 but only published posthumously in 1966 – seemed like a forecast of Lockshin’s own struggle to get his work released. Lockshin, who had lived in the United States since 2021, was ²⁴⁵ Grigory Dudnik, “Учитель истории получил 6 лет за ‘фейки’,” Antimafia (29 February 2024).

²⁴⁶ “Anti-War Historian Fired From St. Petersburg’s European University,” Moscow Times (5 March 2024).

²⁴⁷ Maria Korenyuk, “Ukraine War: Russian Schoolbook Urges Teenagers to Join the Army,” BBC News (13 March 2024).

liable to be charged with spreading so-called “false information,” carrying up to fifteen years’ in prison.²⁴⁸

In [May 2024], an archaeologist (name unknown) specialized in Bronze Age Eurasia became a Scholar at Risk after threats of being imprisoned over his/her participation in protests against the 24 February 2022 invasion of Ukraine.²⁴⁹

On 18 June 2024, the European Court of Human Rights decided in a set of five cases, initiated in 2012–2022 and all related to the right to the truth and the right to access information, including archival information about past atrocities: Suprun v. Russia, Dupuy v. Russia, Kulakova v. Russia, Prudovskiy v. Russia, and International Memorial v. Russia [for the Suprun case, see NCH Annual Reports 2010–2013]. The court ruled that Russia’s refusal to allow the applicants (individuals and researchers) access to archival information about Soviet political repression amounted to an interference with their right to receive information, saying that “seeking historical truth is an integral part of freedom of expression.” About Russia’s argument that such access violated the privacy of victims and perpetrators mentioned in the records, the court said that the passage of time since the activities in question—namely the 1930s and 1940s—made the infringement of those persons’ right to respect for private and family life minimal as the concerned individuals had already passed away when the applications were submitted and as the right to privacy was personal and non-transferrable and could not be relied upon to protect the feelings of descendants.²⁵⁰

See also Belarus, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Georgia, Germany, Italy, Moldova, Ukraine.

RWANDA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2017, 2019–2023.

In March 2023, an additional two years were added to the fifteen-year sentence of Yvonne Idamange, a Tutsi online commentator and genocide survivor who made videos about the 1994 genocide as well ²⁴⁸ Caryn James, “The Master and Margarita: The Russian Box-Office Hit that Criticised the State,” BBC News (1 May 2024).

²⁴⁹ “Monthly Newsletter,” Scholars at Risk (14 May 2024).

²⁵⁰ European Court of Human Rights, Case of Suprun and Others v. Russia (2024); Article 19, Third Party Intervention (London: A19, 2024); Article 19, “Russia: Protect the Right to Truth about Human Rights Atrocities” (London: A19, 2024); Article 19, “European Court of Human Rights: Win for the Right to Truth about Human Rights Atrocities” (London: A19, 2024); Emma Burns, “ECHR: Russia Denial of Access to Archives on Soviet Political Repression Violates Freedom of Expression,” Jurist.org (19 June 2024).

as crimes committed by the ruling Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) in its aftermath [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. Her trial was held behind closed doors at the High Court’s Special Chamber for International Crimes and Cross-border Crimes, after the prosecution argued she posed a risk to public order.²⁵¹

In August 2023, appeal judges at the International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals (IRMCT) ordered that the trial of 90-year-old alleged chief genocide financier Félicien Kabuga be suspended indefinitely. In June, the court had ruled that he was unfit to stand trial because of ill health, but had proposed an “alternative finding procedure” that was rejected on appeal.²⁵²

An October 2023 report by Human Rights Watch found that the government of President Paul Kagame continued to use a 2018 law targeting genocide ideology [See NCH Annual Report 2021] to stifle political dissent, in particular related to commemorations of the 1994 genocide and crimes committed by the Rwandan Patriotic Front in the genocide’s aftermath, in- and outside of Rwanda with methods ranging from online threats and physical surveillance to enforced disappearances and extrajudicial killings [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022]. Among those targeted by online attacks was Philippe Basabose, a genocide survivor living in exile in Canada. In August 2021, Basabose had established an organization called Igcumbi (“dwelling”), which campaigned against the government’s politicization of the genocide and the imprisonment of people, including genocide survivors, falsely accused of “genocide denial.” Basabose had also been among the 36 people calling for a joint international investigation into the death of gospel musician Kizito Mihigo (1981–2020) [See NCH Annual Report 2021].²⁵³

See also Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina.

²⁵¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 533.

²⁵² Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 322.

²⁵³ Human Rights Watch, Join Us or Die (London: HRW, 2023), 1, 50.

SAINT VINCENT

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

SAUDI ARABIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001, 2006, 2010–2011, 2013, 2017–2021.

On [8] November 2023, Dalal Alharbi, a professor of modern history and a member of the Saudi Shura (advisory) Council, declared on television that she opposed the current Saudization policy in universities (restricting teaching in the kingdom's universities to Saudis only). She pleaded for diversity.²⁵⁴

SENEGAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2009, 2013, 2017–2018, 2020, 2023.

SERBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2021–2023. For previous entries, see Serbia / Kosovo; Serbia / Montenegro.

In May 2023, Serbia agreed to provide Kosovo with access to archives, including classified files, to assist in locating the whereabouts and identifying the remains of over 1,620 missing persons [See NCH Annual Report 2023 under Kosovo].²⁵⁵

On 7 May 2023, a smear campaign against Jovo Bakić, an associate professor of sociology at the Faculty of Philosophy, University of Belgrade, was launched by government officials and pro-government media outlets. The campaign was joined by Prime Minister Ana Brnabić, who urged the University of Belgrade to take a stand against Bakić. A petition calling for his dismissal was launched by the ruling Srpska napredna stranka (SNS; Serbian Progressive Party). Bakić received several anonymous messages threatening him and his family with rape. On 3 June, he was reportedly twice approached by an unknown individual who threatened and insulted him, after the radio and television broadcaster Pink TV had disclosed his home address.

²⁵⁴ Ramadan Al Sherbini, "Saudi Arabia: Noted Academic Opposes Saudisation in Universities," Gulf Independent News (8 November 2023).

²⁵⁵ Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 328.

The campaign was rooted in a 13 June 2019 interview with the independent weekly Nedeljne informativne novine (NIN; “Weekly Informational Newspaper”), in which Bakić had denounced the nationalistic stance of the SNS and the alleged connections between criminal organizations and government representatives. That same day, President Aleksandar Vučić called for a criminal investigation against him to be launched. The broadcaster Radio–Television of Serbia subsequently published an edited version of the interview, in which Bakić was falsely made to appear to be calling for violence. A pre-investigation procedure was promptly shelved after Bakić shared the actual interview transcripts.

Bakić specialized in nationalism, ethnicity and national minorities, particularly in Yugoslavia (1918–1992). He wrote three monographs: The European Far Right 1945–2018 (in Serbian; 2019), Yugoslavia: Destruction and Its Interpreters (in Serbian; 2011) and Ideologies of Yugoslavia; between Serbian and Croatian nationalism 1918–1941 (in Serbian; 2004).²⁵⁶

See also Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, Kosovo, Montenegro.

SERBIA / KOSOVO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008–2020. For previous entries, see Serbia.

SERBIA / MONTENEGRO

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2007. For previous entries, see Montenegro and Serbia; see Montenegro.

SEYCHELLES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2019, 2022.

²⁵⁶ PEN International, War, Censorship and Persecution: PEN International Case List 2023/2024 (London: PEN, 2024), 77–78.

SIERRA LEONE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2016, 2021.

Since April 2021, Chernoh Alpha Bah – then a PhD candidate in history and from 2023 a postdoctoral fellow specializing in medical, legal, and economic history at Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois, United States – was subjected to attacks and threats, including death threats, from members of the ruling Sierra Leone People’s Party and from supporters of President Julius Maada Bio. The attacks stemmed from articles written or co-authored by Bah for online newspaper Africanist Press, which exposed financial crimes and corruption in Sierra Leone. Bah’s PhD focused on the history of prison labor and public health from the time of British occupation through the end of the twentieth century. The attacks prevented Bah, living in exile in the United States, from returning to Sierra Leone to carry out additional archival and oral history research.²⁵⁷

SINGAPORE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2009–2011, 2015–2016, 2018–2022.

On 2 November 2023, Sol Iglesias, an assistant professor of political science at the University of the Philippines–Diliman and a member of the Network in Defense of Historical Truth and Academic Freedom in the Philippines, was disinvited as a speaker at a panel on “Public Intellectuals, Populism and Power: Perspectives from Southeast Asia” in the “Global Research Forum: Toward a Public Asian Studies,” to be held at the National University of Singapore in mid-January 2024. No official explanation was given but some thought it was because she was married to Singaporean historian and democracy activist Thum Ping Tjin, who had previously been attacked by the Singaporean government for his research critical of the first and present Prime Ministers Lee Kuan Yew (1959–1990) and his son Lee Hsien Loong (2004–present) and of successive People’s Action Party governments [See NCH Annual Report 2018]. On 7 December 2023, the Network in Defense of Historical Truth and Academic Freedom in the Philippines expressed solidarity with Iglesias and criticized the “general rise of academic freedom risks in Southeast Asia” in general, and Singapore in particular.²⁵⁸

²⁵⁷ “Letter of Support for Chernoh Alpha M. Bah, PhD” (no date [July 2024]); Matthew Anderson & Mark Feldman, “Academics Condemn Attacks on Sierra Leone’s Endangered Historian and Journalist” (15 July 2024); Network of Concerned Historians, Campaign for Chernoh Alpha Bah (27 July 2024).

²⁵⁸ Sol Iglesias, “On Academic Freedom and Singapore,” Medium (11 November 2023); Yojana Sharma, “Professor Dropped from Panel Raises Academic Freedom Fears,” University World News (18 November 2023); Network in Defense of Historical Truth and Academic Freedom, “Statement on the National University of Singapore Disinvitation of Dr. Sol Iglesias,” (press release; 7 December 2023).

SLOVAKIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2002, 2007, 2009, 2011, 2013–2015, 2017, 2022–2023.

SLOVENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2018, 2021, 2023.

SOMALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2003, 2006, 2012–2014, 2019, 2022.

SOUTH AFRICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2004, 2006–2010, 2012–2021, 2023.

SOUTH SUDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2015–2021.

Between 15 and 17 May 2023, the government convened the Conference on Transitional Justice Mechanisms in Juba. Its objectives included reviewing progress in the establishment of the transitional justice mechanisms under the Revitalized Agreement on the Resolution of the Conflict in the Republic of South Sudan; learning from regional experiences; and building consensus on the content and enactment of draft bills to establish the Commission for Truth, Reconciliation and Healing (CTRH) and the Compensation and Reparation Authority (CRA). In November 2023, the CTRH and CRA bills were approved by the Council of Ministers and due to be tabled for debate in parliament before going to the president for his assent to their becoming law. The council continued to block the establishment of the

Hybrid Court for South Sudan provided for under the 2018 peace agreement [See NCH Annual Reports 2016–2021].²⁵⁹

See also Sweden.

SPAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999, 2002–2023.

In September 2023, for the first time, a judge ruled that a lawsuit alleging torture and crimes against humanity during the Franco dictatorship (1939–1975) was admissible. Previously, such lawsuits had been blocked by a 1977 amnesty law, the reach of which was limited by the passage of the 2022 Democratic Memory Law [See NCH Annual Report 2023].²⁶⁰

In November 2023, the Asociación de Amigos de las Brigadas Internacionales (Association of Friends of the International Brigades) called on the government to “prevent a further affront to the memory and dignity of the fallen international volunteers” who had fought on the side of the Republicans during the Spanish Civil War (1936–1939), in relation to a plan by the Madrid municipality to build a waste plant near the Fuencarral cemetery in the Montecarmelo suburb. Research by amateur historians and historical associations had found it likely that the envisioned location was the site of a mass grave containing the mortal remains of 451 people, mostly international volunteers. Initially, the Republican soldiers had been buried at the Fuencarral cemetery, covered with gravestones and a large memorial plaque, but in 1941 their remains were excavated and thrown into an unmarked mass grave. In January 2024, Madrid city council’s culture department indicated its willingness to set up an archaeological excavation.²⁶¹

On 30 April 2024, the United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-repetition, the UN Rapporteur for the Working Group on Forced Disappearances, and the UN Special Rapporteur on extrajudicial, summary or arbitrary executions warned in an allegations letter that the so-called “leyes de concordia” (harmony laws), concerning the Civil War (1936–1939) and the Franco dictatorship (1939–1975), proposed or approved by regional coalition governments of the conservative Partido Popular (PP; Popular Party) and far-right Vox party in Aragón (approved), Castilla y León (proposed), and Valencia (proposed), could violate the obligation of the Spanish State to guarantee the preservation of the historical memory of certain violations of human rights, because “they order the suppression of multiple entities, projects, websites and historical memory activities,” and thus “may pose limits to access to truth about the fate or location of victims” and “hinder or suppress financial assistance to projects.” The UN experts further criticized the laws for not mentioning or explicitly condemning the dictatorial nature of the Franco dictatorship and for inflating the understanding of victimhood by referring to “all the victims of social, political and terrorist violence and of ideological and religious persecution,” thus contributing to reviving “revisionist or denialist” theories about the 1936–1975 period. They also warned that the law promoted in the Valencian Community equated the victims of the Civil War (1936–1939) and dictatorship (1939–1975) with those of the Second Spanish Republic (1931–1936) and those of the Basque terrorist movement ETA and Islamic terrorism, emphasizing that the “extrajudicial executions and forced disappearances during the Franco dictatorship” should not be included in a “heterogeneous set” of crimes committed in Spain in the twentieth century.

²⁵⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 576, 578; Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 31, 344, 346.

²⁶⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 583.

²⁶¹ Sam Jones, “‘Respect – and Honour’: The Fight to Save a Spanish Civil War Mass grave.” Guardian (27 January 2024).

National historical memory organizations and the government described the laws as attempts to circumvent the 2022 Democratic Memory Law and “to whitewash Francoism.” The Spanish government intended to take the “harmony laws” to the Constitutional Court and had asked the European Parliament and the Council of Europe for support. Aragón’s President Jorge Azcón Navarro and Valencia’s President Carlos Mazón Guixot criticized the “distorted” information in the UN Special Rapporteurs’ allegations letter. In Spain, there were more than 110,000 unidentified victims of the Civil War and the dictatorship, one of the highest numbers in the world. More than 500,000 people died in the Civil War.²⁶²

²⁶² Mandatos del Relator Especial sobre la promoción de la verdad, la justicia, la reparación y las garantías de no repetición; del Grupo de Trabajo sobre las Desapariciones Forzadas o Involuntarias y del Relator Especial sobre ejecuciones extrajudiciales, sumarias o arbitrarias, OL ESP 4/2024 [Allegations letter] (30 April 2024); Alberto Caparrós, “Mazón defiende su ley de Concordia,” ABC (3 May 2024); Ana Andrés, “El PP valenciano responde a la ONU: la ley de Concordia ‘no elimina nada, sino que amplía derechos’,” La Razón (3 May 2024); Sam Jones, “UN Alarm over Rightwing Laws That Could ‘Whitewash’ Franco Era in Spain,” Guardian (3 May 2024); LUSA, “Spain. PP/Vox Government Laws Threaten the ‘Memory’ of the Crimes of the Dictatorship,” Mundo Ao Minuto (3 May 2024); Jordi Martín, “UN Report Condemns Human Rights Dangers of PP–Vox ‘Concordance’ Laws in 3 Spanish Autonomous Regions,” El Nacional (3 May 2024; updated 6 May 2024); Alejandro Tobalina, “Tres relatores de la ONU instan al Gobierno a ‘tomar las medidas necesarias’ frente a las leyes de concordia del PP y Vox,” 20minutos (3 May 2024); Javier Lezaola, “La ONU insta al Gobierno español a preservar la memoria histórica frente a las leyes de ‘concordia’ de PP y Vox,” DiarioRed (4 May 2024); “Azcón recrimina en una carta al secretario general de la ONU la información ‘sesgada’ del informe sobre las leyes de memoria,” El Debate (6 May 2024); Ramiro Fdez-Chillón, “Entrevista Presidente de Aragón,” El Debate (11 May 2024); Juan Carlos Arroyo González, personal communication (27 June 2024).

SRI LANKA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2004, 2008–2023.

In June 2023, fourteen years after the defeat of the separatist Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) in the Civil War (1983–2009) and over three decades after the suppression of a leftist uprising in the south in 1989, President Ranil Wickremesinghe announced plans to establish a new truth and reconciliation commission, called the National Unity and Reconciliation Commission (NURC), to examine human rights violations. Victims' groups and civil society organizations said they had not been properly consulted and that the new commission – which did not include human rights activists or families and victims of past human rights violations and ignored evidence gathered by previous commissions – would put them at risk of re-traumatization and further threats from security forces.

The government's ongoing abuses against victims of past violations, their families, and communities undermined the purported goals of the proposed commission. Those campaigning for truth and accountability for crimes committed during the Civil War were subjected to surveillance and intimidation by the police and intelligence agencies. An April 2023 United Nations (UN) Human Rights Committee report had criticized the Office on Missing Persons's appointment of "individuals implicated in past human rights violations" and its "interference in the prosecution of such cases."

An 18 September 2023 Human Rights Watch report found that the government's security forces continued to intimidate, through surveillance and counterterrorism laws, activists and victim's relatives campaigning for accountability and the right to the truth regarding the disappearances of mostly LTTE victims during the Civil War. The report argued that the government only used the NURC as a propaganda tool directed at foreign governments and UN agencies with the aim of decreasing support for further investigations by the UN Human Rights Council [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023].

Some government officials implicated in alleged crimes remained politically powerful or held senior official positions [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022]. Government agencies also unlawfully occupied property and religious sites of minority Tamil and Muslim communities. In September 2023, a judge from Mullaitivu district resigned and fled the country after receiving death threats following a ruling he handed down against the Department of Archaeology, which had constructed a Buddhist monument on the site of a Hindu temple [See NCH Annual Report 2021].

Successive governments had appointed similar commissions that collected extensive testimony from victims and witnesses, but none led to accountability or revealed the fate of the disappeared [See NCH Annual Report 2021–2023]. A resolution adopted by the UN Human Rights Council in 2021 to form the Sri Lanka Accountability Project to gather evidence of international crimes for use in future prosecutions was due for renewal in 2024. President Wickremesinghe's office said it hoped the proposed truth commission would convince governments that there was no need for further scrutiny by the council.

On 7 February 2024, various UN Special Rapporteurs expressed concern about alleged restrictions and obstructions imposed on memorialization efforts carried out by Tamil civil society to commemorate Maaveerar Naal (Heroes' Day), and the alleged arrest and/or detention of participants or organizers of these events, pursuant to the Prevention of Terrorism Act [See NCH Annual Reports 2020, 2022–2023]. On 18 May 2024, known as Mullivaikkal Remembrance Day, several thousand Tamil people commemorated the fifteenth anniversary of the end of the Civil War in Mullivaikkal. In the lead-up to the ceremony, security forces' activity had reportedly increased, including the surveillance and intimidation of Tamil residents.²⁶³

SUDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2003, 2006–2023.

The destruction of cultural heritage by Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF) and the Rapid Support Forces (RSF) during the Civil War (April 2023–) [See NCH Annual Report 2023] continued:

- In Darfur, the Sultan Bahruddin Museum in el Geneina and the Sultan Ali Dinar Museum in el Fasher were severely damaged by nearby bombing, while the Nyala Museum in el Obeid suffered minor damage. All three museums reportedly faced threats of lootings.
- Sometime between 15 April and late June 2023, RSF forces reportedly broke into the Republican Palace Museum in Khartoum. The NGO Heritage for Peace voiced concern over the status of the attached public library, housing valuable books and an important archive. The historical building of the old palace had already been damaged.
- On 14 June 2023, the Abdul Karim Mirghani Center in Omdurman was looted, including its library and audio-visual archive. In Khartoum, the main gate of the National Records Office, which housed the National Archives of Sudan and contained over thirty million documents dating as far back as 1504, was damaged by nearby bombings. The archives remained reportedly undamaged as of June 2023.
- A 27 June 2023 Heritage for Peace report found that at least 28 cultural and archaeological sites had been damaged or destroyed. It also found that at least fourteen universities and colleges had been damaged, looted or occupied, and warned about the loss or significant risk of loss of its libraries, archives, and research facilities. At Ahliya University in Omdurman, at least fifty rare books had been destroyed by fire.²⁶⁴

²⁶³ Human Rights Watch, “If We Raise Our Voice, They Arrest Us”: Sri Lanka’s Proposed Truth and Reconciliation Commission (18 September 2023); “Sri Lanka: Abuses Undercut Proposed ‘Truth Commission’”, Human Rights Watch (18 September 2023); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 585–587; Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 352; United Nations Special Rapporteurs, Allegations Letter AL LKA 1/2024 (7 February 2024); “‘Grim Reminder’: Sri Lanka’s Tamils Mark 15 Years since End of Civil War,” Al Jazeera (19 May 2024).

- On 28 November 2023, the Society of Architectural Historians (SAH) joined the World of Monuments Fund and other international organizations condemning attacks to cultural heritage sites and calling for the protection of these sites under the 1954 Hague Convention on the Protection of Cultural Heritage in the Event of Armed Conflict and the 1972 World Heritage Convention, both of which ratified by Sudan.²⁶⁵
- On 16 January 2024, the UNESCO Regional Network for Cultural Rights strongly condemned an RSF incursion at the site of the ancient city of Naqa and the ancient temple complex of Musawwarat es-Sufra on the Island of Meroe, a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Both sites dated back to the Kingdom of Kush (ca. 780 BCE–350 CE).²⁶⁶

See also Sweden.

SURINAME

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2004, 2009–2010, 2012–2013, 2015–2016, 2018.

On 20 December 2023, the Hof van Justitie (HvJ; the High Court of Justice) confirmed on appeal the conviction and twenty-year prison sentence of former military leader (between 1980–1987) and former President (between 2010–2020) Desiré Delano Bouterse [See NCH Annual Reports 2001–2002, 2009–2010, 2012–2013, 2015, 2019 under Suriname, 2016, 2021 under Netherlands]. On 29 November 2019, the HvJ had found Bouterse guilty on fifteen counts of murder related to the execution of fifteen opponents of the military dictatorship (1980–1987) in December 1982 (also known as the December Murders). Like in the original verdict, the HvJ did not issue an arrest warrant. Bouterse’s whereabouts remained unknown.²⁶⁷

²⁶⁴ Ismail Hamid, Mahssin Yusef, Isber Sabrin & Tomomi Fushiya, Cultural Heritage Situations in Sudan (27 June 2023); Adam Makery, “Sudan’s Cultural Heritage in Peril as Fighting Rages,” Reuters (5 July 2023).

²⁶⁵ Bryan Clark Green, “Statement on Cultural Heritage Loss in Sudan,” Society of Architectural Historians (press release; 28 November 2023).

²⁶⁶ “Sudan Fighting Spreads to World Heritage Site,” Al-Monitor (16 January 2024); “Sudan: UNESCO Calls for the Protection of the World Heritage Site of the Island of Meroe,” UNESCO (19 January 2024).

²⁶⁷ Jeff Handmaker, “Verdict Upheld against Former President in Suriname \(Part II\),” Bliss (30 January 2024).

SWAZILAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011, 2013, 2016–2018.

SWEDEN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2017–2018, 2020, 2022.

On 5 September 2023, the Lundin trial began at the District Court of Stockholm. The chief prosecutor charged the Lundin Oil company, its former chief executive Ian Lundin and its former vice-president Alex Schneiter with complicity in war crimes committed in Block 5A oil concession, in what are now the states of Unity and Warrap in South Sudan. Between 1999 and 2003 – an episode in the Second Sudanese Civil War (1983–2005) between the Sudanese Armed Forces and the Sudanese People’s Liberation Army (SPLM/A) known as the “oil wars” – Lundin had allegedly paid the Sudanese army and allied militias to secure oil operations in the area then controlled by the SPLM/A. Army and militia forces allegedly carried out numerous systematic and indiscriminate attacks, including unlawful killings, rape, the recruitment of child soldiers, and the forcible displacement of local populations, leading to the deaths of thousands and the displacement of almost 200,000. The trial included a claim to confiscate 1,4 billion Swedish Krona (€ 140 million).²⁶⁸

In [October] 2023, a Karlstad University disciplinary panel decided not to take action against Christian Peterson, an undergraduate who had enrolled in, and filmed the Zoom seminar “Interculture: Race and Whiteness in Sweden” by Tobias Hübinette. Hübinette, a historian and lecturer in intercultural education and studies, said that Peterson had “harassed” him inside and outside the course and that he had “mocked” fellow students in the seminar, later posting about them on his blog. This led to complaints of students, to cancelation of the course, and to Hübinette going on sick leave. Peterson was a former member of the neo-Nazi Nordic Resistance Movement whereas Hübinette had previously been convicted for incitement, harassment and defamation as part of the campaign group Antifascist Action. Vice-chancellor Jerker Moodysson disagreed with the panel’s decision because Peterson had intentionally disrupted the course.²⁶⁹

²⁶⁸ “Lundin Energy - Alex Schneiter and Ian Lundin,” Trial International (last updated 17 April 2023); “The Lundin Moment,” Justiceinfo.net (1 September 2023).

²⁶⁹ Ben Upton, “Sweden Split on How to Handle Right-Wing Student’s ‘Harassment’,” Times Higher Education (16 October 2023).

See also Chile, Eritrea, Morocco.

SWITZERLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999–2000, 2004, 2007–2009, 2014, 2016–2018, 2022.

On 12 September 2023, researchers from the University of Zürich published a “pilot project report on sexual abuse in the Roman Catholic Church in Switzerland since the mid-20th century” identifying 1,002 cases of sexual abuse involving 921 victims between 1950 and 2022, committed by 510 perpetrators, the vast majority of whom were priests. The study, commissioned in April 2022 by several religious organizations and carried out under the auspices of six members of the Swiss Historical Society, was scheduled to continue in January 2024. Historians cited the number of victims as an underestimation given that certain archival documents had been destroyed and that access to archives, including diplomatic files, had been refused by the Vatican and the Vatican embassy.²⁷⁰

See also Algeria, United States.

SYRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2002, 2004–2023.

On 29 June 2023, the United Nations (UN) General Assembly established an independent, international institution to clarify the fate and whereabouts of the tens of thousands of missing and forcibly disappeared people in Syria since 2011 and provide reparation to their families.

On 10 October 2023, the International Court of Justice (ICJ; also known as the World Court) held the first public session in the case submitted by Canada and the Netherlands alleging that the Syrian government was violating the UN Convention against Torture. On 16 November 2023, the ICJ issued an order directing Syrian authorities to take all measures to prevent acts of torture and other detention-related abuses.²⁷¹

²⁷⁰ Clémentine Méténier, “What Next after Swiss Report on Sexual Abuse in the Church,” Justiceinfo.net (14 November 2023).

²⁷¹ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 360.

On 21 August 2023, marking the tenth anniversary of the chemical attacks on the Damascus suburbs of Eastern and Western Ghouta by the government of President Bashar al-Assad, survivors and victims' families reiterated their calls for justice and accountability. On 21 August 2013, 1144 people, many of them children, were suffocated by Sarin nerve gas. It was one of 222 chemical attacks in Syria since 2012, the vast majority of which were committed by the Assad government. Attempts at accountability had been complicated by the arrest and intimidation of witnesses and social media disinformation campaigns [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. On 15 November 2023, French judges issued international arrest warrants for President al-Assad, his brother Maher al-Assad and two other senior officials on charges of complicity in crimes against humanity and war crimes over the chemical attacks.²⁷²

In early September 2023, President Bashar al-Assad abolished the notorious military field courts, where thousands of people are thought to have been sentenced to death without due process. Human rights advocates, who had long called for the dissolution of these courts, expressed concern that the decision could lead to the erasure of court records and other evidence related to enforced disappearances, obstructing families' right to the truth.²⁷³

See also Türkiye.

²⁷² “Survivors of Worst Chemical Attack of 21st Century Demand Justice on 10th Anniversary of Ghouta Attacks,” The Syria Campaign (18 August 2023); Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 360.

²⁷³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 599.

TAIWAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2008–2010, 2012, 2016–2020, 2022.

On 28 February 2024, the 77th anniversary of the massacre on 28 February 1947 in which the Kuomintang (KMT)-led government of then President Chiang Kai-shek (1887–1975) cracked down on anti-government protests killing between 18,000 and 28,000 people, victims and relatives demanded accountability and a better reckoning with past crimes. Although the 2–28 massacre was commemorated nationally every year; museums, parks and statues had been erected dedicated to the massacre; and the KMT had issued an apology for crimes committed during the four decades of martial law also known as White Terror (1949–1992), victim groups criticized the lack of accountability and withholding of truth about other crimes committed during martial law. They also criticized the politicization of transitional justice, especially by KMT politicians, and what was considered a deliberate strategy of prioritizing reparations over truth-seeking [See NCH Annual Reports 2016–2017, 2020, 2022].²⁷⁴

On 22 April 2024, the Democratic Progressive Party (DPP)-led government pledged to remove the remaining 760 statues of former dictator Chiang Kai-shek (in power as Chairman of the National Government of China between 1943–1948; as President of Taiwan between 1950–1975), after it had been criticized for stalling recommendations of the 2018 Transitional Justice Committee [See NCH Annual Reports 2019–2020, 2022]. The decision was criticized by the opposition Kuomintang party, of which Chiang Kai-shek had been the founder, as “imposing ideology” and whitewashing history.²⁷⁵

TAJIKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017–2018, 2020, 2023.

In May 2023, on the first anniversary of the brutal crackdown on demonstrators in the Rushan district of Gorno-Badakhshan Autonomous Oblast (GBAO) in May 2022, the authorities allegedly suppressed physical gatherings and monitored online activities in commemoration of the victims.²⁷⁶

²⁷⁴ Helen Davidson & Chi Hui Lin, “‘Facing Up to History’: Relatives of Taiwan’s 2–28 Massacre Victims Demand Official Reckoning,” Guardian (28 February 2024).

²⁷⁵ Helen Davidson, “Taiwan Pledges to Remove 760 Statues of Chinese Dictator Chiang Kai-shek,” Guardian (23 April 2024).

²⁷⁶ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 363.

TANZANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2016–2017.

In February 2023, the government banned the use of supplementary books with content that “goes against the national morals and traditions” – widely interpreted as content that referenced LGBTQ+ people and history – in all schools across the country.²⁷⁷

On 9 September 2023, in a meeting between civil society organizations and descendants of leaders of the current-day Tanzania-based Chagga and Meru communities, DNA research was presented that showed that a number of skulls held at the Prussian Cultural Heritage Foundation depot in Berlin belonged to former members of the two communities. The research – conducted in the context of the Marejesho research exhibition aimed at exchanging knowledge about human remains and looted cultural property during the German colonial occupation of parts of Tanzania (1884/5–1918) – indicated that the remains belonged to some of the nineteen Magis (chiefs) and Akidas (ministers), who had been publicly hanged on 2 March 1900 in what was now called Old Moshi and whose remains had been sent to the Berlin Ethnological Museum in the context of scientific racism. Descendants, who had already been requesting the return for more than fifty years, demanded repatriation, and an apology from the government and the museums and universities involved.²⁷⁸

See also United States.

THAILAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2001–2002, 2005, 2007–2022.

Throughout the course of 2022, student publisher Sam Yan Press (established in 2017) repeatedly rejected a lucrative offer to be bought out and shut down by a Chinese businessman. Sam Yan Press was known for publishing books about Chinese dissidents such as Joshua Wong (1996–), Liu Xiaobo (1955–2017), Ilham Tohti (1969–), and Fang Lizhi (1936–2012), among others, and books by historian

²⁷⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 613.

²⁷⁸ European Center for Constitutional and Human Rights, “After DNA-Matching: Relatives at Kilimanjaro Demand Early Return of Their Identified Ancestors and Apology from Germany,” (press release; 11 September 2023); Andrea Böhm, “Sie wollen ihre Toten zurück,” Die Zeit (25 October 2023); “The Tanzanians Searching for Their Grandfathers’ Skulls in Germany,” BBC News (29 October 2023).

Jeffrey Wasserstrom about the Hong Kong protests and journalist Leta Hong Fincher about Chinese feminist history.²⁷⁹

See also Myanmar.

TIMOR-LESTE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003–2013, 2015–2018, 2023.

TOGO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2008–2013, 2017–2018, 2021.

TRINIDAD and TOBAGO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

TUNISIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2011–2023.

In 2023, the authorities imposed at least a dozen travel bans in connection with criminal investigations of opponents and perceived critics, such as President of the Truth and Dignity Commission Sihem Bensedrine and former member of parliament Zied Ghanney, restricting their freedom of movement [See NCH Annual Reports 2015, 2023].²⁸⁰

²⁷⁹ Jirapreeya Saeboo, “Our Principles Are Not for Sale,” Index on Censorship, 53 no. 1 (2024), 64–65.

²⁸⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 624.

TÜRKIYE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2000–2023.

On 20 July 2015, Hatice Ezgi Sadet ([1994/5]–2015) and Polen Ünlü ([1991/2]–2015), art history students at the Mimar Sinan Fine Art University in Istanbul, were among thirty-three people killed by an Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS) suicide attack at the Amara Cultural Center in Suruç, Şanlıurfa province. They had been among the 300 people that enlisted to travel to Kobani in northern Syria to help rebuild the city after fighting between Kurdish and ISIS forces in 2014 had largely destroyed it.

Eight years later, on 20 July 2023, law enforcement officials prevented several commemorations of the 2015 killings. At least 187 protesters were arbitrarily detained in the cities of Istanbul, Izmir, and Ankara. In Istanbul authorities kettled protesters, using pepper spray, plastic bullets and unlawful force.²⁸¹

In January 2023, state surveyors cleared the Alcasu and Bostanlık beaches, located where the ancient city of Phaselis used to be, for the construction of tourist facilities. The decision was criticized by archaeological and cultural heritage organizations, who argued that the site, containing ruins dating back to the second century BCE and a potential nominee for UNESCO World Heritage status, had never been excavated and held “the potential to offer significant archaeological information.” In June, a group of organizations, including the Phaselis’e Dokunma Hareketi (Don’t Touch Phaselis) and the Turkish Association of Archaeologists, took legal action resulting in the temporary halting of construction activities. However, local activists claimed that some artifacts, including coins and ceramic fragments, had already been damaged.²⁸²

On 2 August 2023, a spokesperson for President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan criticized streaming platform Disney+ for its decision to cancel a six-part series about founder of the Turkish Republic Mustafa Kemal Atatürk (1881–1938), claiming that it had caved in to “the Armenian lobby” in the United States. In June, the Armenian National Committee of America had called on Disney+ not to launch the show because it “glorifies a Turkish dictator and genocide killer” – although Atatürk did not play an active role in the Armenian genocide (1915–1917). Disney+ confirmed the cancellation of the series, but said a special television version of it would be broadcasted in Türkiye.²⁸³

²⁸¹ Zeynep Bilginsoy & Jared Goyette, “The 20-Year-Old Activist Who Died Trying to Help Rebuild a City.” The World (21 July 2015); “Young Victims of Suruc Laid to Rest across Turkey.” Egypt Today (22 July 2015); “Polen Ünlü.” 100-reasons.org; “Hatice Ezgi Sadet.” 100-reasons.org; Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 376.

²⁸² Sara Tor, “Outrage at Plans to Develop Turkey’s Cultural Heritage Sites.” Guardian (21 August 2023).

²⁸³ Hamdi First Buyuk, “Disney’s Decision to Cancel Ataturk Series Leaves Turks Angry.” Balkan Insight (3 August 2023); Rouben Paul Adalian, “Ataturk, Mustafa Kemal.” Armenian National Institute ([no date]).

In [September] 2023, historian Suleyman Demirci went to the United States, where he became a Scholar at Risk at the State University of New York at Buffalo. A professor of early modern Ottoman history specialized in Ottoman Turkish taxation from the 1620s, he had been harassed and named a “terrorist” and “traitor” by social media and columnists and had reportedly also been taken into custody and put on trial in Türkiye.²⁸⁴

On 24 October 2023, former history teacher Mustafa Seçkin was detained, because of a social media post in which he shared a prayer that had previously been recited by a friend – another former teacher who was serving a prison sentence on terrorism-related charges after the 15 July 2016 coup attempt – whose son had committed suicide. Seçkin, who was almost totally blind, had been sentenced in 2018 to fifteen months in prison for sending his children to a private school linked to the movement of Fethullah Gülen, whom the government of President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan alleged was behind the coup attempt.²⁸⁵

On 11 November 2023, the Saturday Mothers, a group of human rights defenders including relatives of victims of enforced disappearances [See NCH Annual Report 2019], were allowed to read a short statement near Galatasaray Square in Istanbul, a place of symbolic importance to the group, after being banned from doing so for over five years. This positive development fell short of constitutional court decisions that the group’s freedom of assembly should be upheld, and between April and November 2023 law enforcement officials had continued to use unlawful force to disperse their protests and detain and prosecute participants [See NCH Annual Report 2023].²⁸⁶

The “Commemoration of the Armenian Genocide,” which organizers attempted to hold each year on 24 April, was banned for three years in a row between [2022] and [2024].²⁸⁷

On 26 June 2024, the exhibition “Dön-Dün Bak: A Look Back at the History of the Trans Movement in Turkey,” organized by the Trans Pride Week Exhibition Collective, opened in Istanbul. Scheduled to run until 27 July, it was banned following an official notice from the Beyoğlu District Governor’s ²⁸⁴ Charles Anzalone, “UB Welcomes Its First Scholars at Risk,” UB Now (10 October 2023).

²⁸⁵ “Disabled Teacher Arrested in Nationwide Operation against Gülen Movement,” Stockholm Center for Freedom (6 November 2023).

²⁸⁶ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 376; Amnesty International, Under Protected and Over Restricted: The State of the Right to Protest in 21 European Countries (London: AI, 2024), 92, 140.

²⁸⁷ Amnesty International, Under Protected and Over Restricted: The State of the Right to Protest in 21 European Countries (London: AI, 2024), 96.

Office. The exhibition traced the evolution of the trans movement in Türkiye from the 1980s to 2024 through archival records.²⁸⁸

See also Greece, Malaysia, Russia, Ukraine.

TURKMENISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2004, 2009, 2011–2012, 2015–2019, 2023.

²⁸⁸ “Exhibition on Trans Movement’s History in Turkey Banned in İstanbul,” Bianet (12 July 2024).

UGANDA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2017, 2019–2021, 2023.

See also Congo, Democratic Republic.

UKRAINE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2009–2011, 2014–2023.

In the days after 27 February 2022, when Berdyansk, a city located near the Azov Sea in the Zaporizhzhia Oblast, was captured by the Russian army, Igor Lyman, a historian at Berdyansk University, head of its history and philosophy department, and presenter of local history on local television, and his wife Victoria, also a historian, were almost arrested after their apartment was burglarized. They fled to Ukrainian-controlled territory and together with others re-established Berdyansk University as an online university with about 3,500 students.²⁸⁹

During the Russian occupation of the Donbas (2014–), theologian and historian Ihor Kozlovskiy (1954–2023) was targeted for his participation in the EuroMaidan protests in Donetsk and his outspoken Ukrainian identity. On 27 January 2016, Kozlovskiy was captured by militants of the Donetsk People’s Republic because of his pro-Ukrainian views, placed in solitary confinement in the Izolyatsia prison in Donetsk, and tortured. In May 2017, a “military tribunal” sentenced him to two years and eight months in prison; he was transferred to a regular prison. Kozlovskiy was released in a prisoner exchange with Ukraine on 27 December 2017. On 6 September 2023, he died unexpectedly. He was a full member of the Donetsk branch of the Shevchenko Scientific Society in Ukraine (2019–), a senior researcher of the Department of Religious Studies of the Hryhorii Skovoroda Institute of Philosophy of the National Academy of Sciences of Ukraine, and head of the ecumenical Christian-Muslim Dialogue Center.²⁹⁰

²⁸⁹ Nathan Greenfield, “War Has Not Dampened Ukrainian Scholars’ Courage to Think,” World University News (18 July 2024).

²⁹⁰ Mansur Mirovalev, “‘Some Stay, Some Die’: The Horror of Ukraine’s War Camps,” Al Jazeera (22 March 2021); Elsa Court & Kyiv Independent news desk, “Ukrainian Scholar Ihor Kozlovskiy Who Survived Imprisonment in Donetsk Dies at 69,” Kyiv Independent (6 September 2023); “Igor Kozlovskiy,” Wikipedia (retrieved 25 October 2023).

Among those killed at the frontline in the war against Russia were [See NCH Annual Report 2023]:

- On [18 April] 2022, history teacher Roman Businsky (1995–2022) went missing. He was found killed and buried in [November 2023]. A graduate of the history department of the Kamianets-Podilskyi National University, he worked as a history teacher at the Strikhytzi gymnasium, Chmelnytskyi Oblast.²⁹¹
- On 19 July 2022, Oleg Dyakov ([1994/5]–2022), a graduate from the faculty of history at the Dorhobych Ivan Franko State Pedagogical University, was killed near Bakhmut.²⁹²
- On [24 or 27] September 2022, political scientist, public intellectual and Crimean Tatar historian Rustem Mamut-oglu Ablyatifov (1964–2022) was killed by Russian troops in Kherson Oblast. Between 2002 and 2010 he worked for a number of state institutions and campaigned for the rights of previously deported Crimean Tatars to Ukrainian citizenship. He also worked as a political analyst and deputy director of the Crimean News Agency. After the illegal annexation of Crimea by Russian forces in 2014, he was forced to leave and entered Ivan Franko National University of Lviv, where he taught courses on the history of the Crimean Tatars. On 29 August 2022, he defended his dissertation in history on the repatriation of the Crimean Diaspora in Türkiye. He had been scheduled to receive his Ph.D.²⁹³
- On 16 November 2022, Serhii Mironov, a writer, historian and officer of the Territorial Defense of Ukraine was killed in Bakhmut.²⁹⁴
- On 12 February 2024, Maksym Shtatskyi ([1988/9]–2024), a historian who worked for the Khortytsia National Reserve and was specialized in the history of the Mennonites – a group of Anabaptist Christians that emerged during the sixteenth-century Radical Reformation and that derived its name from the Frisian excommunicated Roman-Catholic priest Menno Simons (1496–1561) – was killed in action. In 2010, he had graduated from the history department of Zaporizhzhia National University. In the army he was known by his nickname “the Historian.”²⁹⁵
- On 28 February 2024, Anton Yakovenko (?–2024), a video editor for the television channel XSPORT before the start of the war, was killed at the front in Vuhledar (Donetsk oblast) as a ²⁹¹ “Пам’яті вчителя, добровольця Романа Бузінського,” Ukrinform (27 January 2024).

²⁹² “List of Deaths during the Russian Invasion of Ukraine,” Wikipedia (last updated on 26 July 2024).

²⁹³ “На фронті загинув випускник аспірантури Львівського університету Рустем Мамут оглу Аблятіфов,” Ivan Franko National University of Lviv (27 September 2022); “Tomorrow Lviv Will Say Goodbye to Two Heroes: Rustem Mamut oglu Ablyatifov and Yevhen Dovgan Died in Battles with the Russian Invaders,” Golos Sokal (29 September 2022); “List of Deaths during the Russian Invasion of Ukraine,” Wikipedia (last updated on 19 September 2023).

²⁹⁴ “List of Deaths during the Russian Invasion of Ukraine,” Wikipedia (last updated on 19 September 2023).

²⁹⁵ “Maksym Shtatskyi, Historian Who Worked for Khortytsia National Reserve, Killed in Action,” Ukrainska Pravda (20 February 2024).

member of the “Black Zaporozhians” brigade. He was a history graduate from Volodymyr Vynnychenko Central Ukrainian State University, Kropyvnytskyi.²⁹⁶

- On 28 March 2024, Yuri Lushchai (1982–2024), a historian (graduated with a master’s degree from the Kharkiv National University history department) specialized in the history of Kievan Rus and an administrator of the Russian-language Wikipedia section, was killed in action near Ivanivske, Bakhmut district, Donetsk Oblast, during a massive Russian shelling.²⁹⁷

Among those (temporarily) emigrated or exiled since the Russian invasion of February 2022 was [See NCH Annual Report 2023]:

- Historian and scholar of library and information sciences Tetiana Hbranchak, a researcher at the Vernadsky National Library of Ukraine, who after the invasion went into exile in the United States with her husband because she feared for her safety given her activism and scholarly research. She first worked at the Indiana University–Ukraine Nonresidential Scholars Program and later at Syracuse University’s Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs. She specialized in media literacy and the role of libraries in the formation and politics of memory.²⁹⁸

On 5 October 2023, at least 59 people were killed in a single missile strike on a café in the village of Hroza, Kharkiv region, during a memorial service for a Ukrainian soldier. A Russian representative at the United Nations spoke of the attendees as the soldier’s “Nazi collaborators,” a reference to the official Russian justification of its war of aggression [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023].²⁹⁹

As of 13 December 2023, UNESCO had verified damage to 333 sites since the invasion of Ukraine by Russian forces on 24 February 2022: 125 religious sites, 146 buildings of historical and/or artistic interest, 29 museums, 19 monuments, 13 libraries, and 1 archive [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023]. A May 2024 report by the Virginia Museum of Natural History’s Cultural Heritage Monitoring Lab and the Smithsonian Institution’s Cultural Rescue Initiative identified the potential damage to cultural heritage sites between 24 February 2022 and 30 April 2024 to 2,122 out of 28,710. These included memorials and monuments (950), places of worship and burial (633), museums (188), libraries/archives (143), heritage buildings (102), and archaeological sites (39).³⁰⁰

²⁹⁶ Evgeniya Kanchura, Personal communication (28 February 2024); “Soldier, XSPORT video editor Anton Yakovenko Killed in Action,” IMI (29 February 2024).

²⁹⁷ “Yuri Lushchai,” Wikipedia (16 April 2024).

²⁹⁸ Jessica Youngman, “Visiting Scholar from Ukraine Has Found Community, Continued Her Work at Maxwell School,” Syracuse News University (17 November 2023).

²⁹⁹ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 384.

³⁰⁰ Alexandre Larcen, “Damaged Cultural Sites in Ukraine Verified by UNESCO,” UNESCO (Press release; 15 December 2023); Hayden Bassett and others, Potential Damage to Ukrainian Cultural Heritage Sites – Report Coverage: 24 February 2022 to 30 April 2024 (Washington: Smithsonian Institution, 2024); Tatiana Vorozhko

Russian-occupied Territories

Since at least the 2022 invasion, children in Russian-occupied territories were forced to learn the Ukrainian curriculum “in hiding,” to avoid reprisals. A new history textbook introduced in September 2023 was criticized as an attempt to indoctrinate schoolchildren and a blatant violation of their rights to appropriate and quality education. Pupils as well as their parents were forced to attend propaganda events at schools, and write letters of support to members of the Russian forces. In March 2024, there were reports that some teachers offered secret online classes to hundreds of their (former) students in order to rectify the distorted Russian views, including on history, and teach the Ukrainian curriculum. A June 2024 report by Human Rights Watch found that Russian authorities suppressed the Ukrainian language, imposed a Russian curriculum and Russian as the language of instruction in schools, and spread anti-Ukrainian propaganda. The report further found that history textbooks portrayed the Ukrainian government as a “neo-Nazi state” and justified the Russian invasion.³⁰¹

See also Bulgaria, Italy, Romania, Russia.

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2016.

UNITED KINGDOM

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998–2001, 2003–2004, 2006–2023.

In 2023, historian Andrew Lownie (1961–) said that official documents relating to the Duke of York, Prince Andrew (1960–), including papers about his time as United Kingdom special representative for trade and investment, would not be accessible until 105 years after his birth, in defiance of the public interest test provided since 2010 in the Freedom of Information Act and complicating his writing of the & Iryna Matviichuk, “Russians Target Ukrainian Publishing Industry, Libraries, Books, Archives,” VOA News (4 June 2024).

³⁰¹ Anastasiia Levchenko, “Secret Classes to Counter Russian Brainwashing in Occupied Ukraine,” BBC News (16 March 2024); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 53, 387; “Ukraine: Forced Russified Education Under Occupation,” Human Rights Watch (20 June 2024); Human Rights Watch, Education under Occupation: Forced Russification of the School System in Occupied Ukrainian Territories (Washington: HRW, 20 June 2024).

Prince's biography [See NCH Annual Report 2023].³⁰²

In August 2023, former Conservative Member of Parliament, Antoinette Sandbach, asked to be removed from the research of historian Malik Al Nasir, working as a Ph.D. student at St. Catherine's College, Cambridge University. In 2021, Al Nasir had named her as a descendant of Liverpool merchant Samuel Sandbach, her slave-owning ancestor, in a Ted Talk video, embedded on the Cambridge University website. She argued that there was no public interest in identifying her as his descendant and that she had a right to privacy and a right to be forgotten, accusing Al Nasir of singling her out while there were many other living relatives. Al Nasir invoked his right to free expression and his academic freedom. It was not clear whether Sandbach had initiated a legal action.³⁰³

In October 2023, Israeli-British historian Avi Shlaim from the University of Oxford was scheduled to give a lecture, titled "Zionism and the Jews of Iraq: a personal perspective," at Liverpool Hope University, only to be told a week prior to the event that it was canceled because of concerns about the "well-being and safety" of the students. A member of the "New Historians," a group of Israeli historians critical of traditional Israeli historiography, Shlaim argued that the cancelation was contrary to academic freedom and the result of political pressure from those who disagreed with his views on Zionism and Israel. Liverpool Hope University stated that the lecture was not canceled but postponed until later in the year. Shlaim refused the offer to postpone. The British Committee for the Universities of Palestine offered their support to Shlaim.³⁰⁴

In late January 2024, the British Museum and the Victoria and Albert Museum agreed a three-year loan deal with Otumfuo Osei Tutu II, the King of the Asante (Ashanti) people in Ghana. The deal included 32 objects, the majority of which had been looted by the British army during the Anglo-Asante wars (1824–1900). National legislation forbade major museums to repatriate looted artefacts.³⁰⁵

Between January and [mid-February] 2024, social-media channels of the British Museum were flooded with messages calling on it to return two moai statues dating back to between 1400 and 1650 CE to Rapa Nui (also known as Easter Island), which were looted by British surveyors in 1868. The online campaign followed a message by Chilean influencer Mike Milfort, who had called on his one million followers to ³⁰² Andrew Lownie, "All the Books that Might Not Be Written," Index on Censorship, 52 no. 4 (2023), 90–92.

³⁰³ Ed Thomas & Joshua Nevett, "Antoinette Sandbach: Ex-MP Asks To Be Removed from Slavery Research," BBC News (31 August 2023); Malik Al Nasir, "Searching for My Slave Roots," BBC News (July 2020).

³⁰⁴ Tom Williams, "Historian Criticizes 'Spineless' Cancellation of Israel Lecture," Times Higher Education (20 October 2023); Daisy Ruddock, "Art Institutions Accused of Censoring Pro-Palestinian Views," Index on Censorship (12 December 2023).

³⁰⁵ Matthew Weaver, "British Museum and V&A to Lend Ghana Looted Gold and Silver," Guardian (25 January 2024).

demand the statues' repatriation to Chile. The hashtag was later supported by Chilean President Gabriel Boric. The campaign was criticized by Rapa Nui's mayor Pedro Edmund Pao, who called on Boric not to "politicize something that is so holistically, spiritually and culturally important to us." The Polynesian island was annexed by Chile in 1888 and had expressed a desire for greater autonomy. In 2018, Rapa Nui had issued a written request for the return of the moai. In response, a reciprocal visit between island and museum representatives took place. In 2023, the island's elders' council wrote to King Charles III to request the return of the moai once again. They had not received an answer by February 2024.³⁰⁶

On [31] March 2024, a complaint against the British Museum submitted with the Information Commissioner's Office argued that vital specifics of internal conversations over the restitution of eleven wooden and stone tabots (sacred altar tablets in Ethiopian and Eritrean Orthodox churches stolen from Ethiopia after the 1848 Battle of Maqdala) had not been disclosed. The complaint followed an August 2023 Freedom of Information request filed by the not-for-profit organization Returning Heritage, which had resulted in a response from the museum that allegedly omitted the said information and shared documents that were overly redacted. Restitution advocates argued that the tabots could be returned to Ethiopia, despite the very restrictive 1963 British Museum Act, because the tablets had reportedly never been exhibited or studied as they could only be attended by Ethiopian clergy due to their religious significance. Two tabots had previously been considered for restitution: once in 2001, when one had been discovered in the St John the Evangelist church in Edinburgh; and in February 2024, when Westminster Abbey agreed "in principle" to return one in their possession.³⁰⁷

According to an 8 June 2024 report, at least three historians of British imperialism had been harassed. David Olusoga had to employ a bodyguard at some speaking events. Sathnam Sanghera largely stopped doing events for a period because the abuse had become routine. Corinne Fowler, co-author of a 2020 report for the National Trust on its estates' ties to the East India Company and transatlantic slavery, and author of the book Colonial Countryside, received many hate mails and threats and inaccurate reporting in the press [See NCH Annual Report 2021].³⁰⁸

³⁰⁶ Charis McGowan, "British Museum's Instagram Flooded with Calls to Return Easter Island Statue," Guardian (18 February 2024); James Gregory, "British Museum Facing Social Media Campaign to Return Easter Island Statue," BBC News (18 February 2024).

³⁰⁷ Laure Bakare, "Westminster Abbey Agrees 'In Principle' to Return Sacred Tablet to Ethiopia," Guardian (19 February 2024); Esther Addley, "British Museum Investigated over Ethiopian Artefacts Hidden from View for 150 Years," Guardian (31 March 2024).

³⁰⁸ Sathnam Sanghera, "'Imperial Nostalgia Has Become so Extreme': Sathnam Sanghera on the Conflict Surrounding Colonial History," Guardian (8 June 2024).

According to an 8 June 2024 report, the corroborated genocide of Tasmanian aboriginal people by British colonizers in the early 1800s was increasingly denied and minimized.³⁰⁹

Northern Ireland

On 12 September 2023, Parliament adopted an amended Northern Ireland Troubles (Legacy and Reconciliation) Bill. Amendments included the continuation of existing civil cases and an extension of the deadline to start new cases, including into torture allegations, to May 2024. Nevertheless, human rights organizations, victims and relatives continued to criticize the bill, which they feared would be tantamount to a de facto amnesty scheme [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2023]. In December 2023, the Irish government announced its intention to launch an inter-state case against the United Kingdom at the European Court of Human Rights, arguing that the act's provisions breached the European Convention on Human Rights.³¹⁰

Saint Helena

In 2008, during construction work on the Saint Helena Airport, archaeologists excavated the remains of 325 formerly enslaved people, who had been quarantined on the island in the mid-nineteenth century. Following the excavation, the government endorsed a “masterplan” to organize a “dignified reburial,” memorialization projects, and safeguards to protect the up to 10,000 remains in the Rupert's Valley African burial ground, considered “the most significant physical remaining trace of the transatlantic slave trade on Earth.” Those buried, including 3,000 children, were victims of the “middle passage” – the forced voyage of enslaved African people across the Atlantic Ocean to the Americas and the West Indies – who had been removed from Portuguese slave ships. Although called “liberated Africans,” many were shipped further to the West Indies to work as indentured labor, while those who remained on the island were confined in overcrowded and unsanitary conditions, employed in the lowest economic occupations and deprived of food [See NCH Annual Report 2023].

In [late March] 2024, Annina van Neel and Peggy King Jorde, the two co-authors of the masterplan, enlisted the help of the State of the African Diaspora (SOAD), recognized by the African Union, to repatriate the remained of the 325 people and prevent further desecration of the burial ground, arguing that the government had failed to honor their recommendations, including commemorative sites and a ³⁰⁹ Sathnam Sanghera, “‘Imperial Nostalgia Has Become so Extreme’: Sathnam Sanghera on the Conflict Surrounding Colonial History,” Guardian (8 June 2024).

³¹⁰ Tommy Greene, “‘Justice Denied’: Victims’ Families Slam UK’s Northern Ireland Legacy Bill,” Al Jazeera (6 September 2023); “UK Parliament Adopts Controversial Northern Ireland Troubles ‘Legacy’ Bill,” Al Jazeera (13 September 2023); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 392.

national conservation area. SOAD and the International Commission on Heritage and Culture threatened international legal action over the government's alleged failure to honor the reburial plan.³¹¹

See also Australia, Barbados, China, Ethiopia, Greece, Palestine, Russia, Sierra Leone, United States.

UNITED NATIONS / INTERNATIONAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2022–2023.

On 30 May 2024, the seventieth anniversary of the 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict, the International Council on Archives (ICA), the International Council of Museums (ICOM), the International Council on Monuments and Sites (ICOMOS), and the International Federation of Library Associations and Institutions (IFLA) issued a Declaration on the Protection of Archives, Libraries, Museums and Heritage Places during Armed Conflicts and Political Instability, expressing their concern at the current escalating destruction of life and cultural heritage during armed conflict and political instability and pleading to protect the life and work of professionals working in the field of cultural and documentary heritage.³¹²

UNITED STATES

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2023.

Throughout 2023, Congress introduced four resolutions or bills that addressed reparations and truth and healing commissions regarding chattel slavery and Indian boarding schools and their legacies. The descendants of enslaved Africans, African Americans and indigenous peoples continued to live with intergenerational trauma, as well as the detrimental economic and material impacts of the legacy of slavery and colonialism, without reparations [See NCH Annual Report 2023].³¹³

³¹¹ Haroon Siddique, "St Helena Urged to Return Remains of 325 Formerly Enslaved People to Africa," Guardian (27 March 2024).

³¹² International Council on Archives, International Council of Museums, International Council on Monuments and Sites & International Federation of Library Associations and Institutions, Declaration on the Protection of Archives, Libraries, Museums and Heritage Places during Armed Conflicts and Political Instability (30 May 2024).

³¹³ Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 393–394.

In March 2023, art historian Erika López Prater filed a lawsuit against Hamline University’s Board of Trustees claiming defamation, reprisal, internal infliction of emotional distress, retaliation, and religious discrimination before the United States District Court of Minnesota. In November 2022, Hamline University had rescinded an offer to her to teach during the spring 2023 semester, after a student complained about a painting of the Prophet Muhammad that she had displayed in class [See NCH Annual Report 2023]. The university admitted that its use of the term “Islamophobic” to define her behavior was flawed. While a judge dismissed most of the claims on 15 September 2023, the claim of religious discrimination was still under consideration.³¹⁴

A 1 June 2023 report by the Center for Countering Digital Hate (CCDH) found that Twitter (later known as X) failed to act on 99% of hate speech, including Holocaust denial and racist and antisemitic content, committed by verified accounts. On 20 July 2023, Twitter’s attorney Alex Spiro threatened to sue CCDH for “incendiary claims.”³¹⁵

A September 2023 report by the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) found that almost 65% of professors in Florida, Texas, Georgia and North Carolina did not consider their state a desirable place to work, citing political interference into curricula, restrictions of tenure and repressive policies toward LGBTQ+ people.

In Florida, the report referred to the effects of the 2022 Individual Freedom Act (IFA; also known as “Stop W.O.K.E. Act”), the early 2023 rejection of the Advanced Placement History course and Florida Senate Bill 266, which banned courses that “distort significant historical events” or “teach theories that systemic racism, sexism, oppression and privilege are inherent in the institutions of the United States” [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023].

In Texas, under the auspices of lieutenant governor Dan Patrick, state bills had banned the teaching of critical race theory and made it a legal cause for dismissal of tenured and tenure-track professors [See NCH Annual Reports 2022–2023].

In North Carolina, as of September 2023, the state legislature planned to require students at community colleges and universities to take a course on the study of the founding documents, including the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution (a practice that was already mandatory in Florida).³¹⁶

³¹⁴ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2023: Report of the Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (New York: SAR, 2023).

³¹⁵ Center for Countering Digital Hate, “Twitter Fails to Act on 99% of Twitter Blue Accounts Tweeting Hate” (1 June 2023); “Musk Threatens to Sue Researchers Who Documented the Rise in Hate Tweets,” Al Jazeera (31 July 2023).

³¹⁶ Nathan Greenfield, “‘Demonised’ Professors Seek Exit from Right-Wing States,” University World News (5 October 2023); Madison Ingram, “How Librarians Became American Free Speech Heroes,” Zócalo (5 October 2023).

On 7 September 2023, a report by the Government Accountability Office (GOA) found that during the construction of a wall to block off the border between the United States (US) and Mexico in the Tohono O’odham Nation Reservation, Arizona, between 2017 and 2021, government contractors irreparably damaged multiple historical heritage sites of the Tohono O’odham Nation people. These included Monument Hill – a site that the Hia-C’ed O’odham (“Sand Dune People”; ancestors of the Tohono O’odham) and other indigenous communities used for religious ceremonies and that contained the burials of Apache and O’odham ancestors – which was blasted by explosives to expand a patrol road. Contractors also destroyed a burial site in the Quitobaquito Springs, an oasis in the Sonoran Desert, and another sacred site for the O’odham people. The GOA report further documented how the government of President Donald Trump had used emergency laws, claiming that the border crossing of undocumented migrants into the US constituted a “national emergency,” to bypass cultural heritage protection laws.³¹⁷

On 13 September 2023, the Hamshire–Fannett Independent School District in Beaumont, Texas, dismissed a teacher (name unknown) who had assigned to an eighth-grade class a passage from Ari Folman’s and David Polonsky’s 2018 Anne Frank’s Diary: The Graphic Adaptation, which included passages Frank wrote about female and male genitalia, and about a possible attraction to women. The unabridged version of Frank’s diary had been removed from schools in Texas and Florida in 2023 after complaints from parents over its sexual content. Anne Frank (1929–1945) was a German-born Jewish child who had kept a diary while hiding from the Nazis in Amsterdam, the Netherlands. She died in Bergen-Belsen concentration camp. The graphic adaptation was fully authorized by the Anne Frank Fonds, the Switzerland-based foundation that oversaw the copyright to Frank’s diary.³¹⁸

A 25 September 2023 report by Human Rights Watch (HRW) stated that the government had failed to provide compensation or other redress to Iraqi citizens who suffered torture and other abuse in Abu Ghraib and other United States (US)–led prisons in Iraq. Between 2003–2009 around 100,000 Iraqis had reportedly been held in US–led prisons. A 2004 report by the International Committee of the Red Cross had found that 70–90% of the people held in custody in 2003 had been arrested by mistake. In 2004, then-President George W. Bush had issued an apology for the “humiliation suffered” at Abu

³¹⁷ United States Government Accountability Office, Southwest Border: Additional Actions Needed to Address Cultural and Natural Resource Impacts from Barrier Construction (September 2023), 22–23; Brian Osgood, “US Border Wall Construction Damaged Native Burial Site: Government Report,” Al Jazeera (8 September 2023).

³¹⁸ Timothy Bella, “Texas Teacher Fired after Assigning Graphic Novel Based on Anne Frank’s Diary,” Washington Post (20 September 2023).

Ghraib, and then-Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld had promised the US Congress to provide compensation. However, the HRW report found no evidence for this.³¹⁹

On 26 September 2023, the ninth anniversary of the 2014 Ayotzinapa case of 43 disappeared and murdered students in Mexico [See under Mexico], the National Security Archive (NSA) reported that, together with the Center for Investigative Reporting, it had filed over 150 Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests and two FOIA lawsuits since 2017, but that it had received very little new information while most relevant records remained classified. The NSA blamed refusals of six federal agencies on an overburdened classification system due to the explosion of electronic records, a backlogged FOIA (the government was reportedly 150,000 requests behind), and a deterioration, ever since the terrorist attacks of 11 September 2001, of the right to information and the public's right to know. In 2022, a Senate Judiciary Committee had pointed to the same problems in a right to information hearing and had criticized the absence of consequences for agencies that failed to comply with the law. In January 2023, Director of National Intelligence Avril Haines had expressed concern about the overclassification of records, that undermined key democratic values like “transparency,” “accountability,” and “the basic trust that the public has in its government.”³²⁰

On 10 October 2023, Governor of California Gavin Newsom signed two laws intended to make California's public universities return Native American remains and artifacts. The laws required the California State University (CSU) system to review their progress annually, and urged the University of California (UC) system to do the same. A report published in 2020 had found that the UC system did not have adequate policies for repatriation, and that its Berkeley campus had only returned around 20% of the remains and artifacts in its possession. A state auditor's office report of June 2023 found that more than half of the 21 CSU campuses had not returned any of them.³²¹

On 21 October 2023, historian of early modern Europe Natalie Zemon Davis (1928–2023) died. In 1952 the State Department had confiscated the passports of her and her husband, mathematician Chandler Davis, probably in connection with a pamphlet that she and Elizabeth Douvan had written, entitled Operation Mind. The pamphlet reviewed the history of the House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC) and tried to show with excerpts from testimonies that the HUAC attacked specific ideas about peace, trade unions, and equality, rather than efforts to overthrow the government. It was published anonymously before the HUAC visit to Michigan and attributed to Chandler Davis. The latter was charged with distributing Communist literature. In 1954, after refusing to answer questions before the HUAC on First Amendment grounds, he was charged with contempt, dismissed by the University of Michigan, and blacklisted. Natalie Davis did not have a passport for many years and could no longer travel to France to work in the archives. As a result, her doctoral research (eventually completed in 1959) was hampered. She had to raise three children while her husband was imprisoned (for six months in 1960 on charges brought against him by the HUAC) and blacklisted at United States universities. After her term as a history professor at Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island (1959–1963), both went to work at Toronto University (1963–1971). Later she became a professor at the University of California, Berkeley (1971–1977) and Princeton University (1977–1996). Natalie Zemon Davis was a patron of the Network of Concerned Historians.³²²

³¹⁹ Human Rights Watch, “Iraq: Torture Survivors Await US Redress Accountability” (Washington: HRW, 25 September 2023).

³²⁰ Kate Doyle & Claire Dorfman, “Keeping the Secrets: U.S. Silence about Ayotzinapa,” National Security Archive (26 September 2023).

³²¹ Sophie Austin, “California Governor Signs Laws Compelling Universities to Report Return of Native American Remains,” AP (11 October 2023).

A November 2023 report by PEN America found that throughout 2023 110 educational gag orders – state legislative and policy efforts to restrict teaching of, among other things, race, gender and sexuality in United States (US) history [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2023] – had been issued, of which ten had become law and four more had been passed through executive order, bringing the total to 40 as of 1 November 2023. It found that the content of gag orders had shifted to LGBTQ+ history, modeled after HB1557 (also known as the “Don’t Say Gay Bill”) in Florida [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022; See below under Florida].

In another report, PEN America’s Index of School Book Bans found 5894 (attempted) book bans between July 2021 and June 2023, including books about the history of race, LGBTQ+ history and the history of World War II, and noted an increase between July 2022 and June 2023 in comparison to the previous year [See NCH Annual Report 2023].³²³

On 6 January 2024, the American Historical Association passed a resolution entitled “In Defense of the Right to Learn,” which stated, among others: “Whereas numerous state legislatures and officials are censoring the teaching of history in public schools and universities; Whereas, under pressure, a number of school boards across the country are forcing teachers to censor their treatment of particular historical ³²² Elsa Dixler, “Natalie Zemon Davis, Historian of the Marginalized, Dies at 94,” New York Times (23 October 2023); Henry Abelove, et al., eds., Visions of History (Manchester 1984), 104–105; Kelly Boyd, ed., Encyclopedia of Historians and Historical Writing (London and Chicago 1999), 290–291; Chandler Davis, “The Purge,” in Peter Duren et al. eds., A Century of Mathematics in America (Providence 1988–1989), 422–423; Jennifer Scanlon & Shaaron Cosner, American Women Historians, 1700s–1990s (Westport / London 1996), 53–56; Ellen W. Schrecker, No Ivory Tower: McCarthyism and the Universities (New York/Oxford 1986), 287, 301, 304; Daniel R. Woolf, ed., A Global Encyclopedia of Historical Writing (New York/London 1998), 224.

³²³ Jeremy Young, Jonathan Friedman & Kasey Meehan, “America’s Censored Classrooms 2023,” PEN America (9 November 2023); Sabrina Baêta & Kasey Meehan, “Spineless Shelves: Two Years of Book Banning,” PEN America (no date [2023]); PEN America, PEN America’s Index of School Book Bans \(July 1, 2022 - June 30, 2023\) (ongoing database).

topics in their classes, and libraries are removing books in literature and history from their shelves; Whereas teachers and librarians who resist these measures have faced personal attacks and threats; Therefore the Association will continue to vigorously: (1) uphold accuracy in history teaching; (2) intervene where appropriate and encourage members to organize against attacks on history and the work of historians; (3) defend academic freedom and job security for history teachers at every level; (4) write editorials and letters to the editor defending teachers, librarians, and school board members; and (5) testify before legislative bodies and school boards about the right to learn.”³²⁴

On 8 February 2024, Michael Mann, climate scientist at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, prevailed in a lawsuit that he had initiated in 2012 to accuse two conservative commentators – policy analyst Rand Simberg and author Mark Steyn – of defamation for challenging his research, accusing him of fraud, and comparing him to a convicted child molester in blog posts. A jury at the Washington DC Superior Court awarded Mann more than US$1 million. Mann was the co-author of a pair of papers published in 1998 and 1999 that contained the famous “hockey-stick graph,” showing global temperature trends since the year 1000. It revealed a sharp spike in the twentieth century, after the Industrial Revolution had boosted greenhouse-gas emissions in the atmosphere. The graph became a symbol of human interference in the climate system and was reproduced by many others, including the United Nations Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change in its 2001 report on climate change. Some of Mann’s e-mails, as well as others discussing his work, were among a trove of thousands of documents that were released after being illegally obtained from the University of East Anglia, United Kingdom, in 2009 in a row known as the Climategate controversy. Critics claimed that some of the e-mails showed an attempt to manipulate climate data to indicate global warming rather than cooling. This sparked the blogposts and later the defamation case. In a reaction to the judgment, Kim Cobb, a paleoclimatologist at Brown University in Providence, Rhode Island, said that he had been subjected to similar attacks.³²⁵

On 13 February 2024, the Alabama Senate County and Municipal Government Committee approved State Bill 77 that would remove the board of trustees of the Alabama Department of Archives and History. The bill, sponsored by Republican Senator Chris Elliott, would end the board’s independence by giving appointments to political representatives. The legislation came after in June 2023 some Republican lawmakers, including Elliott, took issue with the Archives hosting a talk by Maigen

³²⁴ American Historical Association, “In Defense of the Right to Learn: Resolution Passed at the 137th Business Meeting \(January 2024\).”

³²⁵ “Punitive Damages Awarded to Climate-Change Scientist Dr. Mann in Decade-Long Defamation Case,” X (8 February 2024); Jeff Tollefson, “Climatologist Michael Mann Wins Defamation Case: What It Means for Scientists,” Nature (9 February 2024).

Sullivan, co-founder of the Invisible Histories Project based in Birmingham, on LGBTQ+ history in Alabama.³²⁶

On 29 February 2024, university researchers charged with a United Nations (UN) inquiry into the death of UN Secretary General Dag Hammarskjöld in 1961, accused the governments of the United States (US) and the United Kingdom (UK) of delaying the handing over of archival records. In 2017, the UN had reopened an inquiry into the death of Hammarskjöld, under the auspices of Tanzanian judge Mohamed Chande Othman. A recent UN General Assembly resolution to renew the investigation was co-sponsored by 142 UN member states, but did not include the US and the UK.³²⁷

On 24 April 2024, the administration of the University of Southern California (USC) invited riot police to campus to stop peaceful student demonstrations against the atrocities committed by Israel in Gaza. Ninety-three individuals were arrested for trespassing, including two members of the history department. In an open letter, seventeen history department faculty demanded the resignation of the USC president, among others, for use of violence against the campus community.³²⁸

On 27 April 2024, Steve Tamari ([1959]–), a history professor at Southern Illinois University Edwardsville, was among the protesters arrested at a campus demonstration at the private Washington University in St. Louis, Missouri, with video showing several officers slamming him to the ground. He was hospitalized with broken ribs and a broken hand. During the same demonstration, Michael Allen, an architectural historian at Washington University, was also arrested and suspended from teaching, when he filmed Tamari's arrest. The protesters called for the university to divest from Boeing amid Israel's attacks on Gaza.³²⁹

In May 2024, the Working Group on the National Archives of the National Coalition for History published A Program to Support and Strengthen the National Archives. Among other things, it contained a critical assessment of the state of declassification of historical records and the backlog

³²⁶ Jemma Stephenson, "Senate Committee Approves Bill that Would Remove Alabama Archives' Governing Board," Alabama Reflector (14 February 2024).

³²⁷ Julian Borger, "UK and US Accused of Obstructing Inquiry into 1961 Death of UN Chief," Guardian (2 March 2024).

³²⁸ "USC: 17 History Department Faculty Demand Resignation of President, Others, for Use of Violence against Campus Community," Informed Comment (29 April 2024).

³²⁹ Kallie Cox, "SIUE Professor Hospitalized After Arrest at Wash U," River Front Times (30 April 2024); Rachel Treisman, "How Some Faculty Members Are Defending Student Protesters, in Actions and in Words," NPR (1 May 2024); Jacob Barker, "Protesters Dispute Washington University's Account of Saturday's Demonstration," St. Louis-Post Dispatch (1 May 2024).

consisting of thousands of pending Freedom of Information Act and Mandatory Declassification Review requests [See above under Ayotzinapa].³³⁰

On 1 May 2024, labor historian Annelise Orleck (1959–) attended and filmed a protest in support of Palestinians in Gaza at Dartmouth College, Hanover, NH, where she had taught for three decades and had been head of the Jewish studies department. She was knocked to the ground by police called in to clear out an encampment. She was one of ninety people arrested. Orleck said that she had been charged with criminal trespass and allegedly temporarily banned from campus, as a condition of her bail. On 2 May 2024, Dartmouth College administrators said that her suspension was an error in the bail process.³³¹

On 18 May 2024, police forces arrested and beat several demonstrators in Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, New York, who were commemorating the seventy-sixth anniversary of the Nakba (15 May 1948, when about 750,000 Palestinians were expelled from Israel).³³²

In early June 2024, the Columbia Law Review website was shut down for about a week after it published “Toward Nakba as a Legal Concept,” an essay by Palestinian human rights lawyer and Harvard Law School doctoral candidate Rabea Eghbariah in which he argued that “Nakba” (catastrophe) – the Arabic name for the 1948 expulsion of about 750,000 Palestinians from Israel – should become a new modality of crimes against humanity (next to genocide and apartheid), characterized by displacement, fragmentation, and denial of self-determination. Despite its approval after extensive peer review and editorial approval, the law school journal’s faculty and alumni board shuttered the website in order to make it inaccessible. In November 2023, the Harvard Law Review had blocked publication of an early version of the article that it had commissioned from Eghbariah, after the law review president had expressed safety concerns tied to the piece. That version of the piece later appeared in The Nation magazine.³³³

On 12 June 2024, the Oklahoma Supreme Court dismissed a lawsuit for reparations, brought in 2020 under the public nuisance law by three survivors of the so-called Tulsa massacre, during which in 1921

³³⁰ National Coalition for History (Working Group on the National Archives), A Program to Support and Strengthen the National Archives (Washington: NCH, May 2024); National Security Archive, “History Coalition Warns of Critical Needs at National Archives” (22 July 2024).

³³¹ Vimal Patel, “Police Treatment of a Dartmouth Professor Stirs Anger and Debate,” New York Times (3 May 2024); Casey Bertocchi, “Conditions of Annelise Orleck’s Bail ‘Corrected’,” The Dartmouth (3 May 2024; updated 5 May 2024).

³³² “New York Police Violently Arrest Pro-Palestine Protesters Marking Nakba,” Al Jazeera (19 May 2024).

³³³ Rabea Eghbariah, “Toward Nakba as a Legal Concept,” Columbia Law Review, 124 no. 4 (May 2024), 887–991; Rabea Eghbariah, “The Harvard Law Review Refused to Run This Piece About Genocide in Gaza,” The Nation (21 November 2023); Jonathan Guyer, “Why Are America’s Elite Universities So Afraid of This Scholar’s Paper?,” Guardian (9 June 2024).

an estimated 300 black Americans were killed when a white mob razed the Greenwood neighborhood of Tulsa, Oklahoma. “Though Plaintiffs’ grievances are legitimate, they do not fall within the scope of our State’s public nuisance statute,” the court wrote. In doing so, it affirmed a lower court judge’s identical ruling in July 2023 who had concluded that “simply being connected to a historical event does not provide a person with unlimited rights to seek compensation” [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2023].³³⁴

On 27 June 2024, Oklahoma State Superintendent of Public Instruction Ryan Walters, a former public school history teacher, ordered “all Oklahoma schools ... to incorporate the Bible, which includes the Ten Commandments, as an instructional support into the curriculum” for all public school students aged 11–18 (grades 5–12). The American Historical Association (AHA) condemned the order, saying that the claim that the Christian Bible had a “substantial influence” on the founders of the United States and the Constitution was not a settled question among professional historians. “Oklahoma students,” it stated, “deserve to learn about the complex and nuanced conversations among early national America’s already diverse religious traditions, the Constitution, and the First Amendment. This order violates that right, threatening the integrity of history instruction in public education and the basic constitutional rights of Oklahomans.”

The directive came a week after Louisiana’s governor signed a law directing all public schools in that state to display the Ten Commandments, notwithstanding the fact that, in 1980, the Supreme Court had struck down a Kentucky law requiring that the document be displayed in elementary and high schools.³³⁵

Florida

On 12 May 2023, New College in Sarasota, Florida, declined to renew historian Eric Wallenberg’s contract, apparently in retaliation for the latter’s critical comments in a Teen Vogue op-ed about administrators appointed by Governor Ron DeSantis who were “vocal opponents of diversity, equity and inclusion programs, and curricula that include[d] critical race theory and gender studies” [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2023]. The nonrenewal came shortly after the New College board of trustees had denied five professors tenure in a vote that appeared politically motivated. The New College board of trustees had previously voted to dismiss President Patricia Okker, who had supported teaching about critical race theory and topics related to diversity, equity, and inclusion.³³⁶

³³⁴ Sam Cabral, “Oklahoma Court Rejects Tulsa Massacre Survivors Suit,” BBC News (13 June 2024).

³³⁵ Bernd Debusmann Jr, “Oklahoma Orders Schools to Teach Bible ‘immediately’,” BBC News (28 June 2024); American Historical Association, “Statement on Oklahoma Mandate for Religious Content in Public Schools” (press release; 9 July 2024).

³³⁶ Nathan Greenfield, “Where Universities Face Emerging Threats and Crises,” World University News (15 September 2023); Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2023: Report of the Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (New York: SAR, 2023).

On 21 October 2023, David Allen Emanuel was sentenced to one year in prison on six counts of hate crimes for attempting to run over, in September 2022, public historian Marvin Dunn, his son and five others, who were in the process of building a memorial for the centennial anniversary of the 1923 Rosewood massacre. In the lead-up to the trial, Emanuel had displayed Confederate symbols. Dunn, an emeritus professor of psychology, had worked as a public historian since his retirement for projects such as the “Teach the Truth” tours, in which he took students around significant sites of Florida’s Black history. The Rosewood massacre was a racially motivated series of attacks against Black people and a race riot that destroyed the majority-Black town of Rosewood between 1 and 7 January 1923. The official death toll was eight, but survivor testimony estimates ranged between 27 and 150.³³⁷

In December 2023, a special committee of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) released a report arguing that Governor Ron de Sanctis’ higher education policies constituted an attack on academic freedom and democracy and could serve as an example to spread nationwide. Based on interviews with 65 current and former professors, students and university presidents, AAUP concluded that the state had become a threat to a free and open society and constituted a “canary in the coal mine” for developments around the country. The report cited, among other things, legislative measures limiting or forbidding the teaching of race, gender and sexuality in United States history, changes to tenure allegedly to censor those critical of the state’s policies, and the decision not to renew the contract of visiting history professor Eric Wallenberg [See above] [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2023; See above under the September 2023 report of the American Association of University Professors].³³⁸

On 24 January 2024, the Florida Board of Education, whose members were handpicked by Governor Ron de Sanctis, voted to remove sociology as a core class at twelve public universities and replace it with its self-drafted United States history curriculum to ensure that students would get a “historically accurate account of America’s founding [and] the horrors of slavery.” In the summer of 2023, the same board had faced a backlash after it had required public schools to teach that forced labor was beneficial to enslaved Black people, because it taught the latter useful skills. The decision to remove the sociology course was criticized by academics and the American Sociological Association as another example of the state’s “culture war” [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2023].³³⁹

³³⁷ “Florida Man Sentenced to 1 Year in Federal Prison for Trying to Run Over 6 Black Men,” Tampa Bay Times (21 October 2023); Michan Connor, “For Historian, the Best and Worst of Times,” History News Network (6 December 2023).

³³⁸ Douglas Soule, “Professors Union Report Says Florida Higher Ed Policies Must Be Fought ‘Tooth and Nail,’” USA Today (6 December 2023).

³³⁹ Richard Luscombe, “Ron DeSanctis Condemned as Florida Removes Sociology as Core College Class,” Guardian (26 January 2024).

On 11 March 2024, education officials and civil rights attorneys reached a settlement over HB 1557 (also known as the “Don’t Say Gay Bill”) [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022; See above under the November 2023 report by PEN America]. The settlement laid out that the law would not prohibit discussing LGBTQ+ people and LGBTQ+ history in classrooms, nor apply to library books as long as they were “not instruction on sexual orientation or gender identity.” The settlement was hailed by Governor Ron de Sanctis as a “major win.” The law, deemed an “educational gag order” by PEN America that served as a template law for other state’s legislation, had been criticized for its vague provisions creating a chilling effect in classrooms and leading to self-censorship. In 2022, the Miami-Dade County School Board had decided not to adopt a resolution recognizing LGBTQ History Month, even though it had done so a year earlier, reportedly for fears of violating the law.³⁴⁰

On 10 June 2024, a jury in West Palm Beach, Florida, found Chiquita Brands International liable for funding the far-right paramilitary Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (AUC; United Self-defense Forces of Colombia). The AUC had been actively involved in the Colombian armed conflict (1964–present) between 1997–2006 and was responsible for major human rights violations, including the 1997 Mapiripán massacre. The decision was hailed as the first time that a United States (US) jury held a US company liable for complicity in human rights abuses in another country.³⁴¹

On 15 July 2024, Florida Judge Aileen Cannon dismissed the Justice Department’s classified documents case against former President Donald Trump because the Justice Department’s 2022 appointment of special prosecutor Jack Smith violated the Appointments Clause of the Constitution by neglecting the role of Congress in the appointment of constitutional officers. The Justice Department authorized an appeal [See NCH Annual Reports 2021– 2023].³⁴²

See also Chile, China, Colombia, Israel, Kenya, Malaysia, Nicaragua, Palestine, Russia, Sierra Leone, Türkiye, Ukraine.

³⁴⁰ AP, “Florida Settles Lawsuit after Challenge to ‘Don’t Say Gay’ Law,” Guardian (11 March 2024).

³⁴¹ Michael Evans, “Chiquita Found Liable for Colombia Paramilitary Killings,” National Security Archive (10 June 2024).

³⁴² District Court Southern District of Florida, United States Versus Donald Trump and Others (2024); Madeline Halpert, Ana Faguy & Anthony Zurcher, “Trump Classified Documents Case Dismissed by Florida Judge,” BBC News (14 July 2024).

URUGUAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2013, 2015–2018, 2021.

In [early January 2024] Senators passed legislation which – if approved by the lower house of Congress – would allow criminals over the age of 65 to be released from prison into house arrest. In this way, military officers who had committed human rights violations during the dictatorship (1973–1985) could be allowed to serve their sentences at home. Patricia López of the Association of Mothers and Relatives of Uruguayan Disappeared Persons called the law a big step backward. Thousands of people had been tortured and 197 people forcibly disappeared under the military regime. A further 202 had been victims of extrajudicial killings between 1968 and 1985. An immunity law granting amnesties to members of the armed forces accused of human rights violations had been in force until 2011.³⁴³

UZBEKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2014, 2016, 2020.

³⁴³ Grace Livingstone, "Uruguay Bill Stirs Debate about Dictatorship–Era Crimes," BBC News (4 January 2023).

VATICAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000, 2004, 2009, 2011, 2015, 2019–2020, 2022–2023.

In June 2023, two climate activists from the group Ultima Generazione (Last Generation) were sentenced by the Vatican court for damaging “a public monument of inestimable historical and artistic value” after they had glued their hands to the base of the Laocoön statue in the Vatican Museums in May. They were sentenced to nine months’ imprisonment, suspended for five years, fined 1,500 euros, and ordered to pay a compensation of around 28,000 euros to the Vatican.³⁴⁴

See also Switzerland.

VENEZUELA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2003–2004, 2006, 2009–2010, 2012, 2014, 2017–2021, 2023.

The government acknowledged 455 cases of enforced disappearance reported since 2015, the majority of which had not been resolved. In June 2023, the Pre-trial Chamber of the International Criminal Court (ICC) authorized the prosecutor to resume his investigation into alleged crimes against humanity, a decision that was subsequently appealed by the government.³⁴⁵

In December 2023, the government of President Nicolás Maduro held a referendum on the creation of a Venezuelan province in the Essequibo, a territory controlled by neighboring Guyana that had been in dispute for over a century, including in ongoing proceedings before the International Court of Justice. The government said that ten million people participated in the referendum and over 90% voted in favor. Governments in Latin America, Europe, and the United States urged Maduro to de-escalate the situation, fearing an international armed conflict. In late 2023, Guyana and Venezuela had agreed to initiate talks.³⁴⁶

See also Colombia.

³⁴⁴ Amnesty International, Under Protected and Over Restricted: The State of the Right to Protest in 21 European Countries (London: AI, 2024), 160–161.

³⁴⁵ Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 402, 406.

³⁴⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 713.

VIETNAM

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2006, 2009–2013, 2016–2017, 2019–2020, 2022–2023.

In July 2023, the Political Bureau (Politburo) of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of Vietnam (CPV) issued Directive 24 “on ensuring national security in the context of comprehensive and deep international integration.” Signed by CPV General Secretary Nguyen Phu Trong, it was leaked months later. The directive contained nine orders for Party and State organizations to implement, including an order on culture: “Urgently research and build a national value system, cultural value system, and moral standards that preserve and promote the Vietnamese family value system in the new era, focused on educating people about historical, cultural, and revolutionary traditions.” The directive was seen as undermining human rights and democracy: while Article 5 of the Constitution guaranteed the right of every ethnic group to “preserve its national identity [and] to promote its fine customs, habits, traditions, and culture,” the order indicated a scheme to homogenize culture at the expense of Vietnam’s 53 ethnic minority groups.³⁴⁷

³⁴⁷ Ben Swanton & Michael Altman-Lupu, Vietnam’s Leaders Declare War on Human Rights as a Matter of Official Policy: An Analysis of Secret Directive 24 (No place [Illinois]: Project 88, 1 March 2024), 3, 8, 10, 18; Jonathan Head, “Vietnam: Leaked Communist Party Document Warns of ‘Hostile Forces’,” BBC News (1 March 2024).

WESTERN SAHARA

See Morocco / Western Sahara.

YEMEN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2003, 2010, 2013–2016, 2018–2023.

On 26 July 2023, over forty civil society organizations and victims' and survivor associations launched the Yemen Declaration for Justice and Reconciliation. The declaration emphasized the need for a post-conflict (2014–) justice process to actively and adequately address the grievances of the Yemeni people. It also laid out principles to guide the post-conflict justice process, which included a victim-centered approach, inclusivity, gender equality, truth and memorialization, redress and reparations, accountability, reconciliation, and an emphasis on human rights.³⁴⁸

On 26 September 2023, Houthi de facto authorities carried out a wave of arrests rounding up scores of largely peaceful demonstrators who had gathered to commemorate the anniversary of the popular revolution against President Abdrabbuh Mansur Hadi (in office between 2012–2022) – that had lasted from 21 September 2014 to 6 February 2015 and was variously known as the September 21 Revolution (by supporters) or the 2014–2015 coup d'état (by opponents) – during which the Houthi took over power in parts of Yemen.³⁴⁹

³⁴⁸ Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 411–412.

³⁴⁹ Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 410.

ZAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2015, 2021.

In October 2023, the Independent Broadcasting Authority (IBA), a government body with a mandate to grant, renew, and suspend or cancel broadcasters' licenses, made an official written complaint to the Hot FM radio station, telling it to "strengthen its international controls." This was after the station had held an interview with historian Sishuwa Sishuwa, a leading academic and government critic [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. Sishuwa had spoken of a "growing public perception" that the president [Hakainde Hichilema] appeared to consider himself "primarily as the leader of ... one half of the country, mainly [those in ruling United Party for National Development strongholds]." IBA stated that Sishuwa's assertions had "the potential to cause disunity in the country."³⁵⁰

ZIMBABWE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2001, 2004, 2006, 2008–2015, 2018, 2021.

On 16 July 2024, the government of President Emmerson Mnangagwa launched a "community engagement" program to promote "healing, peace and unity" among survivors of the Gukurahundi – a series of massacres, including rape, torture and forced disappearances, between 1982 and 1987, in which a North Korean-trained unit of the army killed between 2,000–20,000 predominantly Ndebele and Kalanga people in North and South Matabeleland and Midlands, as part of a political struggle between then President Robert Mugabe (in power between 1987–2017) and leader of the opposition Joshua Nkomo [See NCH Annual Report 2012]. The program would include conducting exhumations and giving official burials to the victims, carving out spaces for discussing the Gukurahundi, collecting evidence and witness testimonies, and providing forms of restoration. It was, however, criticized because it did not mention monetary compensation, because it remained unclear whether previous reports on the massacre would be made accessible, and, above all, because of the alleged involvement of members of the current government in the massacres (including Mnangagwa himself who was minister of state for national security at the time).³⁵¹

³⁵⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2024: Events of 2023 (New York: HRW, 2024), 730; Amnesty International, The State of the World's Human Rights – April 2024 (London: AI, 2024), 413.

³⁵¹ Shola Lawal, "Will Survivors of Zimbabwe's Gukurahundi Massacre Finally Get Justice?" Al Jazeera (22 July 2024).

INTRODUCTION

This twenty-ninth Annual Report of the Network of Concerned Historians (NCH) contains news about the domain where history and human rights intersect, in particular about the censorship of history and the persecution of historians, archivists, and archaeologists around the globe, as reported by various human rights organizations and other sources. It mainly covers events and developments of 2022 and 2023.

Disclaimer. The fact that the NCH presents this news does not imply that it shares the views and beliefs of the historians and others mentioned in it.

- Download this report at:

<https://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/23.pdf>

- Cite this report as:

Network of Concerned Historians, Annual Report 2023

(<https://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/23.pdf>).

- All NCH Annual Reports (1995–2023) are available at:

<https://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar>

- The complete set of NCH Annual Reports in one pdf file is available at:

<https://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/compilation.pdf>

- Or click:

	2023	2022	2021	2020	2019	2018	2017	2016	2015
2014	2013	2012	2011	2010	2009	2008	2007	2006	2005
2004	2003	2002	2001	2000	1999	1998	1997	1996	1995

This year's report was compiled and edited by Antoon De Baets and Ruben Zeeman.

Please send any comments to antoondebaets@concernedhistorians.org.

AFGHANISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2016, 2018, 2021–2022.

In [July] 2022, the Chinese ambassador in Kabul announced that a copper mine located underneath the Mes Aynak archaeological site, home of, among others, Buddhist monasteries and over four hundred Buddha statues, as well as remains of prior civilizations dating as far back as the third century BCE, would soon be opened. In 2007, the Chinese mining giant Metallurgical Group Corporation (now called the MCC-JCL Aynak Minerals Company [MJAM]) signed a contract to mine ore for a thirty-year period. In 2016, after the project had repeatedly been postponed due to financial disagreement between MJAM and the Afghan government, MJAM agreed for an archaeological excavation to take place. In three years, archaeologists unearthed thousands of objects. However, in 2019 the excavation was stopped due to a lack of funding. The site still contained many of the remains that had been too large or fragile to unearth, including many temples, and more layers of historical artifacts that had not yet been found were expected to lie above the copper.¹

In [August] 2022, UNESCO and heritage experts expressed concern over a Taliban construction project close to the site of the Bamiyan Buddha statues – the two largest standing Buddha statues in the world, that had been destroyed, as part of a wider campaign of destruction of pre-Islamic and Buddhist objects, by Taliban officials in 2001 [See NCH Annual Report 2001]. The project, aiming to “rebuild” a historic bazaar by turning it into a tourism complex, was thought to ruin the historic site of the former bazaar (late 19th or early 20th century), the niches in which the sixth-century Buddha statues had stood, and the adjacent fragile cliff of Buddhist monastery caves (sixth to eighth century), including the surviving cave frescos.²

On 20 December 2022, the Taliban banned all women, including students of archaeology, history and archival science, to study in public or private universities throughout Afghanistan.³

See also Australia, India, United Kingdom.

¹ “Ancient Afghan Buddhist City Threatened by Chinese Copper Mine,” France 24 (22 June 2022); Aletta André, “Taliban plannen lucratieve kopermijn, mogelijk ten koste van boeddhistisch erfgoed,” NOS (4 August 2022).

² Emma Graham-Harrison, “Fears over Building Works at Afghan Buddhas of Bamiyan Site,” Guardian (2 August 2022).

³ Miriam Berger & Susannah George, “Taliban Bans Women from All Afghan Universities,” Washington Post (21 December 2022).

ALBANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2012, 2015–2022.

In [2022], it was revealed how the Communist government (1944–1991), faced with its imminent fall in 1990, decided to destroy immense amounts of archives: some 29,000 files disappeared – generally assumed to detail the crimes committed by the regime and identify their perpetrators. The files were turned into dough with pastry mixers, which could pulp almost a ton of documents each hour. The dough was then loaded on trucks and spilled into rivers or buried underground.⁴

On [1 September] 2022, former President Ilir Meta filed criminal charges against the Information Authority on Former State Security Documents (AIDSSH), after it had released documents showing that Meta had been involved with the Communist-era security police Sigurimi (1944–1991). Meta argued that the release violated the law on politicians' verification procedures [See NCH Annual Report 2022].

Also in [September], the ruling Socialist Party submitted two draft laws: one that would install further background checks for people who had worked for the Sigurimi during the Communist regime and aspired public office, and one that would allow authorities to reassess lustration certificates that had been issued in the past [See also NCH Annual Report 2022]. On 20 October 2022, the Socialist Party-controlled parliament approved these, but it blocked the proposal by the opposition Democratic Party to declassify all the Sigurimi documents and make them available to scholars and the wider public.⁵

On 17 January 2023, the 555th anniversary of the death of Skanderbeg (1405–1468), a feudal lord and military commander who had led a rebellion against the Ottoman Empire, President Edi Rama ordered school pupils to sing the national anthem every first day of the week. The decision was criticized as a use of nationalism to divert attention from claims of Rama's alleged corruption.⁶

See also Kosovo.

⁴ Naomi Tomky, "How Albania's Government Kneaded Secret Documents Into Dough," Atlas Obscura (24 August 2022); Gjergj Erebara, "Albanian Ruling Party Blocks Public Access to Communist Files," Balkan Insight (21 October 2022).

⁵ "Ilir Meta Files Criminal Charges Against the Files Authority," Vox (1 September 2022); Alice Taylor, "Albanian Ruling Party Proposes Lustration for Electoral Candidates," Euroactiv (6 September 2022); Fjori Sinoruka, "Albania Moves Towards Declassifying Communist-Era Security Files," Balkan Insight (10 October 2022); Gjergj Erebara, "Albanian Ruling Party Blocks Public Access to Communist Files," Balkan Insight (21 October 2022).

⁶ Gjergj Erebara, "PM's Order to Sing National Anthem in Schools Divides Albanians," Balkan Insight (18 January 2023).

ALGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001–2019, 2021–2022.

Between 25–27 August 2022, the governments of Algeria and France agreed to open up their archives to a mixed commission of French and Algerian historians, to study contentious issues in the colonial period (1830–1962), including the independence war (1954–1962). When Algerian President Abdelmadjid Tebboune appointed five historians on 30 November 2022, it was reported that many relevant Algerian archives were still locked.

In late December 2022, a co-chairman of the commission, French historian from Jewish-Algerian origin Benjamin Stora [See NCH Annual Reports 2014, 2021], was attacked in an anti-Semitic article written by Lotfi Nezzar, son of former Defense Minister General Khaled Nezzar (1990–1993) [See NCH Annual Reports 2003, 2013, 2018] on the ultranationalist website Algérie patriotique. Stora and “his fellows and his ancestors” were accused of trying to impose a “Pax Judaica” on Algeria by pretending to be supporters of memorial reconciliation. Although few reacted to the racist defamation, President Tebboune in the French newspaper Figaro drew attention to the friendship between Stora and French President Emmanuel Macron.⁷

On 1 September 2022, authorities closed the headquarters of Santé Sidi El Houari, a group focused on preserving the cultural and historical heritage of the city of Oran. The governor of Oran had filed a complaint against the association in May, alleging “foreign funding without the approval of the competent authorities.” By the end of 2022, the administrative court of Oran had not yet issued a judgment, but the authorities had frozen the group’s activities.⁸

See also France.

⁷ Steven Philip Kramer, “Macron in Algeria: The Weight of the Past,” Wilson Center (29 August 2022); Frédéric Bobin, “Nomination de la partie française de la ‘commission mixte d’historiens franco-algérienne’,” Le Monde (26 January 2023).

⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 26.

ANGOLA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2009, 2017, 2020.

On 20 August 2022, the corpse of former President José Eduardo dos Santos (1942–2022; in office between 1979–2017) was repatriated from Spain, where he had died, to Luanda. Coming four days before the national elections, the repatriation was criticized by some as a campaigning tool by sitting President João Lourenço (in office since 2017), who had succeeded Dos Santos as president and chairman of the Movimento Popular de Libertação de Angola (People’s Movement for the Liberation of Angola).⁹

In March 2023, it emerged that official excavations of the remains of those killed during the massacre of 27 May 1977 – a massacre of perhaps as many as 90,000 people used by then President Agostinho Neto and his followers to eliminate thousands of Angolan citizens for alleged involvement in a coup attempt that was never proven [See NCH Annual Report 2016] – were carried out recklessly. In 2018, children of those killed and disappeared in the massacre had set up an association, M27, demanding the truth about what happened, the recovery of their parents’ remains, and the issuing of death certificates.

In 2019, President João Lourenço had established a commission to investigate acts of political violence since independence in 1975, including the events of 1977 and the war with Unita rebels (1975–2002). On 26 May 2021, he had issued a public apology for the massacre and asked for forgiveness for this “great evil.” After an official investigation allegedly identified the remains, M27 members refused to provide their DNA to help identify the remains, insisting on an independent inquiry. Then, the government claimed that the remains of four key figures in the uprising had been found. However, a separate independent team of forensic anthropologists found that the bodies were in fact not connected to them. M27 said that some of the perpetrators were still alive, a few of them with significant roles in Angolan politics today.¹⁰

On 4 April 2023, during a ceremony for the twenty-first anniversary of the end of the Civil War (1975–2002), President João Lourenço decorated a former officer of the secret service who had been accused in multiple testimonies of crimes against humanity, including extrajudicial killings, during the war. This coincided with the posthumous decoration of one of the prime victims of the massacre of 27 May 1977

⁹ “Dos Santos’s Body Arrives in Angola amid Tense Election Campaign,” Al Jazeera (21 August 2022).

¹⁰ Mary Harper, “Angola’s 1977 Massacre: Tragic Twist for Orphans of Mass Killings,” BBC News (25 March 2023); Maarten van Munster & Joris van Wijk, “Mistaken Identities: How Angola’s Reconciliation Process Derailed,” Justiceinfo.net (18 April 2023).

(see above). Lourenço was widely criticized for mixing victims and alleged perpetrators in the same ceremony.¹¹

ARGENTINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2022.

Twenty-eight years after 85 people died and more than 300 were injured in the 1994 bombing of the Asociación Mutual Israelita Argentina Jewish Center, court battles continued. In 2015, prosecutor Alberto Nisman, who had accused then-President Cristina Fernández de Kirchner of covering up Iran's role in the attack, was found dead. In 2018, a court of appeal said that he appeared to have been murdered. Nobody was convicted in connection with his death. In 2021, a federal court dismissed Nisman's accusation, saying that Fernández de Kirchner's actions did not constitute a crime. In August 2022, President Alberto Ángel Fernández said that Nisman had committed suicide and that he hoped that a prosecutor who charged Vice President Fernández de Kirchner with corruption would not do the same [See also NCH Annual Reports 2011, 2014, 2016–2021].¹²

In 2022, Formosa Province authorities denied the pre-colonial existence of the Nivaclé people and thus refused to issue birth certificates and identity cards to its people, especially the elderly. According to civil society organizations, about thirty percent of them remained without identity documents, violating their right to identity and putting them at risk of statelessness.¹³

See also Netherlands, United Kingdom.

ARMENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2006, 2010, 2014–2016.

See Türkiye.

¹¹ Maarten van Munster & Joris van Wijk, "Mistaken Identities: How Angola's Reconciliation Process Derailed," Justiceinfo.net (18 April 2023).

¹² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 37.

¹³ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 76.

AUSTRALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2001, 2003, 2007–2009, 2014–2016, 2018–2022.

In a ground-breaking decision, the United Nations Human Rights Committee (HRC) on 22 September 2022 found that Australia’s failure to adequately protect indigenous Torres Islanders against adverse impacts of climate change violated their rights to culture and privacy. In their complaint, the Islanders had claimed that climate changes had direct harmful consequences on their livelihood, culture, and traditional way of life. Severe flooding had destroyed family graves and left human remains scattered across their islands. They argued that maintaining ancestral graveyards and visiting and communicating with deceased relatives were at the heart of their cultures. In addition, the most important ceremonies, such as coming-of-age and initiation ceremonies, were only culturally meaningful if performed in the community’s native lands. The Islanders also argued that climate changes had reduced the amount of food available from traditional fishing and farming. The HRC took into account the Islanders’ close spiritual connection with their traditional lands, and the dependence of their cultural integrity on the health of their surrounding ecosystems.¹⁴

In [October] 2022, two expert witnesses in the trial against former military lawyer David McBride were not allowed to give testimony because it would allegedly harm public interest. McBride was under prosecution for having leaked documents to ABC News which subsequently lay at the basis of the Brereton Inquiry into war crimes committed by the Australian Defense Force during the War in Afghanistan (2001–2021), that had been published in November 2020 [See also NCH Annual Report 2022]. He faced five charges, including unauthorized disclosure of information and breaching the Defense Act. The McBride trial and the expert witnesses decision were heavily criticized by international lawyers and whistleblower protection organizations.¹⁵

On 27 October 2022, the Court of Appeals ruled that Tim Anderson, a senior lecturer in the Political Economy Department of Sydney University (1998–2019), was unlawfully dismissed in February 2019 for imposing a swastika over an Israeli flag in a slideshow presentation about media coverage of the Palestine conflict. The court found that he was allowed to express even “deeply offensive and insensitive” views under the banner of intellectual freedom as long as they did not harass, vilify, or intimidate anyone. Backed by the National Tertiary Education Union, Anderson had initially lost his lawsuit against Sydney University in November 2020.¹⁶

¹⁴ United Nations Human Rights Committee, Daniel Billy et alii versus Australia (UN Doc. CCPR/C/135/D/3624/2019) (22 September 2022); United Nations Human Rights Committee, “Australia Violated Torres Strait Islanders’ Rights to Enjoy Culture and Family Life, UN Committee Finds” (Press release; 23 September 2022).

¹⁵ Christopher Knaus, “David McBride Will Face Prosecution after Blowing Whistle on Alleged War Crimes in Afghanistan,” Guardian (27 October 2022).

In mid-January 2023, President of Timor-Leste and 1996 Nobel Peace Prize laureate José Ramos-Horta called on the Australian government to finally release secret documents relating to the Indonesian invasion and occupation of his country (1975–1999), particularly to the “Balibo Five.” On 16 October 1975, five Australian television reporters were killed while filming an attack of the Indonesian army on the village of Balibo in the run-up to its impending invasion of the former Portuguese colony of East Timor. There was evidence, unearthed in 2007, that they were executed by members of the Indonesian Special Forces (Kopassus). Intelligence reports showed that Australian officials knew about the Indonesian operation in advance, but the bulk of Australian government archival documents in connection with Balibo, the invasion of East Timor and resulting 24-year occupation were inaccessible for national security reasons. The push to declassify intelligence records about Balibo had been led by Clinton Fernandes, a former Australian army intelligence officer working at the University of New South Wales, Sydney [See also NCH Annual Reports 2001, 2007, 2010–2011, 2014–2015, 2022].¹⁷

On 1 June 2023, Australia’s most-decorated living soldier Ben Roberts-Smith (1978–) lost a defamation case against journalists Nick McKenzie, Chris Masters and David Wroe from newspapers The Sydney Morning Herald, The Age and The Canberra Times who had accused him in a series of 2018 articles of war crimes in Afghanistan. The outlets were sued over articles alleging he killed unarmed prisoners while serving with Australia’s elite Special Air Service Regiment (SAS) in Afghanistan between 2009 and 2012. The civil trial was the first time a court has assessed accusations of war crimes by Australian forces. Justice Anthony Besanko ruled that four of the six murder allegations – all denied by Roberts-Smith – were substantially true. In the wake of the trial, it became known that Roberts-Smith had invoked a special forces code of silence to intimidate witnesses, and also smeared and threatened others. The case came after the landmark Brereton report in November 2020 (see above) found credible evidence that Australian forces had unlawfully killed 39 civilians and prisoners in Afghanistan from 2007 to 2013 [See also NCH Annual Report 2022].¹⁸

¹⁶ “Sydney University Wrong to Fire Lecturer over Swastika on Israeli Flag, Judge Says,” SBS News (28 October 2022).

¹⁷ Chriss Barrett, “‘Long Overdue’: Ramos-Horta Calls on Australia to Release Balibo Files,” Sydney Morning Herald (16 January 2023).

¹⁸ Jamier McKinnell, “Everything You Wanted to Know about Ben Roberts-Smith’s Defamation Case,” ABC News (29 June 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 23–24; Tiffanie Turnbull, “Ben Roberts-Smith: How War Hero’s Defamation Case Has Rocked Australia,” BBC News (31 May 2023); Tiffanie Turnbull, “Ben Roberts-Smith: Top Australian Soldier Loses War Crimes Defamation Case,” BBC News (1 June 2023); Tom Housden & Tiffanie Turnbull, “Ben Roberts-Smith Case: Will Australia See a War Crimes Reckoning?” BBC News (3 June 2023); “Australia: MEAA Welcomes Defamation Judgement on Alleged War Crimes in Afghanistan,” Ifex (4 June 2023); Nicholas Yong, “Ben Roberts-Smith Threatened Witnesses in Defamation Trial, Judge Says,” BBC News (6 June 2023).

See also Iran, Papua New Guinea, United Kingdom, Vietnam.

AUSTRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2005–2007, 2009, 2018, 2020.

See Bosnia-Herzegovina.

AZERBAIJAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–1998, 2008–2013, 2015–2022.

As of 31 December 2022, more than six years after it started, the case against writer of historical novels Akram Aylisli (1937–; pen name of Akram Najaf oglu Naibov) was still ongoing [See NCH Annual Reports 2013, 2016, 2019].¹⁹

¹⁹ International PEN, Case List 2022 (London: PEN, 2023), 61.

BAHRAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2008–2012, 2015–2017, 2021–2022.

BANGLADESH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2019, 2021–2022.

On 15 July 2022, a Hindu temple was vandalized in Narail district, Khulna, after Akash Saha, a Hindu boy who was later arrested, had made a “blasphemous” Facebook post. Five Muslim men were arrested for instigating the violence. The Hindu, Buddhist, Christian Unity Council reported seventy cases of attacks, looting or vandalism of places of worship in 2021.²⁰

BELARUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2000, 2005–2007, 2009–2011, 2014–2022.

The dismissal, arrest and detention of historians and history producers, in the context of the protests against President Aliaksandr Lukashenko’s landslide 9 August 2020 re-election, which the opposition and many governments had denounced as fraudulent, continued in 2022 and 2023 [See also NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022]:

- On 8 July 2021, Andrej Skurko, former editor of newspaper Nasha niva and author of the magazine Nasha historyja (Our History), was detained and charged with creating debts and causing mass disturbance. On 15 March 2022, he was sentenced to 2,5 years in a penal colony. Together with Skurko, authorities arrested Andrei Dynko, chief editor of Nasha historyja, on charges of violating public order. Dynko was released on 21 July 2021, but remained under travel restrictions. Another author for Nasha historyja, Andrej Akuška, was also sentenced to 2,5 years in a penal colony.²¹
- On 17 December 2021, Eduard Palčys, a former history student at Belarusian State University, blogger and founder of the website 1863x.com, where he analyzed historical events and their geopolitical relevance, was sentenced to thirteen years in prison. In March 2022, he was transferred to a high-security “covered prison,” known for its dire conditions, on charges of “disturbing order at the place where the sentence is being served.” As of September 2022, Palčys had spent at least ten days in solitary confinement.²²

²⁰ “Bangladesh Government ‘Failing to Protect Minorities’,” UCA News (19 July 2022).

²¹ PEN Belarus, Monitoring Violations of Cultural Rights and Human Rights of Cultural Figures: Belarus, January–September 2022 (27 October 2022); “Andrei Dynko,” Viasna Human Rights Center ([no date]).

- On 15 March 2022, history student Anastasia Voytovich (Vaitovich) [See NCH Annual Report 2022] was sentenced to three years’ imprisonment for participation in a “human chain.” She had spent almost four months in pre-trial detention and had been declared a political prisoner on 14 December 2021. Voytovich fled Belarus.²³
- On 10 May 2022, it became known that Dzmitry Niachajeu, a third-year student of the Faculty of History at Belarusian State University, had been detained in Minsk for a post on Instagram.²⁴
- On 9 June 2022, Mikita Śliepianok, moderator of the Telegram channel Rezystans (Resistance) for Belarussian history and culture, was sentenced to three years in a high-security penal colony.²⁵
- On 13 September 2022, Evgeny Gurinov, a history Ph.D. student at Belarusian State University, was detained and charged with participation in a protest.²⁶
- On 21 September 2022, fourth-year history student Matsvei Hrankevich (Matvey Grinkevich) [See NCH Annual Report 2022] was sentenced to 26 months’ imprisonment in a strict regime colony and put on the “list of terrorists.”²⁷
- On 8 October 2022, Ihar Baranouski, a local historian from the Brest region and editor of the Greek Catholic Church newspaper Tsarkva, was sentenced to fifteen days of administrative arrest for posting a video of the Belsat TV channel on Facebook (Belsat was considered an “extremist resource” by the authorities). In 2020, Baranouski had been detained for participating in protests against President Lukashenko’s re-election.²⁸
- On 18 October 2022, Sviatlana Silova, a history Ph.D. candidate and associate professor of Hrodna State University, was detained for several days and fined for “storage and distribution of extremist

²² “Eduard Palchys Is a Political Prisoner: Joint Statement by Human Rights Organizations,” Human Rights House (5 October 2016); PEN Belarus, Monitoring Violations of Cultural Rights and Human Rights of Cultural Figures: Belarus, January – September 2022 (27 October 2022).

²³ Belarusian Students’ Association, The State of Academia in Belarus 2021 (Belarusian Students’ Association, February 2022), 13; Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 3 (March 2022), 3; “Anastasiya Vaitovich,” Viasna Human Rights Centre ([22] March 2022); Belarusian Students’ Association, State of Belarusian Academia 2022 (no place: BSA, 2023), 4–5.

²⁴ Belarusian Students’ Association, State of Belarusian Academia 2022 (no place: BSA, 2023), 6.

²⁵ PEN Belarus, Monitoring Violations of Cultural Rights and Human Rights of Cultural Figures: Belarus, January–September 2022 (27 October 2022).

²⁶ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 9 (September 2022), 2.

²⁷ Belarusian Students’ Association, The State of Academia in Belarus 2021 (Belarusian Students’ Association, February 2022), 16; Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 9 (September 2022), 1; Belarusian Students’ Association, State of Belarusian Academia 2022 (no place: BSA, 2023), 7.

²⁸ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 11 (November 2022), 3.

materials.” Later that month, she was dismissed. The reason remained vague. Silova was the most important researcher of Belarussian confessional history.²⁹

- In October 2022, the State Security Committee of the Republic of Belarus (KGB) added Andrei Petrovsky, a history and social science teacher at the Smorgon gymnasium, to the lists of persons “involved in extremist activities.” In March [2022], Petrovsky had shown 11th-graders a video titled “The Constitution has gone into prostitution.” One of his students then denounced him to the authorities, and he was sentenced to eighteen months in a penal colony for “defamation of the President.”³⁰
- In [November or December] 2022, Siarhei Kozel, a history teacher at secondary school No. 30 in Minsk, was detained. He remained in detention as of January 2023. The reason for his detention was unknown.³¹
- On 30 November 2022, Vitold Yermalionak, a local historian, teacher, and head of the museum association Heritage of the Miory Region, was detained in Miory, Vitebsk, together with his son. The reason for their detention was unknown.³²
- On 14 December 2022, Vitali Mohuchau, a history teacher at Minsk State College of Architecture and Civil Engineering, was detained. The reasons for the detention, as well as Mohuchau’s whereabouts, were unknown.³³
- On 5 and 6 January 2023, two first-year students at the Faculty of History of the Belarussian State University were detained. One of them, Aliaksei Ramanovich, was accused of participating in a strike at Lida Gymnasium in 2020. Both were fined.³⁴
- On 9 January 2023, a history student (name unknown) at the Faculty of History of Belarussian State University, was detained while participating in an exam, and released the same day.³⁵
- On 13 January 2023, a tourist group (about eighty people) and its guides were detained. Among the guides were a history teacher (name unknown), an assistant at the department of economic history of Belarussian State Economic University (name unknown), and Ivan Satsukevich, a specialist in the history of Minsk. All tourists were reportedly released after five hours, the guides were detained for 72 hours. The reason for their detention was unknown.³⁶

²⁹ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 10 (October 2022), 1. Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 11 (November 2022), 3.

³⁰ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 10 (October 2022), 1.

³¹ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 1 (January 2023), 2.

³² Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 12 (December 2022), 5.

³³ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 12 (December 2022), 5.

³⁴ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 1 (January 2023), 3.

³⁵ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 1 (January 2023), 3.

³⁶ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 1 (January 2023), 2.

- On 3 March 2023, Ales Bialiatski (Alieś Bialiacki) (1962–), human rights activist, scholar of the history of Belarusian literature and winner of the 2022 Nobel Peace Prize alongside Memorial and the Ukrainian Center for Civil Liberties (see below under Russia), was sentenced to ten years in prison for “actions grossly violating public order.” Bialiatski had previously been sentenced to 4,5 years in prison on charges of tax evasion in August 2011 and had been arrested on 14 July 2021 on the same charges together with two colleagues from the Viasna Human Rights Center.³⁷
- On 18 April 2023, two students from the Faculty of History of Belarusian State University, Safia Helman and Daniil Karankevich, were arrested. Helman received ten days of administrative arrest for unknown reasons. After the arrest, security forces released a video of Karankevich in which he allegedly claimed to have participated in a 2020 protest against the re-election of President Lukashenko.³⁸
- On 30 May 2023, journalist and local historian Jaŭhien Mierkis was sentenced to four years of imprisonment in a penal colony for “facilitating” and “participating” in an “extremist organization” for his documentation of the 2020 protests.³⁹

In early December 2021, Larysa Shchytrakova ([1974]–), a historian by education and a freelance journalist working for Belsat TV channel and the human rights website Gomel Spring, was put in pre-trial detention [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. Her son was placed in a “social pedagogical center.” Shchytrakova had previously been working on a project to document the testimonies of the families of Soviet-era dissidents, The Murdered and the Forgotten.⁴⁰

Throughout 2022, military cemeteries of Polish soldiers were repeatedly vandalized, with no one held to account. In early July 2022, authorities destroyed a memorial for soldiers of the Home Army – Poland’s underground resistance movement that fought the Soviet and Nazi occupiers during World War II in unison with the London-based government-in-exile, and is believed to have consisted of between 200,000 and 600,000 people – in Mikulishki, Grodno, with 22 crosses being removed and the memorial razed to the ground. Furthermore, on 25 August, authorities allegedly demolished a memorial

³⁷ PEN Belarus, Monitoring Violations of Cultural Rights and Human Rights of Cultural Figures: Belarus, January–September 2022 (27 October 2022); “Belarus: Trial against Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Ales Bialiatski a ‘Shameful Pretense’ of Justice,” Amnesty International (5 January 2023); Andrew Osborn, “Belarus Jails Nobel Winner Bialiatski for 10 Years; EU, US Protest,” Reuters (3 March 2023).

³⁸ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 4 (April 2023), 4.

³⁹ PEN Belarus, Monitoring Violations of Cultural Rights and Human Rights of Cultural Figures: Belarus, January–September 2022 (27 October 2022); “Яўген Меркіс,” Viasna Human Rights Center ([no date]).

⁴⁰ Larysa Shchytrakova & Yauhen Mierkis, “Fear and Loathing in Belarus,” Index on Censorship, 50 no. 1 (2021), 24–25; Index on Censorship, Newsletter (13 January 2022).

site containing graves of Home Army fighters in Surkonty: a day after Polish authorities announced that they would remove a monument to Soviet Red Army soldiers, which did not contain any graves.⁴¹

Throughout 2022, authorities targeted schools, bookshops and publishing houses teaching, selling or publishing in Belarusian (despite its status as an official language), regarding it as language of the political opposition. Belarusian-speaking activists, academics, literary and cultural figures and tour guides faced arbitrary arrest. Between January and September 2022, PEN Belarus found 94 violations against sites of historical and cultural heritage or the Belarusian language. On 3 September 2022, a Commission monitoring the quality of books was created. Its main task was to control bookstores for the “ideological component and artistic quality” of their products. In the third quarter of 2022, six books were added to a list of “extremist materials,” including Anatol Taras’s A Short Course of the History of Belarus of the IX–XXI Centuries. On 9 January 2023, the Central District Court of Minsk ruled that twelve books on Belarussian history were “extremist materials.” Most of them were related to the “Great Patriotic War” (1941–1945) [See also NCH Annual Report 2022].⁴²

In February 2022, immediately after the Russian invasion of Ukraine, a controversial constitutional referendum took place to introduce into the Basic Law, amongst other provisions, the following: “Article 15: The State shall be responsible for the preservation of the historical, cultural and spiritual heritage and the free development of the cultures of all ethnic communities living in the Republic of Belarus. The State ensures the preservation of historical truth and memory of the heroic feat of the Belarusian people during the Great Patriotic War”; “Article 32: Parents or persons in loco parentis have the ... duty to ... instil culture and respect for the laws, historical and national traditions of Belarus. ... Children may be separated from their family against the will of their parents and other persons in loco parentis only on the basis of a court decision if the parents or other persons in loco parentis fail to fulfil their duties”; and “Article 54: Everyone is obliged to protect the historical, cultural, spiritual heritage and other national values. The manifestation of patriotism, the preservation of the historical memory of the heroic past of the Belarusian people are the duty of every citizen of the Republic of Belarus” [See also NCH Annual Report 2022]. The constitutional amendment was clearly inspired by the June 2020 changes in the Russian Constitution [See NCH Annual Report 2021].⁴³

⁴¹ Alicja Ptak, “Poland Lodges Protest over Demolition of WWII Soldiers’ Cemetery in Belarus,” Notes from Poland (6 July 2022); “Poland Says WWII Grave Destroyed by Russian Ally Belarus,” Al Jazeera (25 August 2022); Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 89.

⁴² PEN Belarus, Monitoring Violations of Cultural Rights and Human Rights of Cultural Figures: Belarus, January–September 2022 (27 October 2022); Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 1 (January 2023), 4; Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 91.

⁴³ European Commission for Democracy through Law (“Venice Commission”), Belarus: Draft Amendments and Additions to the Constitution of the Republic of Belarus (Opinion No. 1054/2021) (CDL-REF(2022)007)

A September 2022 publication listed the following among recent examples of arbitrary arrest in Belarus: speaking Belarusian on the street; providing a small independent historical city tour free of charge; opening a book shop with Belarusian history books and literature; singing a Ukrainian song in public; or posting pictures with the historical “red-white-red” flag of Belarus. One could be punished with five-to-eight years of imprisonment for stating that the USSR and Germany illegally attacked Poland in 1939, or for denying and trivializing the “genocide of the Belarusian people” during 1941–1945 and up and until December 1951 [See also NCH Annual Report 2022]. In November 2022, the Interior Ministry banned the use of the traditional salute “Long Live Belarus,” adding it to the list of “Nazi symbols and paraphernalia.”⁴⁴

On 1 September 2022, President Aliaksandr Lukashenko, who has a history degree, held an open four-hour history lecture for high school students and students at the Palace of Independence. During the lecture, he threatened Denis Znak, a first-year biology student who had asked a critical question related to the 2020 protests.⁴⁵

On 3 September 2022, Belsat camerawoman and graduate from the Faculty of History and Philology of Mahiliou State University, Darya Chultsova was released after having served a full sentence in a women’s penal colony in Homiel for covering a memorial service in November 2020 [See NCH Annual Report 2022].⁴⁶

See also Russia.

BELGIUM

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2008, 2010–2012, 2021–2022.

On 31 December 2022, the mandate of the parliamentary Commission spéciale chargée d’examiner l’État Indépendant du Congo et le passé colonial de la Belgique au Congo, au Rwanda et au Burundi (Special Commission on the Colonial Past) on the history of the colonization of Congo (by King Leopold II in the Congo Free State in 1885–1908 and by Belgium in 1908–1960), and Rwanda–Urundi (Strasbourg: 14 February 2021); Ulad Belavusau, “The “Year of Historical Memory” and Mnemonic Constitutionalism in Belarus,” Verfassungsblog (8 September 2022).

⁴⁴ Ulad Belavusau, “The “Year of Historical Memory” and Mnemonic Constitutionalism in Belarus,” Verfassungsblog (8 September 2022); Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 91.

⁴⁵ Belarusian Students’ Association, State of Belarusian Academia 2022 (no place: BSA, 2023), 15–16.

⁴⁶ “Belsat Journalist Darya Chultsova Released After Two Years in Penal Colony,” Belsat (4 September 2022).

(as trust and mandate territories, 1922–1962) ended and was not renewed, even though none of its recommendations were accepted. In October 2021, the commission had published its 689-page report, and issued 128 recommendations, including the establishment of a remembrance day, the erection of a monument to the victims of “human zoos,” the declassification of archives and the issuing of an official apology to the victims of colonialism. However, on 19 December 2022, a majority in parliament voted against the issuing of an apology, reportedly out of fear that it could lead to reparation lawsuits. It remained unclear how the government would respond to the commission’s other recommendations [See also NCH Annual Report 2022].⁴⁷

On 4 July 2023, in Hurbain versus Belgium, the European Court of Human Rights ruled, twelve votes to five, that the order to a newspaper publisher to anonymize the online archived version of a lawful article published twenty years earlier, on grounds of the “right to be forgotten” of the individual responsible for a fatal accident was not a violation of the outlet’s freedom of expression. In 2013 daily newspaper Le Soir was ordered in a civil judgment to anonymize, on grounds of the “right to be forgotten,” the electronic archived version of an article originally published in 1994 in the newspaper’s print edition and placed online in 2008. The article mentioned the full name of G., the driver responsible for a fatal road-traffic accident. The applicant appealed, without success. In a judgment of 22 June 2021 [See NCH Annual Report 2022 under Italy), a Chamber of the Court held, by six votes to one, that there had been no violation of Article 10. On 11 October 2021 the case was referred to the Grand Chamber at Le Soir’s request.⁴⁸

See also Bosnia-Herzegovina, Congo (Democratic Republic), Guatemala, Rwanda.

BELIZE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

⁴⁷ Gaëlle Ponselet, “Belgian Colonial Past: Commission Fails on Apology to Victims,” Justiceinfo.net (19 January 2023); Julia Crawford, “Colonial Crimes: The Reparations Movement Stalls in Europe,” Justiceinfo.net (11 April 2023).

⁴⁸ European Court of Human Rights, Hurbain versus Belgium: Judgment (Application no. 57292/16) (2021); European Court of Human Rights (Grand Chamber), Hurbain versus Belgium: Judgment (Application no. 57292/16) (2023).

BENIN

Previous Annual Report entries: –.

In November 2021, 26 artworks stolen by French colonists from the then Kingdom of Dahomey during the First (1890) and Second Franco-Dahomean Wars (1892–1894) were restituted. The artworks were supposed to be exhibited at a museum in a former Portuguese fort in Ouidah. However, from [January 2023] onward they were stored instead in boxes at the Marina Palace, the official residence of President Patrice Talon. It remained unclear when they would be moved elsewhere. The artworks were scheduled to be permanently housed at the Museum of the Kings and Amazons of Dahomey in Abomey, which was supposed to be ready at the end of 2022, but not expected to open before January 2024.⁴⁹

BOLIVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2022.

In 2022, the authorities made insufficient efforts to hold accountable officials responsible for human rights violations under authoritarian governments between 1964–1982. Only a handful had been prosecuted. The armed forces generally refused to share information. After camping outside the Justice Ministry for more than a decade, several victims' associations signed an agreement with the government in August 2022, in which the Luis Arce administration (2020–) committed itself to reparation payments to victims or family members of various authoritarian-era abuses.⁵⁰

On 17 October 2022, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR) ordered the government to open military archives concerning a case of assassination and forced disappearance. In the judgment Flores Bedregal versus Bolivia, the IACHR found Bolivia responsible for the 1980 disappearance of activist Juan Carlos Flores Bedregal and emphasized that it had an obligation to guarantee the right to the truth and the right to access information by releasing military documents. In the case of historical human rights investigations, successive governments had routinely denied access to military and police records to families of the disappeared, official truth commissions, and even State prosecutors.⁵¹

⁴⁹ Kate Brown, "Twenty-Six Royal Objects Looted from Benin by French Soldiers Are Going on View in Paris – Briefly – before Being Returned," Art News (25 October 2021); Rachida Houssou, "Why Treasures Returned to Benin Are Still in Boxes," Justiceinfo.net (7 April 2023).

⁵⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 83.

⁵¹ Inter-American Court of Human Rights, Caso Flores Bedregal y otras versus Bolivia: sentencia (2022); National Security Archive, "State of Bolivia Must Guarantee Right to Truth in Forced Disappearance Case" (24 January 2023).

BOSNIA and HERZEGOVINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2022.

On 8 July 2022, a report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence assessed the official measures adopted to address the atrocities committed during the 1991–1995 armed conflict. It stressed the inadequacy of reparation measures, memorialization processes and history teaching, and measures aimed at promoting inter-ethnic understanding, combating discrimination and curbing incendiary nationalisms, while warning about the tangible risks that these deficiencies posed to peace in the country [See also NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022].⁵²

In [October] 2022, the Institute for Research of Genocide Canada launched a petition to prevent Serbian-Canadian film director Boris Malagurski’s documentary “Republika Srpska: The Struggle for Freedom” to premiere in Germany, Switzerland, Austria, Belgium, and the Netherlands, because it allegedly denied the 1995 Srebrenica genocide and questioned the legitimacy of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and the United Nations. Malagurski denied the claims. As of 13 October, the petition had been signed more than 15,000 times, leading to the cancelation of four screenings.⁵³

BOTSWANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

BRAZIL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2022.

On 8 January 2023, when in the aftermath of the October 2022 presidential elections thousands of rioters ransacked the presidential palace in the capital Brasilia, large parts of the historical art collection –

⁵² United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence, Visit to Bosnia and Herzegovina (UN Doc. A/HRC/51/34/Add.2) (8 July 2022).

⁵³ Azem Kurtic, “Petition Targets Bosnian Serb History Film for ‘Genocide Denial’,” Balkan Insight (13 October 2022).

accumulated since the presidency of Juscelino Kubitschek (1956–1961), when the capital was built – suffered irreparable damage. It included paintings and wooden and bronze sculptures.⁵⁴

On 24 May 2023, Google removed a highly controversial game called Simulador de Escravidão (slavery simulator) from its app store, after it caused much outrage. The app, launched by Magnus Games on 20 April 2023, allowed players to “exchange, buy and sell slaves” and to inflict various forms of torture on black characters. The game was widely condemned as violent, cruel, criminal, hateful, and racist. The office of the Public Prosecutor opened an investigation into how the game had been allowed to be placed in the app store. More than four million enslaved people were taken to Brazil in the course of its history. In 1822, 1.5 million of the 3.5 million people living in Brazil were enslaved. Slavery was abolished in 1888 only.⁵⁵

See also Lebanon, Ukraine.

BULGARIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2002, 2006, 2009, 2012, 2015–2017, 2019–2020, 2022.

See North Macedonia.

BURKINA FASO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2004, 2005, 2013, 2015–2018, 2021–2022.

On [Sunday 23 May] 2021, also known by Christians as Pentecost, extremists destroyed the Parish Saint Paul church in Sandikpenga, Est Region, in an arson attack. On 8 November 2021, the International Missionaries Society reported that 552 evangelical churches had closed in the Est Region. On 12 February 2022, armed men suspected to be Islamist militants severely damaged the St. Kisito de Bougui seminary in Bougui. On 29 August 2022, a group of 700 imams and Muslim preachers denounced “religious and ethnic intolerance” and urged to “promote national reconciliation.”⁵⁶

⁵⁴ “Brazil Protests: Artwork Suffers Damage Beyond Repair,” BBC News (9 January 2023).

⁵⁵ Matt Murphy, “Google Removes ‘Slavery Simulator’ Game amid Outrage in Brazil,” BBC News (26 May 2023).

BURUNDI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2015, 2017–2021.

Throughout 2022, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) continued to exhume the bodies of victims of the 1972 Ikiza (“Catastrophe”) or Ubwicanyi (“killings”) – a series of mass killings, often characterized as a genocide, by the Tutsi dominated armed forces against primarily the Hutu population, leading to the death of between 100,000 and 300,000 people – using contested methods. The TRC had for a long time been accused by local human rights groups and international actors of having a bias toward portraying the Hutu population as the sole victims of the killings, in line with the historical narrative of the governing party Conseil national pour la défense de la démocratie – Forces pour la défense de la démocratie (CNDD–FDD; National Council for the Defense of Democracy – Forces for the Defense of Democracy).

In March 2022, the TRC proposed a genocide denial bill to punish anyone who denied that a genocide against the Hutu people had taken place in 1972. Amnesty International expressed concern that the bill would further restrict the already shrinking civic space and repress the right to freedom of expression.⁵⁷

On 7 September 2022, General Gervais Ndirakobuca, who was under international sanctions and under investigation of the International Criminal Court for his alleged role in the 2015 election violence, was unanimously confirmed as prime minister. During the Civil War (1993–2005), in which approximately 300,000 people were killed, he served as a rebel commander, being nicknamed “Ndakugarika” (“I will kill you”) [See also NCH Annual Report 2022].⁵⁸

⁵⁶ United States Department of State, 2021 Report on International Religious Freedom: Burkina Faso (2 June 2022); “Attack on Minor Seminary in Burkina Faso,” Vatican News (12 February 2022); “700 Imams Denounce ‘Religious and Ethnic Intolerance’,” Africa News (29 August 2022).

⁵⁷ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 107, 109.

⁵⁸ “President Appoints New PM after Warning of ‘Coup’ Plot,” Africa News (7 September 2022).

CAMBODIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2018, 2020–2022.

On 22 September 2022, the Extraordinary Chambers in the Court of Cambodia (also known as the Khmer Rouge Tribunal), a hybrid court made up of Cambodian and United Nations judges set up in 2006 to prosecute violations of international criminal law, including crimes against humanity and genocide, committed by the Khmer Rouge regime in Democratic Kampuchea (1975–1979), held its final session. Throughout its existence, the court had been severely hampered by government non-cooperation and interference, and by internal disagreement [See NCH Annual Reports 2008, 2010, 2012–2014, 2016], having resulted in only three convictions: Khieu Samphan, former Khmer Rouge chairman; Nuon Chea, chief ideologist and highest Khmer Rouge leader after Pol Pot; and Kaing Guek Eav (also known as Duch), former commandant of the Tuol Sleng prison, where approximately 16,000 people had been tortured and killed. All had been sentenced to life in prison. Ieng Sary (1925–2013), Deputy Prime Minister and former history teacher, died before his trial ended.⁵⁹

CAMEROON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2012–2014, 2016, 2020–2021.

On 26 July 2022, French President Emmanuel Macron announced the creation of a commission of historians to “shed light” on the Guerre du Cameroun (1955–1964; War of Cameroon) and the opening of all related archives (see below). The announcement was criticized by historian Jacob Tatsitsa as politically motivated and as ignoring research that had already been done on several massacres of Cameroonian nationalists during the war. He further noticed the difficulty of accessing French archives for Cameroonian researchers due to the high costs and difficulties in obtaining a visa.⁶⁰

In late February 2023, the Société camerounaise d’histoire (Cameroon Historical Society) criticized the Commission chargée de travailler sur l’action de la France au Cameroun pendant la colonisation et après l’indépendance du pays (Commission to Study France’s Activities in Cameroon during the Colonial Period and after the Independence of the Country; nicknamed the “Commission Mémoire,” Memory

⁵⁹ AP, “After 16 Years and 3 Convictions, an International Tribunal Closes Down in Cambodia,” NPR (22 September 2022).

⁶⁰ Séverine Kodjo-Grandvaux, “Cameroun: ‘La création d’une commission d’historiens est un stratagème pour contourner la reconnaissance des massacres coloniaux’,” Le Monde (interview with Jacob Tatsitsa; 3 August 2022).

Commission) after French President Emmanuel Macron appointed its two co-presidents, French historian Karine Ramondy for the historical part and Cameroonian singer Blick Bassy for the heritage component. The criticism was directed at the fact that Macron was the sole initiator (while Cameroonian President Paul Biya had been left aside) and that a singer was the co-president of a historical commission. The criticism came after an official initiative to write a large-scale six-volume L'Histoire générale du Cameroun, presented by Minister of Arts and Culture Pierre Ismael Bidoung Mpkwat in August 2020, had stalled without explanation and after the official authorization of several history textbooks for use in the secondary schools had dragged on for several years. The Memory Commission was due to complete its work by the end of 2024 and had been promised access to all relevant French archives (taken to France after Cameroon's independence in 1960). Tens of thousands of people died during the war that raged in the period studied by the Memory Commission (1945–1971).⁶¹

CANADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000, 2002–2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2009, 2012–2022.

In an April 2023 submission to the United Nations Universal Periodic Review on the Right to Information in Canada, it was reported that the federal Access to Information Act (ATIA) did not apply to the Prime Minister, the Cabinet and affiliated committees, and to non-official information in the archives, National Gallery of Canada, and numerous national museums. The ATIA also excluded “confidences of the Queen’s Privy Council for Canada,” also known as Cabinet confidences.⁶²

See also Bosnia-Herzegovina, Ethiopia, France, Greece, Vatican.

⁶¹ Valentin Zinga, “Cameroun: La ‘Commission mémoire’ sur le rôle de la France relance le débat sur l’enseignement de l’histoire,” RFI (28 February 2023); Elise Lambert, “Guerre du Cameroun: L’Ouverture des archives suffira-t-elle à ‘faire la lumière’ sur les responsabilités de la France?” Franceinfo (19 March 2023).

⁶² Centre for Law and Democracy and Others, Submission to Session 44 of the Universal Periodic Review on the Right to Information in Canada (Halifax: CLD, 2023), §§ 11, 23.

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2009, 2011–2012, 2014–2022.

On 31 October 2022, the Special Criminal Court (SCC) – a hybrid court set up in 2015 to investigate and prosecute human rights violations, notably genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes committed since 2003 – found three former members of the 3R (Return, Reclamation and Rehabilitation) armed group guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity committed in 2019. The verdict, the first by the SCC, was hailed as a landmark in providing justice and accountability for crimes committed in the country.⁶³

CHAD

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2015–2016.

On 19 September 2022, the head of the military junta, Mahamat Idriss Déby (1984–), son of the late President Idriss Déby (1952–2021; in power between 1990–2021), announced the allocation of 10 billion CFA francs (€ 15,2 million) to the Compensation Fund for Victims – one of the recommendations of the 2022 National Dialogue – to issue reparations to the victims of human rights violations during the reign of President and war crime convict Hissène Habré (1942–2021; in power between 1982–1990). However, the money, as well as a 5 million dollar allocation by the African Union, amounted to only one sixth of the reparations awarded by a 2016 Extraordinary African Chambers verdict.

Also in September, Clément Abaïfouta, one of the main representatives of the victims and member of the Fund’s board of directors, was threatened by a supporter of President Habré during the National Dialogue.⁶⁴

⁶³ Virginia Pietromarchi, “CAR: ‘Historic’ Trial Kicks Off, But Not Without Challenges,” Al Jazeera (25 April 2022); “CAR War Crimes Trial Postponed for Second Time,” Al Jazeera (26 April 2022); Vianney Ingasso, “Central African Republic: Special Criminal Court Hands Down First Judgment,” Justiceinfo.net (1 November 2022).

⁶⁴ “Chad Starts ‘National Dialogue’ to Pave Way for Elections,” Al Jazeera (20 August 2022); Franck Petit, “Chad’s President Promises to Compensate Habré Victims,” Justiceinfo.net (14 October 2022).

CHILE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2022.

The courts continued to try agents of Augusto Pinochet’s dictatorship (1973–1990) for human rights abuses. In June 2022, former military officer Miguel Krassnoff and two former police officers were convicted in the 1975 homicide of a teacher. It was the eightieth conviction for Krassnoff, who participated in the assault on the presidential house during the September 1973 coup against former President Salvador Allende, and it raised his prison sentence to 900 years for crimes against humanity.⁶⁵

In March 2023, President Gabriel Boric announced the National Search Plan to find and identify the people who “disappeared” during Augusto Pinochet’s dictatorship (1973–1990) and prosecute those responsible. It was the first time that a government backed a permanent search effort. More than 3,000 people were killed and an estimated 40,000 tortured during the dictatorship, with up to 1469 people still missing. As of December 2022, 1482 criminal cases against ex-agents of the dictatorship were going on, but there existed no central body where the information was stored and could be analyzed, causing delays. In February 2023, an investigation found that the Servicio Médico Legal (Legal Medical Service), responsible for forensic testing, had left 89 boxes of dictatorship-era evidence, including unidentified human remains, in a basement where they had been damaged by water and mold.⁶⁶

See also United States.

CHINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2022.

On 11 August 2022, the Ground Up Film Society removed the award-winning film Losing Side of a Longed Place – scheduled to be screened on a two-day festival two days later – after its director refused to yield to demands of the Office for Film, Newspaper and Article Administration to remove a scene, lasting less than a second, depicting the 2014 pro-democracy Umbrella Movement in Hong Kong.⁶⁷

⁶⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 147.

⁶⁶ Charis McGowan, “Chile Takes on ‘Moral Duty’ of Finding the Disappeared of Pinochet Regime,” Guardian (17 April 2023).

⁶⁷ Hillary Leung, “Hong Kong Film Dropped from Festival after Censors Object to Umbrella Movement Scene Lasting Under a Second,” Hong Kong Free Press (12 August 2022); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 151.

On 27 October 2022, while teaching an undergraduate class, Xu Songyan, a professor at Southwest University in Chongqing and an expert in Greek history, was eavesdropped on by a student who claimed to be an “information officer” and who notified him to prepare a report. The social media post in which Xu reported the incident on 28 October was later deleted [See also NCH Annual Report 2021 under Shen Zhihua].⁶⁸

On 28 October 2022, Liu Hanbo (?–2022), a history teacher at Xinzheng No. 3 High School in central Henan province, ostensibly suffered a heart attack and died. In the two weeks before her death, a group of hackers calling themselves baopo lieshou (“bombers and hunters”) had repeatedly (on 12, 21, and 28 October) targeted her online classes with more than two hundred students to hurl abuse, play loud music, and spam the chat window. On 2 November 2022, the Xinzheng City’s education bureau announced that it would investigate the cyberbullying.⁶⁹

On 20 April 2023, Taiwan-based book publisher Li Yanhe (pen name: Fucha) “disappeared” and was allegedly detained by Chinese authorities after he had traveled to Shanghai to visit relatives. Li was the founder of Gusa Publishing, known for publishing books on politically sensitive topics including the 1989 Tiananmen Square Massacre. On 22 April, more than forty writers, academics and journalists published a statement to support a call by Gusa Publishing and PEN America for his release.⁷⁰

From 26 April 2023, a fragment of a new history textbook for Grade 8 uploaded on online platform Douyin by a [history] teacher sparked massive criticism online for not being truthful enough in depicting the government’s response to the pandemic. The textbook, published by major textbook publisher People’s Education Press, carried a text box entitled “War on Covid,” reading: “Our country ... protected people’s life safety and health to the largest extent ... We achieved major achievements in coordinating the prevention and control of the pandemic.”⁷¹

In May 2023, XiaoGuo Comedy, China’s largest talk show company, was fined 13.35 million yuan (US$ 1.8 million) because it had hired stand-up comedian Li Haoshi. Li was likely to be charged with intentionally tarnishing the image of the military and violating the 2021 Law on the Protection of the Status and Rights and Interests of Military Personnel of China in one of his performances. On 13 May ⁶⁸ Yojana Sharma, “New Research Exposes Power of Classroom Informant System,” University World News (23 March 2023).

⁶⁹ Cao Yin, “Bullying a Concern as Teacher Dies after Online Class,” Asia News Network (4 November 2022); “Cyberbullies, a Teacher’s Death, and a Classroom Seeking Answers,” Beijing Youth Daily (18 November 2022).

⁷⁰ Helen Davidson & Chi Hui Lin, “Fears Grow for Taiwan Book Publisher Believed Held in China,” Guardian (24 April 2023).

⁷¹ Fan Wang, “China: History Textbook’s ‘Covid War’ Mention Sparks Discussion,” BBC News (26 April 2023).

2023, in a punchline, Li had compared the People's Liberation Army with stray dogs chasing a squirrel and mocked a political slogan first used by President Xi Jinping in 2013. The punchline alluded to a scene in the 1956 propaganda film Battle on Shangganling Mountain, in which People's Volunteer Army soldiers in the Korean War (1950–1953) chased squirrels for fun in between battles. The joke was recorded by an audience member and posted on the Sina Weibo platform, leading to criticism, boycott calls and sanctions despite Li's apologies.⁷²

On 27 May 2023, Hui Muslims clashed with police over the planned demolition of the dome of the thirteenth-century Najiaying mosque in Nagu, Tonghai County, Yunnan (southern China). A 2020 court judgment had ruled that the mosque's restored domed roof as well as some minarets were illegal, ordering them to be removed. Recent actions to carry out the order probably sparked the demonstrations. Dozens were arrested.

In 2018, hundreds of Hui Muslims in the Ningxia region, northern China, had engaged in a protracted standoff with authorities to prevent their mosque from being demolished. Authorities later relented but insisted that its Arabesque features must be altered. Also in 2018, three mosques in Yunnan were shut down for what was deemed to be "illegal religious education" [See also NCH Annual Report 2020 under Tibet].⁷³

In the lead-up to the 34th anniversary of the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre on 4 June 2023, authorities restricted the movement and communication of activists and members of the Tiananmen Mothers, a group of relatives of victims of the massacre [See NCH Annual Reports 2004–2006, 2008–2009, 2017]. On 27 May 2023, the Tiananmen Mothers released a statement reiterating their call for "truth, compensation and accountability." On the same day, authorities detained activist Chen Siming in Hunan province, because he refused to delete a tweet in which he commemorated the 1989 massacre. In Shandong, police summoned activist Qi Chonghuai and warned him not to participate in any commemorations.

In April 2023, a Hangzhou Court had tried activist and participant in the 1989 pro-democracy movement Xu Guang for "picking quarrels and provoking trouble" after he had gone to a local police station to demand the government to acknowledge the massacre. The verdict had yet to be announced.

In June 2023, searches on internet search engine Baidu for the Sitong Bridge in Beijing returned the message: no related places were found. On 12 October 2022, white banners with large red characters criticizing the Chinese Communist Party had been hung over the bridge by Peng Lifa, who had been detained by police and “disappeared” shortly after. The banners at Sitong Bridge were particularly sensitive because the character for “Si” is the same as that for four, one of a combination of numbers forbidden to search for in the lead-up to the 4 June anniversary [See also NCH Annual Report 2022]. The anniversary was sometimes known as “internet maintenance day” because of the number of websites taken offline.

⁷² Qian Gong & Jian Xu, "This Is No Joke," Index on Censorship, 52 no. 2 (2023), 20–22; Qian Gong & Jian Xu, "This Is No Joke," Index on Censorship (31 May 2023).

⁷³ Nicholas Yong, "Yunnan Protest: Mosque Closure Sees Clashes with Security Forces," BBC News (30 May 2023).

A new museum dedicated to the Tiananmen Square massacre opened in New York. Despite its location, there were security fears for the museum’s workers.⁷⁴

Hong Kong

Between 2020 and 2022, fearing threats on religious freedom, the Vatican had transferred half a ton of files from its Hong Kong archive to Rome. The files contained private communications with underground mainland clerics, missionary activity, and details of persecution of Catholics in the mainland.⁷⁵

In late April 2023, an official government report concluded that the Leisure and Cultural Services Department had to increase its efforts to “examin[e] library materials for safeguarding national security” in Hong Kong libraries. In November 2021, research by the Hong Kong Free Press had found that since 2010, public libraries had removed 29 out of 149 books about the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre from their shelves, and of the other 120 only 26 were displayed and immediately available for borrowing.

As of May 2023, authorities had removed hundreds of other titles from public libraries as well. These included all the books authored by Hui Po-keung, a former associate professor at the Department of Cultural Studies at Lingnan University [See below and NCH Annual Report 2022]. Ma Ngok, an associate professor at the Department of Government and Public Administration at the Chinese University in Hong Kong, also had all his books removed. These included “An Oral History of the Democratic Movement of Hong Kong in the 1980s” (2012), consisting of interviews with ten key democrats of the 1980s. Authorities had also removed “The Secret Journal of Zhao Ziyang” (2009), based on a secret recording of former General Secretary of the Communist Party of China (1987–1989), in which he looked back upon the 1989 Tiananmen massacre and his attempts at political reform [See NCH Annual Reports 1998–1999, 2005, 2007, 2009, 2017, 2019].⁷⁶

⁷⁴ “China: Acknowledge Tiananmen Massacre,” Human Rights Watch (1 June 2023); Amy Hawkins, “Chinese Censors Remove Protest Site Sitong Bridge from Online Maps,” Guardian (2 June 2023); Francis Clarke, “Tiananmen Massacre Anniversary: Don’t Mention It,” Index on Censorship (7 June 2023).

⁷⁵ Congressional-Executive Commission on China, Hong Kong’s Civil Society: From an Open City to a City of Fear (3 October 2022), 37–38.

⁷⁶ Selina Cheng, “Hong Kong Public Libraries Purge 29 Titles about the Tiananmen Massacre from the Shelves,” Hong Kong Free Press (21 November 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022

In June 2022, authorities announced new textbooks for secondary students in Hong Kong [See NCH Annual Report 2022], in which most mentions of the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre had been scrapped and nothing was said about the annual vigil to commemorate the massacre at Victoria Park, that had been banned by authorities since 2020 [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2022].⁷⁷

The July 2022 annual Hong Kong Book Fair turned down the application from at least three independent booksellers who had published works by participants of the 2019 pro-democracy protests. Books about the 1989 massacre were completely absent.⁷⁸

On 10 September 2022, five speech therapists in Hong Kong, charged in 2021 under the colonial-era sedition law, were found guilty of publishing a series of “seditious” children’s books, called Yangcun, and given a prison sentence of 19 months (they had already spent more than a year in prison awaiting the verdict). In one of the books, a village of sheep fights back against a group of wolves trying to take over their settlement, in what was seen by some as a reference to the attempt of the Hong Kong’s pro-democracy movement to maintain Hong Kong’s autonomy against the Chinese government. The authors argued that the books chronicled “history from the people’s perspective.” In January 2023, police arrested a student for sedition after he posted a download link of the Yangcun series on Facebook. On 13 March 2023, two persons were arrested for merely possessing the books; they were released on bail but forced to report regularly to the police.⁷⁹

On 19 September 2022, a Hong Kong man of 43 years [name unknown] who went to the British consulate to pay tribute to Queen Elizabeth II, was detained under the colonial-era sedition law for playing several songs on his harmonica, including “Glory to Hong Kong,” the unofficial anthem of protesters during the 2019 pro-democracy protests, as well as the British national anthem. A large crowd, which had gathered to watch an online live broadcast of the Queen’s State funeral in the United Kingdom, was seen singing along to the tune of “Glory.” The song’s lyrics made reference to the “tears on our land,” and also mentioned “democracy and liberty.” In [December] 2022, authorities pressured Google to delete “Glory” from the top results for users searching for Hong Kong’s anthem, and to replace it with the Chinese national anthem. Google reportedly refused.

(Washington: HRW, 2023), 150; Helen Davidson, “Tiananmen Square Books Removed from Hong Kong Libraries in Run-up to Anniversary,” Guardian (16 May 2023); Hong Kong Free Press, “The Books Hong Kong Is Purging from Public Libraries: An Overview of the Disappeared Titles,” Global Voices (1 June 2023).

⁷⁷ “New Chinese History Textbooks for Hong Kong Students Remove Details of Tiananmen Square Crackdown, June 4 Commemorative Vigil,” Young Post (6 June 2022).

⁷⁸ Peter Lee, “Crowds Still Flock to Hong Kong’s Book Fair but ‘Sensitive’ Topics Are Absent,” Hong Kong Free Press (22 July 2022).

⁷⁹ Leo Sands, “Hong Kong Judge Finds Five Guilty over Children’s Books,” BBC News (8 September 2022); “Hong Kong: Five Jailed in for ‘Seditious’ Children’s Books,” BBC News (10 September 2022); “Hong Kong: Two Men Arrested for Possessing ‘Seditious’ Children’s Books,” BBC News (17 March 2023).

On 28 July 2023, a Hong Kong court declined a government request to ban Glory to Hong Kong. The request had been filed after the song had been played mistakenly at several sport events instead of the Chinese national anthem March of the Volunteers. The court referred to the “right to freedom of expression” and noted the potential “chilling effects” if the government’s request were granted. The government had first applied for a total ban in June, after which the song had been taken down from several online music streaming platforms.⁸⁰

On 25 November 2022, Hui Po-keung – an associate professor at the Department of Cultural Studies at Lingan University until 2021 and author of several historical articles – was found guilty together with four others over their failure to register a protester relief fund and forced to pay a HK$4,000 (approximately € 475) fine [See above and NCH Annual Report 2022].⁸¹

On 13 December 2021, Chow Hang-tung, prominent pro-democracy activist and former vice chairperson of the disbanded Hong Kong Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements (HKASPDM), was among those sentenced to up to fourteen months in prison for organizing, taking part in, and inciting participation in the banned 2020 vigil for victims of the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. On 14 December 2022, the High Court overturned Chow’s conviction, finding that police had not properly explored the options for how the demonstration could have gone ahead in a COVID-safe manner. Facing two other charges under the national security law, Chow remained in custody. On 11 March 2023, a Hong Kong court sentenced Chow, and two other HKASPDM-members, Tang Ngok-kwan and Tsui Hon-Kwong, to 4,5 months in prison for their roles in organizing the annual vigil for the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre on 4 June 2022 [See NCH Annual Report 2022].⁸²

On 3 June 2023, authorities arrested eight people on charges of “disorderly conduct in a public space,” “doing acts with seditious intent,” and “breaching the peace” for commemorating the 34th anniversary of the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre.

Performance artist Sanmu Chen was arrested after she had repeatedly chanted “Don’t forget June 4! Hong Kong people, don’t be afraid of them.” Another performance artist, Chan Mei-tung, was also detained for unclear reasons. In 2022, she had been arrested for holding a lighter to a potato in the shape of a candle – before the annual Victoria Park vigil was banned in 2020, thousands of candles had been distributed to participants. Police removed Lau Ka-yee and Kwan Chun-pong from Victoria Park, where they had stood with red tape covering their mouths and holding a sign saying: “In mourning for the deceased and victims of 64 [June 4] in respect for Tiananmen Mothers.” A young couple was arrested dressed in white and holding white chrysanthemums – a flower and color typically signifying loss and mourning. Chiu Yan-loy, member of the former Hong Kong Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements (HKASPDM), that had traditionally organized the vigil but was disbanded in 2022, was repeatedly visited by police in the lead-up to 4 June and told not to leave his home that day. Former pro-democracy district councilor Debby Chan was also repeatedly questioned after she had announced on Facebook that she would hand out free candles.

⁸⁰ Yvette Tan, “Queen Elizabeth II Funeral: Hong Kong Man Who Attended Tribute Detained,” BBC News (20 September 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 151; “Hong Kong Pressures Google to Remove Protest Anthem from Searches,” Guardian (12 December 2022); “Hong Kong Court Rejects Gov’t Request to Ban Popular Protest Song,” Al Jazeera (28 July 2023).

⁸¹ Peter Lee, “Hong Kong Court Convicts Cardinal Zen and 5 Others over Failing to Register Protester Relief Fund as Society,” Hong Kong Free Press (25 November 2022); Hong Kong Free Press, “The Books Hong Kong Is Purging from Public Libraries: An Overview of the Disappeared Titles,” Global Voices (1 June 2023).

⁸² “Hong Kong Activist Who Staged Tiananmen Vigil Has Conviction Overturned,” BBC News (15 December 2022); “Hong Kong Court Jails Tiananmen Anniversary Vigil Organizers,” Guardian (11 March 2023).

On 4 June 2023, police arrested an additional 23 people suspected of “breaching the peace.” These included pro-democracy activists Alexandra Wong (also known as Grandma Wong), former chair of the Hong Kong Journalists’ Association Mak Yin-ting, and Leo Tang, a former leader of the disbanded Confederation of Trade Unions. Veteran activist and head of the League of Social Democrats, Chan Po-ying, was briefly detained for holding a small LED candle and two flowers at a shopping district near Victoria Park. Former member of the HKASPDM Tsui Hon-kwong was also detained while holding a LED candle. Another woman (name unknown) was arrested while shouting: “Raise candles! Mourn 64!” A young man was detained while carrying a book titled “35th of May” – another way of referring to 4 June. Chow Hang-tung (see above), who was in prison facing two charges under the national security law, went on a 34-hour hunger strike to commemorate the 34th anniversary of the massacre.

Near Victoria Park, hundreds of police conducted stop and search operations and deployed armored vehicles and police vans. Pro-government groups had launched a home fair in the park on 3 June, promoting products from mainland China, that would run until 5 June.⁸³

Tibet

On 11 November 2022, a group of United Nations Special Rapporteurs sent an allegations letter to the Chinese government, warning that around a million children of the Tibetan minority were being affected by Chinese government policies aimed at forcibly assimilating Tibetan people culturally, religiously and linguistically through an expanding mandatory residential school system. In these schools, the educational content and environment was built around the majority Han culture, with textbook content reflecting almost solely the lived experience of Han students. Children of the Tibetan minority were forced to complete a “compulsory education” curriculum in Mandarin Chinese (Putonghua) without access to traditional or culturally relevant learning. The Putonghua language governmental schools did not provide a substantive study of the Tibetan minority’s language, history, and culture. The Special Rapporteurs said that the policies ran contrary to the prohibition of discrimination and the rights to education, linguistic and cultural rights, freedom of religion or belief and other minority rights of the Tibetan people [See also NCH Annual Report 2021].⁸⁴

⁸³ “Hong Kong Police Detain Eight People on Eve of Tiananmen Anniversary,” Guardian (3 June 2023); “Hong Kong Police Arrest Pro-democracy Figures on Tiananmen Square Anniversary,” Guardian (5 June 2023); Martin Yip & Adam Durbin, “Tiananmen Square: Hong Kong Police Detain Activists on Anniversary of Massacre,” BBC News (5 June 2023); Rachel Cheung, “Torches and T-shirts: Hongkongers Defy Attempts to Forget Tiananmen,” Guardian (5 June 2023).

A January 2023 report by the London-based human rights group Free Tibet documented the destruction of religious historical sites in the Garzê Tibetan Autonomous Prefecture in Sichuan Province. Among the sites destroyed were three large Buddha statues, including the 99-foot-tall “People’s Buddha,” the Drago Monastery (established ca. 920), 45 prayer wheels, and a statue of Vajrayana Buddhist master Padmasambhāva (ca. 8th–9th century), considered a central figure in the transmission of Buddhism to Tibet.⁸⁵

Xinjiang

On 31 August 2022, the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner of Human Rights expressed deep concern over the destruction of religious sites by authorities in Xinjiang [See NCH Annual Report 2022] and over the lack of respect for linguistic rights of ethnic minorities [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2021].⁸⁶

See also Afghanistan, Germany, Greece, Philippines, Vietnam.

⁸⁴ United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on Minority Issues, UN Special Rapporteur in the Field of Cultural Rights, UN Special Rapporteur on the Right to Education, and UN Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Religion or Belief, Allegations Letter (11 November 2022) (UN Doc. AL CHN 6/2022); UN, “UN Experts Alarmed by Separation of 1 Million Tibetan Children from Families and Forced Assimilation at Residential Schools” (press release; 6 February 2023).

⁸⁵ Free Tibet & Tibet Watch, Desecration in Drago Country: Destruction of Tibetan Religious Heritage, Arbitrary Detentions and Torture (London: Free Tibet, 2023), 25–29; Roseanne Gerin, “Report Offers Fresh Examples of Destruction of Religious Sites in Eastern Tibet,” Radio Free Asia (24 January 2023).

⁸⁶ United Nations Human Rights Office of the High Commissioner, OHCHR Assessment of Human Rights Concerns in the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region, People’s Republic of China (31 August 2022), 27–29.

COLOMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2004, 2006–2022.

On 18 February 2022, a burglary took place in the house of Eduardo Andrés Celis Rodríguez (1993–), a researcher of the Commission for Clarification of the Truth, Coexistence and Non-Repetition (CEV) – established as a result of the 2016 peace accords reached between the government and the largest rebel group, Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC; 1948–2016). Copies of a six-hour interview on 16 February 2022 of Celis and CEV Commissioner Alejandro Valencia Villa with Dairo Antonio Úsuga (alias Otoniel), ex-leader of the drug-trafficking group Clan del Golfo (Gulf Clan), were stolen. Later Celis and his family were harassed; he received at least eleven death threats by telephone. Celis went into hiding and in October 2022 into exile in Europe, where he received at least three further death threats by phone and email. One of the callers identified himself as a member of the paramilitary group Autodefensas Unidas de Colombia (AUC; United Self-defense Forces of Colombia). Before joining the CEV, Celis wrote for the journalistic portal Verdad Abierta (Open Truth), which since 2007 had reported stories of paramilitaries and guerrillas.⁸⁷

On 28 June 2022, the Commission for Clarification of the Truth, Coexistence and Non-Repetition (CEV) launched its report on the causes and consequences of Colombia’s conflict (1948–2016) [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. Among its recommendations was the declassification of secret files on defense and security matters related to the conflict with the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC; 1948–2016). In March 2021, CEV President Francisco de Roux had asked United States (US) President Joe Biden to accelerate the declassification of US federal records related to the conflict. The request remained pending as of August 2022.⁸⁸

On 13 January 2023, Afro-Colombian historian Sergio Antonio Mosquera announced that he was forced to shut down the Fundación Muntú Bantú (Muntú Bantú Foundation, founded 2009), the only museum in Colombia dedicated to the history and culture of Afro-Colombians, and its Centro de Memoria, Documentación y Materialidades Afrodiaspóricas (Center of Memory, Documentation and ⁸⁷ “Fueron hurtadas las grabadoras de la Comisión de la Verdad con testimonios de alias Otoniel,” Criterio (19 February 2022); Juan David Laverde Palma, “El viacrucis de un investigador de la guerra,” Noticias Caracol (8 July 2022); Camila Osorio, “Andrés Celis, el investigador de la Comisión de la Verdad que tuvo que salir al exilio,” El País (12 October 2022); David Riaño Valencia, “Se intensifican amenazas contra investigador de la CEV que entrevistó a ‘Otoniel,’” El Espectador (16 June 2023).

⁸⁸ National Security Archive (Michael Evans), “‘There is Future if There Is Truth’: Colombia’s Truth Commission Launches Final Report” (28 June 2022); Daniel Ospina Cells, “Desclasifiquemos los archivos de inteligencia previos a la Constitución de 1991,” El Espectador (5 August 2022); Michael Evans, “A Bloody, Expensive and Prolonged Coercive Effort,” National Security Archive (24 August 2022).

Afrodiasporic Materials), located in Chocó Department's capital Quibdó. From December 2022, Mosquera (the museum's founder) and María Fernanda Parra (the museum's director) had received death threats from a local armed group seeking to extort "war taxes" from them. The threats came at a time of growing Afro-Colombian political visibility and representation in public life due to the election of Francia Márquez, the first Afro-Colombian vice president in Colombia's history. The museum's vast archive was hidden.⁸⁹

On 8 June 2023, violent clashes broke out between hooded protesters and the riot police Escuadrón Móvil Antidisturbios (Esmad) on the campus of the National University of Bogotá, leaving a police officer seriously injured. Protesters had gathered to commemorate the Day of the Fallen Student on 8–9 June, a day established in 1973 and recognizing fallen student protesters since the assassination of law student Gonzalo Bravo Pérez on 7 June 1929. A group of hooded individuals associated with the Jaime Bateman Cayón movement, named after the founder and commander of the 19th of April guerrilla movement, reportedly attacked officers with improvised explosive devices.⁹⁰

CONGO (Democratic Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2000, 2003–2022.

In June 2022, King Philippe of Belgium visited Congo for the first time and reaffirmed his "deepest regrets" for colonial-era abuses but did not offer an apology or raise the issue of reparations. Belgian authorities returned a tooth of the assassinated first Prime Minister Patrice Lumumba (1925–1961) to his family. The relic was taken around Congo ahead of a funeral in Kinshasa.⁹¹

On 30 August 2022, the trial against Belgian filmmaker Thierry Michel, who had been sued by the documentary filmmaking partnership Balufu Brothers for allegedly plagiarizing their 2015 film The Silence of Forgotten Crimes, began in Kinshasa. In 2021, Michel had released The Empire of Silence, a documentary on impunity for war crimes committed during the Second Congo War (1998–2003), among others. Michel's lawyer claimed that whereas the Balufu Brothers' documentary focused on foreign responsibilities for human rights violations in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC), ⁸⁹ "Solidarity with Historian Sergio Antonio Mosquera and Fundación Muntú Bantú" (petition; s.d. [January 2023]); NCH campaign (3 February 2023); Erica Hellerstein, "Afro-Colombian Culture Is Under Siege as Armed Conflict Rages On," Codastory (6 March 2023).

⁹⁰ "Disturbios en la Universidad Nacional dejan hasta el momento un policía herido," El Espectador (8 June 2023); Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (no date); Comisión de la Verdad, "Día del estudiante caído: poniéndole cuerpo al pensamiento" (9 June 2021).

⁹¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 184.

particularly from Ugandan and Rwandan forces, Michel documented war crimes of Congolese, including some who currently held prominent positions in the military. An analysis by the Brussels-based Société civile des auteurs multimédia found that only four images were used in both films. Michel faced up to five years in prison.⁹²

See also Uganda.

CONGO (Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004–2006, 2008, 2010–2012, 2019.

COSTA RICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

CÔTE D’IVOIRE

See Ivory Coast.

CROATIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2001, 2003–2013, 2015–2022.

On 19 July 2022, a report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence assessed the official measures adopted to address the atrocities committed during the 1991–1995 war. It stressed shortcomings in several areas, including full reparation owed to civilian victims, comprehensive memorialization processes and truth-seeking mechanisms, the promotion of cultural diversity and inter-ethnic mutual understanding, the effective combating of national and ethnic hatred, and the rise in the glorification of war crimes and revisionism with regard to convictions by the International Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. It noted the impasse in the transitional justice agenda in the last nine years and the risk this posed to the sustainability of the transitional justice process, as well as to peace and reconciliation.⁹³

⁹² John Thys, “DRC: Accused of Plagiarism, Director Thierry Michel Before the Kinshasa Court,” Teller Report (30 August 2022); Philip Andrew Churm, “Belgian Filmmaker Thierry Michel Accused of Plagiarism by DRC,” Africa News (24 September 2022).

See also Montenegro, Serbia.

CUBA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2002, 2006, 2010–2012, 2015–2016, 2018, 2021–2022.

Throughout 2021, historian, art curator, and anti-censorship activist Carolina Barrero Ferrer (1986–) [See NCH Annual Report 2022] was the victim of arbitrary arrest, harassment, censorship, and surveillance. She was placed under house arrest for over 150 days in total. On 28 January 2022, she was detained by State Security agents in El Vedado, Havana. Three days later, she was again detained and also beaten together with activist Daniela Rojo and Camila Rodríguez, the coordinator of the civic platform Justicia 11J, after they had gone to the 10 October Municipal Court in solidarity with the relatives of political prisoners who were on trial. Barrero was released on 1 February 2022. The officers who took her home warned her that she had 48 hours to leave Cuba, or else the mothers of twelve other political prisoners would be prosecuted for public disorder. They escorted her to the airport and forced her into exile.⁹⁴

CYPRUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2005, 2008–2011, 2013, 2015–2018, 2021–2022.

⁹³ United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence, Visit to Croatia (UN Doc. A/HRC/51/34/Add.1) (19 July 2022).

⁹⁴ “Cuban Activist Arbitrarily Arrested over a Letter Calling for the Resignation of Alpidio Alonso as Minister of Culture,” Democratic Spaces (4 February 2021); “The Political Police Threaten Carolina Barrero and ‘Advise’ Her to Leave Cuba,” Translating Cuba (8 February 2021); “The Case in Cuba against Carolina Barrero for ‘Clandestine Printed Matter’ Has Been Shelved,” Translating Cuba (25 March 2021); International PEN, Case List 2022 (London: PEN, 2023), 30.

CZECH REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2010, 2013–2022.

On 22 June 2022, a pig farm that stood on the site of the Lety concentration camp, in which 327 Romani were killed during World War II, was demolished, after a campaign to construct a memorial that began in the 1970s, but that had faced significant opposition for more than four decades – except for a small memorial that was unveiled near the farm in [1995] by then President Václav Havel (1936–2011). An estimated 90% of the Czech Roma population was killed during the Holocaust. On 2 August 2022, the commemoration day for the 1944 massacre of 4,300 Sinti and Roma in Auschwitz-Birkenau (also known as Roma Genocide Remembrance Day), the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe’s Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights hailed the government’s decision to demolish the farm, but stressed the importance for all countries in Europe to ensure that school curricula include remembrance of the Roma and Sinti genocide and discuss the dangers of racist ideologies.⁹⁵

In [early 2023], the United Kingdom’s special envoy for post-Holocaust affairs, Lord Pickles, wrote an urgent letter to his Czech counterpart Robert Řehák, urging him to accelerate the adoption of an amendment that would grant a five-year amnesty for Jewish children who had fled to Great Britain in 1939 via so-called Kindertransporten (trains that evacuated 669 mainly Jewish children from Prague to London) to apply for Czech citizenship. In 1948, after the Communist Party had seized power in Czechoslovakia (the Czech Republic’s predecessor), a law was passed to strip refugees and any children they would have of citizenship. Unintentionally, the law also barred potentially thousands of children and grandchildren of the children from the Kindertransporten. In 1990, a year after the Velvet Revolution, the 1948 law was abolished and citizenship of its victims restored. However, the regulation barring unregistered children remained in effect. In 2013, a new citizenship law granted those born between 1949–1969 a year to apply for citizenship. However, the vast majority of Kindertransport descendants had not heard about the new law. In 2021, an amendment to the 2013 law, extending the application period with another five year, had been tabled.⁹⁶

See also Russia.

⁹⁵ “Czech Roma Reclaim Holocaust Site, but Equality Feels Distant,” Al Jazeera (3 August 2022); OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights, “Remembering the Roma Genocide Goes Beyond Commemoration to Fight Today’s Intolerance, OSCE Human Rights Head Says,” (press release; 2 August 2022).

⁹⁶ Robert Tait, “Czechs Urged to Repeal Law Denying Rights to Kindertransport Descendants,” Guardian (9 February 2023).

DENMARK

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2007, 2013, 2016–2020, 2022.

On 9 June 2022, Greenland’s Prime Minister Múte Bourup Egede and Danish Prime Minister Mette Frederiksen signed a joint declaration to investigate their mutual historical relations and the impact of colonialism on the Inuit population from World War II to 2022 [See also NCH Annual Report 2022].⁹⁷

See also Israel.

DJIBOUTI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013.

In September 2022, on the ninth anniversary of a 2013 ruling by the Constitutional Court, which retroactively and arbitrarily deprived thousands of Dominicans of Haitian descent of their nationality, human rights organizations called on the authorities to address the continuing problem of stateless people. Despite a 2014 law that aimed to provide documents for people made stateless by the 2013 ruling, tens of thousands remained without documents, limiting their access to education and healthcare.⁹⁸

⁹⁷ “Greenland, Denmark Initiate Investigation into Past Relations,” Eye on the Arctic (9 June 2022).

⁹⁸ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 148.

ECUADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2007, 2009–2021.

EGYPT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2001, 2003, 2006–2007, 2010–2022.

On [22] August 2022, archaeologist and former Minister of Antiquities Zahi Hawass launched a campaign for the repatriation of the Rosetta Stone (a stele inscribed with three versions of a decree issued in 196 BCE in Memphis, Egypt, that is currently held by the British Museum in London, after it had been seized by British forces from Alexandria in 1801), the limestone bust of Queen Nefertiti (1370–1310 BCE; believed to have been crafted in 1345 BCE and currently in the Neues Museum, Berlin, after it had been discovered and taken by a German archaeology team led by Ludwigh Borchardt in Amarna in 1912), and the Dendera Zodiac ceiling (50 BCE; discovered by Vivant Denon in 1799 and taken to Paris in 1822, where it is held by the Musée du Louvre). In 2007 and 2019, Hawass had launched a similar campaign to have the three artifacts on display on loan. All three museums had refused his loan request. By November 2022, Hawass’s petition had been signed 100,000 times. In [November] 2022, Monica Hanna, dean of the Arab Academy for Science, Technology and Maritime Transport, set up a petition reiterating Hawass’s call to the British Museum to return the Rosetta Stone.⁹⁹

On [10] January 2023, authorities in Aswan arrested three people for attempting to steal a statue of Pharaoh Ramses II (1303–1213 BCE). Since 2010, authorities had recovered around 29,000 antiquities that had been illegally transferred abroad.¹⁰⁰

In mid-April 2023, a lawyer filed a complaint accusing the Netflix four-part docudrama African Queens: Queen Cleopatra of violating media laws and aiming at “erasing the Egyptian identity.” The film depicted Queen Cleopatra VII (69 BCE – 30 BCE) as a black African (played by black British actress Adele James), sparking widespread condemnation among Egyptians, including from archaeologist and former Minister of Antiquities Zahi Hawass and Secretary-General of the Supreme Council of Antiquities of Egypt Mostafa Waziri, accusing the series of falsifying history. In October

⁹⁹ Gareth Harris, “‘Return Rosetta Stone to Egypt’ Demands Country’s Leading Archaeologist Zahi Hawass,” The Art Newspaper (22 August 2022); Mustafa Marie, “Prominent Egyptologist Zahi Hawass Launches Petition To Repatriate Egyptian Artifacts from Major European Museums,” Egypt Today (23 August 2022); Jack Jeffery, “Egyptians Call on British Museum to Return Rosetta Stone,” AP News (30 November 2022).

¹⁰⁰ “3 Men Arrested over Attempt to Steal 10-Tonne Statue of Egyptian Pharaoh,” Africa News (11 January 2023).

2020, a similar row had broken out on social media when it became known that Israeli actress Gal Gadot would play Cleopatra in a new movie, with some alleging “cultural whitewashing,” where white actors portray people of color.

On 22 April 2023, the exhibition “Kemet: Egypt in Hip Hop, Jazz, Soul & Funk” in the National Museum of Antiquities in Leiden, the Netherlands – an exhibition showing Egyptian and Nubian culture through the eyes of artists with African roots – was the target of a similar widespread condemnation, including from a Facebook group called “Egyptian history defenders,” accusing the museum of “blackwashing” and “spreading Afrocentric propaganda.” The museum stated that the exhibition did not claim that ancient Egyptians were black, adding that it did not have an Afrocentric perspective on ancient Egypt. On 7 June 2023, the Ministry of Antiquities banned the archaeologists working for the museum from continuing the museum’s excavations at the Sakkara necropolis near Cairo (where it had been active since 1975) on account of its “falsification of history in the Afrocentric exhibition.”¹⁰¹

See also Sudan, United Kingdom.

EL SALVADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2022.

According to data from the Institute of Legal Medicine, the authorities recovered 207 bodies from mass graves between June 2019 and February 2022. However, documents from the Attorney General Office showed that only 158 bodies had been recovered between January 2019 and February 2022, leaving human rights groups and relatives of the deceased worried about the government’s handling of evidence and human remains. Additionally, the government and police reduced the access to information related to mass graves and disappearances, especially after President Nayib Bukele suspended constitutional rights as part of a state of exception in March 2022, officially to contain gang violence.¹⁰²

¹⁰¹ David Gritten, “Egyptians Complain over Netflix Depiction of Cleopatra as Black,” BBC News (19 April 2023); Gwen Nally & Mary Hamil Gilbert, “Fear of a Black Cleopatra,” New York Times (10 May 2023); “A Statement about the Exhibition ‘Kemet’ in the National Museum of Antiquities in Leiden, the Netherlands” (updated 16 May 2023); Bart Funnekotter, “Hoe een Leids museum werd meegezogen in de aanval op een Netflix-serie over Cleopatra,” NRC Handelsblad (12 May 2023); Bart Funnekotter, “Egypte boos om tentoonstelling: Leids museum mag geen opgravingen meer doen in Egyptische necropolis,” NRC Handelsblad (5 June 2023); “Gal Gadot’s Cleopatra Film Sparks ‘Whitewashing’ Claims,” BBC News (13 October 2020); “Egypt Bans Dutch Archaeologists over Exhibition Linking Beyonce and Rihanna to Queen Nefertiti,” BBC News (7 June 2023).

¹⁰² Nelson Renteria, “In El Salvador, Discrepancy over Deaths and Mass Graves Alarms Critics,” Reuters (3 August 2022).

On 14 October 2022, authorities arrested former Minister of Defense General Guillermo García (in office between 1979–1983), former director of the Treasury Police (a security force associated with enforced disappearances, torture and extrajudicial killings during the Civil War [1979–1992]), Colonel Francisco Antonio Morán, and three others, on charges of murdering four Dutch journalists in Chalatenango on 17 March 1982. García had also been named in the 1981 El Mozote Massacre case [See NCH Annual Reports 2008, 2012–2013, 2015, 2017, 2019–2022].¹⁰³

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2019.

ERITREA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008, 2016, 2018.

See Ethiopia.

ESTONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2010, 2015, 2017.

On 16 August 2022, the government decided to remove Soviet-era monuments from public places with the purpose of preventing them “from mobilizing more hostility in society and tearing open old wounds” following Russia’s invasion of Ukraine. Among the first removals were a tank in Narva, taken to the Estonian War Museum, and a World War II cemetery, relocated with “a neutral grave marker.” Prime Minister Kaja Kallas said that the government would not “afford Russia the opportunity to use the past to disturb the peace in Estonia.” Foreign Minister Urmas Reinsalu declared that such monuments had been erected to glorify the Russian occupation and had no place in Estonia’s public space. A spokesperson for Russian President Vladimir Putin said that “The war against history, moreover with a common history, and the disposal of monuments for those who saved Europe from fascism, is of course outrageous.”¹⁰⁴

¹⁰³ Gabriela Cáceres, María Luz Nóchez & Carlos Dada, “Top Former Military Officers Arrested for 1982 Murder of Four Dutch Journalists,” El Faro (17 October 2022).

ESWATINI

Previous Annual Report entries under Swaziland: 2011, 2013, 2016–2018.

On 13 May 2022, police fired rubber bullets and tear gas at participants of a commemoration march, organized by the Swaziland National Union of Students, for the one-year anniversary of the killing of Thabani Nkomonye, a law student at the University of Eswatini who was found dead at the side of the road on 13 May 2021, sparking nationwide protests alleging that he had been killed by police forces.¹⁰⁵

ETHIOPIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2011, 2015–2022.

During the Tigray War (2020–present), Ethiopian and Eritrean military troops destroyed historical monuments in the Tigray region. At least forty, and allegedly hundreds of, churches and monasteries were damaged. In November 2020, after hundreds of civilians had been massacred by Eritrean soldiers, the Church of Our Lady Mary of Zion in Aksum, originally built in the fourth century and rebuilt in the tenth and sixteenth centuries, was vandalized. In January 2021, more than twenty scholars voiced concern for the sixth-century Debre Damo monastery near Adigrat, which was looted and partially destroyed by gunfire and shelling. In the same month, Eritrean soldiers burned the Feredashum St. Kirkos church.

In Ger’alta, Hawzen – one of the centers of ancient civilization in the Horn of Africa, according to pottery, inscriptions and hagiographic traditions dating as far back as the Aksumite period (early first century–960) – there were many ancient rock-hewn churches and monasteries considered world heritage sites: 31 monasteries and churches were reportedly heavily damaged between November 2020 and March 2022, with many of the church properties looted. Among them were the pre-14th century monastery of Abunä Abraham and the Debre Medhanit Ammanuel Ma’go church in Wuqro. The library of the church and monastery of Maryam Yerefeda was allegedly destroyed.

¹⁰⁴ Denisa Ballova, “An Empty Tomb in Estonia,” Transitions (3 August 2022); “Estonia Removes Soviet-Era Statue Amid Tensions,” Al Jazeera (16 August 2022); “Estonia Begins Removing Soviet-Era War Monuments,” BBC News (16 August 2022).

¹⁰⁵ “Police Used Tear Gas and Rubber Bullets During Student Protest,” Scholars at Risk (13 May 2022).

In addition to churches and monasteries, Ethiopian and Eritrean soldiers shelled the al-Nejashi mosque in Negash (believed to be founded by an early follower of the Prophet Mohammed in the seventh century) in late November 2020, with Eritrean soldiers reportedly damaging historic tombs and stealing ancient manuscripts and relics. The Wugro Archaeological Museum, and two other archaeological sites around Wugro and in Aksum, were damaged and looted by Eritrean soldiers. Forces of the Ethiopian National Defense Force (ENDF) reportedly destroyed the Tigray Martyr's Memorial Museum in Mekelle, and toppled the statue of Qeshi Gebru (1962–1982), a woman who fought the Derg regime (1974–1991) in the 1980s, in Humera.

On top of the destruction of historical sites, many historical artifacts were looted. On 1 February 2021, Eritrean soldiers looted the Aksum Archaeological museum. In Mekelle, ENDF forces looted the Emperor Yohannes IV Palace museum and destroyed many of its artifacts. In April 2021, the St. Yared Orthodox Tewahedo Association in Mekelle sent a letter to the Patriarch of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church begging him to halt the “continued looting of our artifacts and our churches.” In February 2022, Hagos Abrha Abay, postdoctoral researcher at the Center for the Study of Manuscript Culture at the University of Hamburg, found that online sales of Ethiopian artifacts had surged since the beginning of the Tigray War. According to Michael Gervers, history professor at the University of Toronto specialized in Tigray culture, the destruction of Tigray's historical sites, manuscripts and relics amounted to “cultural cleansing.”¹⁰⁶

In mid-March 2023, Taye Bogale, an Oromo history teacher and author of a book on the history and politics of Ethiopia, disappeared. His teachings about Ethiopian history had reportedly often been demonized by Oromo radical nationalist groups. On 20 March, Bogale released a picture of himself on social media, showing him visibly bruised in his face and one of his eyes. It was unclear who the perpetrators were. On 28 December 2020, a Facebook post had falsely claimed that Bogale had been shot and killed.¹⁰⁷

See also Sudan, United Kingdom.

¹⁰⁶ “Heritage Sites Under Siege in Ethiopia's Tigray War,” Africa News (30 April 2021); Geoffrey York & Zecharias Zelalem, “In Tigray's War, Ancient Christian and Muslim Houses of Worship Are Increasingly Under Attack,” The Globe and Mail (10 May 2021); Azeb-Tadesse Hahn, “Civil War to Blame for Surge in Online Sales of Ethiopian Artifacts,” Der Welt (10 March 2022); Hagos Abrha Abay, “First Comprehensive Analysis of the Looting of Tigray's Heritage as Ebay Halts Sale of Ethiopian Treasures,” Eritrea Hub (11 February 2022); Hagos Abrha Abay, “Ethiopia's War in Tigray Risks Wiping Out Centuries of the World's History,” Jerusalem Post (30 March 2022); Hagos Abrha Abay, “Tigray's Ancient Rock-Hewn Churches Are Under Threat: Why It Matters,” The Conversation (3 May 2022).

¹⁰⁷ “False: Ethiopian Historian and Social Media Activist Taye Bogale Has Not Been Killed,” Pesa Check (31 December 2020); “Another Beaten Activist Returns to Family with Severe Beatings from “Deep State” Actors,” Borkena (20 March 2023).

FIJI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006, 2010.

FINLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2017, 2020, 2022.

FRANCE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1999, 2001–2009, 2011–2014, 2016–2018, 2020–2022.

Throughout 2022, the Musée de l’Homme in Paris held on to its collection of 18,000 skulls, including the skulls of more than 200 Native Americans; the bones of Mamadou Lamine Dramé (ca. 1840–1887), a West African Tijani marabout (Islamic religious leader) who led a rebellion against French colonial troops in 1886–1887; and a family of Canadian Inuit who had been exhibited in a human zoo in Paris in 1881. The collection was kept in cardboard boxes in the museum’s basement. Information about it was published online only in limited form, without mentioning names or biographical details of the skulls in its database – officially because of privacy concerns, uncertainty about some of the identities and fear of controversy. However, this policy was criticized as an attempt to hold off any restitution claims. A confidential museum memo deemed it without a “clear legal basis.” Moreover, it contradicted a 2018 government-commissioned report recommending a simplification of the restitution process. State ownership of the collection was a further obstacle, which could only be overcome if a return was voted into law. Although the Ministry of Culture claimed to work on a new restitution law, the government had rejected a Senate proposal to establish a scientific advisory council on restitutions and had, as of November 2022, not considered a Senate bill removing the need for Parliamentary approval for restitution.¹⁰⁸

On 15 February 2022, Parliament adopted a “reparation” bill for the Harkis, Algerians who enlisted to fight for the French occupying forces during the Algerian War (1954–1962). After Algerian independence, more than 91,000 Harkis found refuge in France, of which around 20,000 were housed, for periods varying from days to years, in barracks or tents in the Rivesaltes camp between 1962–1964.

¹⁰⁸ Constant Méheut, “A Paris Museum Has 18,000 Skulls: It’s Reluctant to Say Whose,” New York Times (28 November 2022).

The bill fulfilled a commitment made by President Emmanuel Macron in September 2021. Following the bill, several Harkis called on the government to search for the graves of the babies who died in the Rivesaltes camp (it was estimated that dozens of young children died of cold in the camp) [See also NCH Annual Report 2003, 2006].¹⁰⁹

In September 2022, the book Allons enfants de la Guyane by historian and journalist H el ene Ferrarini revealed for the first time the decades-long history of residential schools in French Guyana, in which indigenous children were forcibly assimilated. It proposed a Truth and Reconciliation Commission to deal with the system’s legacy.¹¹⁰

In mid-December 2022, after a restoration had darkened the features of a statue of writer Victor Hugo (1802–1885) in his native city of Besan on, two masked men repainted his face in white. The statue had been created by the Senegalese sculptor Ousmane Sow (1935–2016) in 2003. The perpetrators – two students at the local university who were leaders of the far-right student group Cocarde  tudiante – were arrested and faced charges for vandalizing public property with racist motivations. On the photograph they had taken of their work and posted online, they had added a Celtic cross and the words “white power.”¹¹¹

On 17 January 2023, an appeals court in Fort-de-France, capital of the French Caribbean island of Martinique, dismissed a 2005 request from groups seeking slavery reparations. It noted that there was a statute of limitations for the crime of slavery and that a French law already allowed to “bring a memorial contribution to the recognition of slavery and the slave trade.” The court added that it was not for the judiciary to decide whether those measures were sufficient. Slavery was abolished in France in 1848.¹¹²

On 9 March 2023, a court in Bastia, Corsica, ruled that the use of the Corsican language in the island’s local parliament and local laws de facto establishing “the existence of a Corsican people” were unconstitutional. The ruling followed a lawsuit brought by the prefect of Corsica, the highest representative of the French central government on the island. The verdict was heavily criticized by

¹⁰⁹ “France Approves Reparation Bill for Algeria’s Harkis,” Asharq Al-Awsat (16 February 2022); “The Longing for Closure by Families of the Harkis,” Africa News (25 August 2022).

¹¹⁰ Delphine Jung, “L’Histoire m connue des pensionnats pour Autochtones fran ais,” Radio-Canada (12 January 2023).

¹¹¹ Catherine Porter, “Victor Hugo Statue Takes a Prominent Place in France’s Debate on Race,” New York Times (31 December 2022 / 3 January 2023).

¹¹² Rodolphe Lamy, “Martinique Court Dismisses Slavery Reparations Lawsuit,” AP News (19 January 2023).

Corsican politicians. According to UNESCO, the Corsican language was in danger of becoming extinct with only 150,000 native speakers remaining.¹¹³

See also Algeria, Benin, Cameroon, Egypt, Iran, Tunisia, United Nations.

¹¹³ “Corsican Language Ban Stirs Protest on French Island,” Guardian (10 March 2023).

GABON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016, 2018.

GAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016–2018, 2021–2022.

On 25 May 2022, the government issued a White Paper, indicating how it was going to implement the recommendations of the 2019 Truth, Reconciliation and Reparations Commission (TRRC), which had investigated human rights violations committed during the rule of Yahya Jammeh (in office as chairman of the Armed Forces Provisional Ruling Council in 1994–1996, and as president in 1996–2017) [See NCH Annual Report 2018, 2021–2022]. However, since then the government had stalled implementation citing lacking financial resources (even though some required very little or no funding), refrained from banning alleged perpetrators from public office, and stalled progress on the Victims Reparations Bill. Moreover, in April 2022, President Amanda Barrow had elected Fabakary Tombong Jatta as Speaker of the National Assembly, despite his repeated attempts to discredit the TRRC. On 12 May 2023, Barrow released a White Paper implementation plan and announced a € 9 million pledge by the European Union.¹¹⁴

GEORGIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2003, 2010–2012, 2014, 2016, 2019, 2022.

On 7 August 2022, members of the Abkhaz Assembly and others launched a campaign calling for the prosecution of the perpetrators of war crimes and ethnic cleansing during the War in Abkhazia (1992–1993) between Georgian government forces and Abkhaz separatists, supported by Russian militants. In the past, two investigations had been opened by the Georgian government, but they stopped after the alleged refusal of Russian officials to cooperate. The number of those killed was 5,738 while more than 200,000 people, mostly ethnic Georgians, were displaced [See also NCH Annual Report 2011].¹¹⁵

¹¹⁴ Ali Jaw, "Victims Center Opposes Nominations of FTJ, Seedy Njie," The Point (25 April 2022); Mustapha Darboe, "Gambia Validates Truth Commission's Work and Promises Justice," Justiceinfo.net (26 May 2022); Mariam Sankanu, "Is the Gambia a Step Closer to Moving on with Trials and Reparations," Justiceinfo.net (1 June 2023).

¹¹⁵ Priyanka Shankar, "'Before Bucha in Ukraine, There Was Abkhazia in Georgia'," Al Jazeera (5 August 2022).

GERMANY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–2000, 2003, 2006–2013, 2015–2017, 2019–2022.

In April 2022, the Federal Office for the Protection of the Constitution (Verfassungsschutz) warned of the spread of anti-Semitic ideas to mainstream political discourse. In July 2022, vandals chopped down the trees at the memorial for victims of the Buchenwald concentration camp. Chancellor Olaf Scholz was strongly criticized for failing to immediately condemn a statement by Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas perceived to equate Israeli actions to the Holocaust.¹¹⁶

In [July] 2022, a collection of Uyghur artwork and historical artefacts in Berlin was amended so that all references to “East Turkestan” on maps were changed to the name preferred by the Chinese Communist Party, “Xinjiang.” In another example of interference, Tibetan artists Tenzing Sonam and Ritu Sarin had arranged with a prominent Berlin-based curator to screen their film exploring the early Tibetan resistance and its betrayal by the American CIA (Central Intelligence Agency). However, the subject material proved too sensitive to their Chinese investors who cut of contact with the artists.¹¹⁷

In April 2023, the senate of what was officially referred to as Westphalian Wilhelm University (founded 1780) decided to delete the name of Emperor Wilhelm II (1859–1941; in power between 1888–1918) and call itself University of Münster. Wilhelm II was reputed to have been an anti-Semite, a staunch advocate of colonialism and an opponent of democracy.¹¹⁸

See also Belarus, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Egypt, Ethiopia, Latvia, Namibia, Poland, Spain, Sudan, Ukraine.

GHANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2004–2008, 2017, 2019, 2022.

¹¹⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 250.

¹¹⁷ Index on Censorship, Whom to Serve? How the CCP Censors Art in Europe (London: IOC, November 2022), 10, 12.

¹¹⁸ Michael Gardner, “University Drops Reference to Emperor, Region in New Name,” University World News (28 April 2023).

GREECE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2004–2011, 2013–2019, 2022.

On 17 November 2022, the City Court in Athens found the Tibetan-American Tsela Zoksang, the Hongkongese-American Joey Siu and a Vietnamese-American activist not guilty of the offense of attempting to “pollute, damage, and distort a historical monument,” a charge punishable by up to five years. On 17 October 2021 they had hung a Tibetan flag and a flag in support of freedom in Hong Kong at the Acropolis, while chanting “Boycott Beijing 2022” and “Free Tibet.” Greek police confiscated their flags and detained them. In the case, the defense had argued, among others, that the arrest and prosecution were contrary to the 2012 judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in Fáber versus Hungary (concerning the display of a flag with historical connotations).

In a related case, Tibetan-Canadian activist Chemi Lhamo, joined by American and British human rights activists, protested on 18 October 2021 during the Olympic Torch Lighting Ceremony in Olympia, shouting slogans and holding a banner reading “No Genocide Games” (a reference to the treatment of the Uyghurs in China) as well as a Tibetan flag. The three were detained and held for more than two days in a local prison, before being released pending trial on the same charge.¹¹⁹

On 7 March 2023, Manolis Psarros ([1970]–), an archaeologist working for the Culture Ministry’s Ephorate of Antiquities of Cyclades responsible for the preservation and protection of antiquities, was beaten on the island of Mykonos by an unidentified man with a possible accomplice in Athens, and left unconscious and bleeding in the street. The attack was likely related to commercial pressure to extend tourism development and research into building activities in areas of archaeological interest on the island. Every year the archaeological services, tasked with protecting Greece’s ancient heritage, vetoed approximately twenty proposals for property construction on Mykonos. On 14 March 2023, archaeologists launched a strike outside the Culture Ministry in Athens to protest the assault. The Culture Ministry condemned the attack. On [21 March], the Association of Greek Archaeologists filed a legal complaint after another archaeologist (name unknown) had received threatening text messages.¹²⁰

¹¹⁹ “Human Rights Activists Face Legal Battle in Greek Courts Following “No Beijing 2022” Protests at Olympic Torch Ceremony,” Students for a Free Tibet (20 January 2022); “Beijing 2021 Olympics Acropolis Protestors’ Trial Set To Take Place on 17 November 2022,” Justice Abroad (15 November 2022); “Huge Win for Beijing 2021 Olympics Acropolis Protestors in Athens Court,” Justice Abroad (17 November 2022); European Court of Human Rights, Fáber versus Hungary (Application no. 40721/08) (24 October 2012).

¹²⁰ Derek Gatopoulos & Petros Giannakouris, “Assault on Archaeologist Triggers Protests in Greece,” AP News (14 March 2023); Tassos Kokkinidis, “Archaeologist Tasked with Building Permits in Mykonos Brutally Beaten,” Greek Reporter (14 March 2023); “Μύκονος: Απειλήσαν συνάδελφο του αρχαιολόγου με SMS,” Η Καθημερινή (21 March 2023); “Μύκονος: «Θέλουν να ξεμπερδέψουν με την προστασία των αρχαιοτήτων» –

GRENADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2022.

GUATEMALA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2022.

On 14 June 2022, the Brussels criminal court ordered the arrest, under the principle of universal jurisdiction, of eight former high-level government officials, including former Guatemalan President Fernando Romeo Lucas García (in office between 1978–1982), for their responsibility in the death and disappearance of three Belgian missionaries during the Civil War (1960–1996). Fathers Walter Voordeckers (1939–1980), Ward Capiiau (1950–1981) and Serge Berten (1952–[1982]) were killed or disappeared, because of their activism for better working conditions on the sugar cane plantations on the south coast. The crimes had never been investigated in Guatemala. Three of the accused had already died and three were already in prison for other crimes, including forced disappearances, committed during the Civil War.¹²¹

On 8 July 2022, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR) ordered Guatemala to adopt urgent measures to protect Miguel Ángel Gálvez, the judge responsible for sending many high-level politicians and military officials, including former President Efraín Ríos Montt (1926–2018; in office between 1982–1983) to trial, and the investigating judge in the case of José Miguel Gudiel Alvarez and others v. Guatemala (also known as the Diario Militar case) on the abduction, forcible disappearance and/or execution by State agents of 183 political opponents during the military government of President Oscar Mejía Víctores (1930–2016; in office between 1983–1986). The IACHR highlighted a series of threats and acts of intimidation and surveillance, especially after the indictment of nine retired military and police officials on 6 March 2022 [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. It further criticized the request made by and granted to the Anti-Terrorism Foundation for a preliminary hearing of Gálvez. It urged Guatemala to ensure justice in the Diario Militar case and to guarantee the judicial independence of judge Gálvez by adopting measures to protect his life and personal integrity. On 15 November, Gálvez announced his resignation and went into exile.

Η δήλωση του αρχαιολόγου που δέχθηκε επίθεση,” Η Καθημερινή (24 March 2023); Helene Smith, “Violence Hits Mykonos over Efforts to Preserve Ancient Heritage,” Guardian (26 March 2023).

¹²¹ Sanne Weber, “Universal Jurisdiction: What Can Belgian Justice Bring for Guatemalan Victims?” Justiceinfo.net (8 July 2022).

Following Gálvez's resignation, plaintiffs in the Diario Militar case, as well as the families of the deceased expressed concern over the dismantling of the case. A number of newly-appointed magistrates were reportedly closely linked to Zury Ríos, who aimed at getting a constitutional ban on running for President for being Efraín Ríos Montt's daughter overturned in the lead-up to the 2023 elections.¹²²

In the second half of June 2023, the International Council of Archives Section on Archives and Human Rights expressed concern about the fate of the extensive archives of the Grupo de Apoyo Mutuo (Group of Mutual Support) – an NGO established in 1984 and dedicated to helping the families of those missing during the Civil War (1960–1996) – after proceedings against its staff.¹²³

GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2022.

On 24 August 2022, a “national conference” forum, set up in December 2021 by junta leader Colonel Mamady Doumbouya to “heal the deep wounds” of a “painful past,” recommended, among others, the establishment of a truth and reconciliation commission and the trial of all perpetrators of violence and human rights violations, after hearings collected 4,796 testimonies of human rights violations committed since Guinea's independence from France in 1958. Doumbouya did not commit himself to the forum's recommendations. The hearings were boycotted by many civil society and opposition groups, criticizing what they considered as a tool to justify the September 2021 coup. Critics further pointed out that a Provisional National Commission on Reconciliation had already submitted its recommendations in June 2016 [See NCH Annual Report 2017].¹²⁴

On 29 May 2023, lawyers in the 2009 Conakry Stadium massacre trial [See NCH Annual Reports 2015–2016, 2018–2022] went on strike, demanding legal aid and improved working conditions. The Guinean Organization for the Defense of Human and Citizens' Rights expressed concern over the strike and called on authorities to find an urgent solution. Already in mid-May, authorities had announced that money for the trial was close to running out. On 28 September 2022, the thirteenth anniversary of the massacre, the trial had begun.¹²⁵

¹²² Jo-Marie Burt & Paulo Estrada, “La CIDH ordena medidas urgentes para proteger el derecho de víctimas y la independencia del juez Gálvez,” WOLA (21 July 2022); Jo-Marie Burt & Paulo Estrada, “Clandestine Structures in Guatemala Consummate Witch Hunt against Judge of “Death Squad Dossier” Case,” El Faro (15 November 2022); Jo-Marie Burt & Paulo Estrada, “Guatemala's Death Squad Dossier Case Being Dismantled by Corrupt Political-Legal Systems,” WOLA (4 April 2023); José Luis Sanz, “With the Death Squad Dossier, I Understood that Guatemala Is Designed for Impunity,” El Faro (10 April 2023); “Diario Militar Case,” Open Society Justice Initiative” ([no date]).

¹²³ International Council on Archives Section on Archives and Human Rights, Statement of Concern about the Mutual Support Group in Guatemala \(GAM\) (Press release; June 2023).

¹²⁴ “A Forum Advocates Speeding Up Trials for Political Violence,” Africa News (25 August 2022).

GUINEA-BISSAU

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2012, 2015.

GUYANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2022.

¹²⁵ “Guinea Trial to Start on Anniversary of 2009 Massacre,” Africa News (17 September 2022); Matthias Raynal, “Conakry’s Groundbreaking Trial Threatened by Financial Issues,” Justiceinfo.net (30 May 2023).

HAITI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2000–2003, 2006, 2008–2009, 2013–2022.

In June 2022, an armed group from Martissant, a district of the capital Port-au-Prince, occupied the palace of justice of the capital during more than a week, setting fire to the archives of the courts of first instance of Port-au-Prince and nearby Croix-des-Bouquets on 14 June 2022.¹²⁶

See also Dominican Republic.

HONDURAS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998, 2001–2002, 2009–2015, 2022.

On 7 November 2022, police and army forces violently evicted 110 Garifuna people from their homes in Punta Gorda, Roatán, after a judge had ruled that their community, founded in 1797, was an “usurpation” of private land. The judge’s ruling allegedly followed a request for removal by the Norman Jones family, who claimed to have owned the land since 1950. The eviction was in violation of the International Labor Organization’s 1989 Indigenous and Tribal People Convention 169, ratified in 1995 and granting the Garifuna, among others, the rights to their ancestral land. In 2015, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights had ordered the state to protect the Garifuna people’s land and to make reparations for dispossession and other types of past violence. As of November 2022, this had not happened. On 8 November 2022, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights condemned the eviction.¹²⁷

See also Nicaragua.

HONG KONG

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996. From 1997: See China.

¹²⁶ “Des Bandits détruisent des archives au tribunal de première instance de Port-au-Prince.” Le Nouvelliste (15 June 2022).

¹²⁷ Roman Gressier, “Under Xiomara Castro, Honduran Garifunas Receive JOH-Style Military Eviction.” El Faro (16 November 2022).

HUNGARY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997, 2004, 2007–2022.

On 2 September 2022, a group of six Holocaust survivors protested at the Parliament in Budapest against the unveiling of a bust of Admiral and Nazi wartime ally Miklós Horthy (1868–1957; in power between 1920–1944) in the office of deputy house speaker and member of the far-right Mi Hazánk party, Dóra Dúró. Following criticism of the decision to unveil the statue, Fidesz house speaker László Kover said that all members of Parliament were allowed to decorate their office freely. Repeated Fidesz governments of Viktor Orbán (2010–present) had pushed a campaign of reappraisal for the Horthy regime, including an overhaul of the history curriculum and support for revisionist historical research [See also NCH Annual Reports 2020–2022].¹²⁸

¹²⁸ Judit Presinszky & Andrea Horvath Kawai, "A Desecration of All of Us," Transitions (5 September 2022).

INDIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1997, 2000–2022.

On 15 July 2021, over hundred historians from India and abroad endorsed a letter to the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Education expressing concern over proposed changes to National Council of Educational Research and Training (NCERT) history textbooks and objecting to allegations that the books contained “unhistorical facts and distortions.” On 24 June 2022, senior historian Irfan Habib criticized the downscaling of the Muslim/Mughal history from most of the NCERT textbooks.

In early April 2023, the NCERT presented changes in history, political science and sociology textbooks for Classes 6 to 12 that would become effective from the year 2023–2024 (starting in September 2023) in more than 20,000 schools, after it had made a “list of rationalized content” in December 2021–June 2022 with the stated aim to reduce the curriculum load to help students make a “speedy recovery” from learning setbacks suffered during the pandemic of 2020–2022. Among the topics affected were: the caste (varnas) system and the treatment of minorities; historical figures such as Mahmud Ghazni of Afghanistan (971–1030) and Jawaharlal Nehru (1889–1964); the Delhi Sultanate (1206–1526) and Mughal Empire (1526–1857); chapters on protests and popular movements; passages on sedition; Mahatma Gandhi’s assassination (1948) and the temporary ban of the Hindu nationalist Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS; the National Volunteer Corps founded in 1925) afterward [See also NCH Annual Report 2021]; the Emergency (1975–1977); and the Gujarat riots (2002; see below). Passages on the theory of evolution in science books were moved to higher grades. This was the third large-scale textbook review since the National Democratic Alliance government led by the Bharatiya Janata Party took charge in 2014 (the first was in 2017, the second in 2019). On 8 June 2023, political scientists Suhas Palshikar and Yogendra Yadav – who were advisers for political science books originally published in 2006 for classes 9 to 12 – wrote to NCERT, asking it to remove their names from the print and digital editions of the books because they did not want to be associated with the new curriculum [See also NCH Annual Report 2012].¹²⁹

¹²⁹ “Historians Write to Parliamentary Panel against Proposed Changes to NCERT History Textbooks,” The Hindu (20 July 2021); Irfan Habib, “Dear NCERT, What History Should India’s Students Read? One That Fetches Votes?” The Quint (24 June 2022); Ritika Chopra, “In NCERT Textbook Prune: Mughal Era, Delhi Sultanate, Emergency Impact and 2002 Riots,” Indian Express (5 April 2023); Ritika Chopra, “Purged from NCERT Textbooks: Hindu Extremists’ Dislike for Gandhi, RSS Ban after Assassination,” Indian Express (5 April 2023); Ritika Chopra, “Express Investigation – Part 1: From Emergency to Gujarat Riots, Lessons of Past Deleted from Textbooks of Future,” Indian Express (18 June 2022); Ritika Chopra, “Express Investigation – Part 2: Key Deletions on Caste, Minorities in Revised School Textbooks,” Indian Express (5 June 2022); Ritika Chopra, “Express Investigation – Part 3: Textbook Revision Slashes Portion in History on Islamic Rulers of India,” Indian Express (20 June 2022); Sourav Roy Barman, “Express Investigation – Part 4: At Table Reworking School Curriculum, 24 with RSS Links,” Indian Express (21 June 2022); Hannah Ellis-Petersen, “Indian Government Accused of Rewriting History after Edits to Schoolbooks,” Guardian (6 April 2023); Zoya Mateen, “India History Debate after Chapter on Mughals Dropped,” BBC News (21 April 2023);

On 10 May 2022, Ravi Kant Chandan, a Dalit professor of Hindi at Lucknow University (LU), Lucknow, Uttar Pradesh, was reportedly surrounded, verbally harassed and threatened by students of the right-wing group Akhil Bharatiya Vidyarthi Parishad. The previous day, Chandan had participated in an online debate on the Gyanvapi mosque dispute [See NCH Annual Report 2022], during which he repeated an unverified and little supported claim about the origins of the temple – that Mughal Emperor Muhi al-Din Muhammad (also known as Aurangzeb; 1618–1707) ordered the destruction of a temple, and the ensuing construction of the Gyanvapi mosque, due to a rape that had taken place in the temple – put forward by independent activist and former governor of Madhya Pradesh, Pattabhi Sitaramayya (1880–1957) in his book Feathers and Stones, explicitly stating that it was not a fact. After the event, an edited clip of Chandan’s words, excluding his qualifying statement, began circulating on social media, with various Hindu groups accusing him of disrespecting Hindu deities.

On 18 May, police charged Chandan under, among others, Indian Penal Code Section 153-A (promoting enmity between different groups on grounds of religion), after a complaint had been submitted by LU student Aman Dubey. The same day, Chandan was reportedly verbally abused with caste-based insults and physically attacked by Karthik Pandey, a LU student leader of the democratic-leaning Samajwadi Chhatra Sabha. Chandan filed complaints for both attacks: Pandey was suspended from LU, while the other complaint had not been registered as of 27 May.¹³⁰

On 31 May 2022, Rajni Bala ([1985/6]–2022), a Hindu history teacher at the Gopalpora school in Kulgam, Jammu and Kashmir, was shot dead by terrorists while entering the school premises. She had worked at the school since 2011. Bala and her family had repeatedly requested authorities to be transferred to another school in a safer district. The request had reportedly been accepted by authorities the night before the attack. On 9 June, all schools in Jammu and Kashmir’s Ramban district observed a two-minute silence.¹³¹

On 2 September 2022, the Supreme Court ordered the release on interim bail of human rights activist Teesta Setalvad [See NCH Annual Report 2022].¹³²

Shuriah Niazi, “Government Faces Trust Deficit over Introduction of IKS,” University World News (2 May 2023); Zoya Mateen, “NCERT Textbooks: Why Some Indian Scholars Are Disowning Books They Wrote,” BBC News (19 June 2023).

¹³⁰ Ram Puniyani, “Gyanvapi Mosque: Why the Issue Is Being Revived,” Counter Currents (11 May 2022); “Dalit Professor Subjected to Harassment, Threats, and Physical Assault,” Scholars at Risk Freedom Monitoring Project ([no date]).

¹³¹ “Another Targeted Attack in Kashmir, Teacher from Jammu Shot Dead,” Hindustan Times (1 June 2022); Avijit Pathak, “That Which Dies When a Teacher Is Killed,” Indian Express (4 June 2022); Manjiri Sachin Chitre, “Watch: J&K Schools Pay Tribute to Late Teacher Rajni Bala, Observe 2-Minute Silence,” Hindustan Times (9 June 2022); “Rajni Bala,” Starts Unfolded ([no date]).

¹³² Human Rights Watch, “India: Free, Drop Charges Against Teesta Setalvad” (28 June 2022); “Indian Activist Teesta Setalvad Gets Bail in 2002 Riots Case,” Al Jazeera (2 September 2022).

On 15 September 2022, the Bharatiya Janata Party government of Manipur issued an order that all books on the State's history, culture, tradition, and geography be approved by a fifteen-member State-appointment committee before publication. The order further explained that "some books published on the history, culture, tradition and geography of the State contain material which may either distort facts or disturb the peaceful coexistence amongst various communities." The order came in the wake of a controversy in which a Ph.D. thesis by retired Brigadier Sushil Kumar Karma (published as The Complexity Called Manipur: Roots, Perceptions & Reality; 2019) claimed that the princely State of Manipur was made of only 700 square miles of the valley area at the time of its merger with India, implying that the hill areas, inhabited by Naga, Kuki and other tribes, were never a part of Manipur. Organizations that criticized the book claimed that the total area of Manipur that had been merged with India in 1949 was 8,620 square miles, citing the White Paper on Indian States published in 1950 by the Government of India. Many historians criticized the governmental order as disproportional and, therefore, as an attack on academic freedom [See also NCH Annual Reports 2012–2013, 2015, 2018].¹³³

In October 2022, a Hindu mob invaded a madrassa (Islamic institution of learning) in Karnataka State and placed a Hindu idol inside, and another mob attacked a mosque in Gurgaon, Haryana. Both events reportedly resulted from a bogus Hindutva historical narrative, pushed by the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party, that Muslim rulers had for centuries persecuted the "ancient Hindu" population and had destroyed and turned into mosques up to 36,000 Hindu temples. This narrative also fueled a wave of court petitions, filed by right-wing Hindu groups, claiming that mosques, such as the seventeenth-century Shahi Eidgah mosque in Uttar Pradesh and the seventeenth-century Gyanvapi mosque in Varanasi [See above and NCH Annual Report 2022], were built on the ruins of destroyed Hindu temples. Despite the absence of evidence, and a national law protecting places of worship from being disputed, judges were allowing these cases.¹³⁴

On 12 October 2022, Nripendra Misra, chair of the Nehru museum and library in New Delhi, requested the declassification of the Bucher papers in the museum's possession because of their "importan[ce] for scholarly research." The papers, containing communication between then second commander-in-chief of the army, General Sir Francis Robert Roy Bucher, and India's first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru (1889–1964), believed to include political and military arguments for the special status of the State of Jammu and Kashmir – a status that was revoked by President Narendra Modi in 2019. In 2021, the ¹³³ Snigdhendhu Bhattacharya, "Publishing a Book on Manipur? Now You Need the Govt's Approval," The Wire (18 September 2022).

¹³⁴ Hannah Ellis-Petersen, "Thousands of Mosques Targeted as Hindu Nationalists Try to Rewrite India's History," Guardian (30 October 2022).

Information Commissioner ruled that releasing the papers was in the “national interest,” but did not order the declassification of the documents.¹³⁵

In January 2023, protesters in Lucknow, Uttar Pradesh, burned excerpts from the popular sixteenth-century epic Ramcharitmanas, a retelling of the Ramayana (the story of the victory of Hindu deity Ram over demon King Ravana after the latter kidnapped his wife, Sita) composed by Tulsidas. The protests started when Education Minister Chandrashekhar said in Bihar that the epic was derogatory toward women as well as Dalits and “spread hatred in society.” Hindu nationalist groups, including members from the governing Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), organized counter-protests, demanding critics of the work be arrested. At least five people, accused of desecrating the epic, were effectively arrested and in February police invoked the National Security Act against two of them. BJP politician Nandkishore Gurjar wrote to the Supreme Court demanding the death penalty for Swami Prasad Maurya, a leader of a socially-disadvantaged community, who shared Chandrashekhar’s criticism. In Uttar Pradesh, protesters burnt effigies of Maurya and lodged a police complaint, demanding his arrest.

In mid-June 2023, the film Adipurush, inspired by the Ramayana, was attacked by audiences and critics. Protests were held in different parts of India while some Hindu groups and priests demanded a ban, including for what they called the disrespectful portrayal of Ram and Ravana as angry figures. The right-wing group Hindu Mahasabha filed a police complaint over the film’s “wrong” costumes, illustrations, and choice of words. The All Indian Cine Workers’ Association said the film hurt the sentiments of Hindus. Opposition leaders criticized the film while two cities in Nepal banned all Bollywood films until an “objectionable” line was deleted from it. The film’s director Om Raut and writer Manoj Muntashir received death threats and lived under police protection.¹³⁶

On 22 January 2023, using emergency powers available under the information technology law, the government blocked the airing of the two-part BBC documentary The Modi Question on YouTube, Facebook and Twitter, as well as barring the sharing of any clips, on the basis that they were “undermining the sovereignty and integrity of India” and “making unsubstantiated allegations.” The documentary used previously uncovered sources to claim that Prime Minister Narendra Modi had actively prevented police forces from intervening in the 2002 Gujarat riots in which more than 1,000 people were killed, most of them Muslims, when he was the State’s chief minister. The Foreign Ministry criticized the documentary as biased and showing a “continuing colonial mindset.” On 14 February, tax department officials raided BBC offices in Delhi and Mumbai to conduct a “survey,” took documents and phones of several journalists and sealed the offices. In [May], the Delhi High Court issued a summons to the BBC in a defamation case reportedly filed by a non-profit based in Gujarat. The suit stated that the documentary cast a slur on the reputation of India, its judiciary, and Prime Minister Modi.

¹³⁵ Anisha Dutta, “India Trying to Prevent Declassification of ‘Sensitive’ 1947 Kashmir Papers,” Guardian (14 February 2023).

¹³⁶ Geeta Pandey, “Ramcharitmanas: The Hindu Epic Poem Causing a Political Storm in India,” BBC News (9 February 2023); “Adipurush: Why Audiences Turned against this Bollywood Epic,” BBC News (24 June 2023).

Part one of the documentary highlighted a previously unpublished report, obtained by the BBC from the British Foreign Office, claiming that the riots had “all the hallmarks of an ethnic cleansing” and that Modi was “directly responsible” for the “climate of impunity” that enabled them. Modi had long rejected accusations that he had any responsibility for the violence and never apologized for the riots; in 2013, a Supreme Court panel had ruled that there was insufficient evidence to prosecute him [See NCH Annual Reports 2003, 2005–2012, 2014–2015, 2017, 2022].

Students who tried to screen the documentary at university campuses were suspended by the university administration, harassed by Hindu organizations, or arrested for a short time by police, including at Jamia Millia Islamia University, New Delhi (arrest, harassment); Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi (harassment); Pondicherry University, Kalapet (harassment); Central University of Rajasthan, Ajmer (suspension, harassment); Tata Institute of Social Sciences, Mumbai (harassment); Delhi University, New Delhi (arrest); Dr Bhimrao Ambedkar University, New Delhi (arrest); and University of Hyderabad, Hyderabad. Meanwhile, the Supreme Court agreed to hear a petition challenging the ban, which was called “illegal, malicious, arbitrary and unconstitutional.”

On 10 March 2023, University of Delhi (DU) officials expelled Lokesh Chugh, a Ph.D. candidate at the Department of Anthropology, and national secretary of the Congress-affiliated National Students’ Union of India (NSUI), for one year, in connection with the screening of the documentary. The NSUI had held a screening of the documentary at the DU Faculty of Arts on 27 January 2023, which the police shut down, detaining 24 students in the process. DU alleged that Chugh was responsible for the situation. Chugh petitioned the Delhi High Court, contending that he was not present at the protest site and did not facilitate, or participate in, the screening. On 27 April 2023, the Court set aside DU’s order and restored Chugh’s admission, holding that the university had failed to afford Chugh the opportunity to respond to its decision.¹³⁷

¹³⁷ “India Says BBC Film on Modi’s Role in Gujarat Riots ‘Propaganda’,” Al Jazeera (19 January 2023); “India Blocks BBC Documentary on PM Modi from Airing in India,” Reuters (22 January 2023); Hannah Ellis-Petersen, “India Invokes Emergency Laws To Ban BBC Modi Documentary,” Guardian (23 January 2023); “JNU: India Students Angry after Screening of BBC Modi Documentary Blocked,” BBC News (25 January 2023); Shuriah Niazi, “Students Arrested over Banned Modi Documentary Screening,” University World News (26 January 2023); Shuriah Niazi, “Campuses Seething over Government Modi Documentary ‘Ban’,” University World News (2 February 2023); Hannah Ellis-Petersen, “BBC Offices in India Raided by Tax Officials amid Modi Documentary Fallout,” Guardian (14 February 2023); Richa Banka, “Delhi HC Sets Aside DU’s Order to Debar Student over BBC Film,” Hindustan Times (27 April 2023); Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (no date); “Indian Court Issues BBC with Summon over Modi Documentary, Says Reports,” Guardian (22 May 2023).

On 4 February 2023, Delhi's Saket Court upheld the right of Sharjeel Imam, a Ph.D. student in modern Indian history at Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU; New Delhi), and ten others to dissent, and acquitted them in the case involving violence on 13 December 2019 [See NCH Annual Report 2020]. Delhi police appealed the ruling. Imam was not released as he faced a probe under the anti-terrorism law known as the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act (UAPA) in a conspiracy case related to the February 2020 Northeast Delhi riots. The Delhi High Court was to hear Imam's bail plea on 15 March 2023 in the UAPA case.¹³⁸

On 13 April 2023, the University Grants Commission released draft guidelines for the incorporation of Indian Knowledge Systems (IKS) into undergraduate and postgraduate higher education courses in a move seen as "epistemic decolonization" by some and nationalistic propaganda by others. IKS referred to traditional knowledge which continued to be passed down informally today. Many critics feared that IKS would be defined exclusively from a Hindu nationalist perspective, emphasizing ancient Hindu texts (Vedas and Puranas) only and creating a narrow mindset among students.¹³⁹

In late May 2023, Delhi University's Academic Council passed a motion to remove the chapter "Modern Indian Political Thought" about Pakistan's national poet Muhammad Iqbal (1877–1938; often credited with giving birth to the idea of Pakistan), from the political science syllabus. Vice Chancellor Yogesh Singh stated that "those who laid the foundation to break India should not be in the syllabus." Iqbal also wrote Saare Jahan se Achha (Anthem of the People of Hindustan), a 1904 Urdu language patriotic song for children, which quickly became an anthem of opposition to the British Raj (1858–1947; the rule of the British Crown on the Indian subcontinent).¹⁴⁰

Since its release on streaming service Amazon Prime on 21 July 2023, the Bollywood film Bawaal was widely criticized for its "insensitive portrayal" and trivialization of the Holocaust, with Jewish human rights organization Simon Wiesenthal Center asking the platform to remove the film. The film was a love story between a history teacher whose aim was to make Instagram reels to teach World War II and his wife who hoped to save their failing marriage. Some scenes and dialogue drew parallels between the protagonists' love story and the Holocaust, including a fantasy scene inside a gas chamber and the use of Nazi leader Adolf Hitler and the Auschwitz death camp as metaphors.¹⁴¹

¹³⁸ Apoorvanand, "Sharjeel Imam's Speech Was Wild and Irresponsible, But Was It 'Sedition'?" The Wire (27 January 2019); Shuriah Niazi, "Sedition Charges against JNU Scholar for Citizenship Speech," University World News (30 January 2020); Shuriah Niazi, "Court Upholds Protesting Students' Rights to Dissent," University World News (10 February 2023).

¹³⁹ Shuriah Niazi, "Government Faces Trust Deficit over Introduction of IKS," University World News (2 May 2023).

¹⁴⁰ Milan Sharma, "Poet Muhammad Iqbal, Who Wrote 'Saare Jahan Se Achha,' Dropped from DU Political Science Syllabus," India Today (27 May 2023).

INDONESIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2001–2002, 2004–2013, 2015–2019, 2021–2022.

In November 2022, police forcibly broke up a vigil at Jayapura University of Technology and Science to commemorate the 21st anniversary of the abduction and killing of pro-independence leader Theys Eluay (1937–2001). According to reports, police fired tear gas to disperse the students who had raised the Morning Star flag – a symbol of Papuan independence. Fifteen people were arrested, three of whom were subsequently charged with treason and six with offenses relating to violence against police officers. The three students charged with treason remained in detention at the end of 2022, while the others were released on bail.¹⁴²

On 11 January 2023, President Joko Widodo acknowledged “gross human rights violations” between 1965 and 2003 and expressed regret, citing twelve “regrettable” events, including the 1965–1966 massacres (in which at least half a million suspected leftists were murdered); the abduction of democratic activists during protests against Suharto’s presidency (1967–1998) in early 1998; the 1984 killing of civilians by security forces at Tanjung Priok, Jakarta; human rights violations in the region of Papua (where there has been a long-running separatist movement; see above) and during an insurgency of the liberation movement Gerakan Aceh Merdeka (GAM) in Aceh province. Human rights violations during the occupation of East Timor (1975–2002) were not mentioned. Widodo’s apology came after he received the report from Komnas HAM (National Commission on Human Rights) that he had commissioned in 2021 to investigate past human rights violations. Widodo was the second president to publicly admit the 1965–1966 massacres, after President Abdurrahman Wahid’s public apology in 2000. Critics said that there were more than twelve atrocities and that Widodo’s expression of regret failed to address government accountability [See NCH Annual Reports 1996, 2001, 2004–2007, 2009–2013, 2015–2018, 2020].¹⁴³

See also Australia, Timor-Leste.

¹⁴¹ Geeta Pandey & Cherylann Mollan, “Bawaal: Bollywood Film Accused of Trivialising Holocaust,” BBC News (27 July 2023).

¹⁴² Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 193–194.

¹⁴³ Kelly Ng, “Jokowi Acknowledges Indonesia’s Past Human Rights Violations,” BBC News (12 January 2023); Saskia Konniger, “Spijtbetuiging voor wreedheden Indonesië ‘te weinig en te laat’,” NRC Handelsblad (12 January 2023).

IRAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2022.

Throughout 2022, authorities continued to demolish Baha’i cemeteries, as part of a broader pattern of persecution of the Baha’i minority.¹⁴⁴

There was further news in the case of the imprisoned members of the unauthorized Iranian Writers’ Association (IWA) [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2022]. On 9 March 2022, Keyvan Bazhan was released from Evin Prison. Reza Khandan-Mahabadi, the editor of a 19-volume encyclopedia of Iranian fiction, and of a multi-volume book of selected Iranian short stories from the past eighty years, fell sick, most likely with COVID-19, in December 2021. After a stay in hospital, he was summoned back to prison in April 2022. He was released in February 2023.¹⁴⁵

From May to October 2022, the authorities erected fresh concrete walls around the Khavaran mass graves outside Tehran where the remains of several hundred political dissidents executed secretly in 1988 (“the 1988 prison massacres”) were buried, sparking concerns that they could more easily destroy or tamper with the mass gravesite. Five security cameras were erected both inside the gravesite and in the street outside to intimidate mourning families and deter members of the public from visiting the site to pay their respects. Since the massacre occurred, the authorities had systematically and deliberately concealed and destroyed key evidence by repeatedly bulldozing over confirmed or suspected mass grave sites and destroying ad hoc grave markings and trees planted by families. No perpetrators (including President Ebrahim Raisi, who was a member of the 1988 death commissions, and other leading officials) were brought to justice for the past and ongoing crimes against humanity linked to the 1988 “prison massacres” [See also NCH Annual Reports 2008–2009, 2017, 2021–2022].¹⁴⁶

In July 2022, historian and documentary maker Hossein Dehbashi was sentenced to six months in prison despite the fact that the Culture and Media Prosecutor’s Office had disagreed with the prosecution and closed the case. Dehbashi was known for producing a promotional documentary for 2013 presidential candidate Hassan Rouhani (president of Iran from 2013 to 2021). In 2015, he had launched and directed the Iran Oral History Project (featuring interviews with key political figures from the past four decades) in collaboration with the National Library and Documentation Center.

¹⁴⁴ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 199.

¹⁴⁵ International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2022 (London: PEN, 2023), 81–83.

¹⁴⁶ Amnesty International, “Iran: Walls Erected around Graves of Massacre Victims Show Urgent Need for International Investigation” (13 September 2022); Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 200.

Dehbashi had a history of harassment. In November 2018, he was summoned to appear before the Culture and Media Court to respond to accusations from the Ministry of Intelligence, but no further explanation was given. In 2019, the Ministry of Health filed a complaint against him for “disturbing public opinion,” for which he was sentenced to four months in prison (upheld on appeal). In 2020, Dehbashi was charged with “spreading falsehood,” “propaganda against the regime,” and “insulting the clergy,” as a result of a complaint brought by the Ministry of Intelligence.¹⁴⁷

On 9 August 2022, a day after Tehran and Washington wound up indirect talks in Vienna to revive a 2015 nuclear pact, Franco-Iranian Fariba Adelkhah (1959–), a social and political anthropologist, specialist in Shia Islam, and director of research at Sciences Po’s Center for International Studies in Paris, was released on furlough for five days, which was not extended. On 11 February 2023, she was released. On 5 June, the fourth anniversary of her detention, the Committee to Support Fariba Adelkhah and Roland Marshall called for the return of her identification documents and her right to travel back to France [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2021].

On 12 August 2022, novelist Salman Rushdie (1947–), a British-American writer of several historical novels and a historian by training, was stabbed several times in a New York theater by a 24-year-old man reportedly sympathetic to the causes of the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps in Iran. Rushdie survived the murder attempt. His historical novel The Satanic Verses (1988) had been considered blasphemous by many Muslims and in February 1989 Iran’s leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini had issued a fatwa ordering the killing of the author. From that time onward, Rushdie had received many death threats [See NCH Annual Reports 1996, 1998–1999, 2013, 2022].¹⁴⁸

In the context of anti-regime protests following the killing of law student Mahsa Amini (1999–2022) on 16 September 2022, a number of students were arrested:

- On 22 September 2022, Setayesh Daman Afshan, a master student of Ancient Iranian History at Shahid Beheshti University in Tehran, was arrested and imprisoned in Sepidar Prison, Ahvaz.¹⁴⁹
- On 30 October 2022, Milad Rabiei, a history student at the University of Mazandaran, was arrested in Babolsar. He was later released on bail.¹⁵⁰

¹⁴⁷ HRANA (Human Rights Activists News Agency), “Documentary Maker Hossein Dehbashi Sentenced” (25 July 2022); HRANA, “Popular Documentary Producer Summoned to Culture and Media Court” (5 November 2018); HRANA, “A Daily Overview of Human Rights Violations in Iran for January 20, 2019” (20 January 2019).

¹⁴⁸ George Wright & Nomia Iqbal, “Salman Rushdie Stabbing Suspect Charged with Attempted Murder,” BBC News (14 August 2022).

¹⁴⁹ “List of Detainees in Iran since 16/09/2022,” CFPPI ([ongoing database]).

¹⁵⁰ “A Comprehensive Report of the First 82 Days of Nationwide Protests in Iran,” HRANA (8 December 2022); “List Created by the Volunteer Committee to Follow-Up on the Situation of Detainees,” Human Rights Watch (last updated 30 October 2022); “Kashowra,” Telegram (1 November 2022).

- On 4 January 2023, the Kashan Revolutionary Court sentenced Alireza Ghamgosar, an archaeology student at Kashan University, to two years in prison on the charge of “assembly and collusion against national security.” On [20 or 28] September 2022, police forces had arrested Ghamgosar in Rasht.¹⁵¹

In October 2022, the government barred people from visiting the Pasargadae and Persepolis – ancient sites dating back to the Achaemenid Empire (c. 550–330 BCE) and containing the Tomb of Cyrus II of Persia (also known as Cyrus the Great; c. 600–530 BCE) – between 27 and 29 October (considered by historians as the day of Cyrus’s death) in fear of antigovernment protests. Since 2016, when thousands of people had gathered at the site, chanting antigovernment slogans such as “Iran is our homeland, Cyrus is our father,” measures against commemorations had intensified.¹⁵²

On 18 November 2022, in the context of anti-government protests following the killing of law student Mahsa Amini (1999–2022) on 16 September 2022, protestors set fire to the ancestral home of founder of the Islamic Republic Ayatollah Khomeini (1902–1989) in Khomein, which had been converted into a museum commemorating his life.¹⁵³

On 8 May 2023, Yousef Mehrdad and Sadrollah Fazeli Zare were hanged after they had been convicted of “blasphemy” for “insulting the Prophet Muhammad” and “promoting atheism.” They had been arrested in May 2020 for their involvement in a Telegram channel called Critique of Superstition and Religion, and had spent months in solitary confinement in Arak prison. In August 2022, a group of United Nations human rights experts had voiced concern over the government’s blasphemy laws, urging the government to decriminalize blasphemy and “ensure the right to freedom of religion or belief and freedom of opinion and expression.”¹⁵⁴

See also Argentina.

¹⁵¹ “Iran Protests: Two Students Sentenced to a Total of Six Years,” HRANA (4 January 2023); “List of Detainees in Iran since 16/09/2022,” CFPPI ([ongoing database]).

¹⁵² “Iran’s Regime Bans Gathering At Pasargadae In Fear Of Protests,” Iran International (29 October 2022).

¹⁵³ “Iranian Protesters Set Fire to Ayatollah Khomeini’s House,” BBC News (18 November 2022).

¹⁵⁴ United Nations Office of the High Commission on Human Rights, “Iran: UN Experts Alarmed by Escalating Religious Persecution,” (press release; 22 August 2022); “Iran Hangs Two Men for Blasphemy as Executions Rise amid Unrest,” Guardian (8 May 2023); Maziar Motamedi, “Iran Executes Two ‘Quran Burners’ for Blasphemy,” Al Jazeera (8 May 2023).

IRAQ

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2022.

In April 2022, a Pax for Peace report showed how residents of Hawija, northern Iraq, continued to suffer from the June 2015 Dutch bombing of a munitions factory that killed at least 85 civilians and injured dozens more. Residents demanded an apology, compensation, and a meaningful explanation of what had occurred.¹⁵⁵

On 19 April 2023, the United Nations (UN) Committee on Enforced Disappearances issued its final report on disappearances in Iraq since 1968, estimated at between 250,000 and 1,000,000 cases. The report identified five waves: the Ba’ath era in federal Iraq and the Kurdistan Region (1968–2003); from the 2003 invasion and subsequent occupation to the pre-Da’esh period (2003–2014); the proclamation by Da’esh (Islamic State) of an Islamic caliphate over part of the territory of Iraq and military operations against Da’esh (2014–2017); the anti-government protests (2018–2020), and, finally, ongoing patterns (2020–). The UN Committee urged the government to include enforced disappearances as a separate offense in national legislation (as it could not yet be prosecuted) and to establish a comprehensive search and investigation strategy.¹⁵⁶

IRELAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000, 2002, 2004, 2006, 2013, 2015–2016, 2021.

In its 2022 observations on Ireland’s fifth periodic report, the United Nations Human Rights Committee (HRC) raised concern at gaps in the government’s response to past abuse of women and children who resided or were confined in State-funded institutions operated until the late 1990s by religious orders. These institutions included “mother and baby homes” for unmarried women to give birth, “Magdalene laundries” where women and girls were forced to live and work, and institutional homes for children. The HRC criticized deficits in the State redress system offered to survivors. It called for a transitional justice mechanism to establish the truth of what happened in these institutions and to ensure effective remedies, including compensation.¹⁵⁷

¹⁵⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 322.

¹⁵⁶ “Iraq: Rights Experts Call for New Laws to End ‘Waves of Disappearance’,” UN News (4 April 2023).

¹⁵⁷ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 205–206.

In April 2023, Trinity College in Dublin (founded in 1592) decided to de-name the Berkeley Library (opened in 1967) because the renowned philosopher and bishop of Cloyne, George Berkeley (1685–1753), after whom it was named, had been a slave owner on Rhode Island in America in 1730–1731 and a theorist of slavery and racial discrimination.¹⁵⁸

See also United Kingdom.

ISRAEL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000–2003, 2008–2014, 2016–2022.

On 31 July 2022, a group of 120 faculty members at Ben-Gurion University (BGU), Beersheba, signed a letter calling on BGU to withdraw its summoning of Arab student Watan Madi for a disciplinary hearing, after she had quoted an article by Palestinian poet Mahmoud Darwish (1941–2008) that included the word shahid – the Arabic for martyr that BGU claimed usually referred to terrorists – during a memorial event to mark 15 May, known by Palestinians as Nakba Day (commemorating the 1948 Declaration of Independence of Israel and the accompanying ethnic cleansing of Palestinians). The summons followed a complaint filed by the BGU chapter of the right-wing group Im Tirtzu [See also NCH Annual Report 2012].¹⁵⁹

On 1 August 2022, following the declassification of hundreds of previously classified pages related to the 1956 Kafr Qasem (Kafr Qasim) massacre, Israeli newspaper Haaretz called on the State to “establish an independent committee that will reconsider the State’s policy on publishing historical documents and release information about the country’s past to the public.” The release of the Kafr Qasem records had followed a five-year lawsuit between historian Adam Raz and the research institute Akevot against the State, to force the Israel Defense Forces Archive to release its documents. Haaretz had previously been among the petitioners unsuccessfully seeking the release of classified documents related to the 1948 Deir Yassin massacre [See NCH Annual Reports 2000, 2010, 2017, 2019–2020].¹⁶⁰

¹⁵⁸ John Walshe, “Trinity College Dublin Ponders De-naming Berkeley Library,” University World News (21 March 2023); John Walshe & Nathan Greenfield, “Trinity College Dublin Opts to De-name Berkeley Library,” University World News (28 April 2023).

¹⁵⁹ Nati Yefet, “120 Israeli Academics Demand Scrapping Complaint Against Student Who Quoted Palestinian Poet,” Haaretz (31 July 2022).

¹⁶⁰ “There Are Thousands of Classified Pages Israel Has Yet to Reveal, for the Sake of Healing,” Haaretz (Editorial; 1 August 2022).

In [January] 2023, Minister of Culture Miki Zohar pledged to “revoke funding that promotes our enemy’s narrative,” to withhold grants from films that “present Israeli soldiers as murderers,” and to require filmmakers to sign a declaration stating that they would not use State funding to create content that “harms the State of Israel or Israel Defense Forces soldiers.” He also said that two producers were required to return their government-funded grants, including Noam Sheizag and Idit Avrahami’s H2: The Occupation Lab, a documentary tracking the history of the occupation of Hebron by Israeli forces since the 1967 Six-Day War. Zohar’s comments followed a pressure campaign by far-right activist Shai Glick, who had previously been instrumental in the cancelation of a public screening of the documentary in Pardes Hanna.¹⁶¹

On 1 January 2023, two Jewish extremists desecrated more than thirty graves at the Protestant Cemetery on Mount Zion, close to Jerusalem’s walled Old City. The Anglican Church said the targeting of the crosses clearly suggested that “these criminal acts were motivated by religious bigotry and hatred against Christians.” The same cemetery was vandalized in a similar way nine years ago.¹⁶²

In late May 2023, David Ben Shlomo, an archaeologist at the Department of Land of Israel Studies and Archaeology based at Ariel University in the occupied West Bank, had his lecture at the International Congress on the Archaeology of the Ancient Near East, held in Copenhagen from 22 to 26 May 2023, canceled following pressure from fellow researchers. Ben Shlomo’s affiliation with Ariel University, a settlement university in the occupied territories, had not been mentioned in the congress program. Excavating in occupied territories was considered a violation under international humanitarian and human rights law and Article 2 of 1993 Oslo Accords Annex III because archaeological sites and antiquities were the property of the occupied territory. In addition, the 2014 World Archaeological Congress Dead Sea Accord had “call[ed] on all States and non-State actors ... to refrain from archaeological excavation in occupied territory.” The details of Ben Shlomo’s talk – on findings from the Iron Age in the southern Jordan Valley, located in the occupied West Bank – were removed from the conference website after the cancelation of his presentation.¹⁶³

See also Australia, Egypt, Germany, Palestine, Tunisia.

¹⁶¹ Noa Yachot, “‘Attack on Freedom’: Israel Moves to Claw Back State Funds from Critical Films,” Guardian (21 January 2023).

¹⁶² “Anglican Church and UK Condemn Desecration of Jerusalem Graves,” BBC News (5 January 2023).

¹⁶³ Oren Ziv, “After Backlash, Conference Drops Israeli Archeologist for Settlement University Ties,” +972 Magazine (28 May 2023); World Archaeological Congress, The WAC Dead Sea Accord: On the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict (2014); Ziv Stahl, Appropriating the Past: Israel’s Archaeological Practices in the Westbank (s.l.: Emek Shaveh & Yesh Din, 2017).

ITALY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2003, 2008, 2010, 2012, 2016–2019, 2021–2022.

See United States.

IVORY COAST (Côte d’Ivoire)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006–2021.

JAMAICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017–2018.

JAPAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2022.

On 13 August 2022, two days before the 77th anniversary of Japan’s surrender in World War II, Industry Minister Yasutoshi Nishimura visited the controversial Yasukuni Shrine – a memorial for 2,5 million victims of war, including since 1978 fourteen convicted war criminals, which was considered a glorification of a militaristic and colonial past – in Tokyo. South Korea’s foreign minister expressed “deep concern” over the shrine’s glorification of “Japan’s past war of aggression.” On 15 August, the ministers of economic security and disaster reconstruction and the policy head of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party also visited the shrine [See also NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022].¹⁶⁴

In early 2023, plans emerged to institutionalize the revised appointment procedure in an amendment to the law on the Science Council of Japan [See NCH Annual Report 2021].¹⁶⁵

On 3 March 2023, 1994 Nobel Literature Prize laureate Ōe Kenzaburō (1935–2023) died. In 2005, Ōe and historian Ienaga Saburō (1913–2002) [See NCH Annual Reports 1998, 2001] had been accused of defamation in their respective works, Okinawa Notes (1970) and The Pacific War (1968), claiming that the “group suicides” of civilians on Zamami and Tokashiki islands during the 1945 Battle of Okinawa had in fact been ordered by Japanese military. Ōe and his publisher had been sued by Umezawa Yutaka, a former garrison commander on Zamami island, and Akamatsu Hidekazu, brother of the late former commanding officer on Tokashiki island Akamatsu Yoshitsugu, seeking huge damages and a publication ban on his books. In particular, Ōe had asserted that thousands of people had been coerced into suicide by the Japanese military at the end of World War II, by telling them that advancing American troops would rape, torture, and murder them. However, Ōe had not identified either of the commanding officers by name or said that they had personally ordered the suicides. Ienaga’s book, ¹⁶⁴ “Japanese Minister Visits Yasukuni Shrine for War Dead: Report,” Al Jazeera (13 August 2022); Justin McCurry, “Japan Ministers Visit War Shrine as South Korea Calls for End to Historical Tensions,” Guardian (15 August 2022).

¹⁶⁵ Science Council of Japan, “Explanation Note on the Statement of the General Assembly \(December 2022\) Calling Upon the Government To Reconsider Its Planned Amendment of the Law Concerning the Science Council of Japan” (Memo; 7 February 2023).

however, mentioned Umezawa, while a passage regarding Akamatsu's suicide order on Tokashiki had reportedly been expunged from his book in 1986. On 28 March 2008, the Osaka District Court had dismissed the defamation suit, recognizing the "deep involvement" of the Japanese army in the mass suicides, but without determining whether the wartime commanders had ordered them. Its verdict came in the wake of the Education Ministry's 2007 decision to delete references to the military from descriptions of "group suicides" in history textbooks [See NCH Annual Reports 2008–2009]. The plaintiffs – who received support of the revisionist association Jiyūshugi shikan kenkyūkai (Study Group for a Liberal View of History) [See NCH Annual Reports 2001–2002, 2020] – appealed the verdict twice (in October 2008 for the Osaka High Court and in 2011 for the Supreme Court), but both times the suit was decided in Ōe's favor. In the final one, the Supreme Court ruled that "the military was deeply involved in the mass suicides."¹⁶⁶

See also Philippines, United States.

JORDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003–2004, 2015, 2018, 2022.

In March 2022, the authorities used the Law of Crime Prevention to arrest at least 150 activists, journalists, teachers and others in an apparent effort to stop them from organizing multiple protests, including one to commemorate youth-led anti-government protests that took place in March 2011. The authorities released all of them shortly after their arrest.¹⁶⁷

¹⁶⁶ "Nobel Prize-Winning Author Kenzaburo Oe Dies," BBC News (13 March 2023); Ōe Kenzaburō, "Misreading, Espionage and 'Beautiful Martyrdom': On Hearing the Okinawa 'Mass Suicides' Suit Court Verdict," The Asia-Pacific Journal (3 October 2008); Steve Rabson, "Case Dismissed: Osaka Court Upholds Novelist Oe Kenzaburo for Writing that the Japanese Military Ordered 'Group Suicides' in the Battle of Okinawa," Japan Focus (1 April 2008).

¹⁶⁷ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 215.

KAZAKHSTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999–2001, 2007, 2012, 2022.

KENYA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2000, 2002–2005, 2007, 2009–2018, 2020–2022.

On 26 October 2016, Amani Mohammed Mwafujo, a Kiswahili and history teacher at the Tawheed Secondary School, Kwale County, was arrested on terrorism charges, including membership in the Somalia-based Al-Shabaab military group. By March 2019, only two witnesses had testified and an arrest warrant had been issued against the investigating officer for failing to respond to a court summons. On 17 March 2022, Mwafujo was acquitted of all charges. When his family requested to pick him up from the court, the day of his release was postponed twice. On 22 March, six men stopped the matatu (a shared taxi) with which Mwafujo and his family were going home, and abducted him. On 3 September 2022, he resurfaced. His family refused to disclose details, as they were warned by the abductors not to speak to the media.¹⁶⁸

On 23 August 2022, lawyers of the Kipsigis and Talai peoples forced off their ancestral lands around Kericho, a major tea-growing region in the Rift Valley, by British settlers during colonial rule took their case against the United Kingdom (UK) to the European Court of Human Rights in Strasbourg. In 2021, six United Nations Special Rapporteurs had jointly expressed “serious concern” at the failure of the UK to offer a public apology or acknowledge their share of responsibility for these colonial-era abuses. The lawyers argued that the British army and colonial administrators had used rape, murder, and arson to seize swathes of arable land in Kericho from its traditional owners.¹⁶⁹

KOREA, NORTH

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2006–2007, 2009–2011, 2013–2015, 2017, 2019.

See Korea, South.

¹⁶⁸ Farhiya Hussein, “Mombasa Man Resurfaces after Five Months in ‘Captivity’,” Nation (5 September 2022).

¹⁶⁹ AFP, “Kenyans Taking UK to EU Court over Colonial-Era Abuses,” Capital News (24 August 2022); United Nations Mandates, Allegations Letter Regarding Human Rights Violations During the Precolonial and Colonial Period in Western Kenya (UN Doc. AL GBR 5/2021) (31 May 2021).

KOREA, SOUTH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998–2001, 2003, 2006, 2008–2010, 2012–2013, 2016–2022.

In July 2022, police raided the home of researcher Jeong Dae-il, an expert in the North Korean Juche ideology at the Korea Institute for National Unification (KINU), and confiscated his cellphone, computers, research materials, and a copy of With the Century, a memoir by former North Korean President Kim Il-sung (1912–1994), considered controversial in South Korea, on charges of violating the National Security Act (NSA), which prohibits possessing documents associated with anti-State groups. Months earlier, police had raided a publishing house that had printed Kim’s memoir, claiming a violation of the NSA. The police warrant stated that Jeong had possibly been in communication with this publisher regarding the production of the memoir.¹⁷⁰

On 6 July 2022, the National Intelligence Service filed a complaint against two of its former chiefs, Suh Hoon and Park Jie-won, who led the agency during the presidency of Moon Jae-in (in office between 2017–2022), for respectively falsifying evidence and terminating an investigation related to the 2019 deportation of two North Korean fishermen, and destroying intelligence records related to the 2020 shooting of a South Korean fisheries official by North Korean troops.¹⁷¹

On 24 August 2022, a 2020 Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) – set up to investigate, among others, human rights violations committed during the military governments of Park Chung Hee (1917–1979; in office as president between 1962–1979), Chun Doo-hwan (1931–2021; in office as president between 1980–1988) and Roh Tae-woo (1932–2021; in office as president between 1988–1993) – found these regimes responsible for atrocities, including killings, enslavement, and rape committed at Brothers Home (a State-funded facility for thousands of “vagrants,” including homeless and disabled people, as well as children, who were indiscriminately kidnapped, with the aim of “beautifying” the streets) from the 1960s to the 1980s. At least 657 people were killed at Brothers Home according to a preliminary examination of records by the commission. No one had yet been held accountable. Jung Geun-sik, the TRC’s chairperson, urged the government to issue a formal apology and explore ways to ease the suffering of the victims.¹⁷²

¹⁷⁰ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2022 (New York: SAR, 2022).

¹⁷¹ “South Korean Spy Agency Files Complaints against Ex-Chiefs Over N.Korea Cases,” Reuters (6 July 2022).

¹⁷² “South Korea Military Gov’ts Blamed for Abuses, Deaths at Facility,” Al Jazeera (24 August 2022); Republic of Korea’s Truth and Reconciliation Commission, “About the Commission,” ([no date]).

On 31 March 2023, Chun Woo-won, the grandson of South Korea's last military dictator General Chun Doo-hwan (ruled 1980–1988), apologized to relatives of those killed during the 18 May 1980 Gwangju Uprising. Gwangju had been the center of pro-democracy protests against martial law, imposed by Chun after he led a coup, with the crackdown leaving more than two hundred protesters dead or missing, according to official figures [See also NCH Annual Reports 2012, 2017–2018, 2022].¹⁷³

See also Japan, Vietnam.

KOSOVO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2021–2022. For previous entries: see Serbia.

As of July 2022, there existed no central archive for the Kosovo War (1998–1999), forcing human rights groups, amateur archivists and the State Archives to preserve records separately, often under poor preservation circumstances and without the appropriate security mechanisms.

In late July 2022, Baki Svirca, author of a book on the plundering and destruction of Kosovo's archives by Serbian forces before and during the Kosovo War, called on the United Nations (UN) to hand over the archival documents that were created while Kosovo was a UN protectorate (1999–2008).¹⁷⁴

A 30 August 2022 study by the Humanitarian Law Center in Pristina found that the memorialization of the Kosovo War (1998–1999) was characterized by inaccurate data, nationalist language, ethnic hatred, and the exclusion of groups of victims. It expressed concern that a large number of sites “where serious violations of human rights occurred have faded from the collective memory of our society.”¹⁷⁵

On [16] December 2022, the Kosovo Specialist Chambers (KSC) in The Hague sentenced former Kosovo Liberation Army Commander Salih Mustafa to 26 years in prison for war crimes, including torture and arbitrary detention, committed during the Kosovo War (1998–1999). The sentence was hailed as a landmark first verdict by the KSC.¹⁷⁶

¹⁷³ Nadeem Shad, “S Korea Dictator’s Grandson Sorry for 1980 Gwangju Crackdown,” BBC News (31 March 2023).

¹⁷⁴ Serbeze Haxhijaj, “Fractured History: Why Kosovo Has No Proper Wartime Archive,” Balkan Insight (25 July 2022).

¹⁷⁵ Perparim Isufi, “Kosovo Urged to Take ‘Inclusive Approach’ to War Memorialization,” Balkan Insight (30 August 2022).

¹⁷⁶ Xhorxhina Bami, “Kosovo Ex-Guerrilla Convicted of War Crimes by Hague Court,” Balkan Insight (16 December 2022).

On 2 May 2023, Serbian President Aleksandar Vučić and Kosovo Prime Minister Albin Kurti reached a co-operation agreement under European Union mediation to locate and identify people still missing from the 1998–1999 war. According to the European Union, 1,621 people remained unaccounted for, mostly Kosovo Albanians. The deal included the use of satellite data and other advanced technology, including laser mapping, to detect mass graves, the sharing of official files (including “all materials, notes, orders, documents, videos, audio recordings, and any other documents including those having classified status”) and the establishment of a Joint Commission on missing people.¹⁷⁷

KUWAIT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2000, 2004–2005, 2018, 2021.

KYRGYZSTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010–2013, 2016–2017, 2021–2022.

¹⁷⁷ “Declaration of President Aleksandar Vučić and Prime Minister Albin Kurti on Missing Persons” (press release; 2 May 2023); Kathryn Armstrong, “Kosovo and Serbia Agree to Help Find War’s Missing,” BBC News (2 May 2023).

LAOS

Previous Annual Report entries: –.

As 15 December 2022 marked the tenth anniversary of the disappearance of civil society leader Sombath Somphone (1952–), civil society organizations and individuals around the world called on Lao authorities to determine his fate and whereabouts and deliver justice, truth, and reparation to his family members.¹⁷⁸

LATVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2006, 2008, 2015–2016, 2019, 2022.

On 26 August 2022, the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Committee requested the government to stop the demolition of the Monument to the Liberators of Soviet Latvia and Riga from the German Fascist Invaders in Pārdaugava, and to preserve the already demolished parts, after it had received a complaint that the demolition constituted a violation of the 1966 UN International Pact on Civil and Political Rights. However, the final element of the monument, an obelisk, had already been destroyed the previous day. In June 2022, parliament had approved a law that allowed municipalities to remove up to three hundred Soviet statues, monuments, and memorials.¹⁷⁹

See also Russia.

LEBANON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2003, 2006–2022.

In 2022, Human Rights Watch found multiple failures, gross negligence, and procedural violations in the case of assassinated critic and archivist Lokman Slim (1962–2021) [See also NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022].¹⁸⁰

¹⁷⁸ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 228.

¹⁷⁹ Samira Ataei, “‘Een tank is een moordwapen, geen monument’” (interview with Marek Tamm), De Standaard (19 August 2022), 12; “UN Committee Belatedly Requests To Stop Soviet Victory Monument's Demolition in Pārdaugava,” Baltic News Network (30 August 2022).

¹⁸⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 378.

On 4 August 2022, the second anniversary of the Beirut port explosion in which 2,750 tons of ammonium nitrate ignited in a port warehouse killing more than two hundred people and injuring more than seven thousand, survivors, family members and several human rights organizations including Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International, called on the United Nations Human Rights Council to set up an independent fact-finding mission. A Lebanese investigation had been stymied by political interference, including more than 25 requests by politicians to dismiss leading judge Fadi Sawan, who was dismissed in February 2021, and his successor Tarek Bitar, who had his investigation suspended in December 2021.

On 23 February 2023, the High Court of Justice in London ruled that the London-registered chemical trading firm Savaro Ltd. was liable for the blast, because of their suspected chartering of the shipment of ammonium nitrate in 2013 that ended up in the Beirut warehouse.¹⁸¹

On 25 January 2023, UNESCO added the Rachid Karamah International Fair in Tripoli, designed in 1962 by Brazilian architect Oscar Niemeyer, to the list of World Heritage Sites in danger, due to a lack of financial resources allocated to its maintenance and the risk of development projects violating the integrity of the 70-hectare complex.¹⁸²

LIBERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2004–2015, 2018, 2021.

See France.

LIBYA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2005–2021.

In [March] 2023, requests were made to the Antiquities Department and the government to protect the UNESCO World Heritage Site Sabratha, a Phoenician trading post (potentially dating back to the fifth century BCE) that was rebuilt in the second and third century as one of the most important cities of the ¹⁸² Dominic Dudley, "UN Raises Alarm Over World Heritage Sites In Yemen and Lebanon," Forbes (25 January 2023).

¹⁸¹ Tessa Fox, "Two Years after Beirut Blast, Lawsuits Raise Hopes for Justice," Al Jazeera (4 August 2022); Kareem Chehayeb, "UK Ruling Delivers Rare Victory for Beirut Blast Victims," AP News (23 February 2023).

Roman “Regio Tripolitana.” In July 2016, Sabratha and four other Libyan heritage sites were included in the List of World Heritage in Danger, due to the damage and continuing threat of damage caused by the Civil War (2014–), and to the repeated targeting by vandals.¹⁸³

LITHUANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005, 2009, 2015, 2018, 2021–2022.

¹⁸³ “Calls to Protect Libyan Heritage Site Spoilt by Vandals,” Africa News (6 March 2023).

MACEDONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2006–2008, 2010–2015, 2017–2018. See North Macedonia.

MADAGASCAR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

MALAWI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2019, 2021.

MALAYSIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2002, 2007–2008, 2010–2011, 2016–2017, 2019–2022.

In July 2022, the play A Notional History [sic] (2019), produced by the Kuala Lumpur-based Five Arts Center, debuted. With the help of history textbooks, inherited memories, official narratives, and video interviews, it aimed at providing a multi-perspective view on the Malayan Emergency (1948–1960; also known as the Anti-British National Liberation War), a guerilla war in which Communist pro-independence fighters of the Malayan National Liberation Army fought forces of the British Empire and Commonwealth, leading to the death of at least 13,500 people [See also NCH Annual Reports 2012–2013].

The play contained scenes from Revolusi '48 (2008), a never-released documentary by political graphic designer and illustrator Fahmi Reza in which exiled Communist guerrillas tell their story on the war and the independence of the Federation of Malaya in 1957. Ever since the documentary was made, Fahmi had been the subject of verbal and non-verbal threats. The play also showed footage of a 2018 public forum in Kuala Lumpur called “Should We Rewrite Our History Textbooks,” in which Fahmi had been publicly attacked by right-wing groups, triggering a social media campaign against her.¹⁸⁴

¹⁸⁴ Nabila Azlan, “‘A Notional History’ Looks Back in Order To Inch Forward,” Bandar Aktiviti Seni (15 July 2022); Marco Ferrarese, “‘Grief and Memory’: Challenging Malaysia’s Historical Narratives,” Al Jazeera (1 September 2022).

MALDIVES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2009–2010, 2013, 2020–2021.

MALI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011, 2013–2021.

On 5 February 2023, the junta expelled the head of the human rights division of the United Nations (UN) Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali, Guillaume Ngefa Atonodok Andali, after he had criticized the regime at a UN Security Council briefing on 27 January. Throughout 2022, there had been no progress in ensuring accountability for large-scale atrocities implicating ethnic militias and government soldiers, and no efforts had been made to implement the recommendations of the UN International Commission of Inquiry into war crimes committed by security forces and crimes against humanity committed by Islamist armed groups and ethnic militias between 2012 and 2018.¹⁸⁵

See also France.

MALTA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2012, 2021.

MARSHALL ISLANDS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2015.

MAURITANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2002, 2009, 2011, 2017, 2019–2020.

¹⁸⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 408; “Mali Junta Expels UN Mission’s Human Rights Chief,” Africa News (6 February 2023).

MAURITIUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2012.

See United Kingdom.

MEXICO

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999, 2001–2022.

On 12 August 2022, poet, historian and political scientist Enrique Márquez Jaramillo (1950–), former Executive Director of Cultural Diplomacy at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, received two threats to his personal phone after criticizing the government’s so-called “Fourth Transformation” in his columns in the newspaper El Universal. He decided to suspend the publication of his next article due to appear the next day. Márquez had been part of the peace negotiation commission with the EZLN (Zapatista Army of National Liberation – See NCH Annual Reports 1997, 1999) in 1994 and published 32 books on law, political science and history, and literature. He was awarded the National Prize for Science and Cultural Dissemination Journalism in 2010. The “Fourth Transformation” referred to President Andrés Manuel López Obrador’s campaign against “privileged abuses” ((including ending corruption and expanding social programs) allegedly comparable to three previous transformations: the War of Independence (1810–1821), the Reform War (1858–1861), and the Mexican Revolution (1910–1917)).¹⁸⁶

On 18 August 2022, the Comisión para la Verdad y Acceso a la Justicia del caso Ayotzinapa (Commission for Truth and Access to Justice in the Ayotzinapa case) published a redacted report about the 2014 Ayotzinapa case of 43 disappeared and murdered students [See NCH Annual Reports 2015, 2021–2022]. Its chairman, Alejandro Encinas, said that the official involvement in the disappearances constituted a “State crime,” that high-level officials of the administration of then President Enrique Peña Nieto (in office between 2012–2018) orchestrated a cover-up, and that military personnel bore responsibility either directly or through negligence. The report refuted the so-called “historical truth” – the official version that the students were killed by gang members and burned in a dump on the outskirts of Iguala – and criticized the Secretaría de la Defensa Nacional (SENEDA; Secretariat of National Defense) and the Fiscalía General de la República (Attorney General’s Office) for delays in handing over information. Already on 28 March 2022, the Grupo Interdisciplinario de Expertos Independientes (GIEI; Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts), created by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) in 2014, had released a report revealing that the armed forces had intentionally destroyed, falsified, and hidden information during and following the 2014 kidnapping.

¹⁸⁶ International PEN, Case List 2022 (London: PEN, 2023), 33.

In September 2022, Futuro Investigates obtained an unredacted copy of the Commission's report from a confidential source in the government, suggesting that the Mexican army was an accomplice in covering up the crimes. The journalist who on 24 September 2022 reported about this unredacted version, Peniley Ramírez, was seriously harassed. On 27 September 2022, special prosecutor and head of the investigation Omar Gómez Trejo resigned, according to President Andrés Manuel López Obrador because he "disagreed with the procedures that were followed." His resignation came after two dozen arrest warrants were canceled. On 15 November, the IACHR published a report saying that there remained "persistent structures within the State apparatus that sought to cover up the crime," and that the government had a duty to the families of the disappeared to clarify the role of the armed forces in the disappearances.¹⁸⁷

On 30 September 2022, in the run-up to the 54th anniversary of the 1968 Tlatelolco massacre, in which troops fired on and killed hundreds of student protesters, the National Security Archive published a previously classified report by the United States Central Information Agency (CIA) concluding that then Secretary of the Interior Luis Echeverría Álvarez (1922–2022) "share[d] heavily in the blame." In March 2009, despite ample documentation for his involvement, a federal court had cleared Echeverría from the charge of genocide for the massacre [See NCH Annual Reports 2001–2004, 2006–2010, 2015, 2019].¹⁸⁸

See also United States.

¹⁸⁷ "Mexico Missing Students: Parents Angry at Military's Obstruction," BBC News (30 March 2022); Kate Doyle & Claire Dorfman, "Mexican Military Archives Produce New Revelations in the Ayotzinapa Case," National Security Archive (1 April 2022); "Ayotzinapa Investigations Special Exhibit Page Launch," National Security Archive (26 April 2022); Informe de la Presidencia de la Comisión para la Verdad y Acceso a la Justicia del Caso Ayotzinapa (Mexico, 18 August 2022) – full report here; "Truth Commission Faults Mexico Military over 43 Missing Students," Al Jazeera (19 August 2022); "Mexico Arrests Former Top Prosecutor over Missing Students Case," Al Jazeera (20 August 2022); "Six of 43 Missing Mexico Students Were Given to Army: Official," Al Jazeera (27 August 2022); Stephanie Brewer, "Ayotzinapa Case: Key Points to Understand the Mexican Government's New Actions," WOLA (31 August 2022); "Mexico Arrests Military Officials over 2014 Missing Students Case," Al Jazeera (15 September 2022); Peniley Ramírez, "Unredacted Report Suggests Mexican Army Helped Cover Up Missing Students," Latino Rebels (26 September 2022); "Mexico: Prosecutor Investigating Missing Students Case Resigns," Al Jazeera (27 September 2022); "Americas Rights Body Turns Up Heat on Mexico over Missing Students," Reuters (16 November 2022); Kate Doyle & Claire Dorfman, "Guacamaya Leaks and the Ayotzinapa Case," National Security Archive (10 March 2023).

¹⁸⁸ Claire Dorfman, "Echeverría's Legacy of 'Co-opt and Control'," National Security Archive (30 September 2022).

MOLDOVA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2003, 2010, 2022.

On 19 April 2022, President Maia Sandu signed into law a prohibition on the use of symbols associated with Russia's military activities abroad. These included the ribbon of St. George and the letters "Z" and "V." Their use by pro-Russian political groups was expected at a traditional demonstration held on 9 May 2022 to mark Victory Day in World War II. While the event was allowed to proceed uninterrupted, people displaying the banned symbols were fined.¹⁸⁹

MONGOLIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2013.

MONTENEGRO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2017, 2021–2022.

On 18 October 2022, the Directorate of Inspection Affairs ordered that a memorial plaque for the former inmates of Morinj detention camp be removed, because it had been installed without permission of the local authorities. During the siege of Dubrovnik by the Yugoslav People's Army (1991–1992), which included a large number of Montenegrin soldiers, 270 Croatian war prisoners and civilians were sent to the camp. The Montenegrin State had so far paid € 1,4 million in compensation to 145 former detainees.¹⁹⁰

On 11 April 2023, it was announced that the Supreme State Prosecution would ask for revision of a 2006 agreement with the Croatian Supreme State Prosecutors that effectively barred the prosecution of Croatian citizens suspected of war crimes committed in the Lora Military Prison in Split during the Yugoslav Wars of Independence (1991–1995). Croatian soldiers were accused of torturing and killing at least 14 Montenegrin soldiers at the Lora prison in 1992.¹⁹¹

¹⁸⁹ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 255.

¹⁹⁰ Samir Kajosevic, "Montenegro Authorities Order Removal of Detention Camp Memorial," Balkan Insight (18 October 2022).

¹⁹¹ Samir Kajosevic, "Montenegro Seeks to Indict Croatians for Prison Camp Crimes," Balkan Insight (11 April 2023).

MOROCCO / WESTERN SAHARA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2013, 2015–2018, 2020–2022.

On 15 August 2022, the court of first instance in Oued Zem sentenced Fatima Karim to two years in prison for “electronically attacking religion,” related to Facebook posts in which she had satirically commented on verses of the Koran and hadiths of the Prophet Muhammad. During the trial, she had publicly apologized to “anyone who felt offended,” but asserted that her right to freedom of expression was guaranteed by the Constitution. On 13 September, the Court of Appeal of Khouribga confirmed the sentence.¹⁹²

On 1 March 2023, historian Maâti Monjib (1962–) [See NCH Annual Reports 2016, 2020–2022] received an official letter from the Ministry of Higher Education and Research informing him that he had been suspended from his duties as professor of history at Mohammed V University, Rabat, with cessation of payment of his salary. The measure was accompanied by a new defamation campaign against him, suggesting that the suspension resulted from his alleged “absenteeism” from his place of work, even though the official letter noted that it stemmed from his sentencing in January 2021 to a year-long prison term.¹⁹³

Western Sahara

Among the Saharawi activists serving a life sentence in various camps and prisons was Brahim Ismaili, president of Center for Preservation of the Collective Saharawi Memory. On 9 November 2010, Ismaili was arrested and taken to Gdeim Izik camp outside El Aaiún. On 13 May 2011, he was released together with other Saharawis, but just outside of the prison’s gates, arrested again and put in Salé prison, 1,200 km up north. In 2020, he was imprisoned in Ait Melloul prison, close to Agadir. In 1987 he had already been abducted and kept in a secret detention center for months.¹⁹⁴

¹⁹² “Morocco: Jail Upheld on Appeal for Blogger Accused of “Undermining Islam” – Lawyer,” Africa News (14 September 2022).

¹⁹³ Middle East Studies Association Committee on Academic Freedom, Letter Protesting Ongoing Mistreatment of Moroccan Scholar, Prof. Maati Monjib (17 May 2023).

¹⁹⁴ Tone Sørfoonn Moe, Imprisoned Students: Personal Stories of a Group of Saharawi Students Held in Moroccan Jails (Oslo: Norsk Studentorganisasjon, 2020), 85.

MOZAMBIQUE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018, 2020.

A 2023 study reported that some academics felt restricted when intending to disseminate sensitive research findings. Among the historians interviewed, some voiced concerns about having suffered censorship by university leaders when intending to organize conferences for the dissemination of their research findings and publications on topics related to the main opposition party Renamo and the Civil War (1977–1992), among others.¹⁹⁵

MYANMAR (BURMA)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2001, 2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2022.

On 14 September 2021, Ye Lin Oo ([1997–]), an archaeology student at Dagon University, Yangon, until the February 2021 coup, and a member of the central executive committee of Dagon University Students' Union was arrested along with five other students' union members in Kyauktada township, Yangon. The six were accused of participating in anti-junta activities. On 10 March 2022, he received a three-year prison term for incitement against the military. On 15 December 2022, a court in Yangon's Insein prison sentenced him to an additional seven-year prison term under the Counter-Terrorism Law.¹⁹⁶

On 13 March 2022, Tun Tun, a staff member at the crematorium of the Aye Nyein Yar Cemetery in Pyay, Bago, was arrested for laying a wreath in commemoration of the anniversary of the death of two youngsters fallen during the crackdown in 2021.¹⁹⁷

On 23 October 2022, the military carried out an airstrike on a music concert in Hpakant, Kachin State, organized by the opposition Kachin Independence Organization (KIO) to commemorate the ethnic organization's 62nd anniversary, in an apparent violation of the laws of war. The attack killed at least

¹⁹⁵ Nelson Casimiro Zavale, "Academic Freedom in Mozambique," in Kirsten Roberts Lyer, Ilyas Saliba & Janika Spannagel, eds., University Autonomy Decline: Causes, Responses, and Implications for Academic Freedom (London: Routledge, 2023), 106.

¹⁹⁶ "Dagon University Student Sentenced to Another 7 Years in Prison," Radio Free Asia (16 December 2022).

¹⁹⁷ List of Arrested ([no date]; link unstable).

eighty people and injured over hundred. Junta forces subsequently blocked access to medical care for those harmed.¹⁹⁸

On 30 November 2022, seven students from Dagon University, Yangon, were sentenced to death by Yangon Insein Prison martial court after a closed trial on the spurious accusation of having shot dead Saw Moe Win, a retired lieutenant colonel who managed a branch of the State-owned Global Treasure Bank on 18 April 2022. Among the students was archaeology student (Ko) Hein Htet. The latter's father, U Thein Shwe, declared that his son left home and went to his friends in Sanchaung Township to play video games in April and that he was later abducted by the military forces, adding that he would file a petition and appeal to reduce the sentences. The guerrilla groups Anti-Fascist Armed Forces and the Yangon Liberation Force, both formed after the coup, had claimed responsibility for the killing.¹⁹⁹

¹⁹⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 434.

¹⁹⁹ Naw Say Phaw Waa, "Shock as Seven Student Protesters Sentenced to Death," University World News (6 December 2022).

NAMIBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 2006–2009, 2011, 2016–2018.

On 13 September 2022, the main opposition party People’s Democratic Movement requested a renegotiation of an agreement with Germany over the crimes committed against Herero and Nama peoples between 1904–1908 (considered by many historians as genocide), on the grounds that it did not provide reparations and that negotiations had not sufficiently involved descendants of the indigenous groups. In May 2021, Germany had announced that it recognized to have committed “genocide” and promised development aid on a “voluntary basis” [See also NCH Annual Report 2021]. In the end, the agreement was not signed due to the rejection by a number of Herero and Nama associations.

In January 2023, lawyers submitted a claim on behalf of the Herero and Nama people urging a Namibian court to declare the agreement invalid, as it allegedly violated the Constitution. In February, a group of United Nations Special Rapporteurs criticized the German government for violating the rights of the Herero and Nama people by not including them in talks over reparations. They criticized the government for failing to include reparation measures and the necessary means for reconciliation and expressed concern that development aid as a form of reparation risked “perpetuating rather than rectifying colonial dynamics.” They further urged the government to pay reparations directly to the Herero and Nama people rather than to the government. It was estimated that at least 60,000 Herero and around 10,000 Nama were killed between 1904–1908.²⁰⁰

NEPAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007–2021.

See India.

²⁰⁰ “Namibia Genocide – Opposition Demands Renegotiation with Germany,” Africa News (14 September 2022); United Nations Mandates, Allegations letters to Germany and Namibia on the lack of participation of Herero and Nama in talks about reparations for the 1904–1908 genocide (23 February 2023); Kate Connolly, “UN Representatives Criticize Germany over Reparations for Colonial Crimes in Namibia,” Guardian (28 April 2023); Almaz Teffera, “Germany, Namibia Need a Rights-Respecting Reparations Process: UN Experts Urge Affected Communities’ Participation in Negotiations” (press release; Human Rights Watch, 7 June 2023).

NETHERLANDS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 2004–2005, 2007–2022.

On 5 October 2022, Minister of Justice Dilan Yesilgöz refused complete access by the Lower House (“Second Chamber”) of Parliament to the archive of the so-called Machielse Commission, citing privacy reasons. In 2019–2021, the commission had investigated the government’s conduct in the case of the Argentine-Dutch Julio Poch, a pilot who was charged with having carried out “death flights” under the Argentinian military dictatorship (1976–1983) but who was acquitted in 2017 after eight years on remand.²⁰¹

In late January 2023, after an investigation started in May 2021, the public prosecutor concluded that the sticker actions by Vizier op Links, however intimidating, did not equal harassment in the sense of the Criminal Code and dropped the charges [See NCH Annual Report 2021].²⁰²

On 31 January 2023, a demonstrator interrupted a lecture in Aruba attended by King Willem Alexander (educated as a historian), Queen Maxima and Crown princess Amalia as part of their tour through the Caribbean part of the Netherlands. During the lecture on the characteristics of Caribbean law at the University of Aruba, Giselle Sint Jago, a politician for the party Pueblo Rome and a master’s student in law, stood up, held up a flag, and sang the gospel song Oh freedom, which is about slavery. She was escorted from the hall and the lecture continued. She later declared that she planned to hand a manifesto to the king calling on him to apologize for the Dutch slavery past as his government had done in December 2022. She also asked for reparations for the descendants of enslaved people and for the Netherlands to enshrine slavery in law as a crime against humanity.²⁰³

When in February 2023 the newspaper NRC Handelsblad searched the recently released archives of the Binnenlandse Veiligheidsdienst (BVD; Internal Security Service – renamed Algemene Inlichtingen- en Veiligheidsdienst, AIVD, General Intelligence and Security Service, in 2002), it discovered that files containing potentially incriminating facts concerning Prince Bernhard (1911–2004), husband of Queen Juliana (1909–2004; in office 1948–1980), had disappeared. The files concerned his alleged prewar

²⁰¹ Marcel Haenen, “Minister Yesilgöz \(Justitie\) weigert Tweede Kamer onderzoeksarchief in zaak Julio Poch,” NRC Handelsblad (5 October 2022).

²⁰² Marcel Haenen, “OM: na 2 jaar onderzoek geen vervolging wegens ‘bedreiging’ van stickeractie Vizier op Links,” NRC Handelsblad (27 January 2023).

²⁰³ “Demonstrator Interrupts Lecture Attended by Royals on Aruba with Freedom Protest,” NL Times (1 February 2023).

espionage for the Nazis, his alleged 1942 letter to Adolf Hitler, and the 1976 Lockheed corruption scandal, among others [See also NCH Annual Reports 2007, 2010–2011].²⁰⁴

On 1 July 2023, at an event marking the 160th anniversary of the 1863 abolition of slavery in the Netherlands, King Willem-Alexander apologized for the roles of the Netherlands and of the Dutch monarchy and the House of Orange in the slave trade and in the slavery in its former colonies. Dutch slave traders trafficked an estimated 600,000 people. Shortly after the ceremony, slavery memorials in Vlissingen and Rotterdam were defiled with racist slogans.²⁰⁵

See also Bosnia-Herzegovina, Egypt, El Salvador, Iraq, Sudan.

NEW ZEALAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2003, 2005, 2007, 2017, 2019–2021.

See Papua New Guinea.

NICARAGUA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2020–2022.

On 2 April 2022, musician Josué Monroy, member of the alternative rock-pop band Monroy & Surmenage, gave a concert for the fifteenth anniversary of the band's founding. During the event, they sang the song En el ojo del huracán (In the eye of the hurricane), in which they paid tribute to the April 2018 protests against President Daniel Ortega with phrases such as “We will not be silent” and “April is not forgotten.” Ten days later, Monroy was arrested with three of his colleagues and interrogated and tortured for 48 hours. Later, his identity papers were taken from his house. On 14 April, he was driven to the Honduran border where he was forced to sign a document forbidding him to return to Nicaragua.²⁰⁶

²⁰⁴ Bart Funnekotter & Joep Dohmen, “BVD-dossier over oorlogsverleden prins Bernhard zoek,” NRC Handelsblad (9 February 2023).

²⁰⁵ Matt Murphy, “Dutch King Willem-Alexander Apologises for Country's Role in Slavery,” BBC News (2 July 2023); Veerle Schyns, “Na excuses van de koning drie slavernijmonumenten beklad of vernield – één per ongeluk,” NRC Handelsblad (4 July 2023).

²⁰⁶ International PEN, Case List 2022 (London: PEN, 2023), 35.

On 4 May 2022, the National Assembly (75 in favor, 16 abstentions) suspended the legal status of fifty NGO's, including the Jesuit research center of investigative journalism Instituto Histórico Centroamericano (IHCA; Central-American Historical Institute, established in Managua in 1981), on the grounds that they violated Law No. 147 on nonprofit legal entities and Law 977 against money laundering, financing of terrorism, and financing of the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. In July 2022, the Museo Arqueológico de Solentiname (Archaeological Museum of Solentiname) on the San Fernando island, with its pre-Colombian exhibitions, also lost its legal status. Between the 2018 nation-wide protests against President Daniel Ortega and the end of August 2022, the legal status of 1.468 NGOs had been suspended. Sandinista member of parliament Filiberto Rodríguez, the leading force behind the suspensions, alleged without giving proof that the NGOs had used donations to undermine the government during the protests.²⁰⁷

On 22 November 2022, hooded police officers arrested Oscar René Vargas Escobar ([1946]–), a sociologist, economist and author of a three-volume Historia del siglo XX (2001; History of the 20th century) about Nicaragua in 1893–1909, 1910–1925, and 1926–1939, in Managua and took him to a prison facility known as Nuevo Chipote. On 23 November, the prosecutor's office charged him with “conspiracy to undermine national integrity” and “propagation of false news through information and communication technologies.” Vargas had been a co-founder and adviser to the national leadership of the Sandinista National Liberation Front in the 1960s, but became a strong critic of Daniel Ortega's government, especially after the April 2018 rebellion (see above). In the last article before his arrest, published on 20 November 2022, he had put forward a strategy for the release of all political prisoners. On 26 December 2022, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights granted him precautionary measures (urging the State to protect detainees who were in a serious and urgent situation from suffering irreparable harm) for health reasons. In February 2023, the authorities released Vargas, together with more than 200 other political prisoners and forced him into exile.²⁰⁸

NIGER

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2013, 2021.

²⁰⁷ “Cancelan en Nicaragua a 50 ONGs, diputado dice que así evitan que sigan ‘engañando’,” 100% Noticias (4 May 2022); “Cancelan personería jurídica a Expica, Museo Archipiélago de Solentiname y otras 8 ONG,” 100% Noticias (18 July 2022); “Régimen en Nicaragua cancela 100 ONG más, suman 1500 desde que estalló la crisis,” 100% Noticias (24 August 2022).

²⁰⁸ International PEN, Case List 2022 (London: PEN, 2023), 33–34; “IACHR Grants Precautionary Measures in Favor of Oscar René Vargas Escobar in Nicaragua” (press release; 28 December 2022); Website of Oscar-René Vargas Escobar: <https://oscarenevargas.com>.

NIGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2006, 2008, 2010–2013, 2016–2022.

On 14 May 2022, following the arrest of two Muslim men reportedly involved in the killing of the Christian college student Deborah Emmanuel Yakubu for allegedly “blasphemous” statements [See NCH Annual Report 2022], protesters attacked and looted the Holy Family Catholic Cathedral, the St. Kevin’s Catholic Church, and the Evangelical Church Winning All in Sokoto.²⁰⁹

On 20 October 2022, police used tear gas against protesters during the two-year commemoration of the #EndSARS protest at Lekki toll gate [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. At least four people were arrested and detained.²¹⁰

On 28 January 2023, Bose Onifade, the mother of history student Pelumi Onifade, who had been killed by police officials on 24 October 2020, pleaded to Lagos Governor Babajide Sanwo-Olu to have the corpse of her son returned to the family. The corpse had presumably been kept in government custody ever since Onifade’s death [See NCH Annual Report 2022].²¹¹

In mid-May 2023, the Media Foundation for West Africa and the International Senior Lawyers Project submitted an amicus curiae petition to the Supreme Court in support of Muslim gospel musician Yahaya Sharif-Aminu ([1998]–), who was sentenced to death by hanging by an Upper Sharia court in Kano on 10 August 2020 [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. The reason for the sentence was a song he had composed as a eulogy to the founder of the Tijaniya Muslim sect, Sheikh Ibrahim Niasse (1900–1975). The song, circulating on Whatsapp, was denounced as blasphemous by critics who said it projected the Senegal-born cleric above the Prophet Muhammed. In March 2020, a mob had burnt down Sharif-Aminu’s family home and demanded the Islamic police, Hisbah, to arrest and prosecute the singer, leading to his conviction.²¹²

²⁰⁹ “Three Churches Attacked and Looted in Northern Nigeria,” Persecution.org (17 May 2022).

²¹⁰ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 277.

²¹¹ Vincent Ufuoma, “Two Years after He Was Killed, Pelumi’s Family Says Corpse yet to Be Released,” International Centre for Investigative Reporting (28 January 2023).

²¹² “MFWA Offers Insight in Nigerian Death Penalty Appeal,” Ifex (17 May 2023); Supreme Court of Nigeria, Yahaya Sharif-Aminu versus Attorney General: Amicus Curiae Brief (May 2023).

NORTH MACEDONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2021–2022. For previous entries: see Macedonia.

On 4 February 2022, during the lead-up to the 151-year anniversary of the birth of Georgi Delchev (a.k.a. Gotse Delchev, Goce Delčev; 1872–1903), an Ottoman-era revolutionary considered a national hero both by North Macedonians and Bulgarians, the government ordered heightened security measures amid mounting tensions between the two countries. The order followed a statement by Bulgarian member of European Parliament Angel Dzhambazki, who had said that “Macedonia was and will be Bulgarian” and called on Bulgarians to attend the celebration in Skopje en masse.²¹³

On 5 September 2022, the main opposition party Internal Macedonian Revolutionary Organization–Democratic Party for Macedonian National Unity launched a campaign for a referendum on the 2017 Law on Ratification of the Treaty of Friendship, Good Neighborliness and Cooperation with Bulgaria, that had set demands on, among other things, the representation of historical figures and events in North Macedonia’s history textbooks, so as to reflect Bulgarian views. In late 2020, despite the friendship agreement, Bulgaria began vetoing North Macedonia’s European Union (EU) accession talks, demanding further changes to, among others, the textbook portrayal of the Kingdom of Bulgaria (1908–1946) [See NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022]. In the summer of 2022, an agreement was reached that would allow for the EU accession talks to begin, with one of the conditions being that North Macedonia adopted a Constitutional preamble that named Bulgarians among the founding peoples of the State.²¹⁴

NORWAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2012, 2016–2017, 2022.

On 1 June 2023, a truth and reconciliation commission, set up in 2018 to examine the historical policy of the authorities related to the Sámi, Kvens and other Indigenous groups, published its final report. The commission found that assimilation policies of “Norwegianization” had led to the endangerment of minority languages and caused cultural, social and mental health consequences for individuals and ²¹³ Sinisa Jakov Marusic, “Hero’s Memorial Day Further Inflames North Macedonia-Bulgaria Relations,” Balkan Insight (25 January 2022).

²¹⁴ Sinisa Jakov Marusic, “North Macedonia Opposition Seeks Referendum against Bulgaria Deal,” Balkan Insight (6 September 2022); Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 282.

Indigenous groups as a whole. The commission proposed the creation of a “center for knowledge, research, dissemination and reconciliation.”²¹⁵

²¹⁵ “Commission Exposes Injustices against Norway’s Indigenous People,” Guardian (1 June 2023).

OMAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2017, 2019, 2021.

PAKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2004, 2006, 2009–2012, 2014, 2016, 2018–2019, 2021.

On 13 August 2022, the Balochistan cabinet approved the formation of a parliamentary committee to investigate disappearances. The committee was criticized for not involving families of the disappeared [See also NCH Annual Reports 2009, 2011].²¹⁶

On 7 September 2022, Abdul Fatah Shaikh, director of the archaeological site and museum of Mohenjo Daro, Sindh province, one of the largest settlements of the Harappan civilization (3300–1300 BC) built around 2500 BC and a UNESCO World Heritage site, warned that the August heavy rains, caused by climate change and the unwillingness of high-emitting countries to reduce their emissions, damaged the protective outer covering on the historic structures.²¹⁷

In January 2023, the blasphemy laws, which already stipulated the death sentence for those deemed to have insulted Islam or the Prophet Muhammad, were broadened with a provision to punish anyone convicted of insulting his wives, companions or close relatives. Critics feared further abuse of the laws against political opponents and religious minorities and sects. A report by the Human Rights Commission of Pakistan found that in 2021 at least 585 cases had been registered under the blasphemy laws.²¹⁸

On 14 July 2023, police in Kala Gujran, Jhelum district, Punjab province, demolished a minaret of the Ahmadiyya Muslim community and interrogated some of its members for several hours. The police denied its role and some expressed fears that they had acted at the behest of the Tehreek-e-Labbaik Pakistan (TLP), a far-right Islamic political party. The local TLP leader openly declared that Articles 298 B and C of the Pakistan Penal Code, also known as the blasphemy law, prohibited Ahmadis to call themselves Muslims or to propagate their faith, and therefore provided him the license to demolish Ahmadi minarets because they allegedly insulted Islam.²¹⁹

See also India.

²¹⁶ “Balochistan Cabinet Approves Commission on Missing Persons,” Balochistan Post (17 August 2022).

²¹⁷ Abid Hussain, “Record Rains in Pakistan Damage Mohenjo Daro Archaeological Site,” Al Jazeera (8 September 2022).

²¹⁸ Salman Masood, “Pakistan Strengthens Already Harsh Laws against Blasphemy,” New York Times (21 January 2023); Human Rights Commission of Pakistan, A Breach of Faith: Freedom of Religion or Belief in 2021/2022 (7 February 2023), 10.

²¹⁹ Zofeen Ebrahim, “Pakistan’s Political Vandals,” Index on Censorship (20 July 2023).

PALESTINE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998–2002, 2008–2010, 2013–2015, 2018, 2021–2022.

On 19 September 2022, hundreds of schools in Occupied East Jerusalem remained closed as part of a general strike in protest against attempts by the Jerusalem municipality to introduce an Israeli curriculum on topics such as Arabic, religion and history.²²⁰

On 26 April 2023, Israel's Independence Day, the head of the European Commission Ursula von der Leyen sent a congratulatory video message to Israel's President Isaac Herzog. The Palestinian foreign ministry criticized her remark that Israel had “made the desert bloom,” calling it an “anti-Palestinian racist trope” that falsified and erased Palestinian history by suggesting that the land was previously uninhabited or untended, and by denying the Nakba (the term used by Palestinians to describe the 1948 expulsion of 700,000 Palestinians).²²¹

On 15 May 2023, for the first time in its history, the United Nations (UN) commemorated the mass displacement (“Nakba” or “Catastrophe”) of Palestinians from land that was to become Israel on 15 May 1948, that turned 700,000 Palestinians into refugees. In November 2022, the UN General Assembly had adopted a resolution for this commemorative day and requested the dissemination of archives and testimonies about the Nakba. It also urged “the achievement without delay of an end to the Israeli occupation that began in 1967 and of the two-State solution on the basis of the pre-1967 borders, with an independent, sovereign and viable State of Palestine, living side by side, in peace and security, with Israel.” An estimated 5.9 million Palestinians were currently registered as refugees.²²²

See also Australia, Germany, Israel, United Kingdom.

PANAMA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2008, 2013, 2015–2017.

²²⁰ Zena Al Tahhan, “Palestinian Schools in Jerusalem Strike over Israel-Imposed Books,” Al Jazeera (19 September 2022).

²²¹ Yolande Knell, “Palestinians Condemn EU's von der Leyen for 'Racist Trope',” BBC News (27 April 2023).

²²² United Nations General Assembly Resolution 77/23 (30 November 2022); “UN Marks 75 years since Displacement of 700,000 Palestinians,” UN News (15 May 2023).

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

On or around 16 February 2023, New Zealand archaeologist Bryce Barker, working at the University of Southern Queensland, Australia, and Papuan archaeologist Cathy Alex, National Museum officer Jemina Haro, and Ph.D. student Teppsy Beni were abducted and taken hostage by a gang of twenty armed criminals near Mount Bosavi in the highlands. On 25 February 2023, they were released after a ransom was paid during a complex security operation. The archaeologists conducted research in the Great Papuan Plateau to determine the earliest human migration from Papua New Guinea into Australia.²²³

PARAGUAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2005, 2007, 2009–2010, 2012, 2015, 2020, 2022.

PERU

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2022.

Authorities made slow progress in prosecuting abuses by government forces during the armed conflict (1980–2000). As of September 2022, courts had issued 50 convictions in 92 cases. In February 2022, the Constitutional Court upheld a 2013 decision that the 1986 killing, by Navy officers, of 113 detainees was not a crime against humanity. The ruling allowed the statute of limitations to apply to the officers, which could lead to closing ongoing trials [See also NCH Annual Reports 2009–2021].²²⁴

In April 2023, the Lugar de la Memoria, la Tolerancia y la Inclusión Social (LUM; Place of Memory, Tolerance and Social Inclusion), a museum set up in Lima in 2015 to commemorate the almost 70,000 people killed between 1980–2000 by Shining Path militants and the government's armed forces, was forced to close, officially because of its failure to meet municipal safety regulations. Rafael López

²²³ Natalie Whiting, Theckla Gunga & Belinda Kora, "Inside the Complex Rescue Mission for an Australian Professor Taken Hostage by Armed Bandits in the PNG Jungle," ABC News (26 February 2023); Kathryn Armstrong, "Papua New Guinea Kidnap: Archaeologist Bryce Barker and Colleagues Freed," BBC News (26 February 2023).

²²⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 480–481.

Aliaga, the mayor of Lima and founder of the far-right Renovación Popular party, had repeatedly criticized the museum for presenting a “false narrative.” In January, he had called the museum an “offense to the nation,” saying that it “should be put under the control of the armed forces” and that it was time to “take control of the narrative” (by which a denialist version of the events was reportedly meant).²²⁵

PHILIPPINES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2015, 2019–2022.

On 4 July 2022, online trolls harassed public historian Ambeth Ocampo of the Ateneo de Manila University for confronting historical revisionism that glorified the Ferdinand Marcos dictatorship (1965–1986). Ocampo had responded to actress Ella Cruz’s statement that likened history to “chismis” (gossip). Cruz played Irene Marcos in the upcoming film “Maid in Malacañang,” a retelling of the Marcos family’s last 72 hours in the presidential palace before fleeing for Hawaii during the 1986 People Power Revolution (also known as EDSA Revolution). In a Facebook post, Ocampo had said, “Don’t confuse history and chismis. History may have bias but it is based on fact, not opinion. Real history is about truth, not lies, not fiction.” Following his reaction, online individuals – supposedly supporters of the Marcoses – attacked Ocampo, calling him “yellow historian,” “paid historian,” and “stupid.”²²⁶

On 9 August 2022, the official Komisyon sa Wikang Filipino (KWF; Commission on Filipino Languages) labeled five books as “subversive” after a talk show in far-right outlet Sonshine Media Network International (SMNI) accused the books of “subversion” and red-tagged the authors as “Communists.” A KWF memorandum banned the books, but on 21 September 2022, three KWF members withdrew their signatures from the memorandum after Congress had debated it. The order was rescinded after a strong pushback by the Filipino literary and academic community. The books were:

- “Teatro Politikal Dos” [Political Theater Two] by Malou Jacob. The disputed passages described the EDSA Revolution that overthrew dictator Ferdinand Marcos Sr. in February 1986 as “the best thing that happened after fifteen years of Martial Law.”

²²⁵ Dan Collins, “Mayor Closes Museum of Memories in Battle over Story of Peru’s Violent Past,” Guardian (7 April 2023).

²²⁶ Raffy Cabristante, “‘Hindi Chismis’: Historian Says History Is ‘Evidence-Based’,” ABS-CBN (4 July 2022); Jaehwa Bernardo, “Academics Defend Historian Ambeth Ocampo vs ‘Smear Campaign’,” ABS-CBN (11 July 2022); Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2022 (New York: SAR, 2022).

- “Kalatas: Mga Kwentong Bayan at Kwentong Buhay” [Letters: People’s Narratives and Life Stories] by Rommel Rodriguez. The disputed passages were descriptions of Filipinos organizing armed revolution against the government.
- “Tawid-diwa sa Pananagisag ni Bienvenido Lumbera: Ang Bayan, ang Manunulat, at ang Magasing Sagisag sa Imahinatibong Yugtong Batas Militar 1975–1979” [Imparting the Meaning of Bienvenido Lumbera’s Writings: The People, the Writer, and the Magazine Sagisag in the Imaginative Stage of Martial Law 1975–1979] by Dexter Cayanes. The disputed passages were citations of works by Communist rebel leaders José María Sison (1939–2022) and Julieta de Lima, of Marxist art critic Alice Guillermo and works such as John Frow’s Marxism and Literary History.
- “May Hadlang ang Umaga” [The Morning is Hindered] by Don Pagusara, based on the author’s experiences as an activist and political prisoner during the martial law era (1972–1986).
- “Labas: Mga Palabas sa Labas ng Sentro” [Outside: Performances from Beyond the Center] by Reuel Aguila. The disputed passages described the arrests of activists, hunger, violence, and poverty during the martial law era (1972–1986).²²⁷

On 3 March 2023, the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) found that the Philippines had violated the rights of victims of sexual slavery perpetrated by the Imperial Japanese Army during World War II by failing to provide reparation, social support and recognition commensurate with the harm suffered. The Committee further noted that Philippine war veterans, mostly men, “[we]re entitled to special and esteemed treatment from the Government, such as educational benefits, healthcare benefits, old age, disability and death pensions.” The complaint had been filed in 2019 by 24 Filipina nationals, members of the Malaya Lolos (“Free Grandmothers”) established to provide support to sexual slavery survivors (“comfort women”). They asserted that they had consistently raised their claims at the domestic level, requesting that the State espouse their claims against Japan. Their repeated efforts, however, were dismissed, with their last action turned down by the Supreme Court in 2014. Noting that the Philippines had waived its right to compensation by signing the 1956 Peace Treaty with Japan, CEDAW underlined that this was a case of continuous discrimination, with which the Philippines had breached its duties under the UN Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.²²⁸

²²⁷ Karlo Mongaya, “Filipino Writers and Academics Push Back against Book Censorship,” Global Voices (30 September 2022).

²²⁸ United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, Alonzo et al. versus Philippines: Views Adopted by the Committee Concerning Communication No. 155/2020 (UN Doc. CEDAW/C/84/D/155/2020) (3 March 2023); United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, “Philippines Failed to Redress Continuous Discrimination and Suffering of Sexual Slavery Victims Perpetrated by Imperial Japanese Army, UN Committee Finds” (Press release: 8 March 2023); Elmer Domingo, “Philippines Urged to Compensate Women Survivors of Wartime Rape by Japanese Soldiers,” UN News (8 March 2023); Joel Guinto & Virma Simonette, “Comfort Women: Last of Japan’s WW2 Sex Slaves Sing ‘Forget Us Not’,” BBC News (14 July 2023).

In early July 2023, the Movie and Television Review and Classification Board decided to allow the fantasy movie Barbie, due for release on 19 July 2023, to be screened on condition that it blur a 1947 Chinese map depicting contested territorial claims in the South China Sea (the so-called nine-dash line map).²²⁹

POLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2000–2001, 2004–2005, 2007–2011, 2014–2022.

On 28 December 2021, Minister of Education and Science Przemysław Czarnek introduced a new subject, “History and the Present,” for the 2022–2023 high school and technical school curricula [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. The accompanying high school textbook History and the Present was criticized, among others by academics from the Warsaw University history department, for not being balanced, instead giving a view of Polish history after World War II that fitted a right-wing, government-endorsed ideology.²³⁰

In March 2022, several non-governmental organizations, including Civicus, criticized the continued practice by the government and its supporters of using so-called “cyclical assemblies,” defined as assemblies regularly organized by the same organizer, at the same location or on the same route, to impede lawful and peaceful “non-cyclical” counter-protests being held at the same place and time. In October 2022, a “cyclical assembly” was used by members of the ruling Law and Justice party to prevent counterprotests during a monthly commemoration in Kraków of the 2010 Smolensk plane crash which killed former President Lech Kaczyński.²³¹

In July 2022, the Ministry of Education and Science published the results of its evaluation of higher education institutions. The evaluation compared the quality of specific institutions and academic journals in order to reassign funding based on the results. It was criticized for using unclear criteria and for being driven by the government’s partisan politics with the aim of giving “scientists and faculties close to the government a high enough assessment.” An analysis by AtMatic, an analytical company

²²⁹ Antoinette Radford, “South China Sea: Philippines to Allow Barbie Movie but Wants Map Blurred,” BBC News (12 July 2023).

²³⁰ “Przemysław Czarnek on a New Subject – History and Present: Students Will Learn about the Circumstances of the Round Table and ‘Partial Betrayal’,” Polish News (28 December 2021); Wojciech Kosci, “Academics Say University Evaluation Was Driven by Politics,” University World News (27 August 2022).

²³¹ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 300.

measuring scholarly output, found that the ministry had inflated selected journals in the fields of history, culture, and religion.²³²

In October 2022, four monuments commemorating the Red Army's "liberation" of Nazi-occupied towns after World War II were demolished in Glubczyce, Byczyna, Bobolice, and Staszow. The actions, based on a 2016 law prohibiting the promotion of totalitarian regimes, were live streamed online and took place simultaneously.²³³

On 27 January 2023, no Russian delegation was invited to the ceremony marking the 1945 liberation of the former Auschwitz-Birkenau Nazi death camp. Russia had always been represented at the event as the camp in Nazi-occupied Poland was liberated by the Soviet Army. But following Russia's 2022 invasion of Ukraine, the Auschwitz-Birkenau museum declined to invite Russian officials and its director, Piotr Cywinski, likened the Ukraine war to the horrors of the Holocaust. In response, Russia accused the museum of attempting to "rewrite history."²³⁴

On 19 April 2023, historian Barbara Engelking, head of the Centrum Badań nad Zagładą Żydów (Polish Center for Holocaust Research) at the Institute of Philosophy and Sociology, Polish Academy of Sciences, was attacked by politicians and media after she had been interviewed on news channel TVN24 about her research. During the interview – part of a series of commemorations of the eightieth anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto uprising of 19 April–16 May 1943 – she stated that Polish Jews had received little support from their fellow citizens during World War II [See also NCH Annual Reports 2020–2022]. Following the interview, Education and Science Minister Przemysław Czarnek decided to withhold approximately € 180,000 of funding from the Institute of Philosophy and Sociology on the grounds that the government would not fund "people who slander Poles." Following the government's decision, more than 2,700 people on 26 April signed a letter saying that Czarnek's attempt threatened academic freedom.²³⁵

See also Belarus, Benin, Russia.

²³² Wojciech Kosc, "Academics Say University Evaluation Was Driven by Politics," University World News (27 August 2022).

²³³ "Poland Demolishes Soviet-Era Monuments," BBC News (27 October 2022).

²³⁴ "Ukraine War: Auschwitz Anniversary Marked without Russia," BBC News (27 January 2023).

²³⁵ Protest w sprawie ataku na Prof. Barbarę Engelking (petition signed by 2766 persons; 26 April 2023); Open letter by more than 200 scholars of the Holocaust Era, the Second World War, and Modern and Jewish History (11 May 2023); Anna Rzhevkina, "Academics in Poland Raise the Alarm over Latest Threat to Academic Freedom," Science/Business (7 June 2023).

PORTUGAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017, 2021.

See Australia, Russia.

QATAR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

ROMANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000, 2003, 2005, 2007–2008, 2010, 2019, 2021–2022.

In [August] 2022, military prosecutors resent a corrected file about Ion Iliescu (1930–), the country’s leader after the December 1989 Romanian Revolution which overthrew Communist dictator Nicolae Ceaușescu, to the court so that he could face trial. Iliescu, then president of the National Salvation Front Committee (CFSN); Gelu Voican Voiculescu, former Deputy Prime Minister; Iosif Rus, former commander of the Military Aviation; and Emil (Cico) Dumitrescu, a former CFSN member, were accused of crimes against humanity. The prosecutors claimed that about 12,600,000 cartridges were fired between 22–30 December 1989, intentionally creating a feeling of terror and causing 862 deaths, 2,150 injuries, severe loss of freedom for hundreds of people and psychological injuries. In April 2019, prosecutors had already sent the file to the court, but the Supreme Court excluded several pieces of evidence submitted by the Military Prosecutor’s Office, including reports drawn up in the 1990s by the Intelligence Service and the Parliamentary Commission of Inquiry into the Revolution.²³⁶

On 1 March 2023, Dorin Cioabă, a Romani representative at the Conference of European Roma, expressed his intention to file an international lawsuit against the Romanian Orthodox Church for not recognizing its involvement in the enslavement of Roma in the Romanian Principalities between the 15th and 19th century. He further called on the church to publicly apologize and provide access to their archives. A church spokesman claimed that Roma and Romanians had suffered from slavery together and that the church should not be singled out for exclusive responsibility.²³⁷

RUSSIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1998, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2022.

In 2020, film critic Anton Dolin (1976–) was dismissed as a regular critic on the popular talk show Evening Purgant aired on State television because he had criticized Andrei Kravchuk’s Union of Salvation, a 2019 film about Tsarist officers and intellectuals who rebelled against the new Tsar Nicholas I in 1825, arguing that the rebels, who demanded a constitutional monarchy, were wrongly portrayed negatively. In 2021 Dolin started his own highly successful film channel on YouTube, Radio Dolin. After the invasion of Ukraine, he went into exile in Riga, Latvia. In late 2022, he was declared a “foreign agent.”

²³⁶ Madalin Necsutu, “Romania Ex-President Faces Fresh Trial for 1989 Revolution Crimes,” Balkan Insight (4 August 2022).

²³⁷ Madalin Necsutu, “Romanian Roma Threaten Church With Lawsuit over Role in Slavery,” Balkan Insight (2 March 2023).

There were other cases of film censorship. In 2022, after a screening by secret service FSB, the 2021 film Captain Volkonogov Escaped, was banned and removed from programming, posters and film ladders. The story regarded an executioner of Stalin’s secret police during the Great Terror of 1938, Fyodor Volkonogov. When in danger of falling prey to the terror himself, he asked his victims’ forgiveness and fled. The same happened to Tchaikovsky’s Wife, Kirill Serebrennikov’s 2022 film about the taboo of Tchaikovsky’s homosexuality. After a legal case, allegedly for embezzling money for his theater in Moscow, Serebrennikov defected to Europe, his theater was closed and his films were banned.²³⁸

In February 2022, longstanding Memorial member Bakhrom Khamroev was remanded under spurious charges of “public justification of terrorism.” In October 2022, charges of “organizing the activities of a terrorist organization” were added to his case.²³⁹

Among those who left Russia after the Russian invasion of Ukraine was one of the leading historians of the NGO Memorial, Irina Scherbakova (1949–). Since the 1970s, Scherbakova had secretly taped interviews with victims of the Stalinist repression. In 1987, she had become co-founder of Memorial.²⁴⁰

On 31 August 2022, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs accused the Baltic States, the Czech Republic and Poland of, among others, “idealizing Nazism” and “spreading neo-Nazism,” in relation to their support to Ukraine since the 24 February 2022 invasion by Russian forces and the removal of some Soviet-era memorials. The bogus claim of “denazification” had been the justification for the invasion of Ukraine [See NCH Annual Report 2022].²⁴¹

On 9 September 2022, the Ministry of Justice added Tamara Eidelman – a former history teacher at Moscow School No. 67 living in exile in Lisbon, a producer of history lectures on YouTube, and EuroClio Ambassador in Russia – to the list of “foreign agents.” In July, President Vladimir Putin had

²³⁸ Michel Krielaars, “Verbannen Russische filmcriticus Anton Dolin: ‘Gelukkig snapt Poetin niks van cultuur’,” NRC Handelsblad (22 February 2023).

²³⁹ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 310.

²⁴⁰ Irina Scherbakova, Bruits et couleurs du temps: Une famille dans le siècle soviétique (originally Russian and German; Brussels: Académie royale de Belgique, 2022), 239–241.

²⁴¹ “Russia Accuses the Czech Republic of Disseminating Neo-Nazism, Racism and Xenophobia – No Word on Whether There Is a Plan to “De-Nazify” the Country As They Claim to Do in Ukraine,” Romea.cz (1 September 2022).

expanded the foreign agents law to not only include individuals and organization that received funding from abroad, but also those who stood under “foreign influence” and “engaged in political activities.”²⁴²

On 7 October 2022, Memorial [See NCH Annual Reports 2001, 2005–2006, 2009–2022], founded in 1987, was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize, together with two civil society organizations from Belarus and Ukraine. The motivation for the prize stated that “The Peace Prize laureates represent civil society in their home countries. They have for many years promoted the right to criticize power and protect the fundamental rights of citizens. They have made an outstanding effort to document war crimes, human right abuses and the abuse of power. Together they demonstrate the significance of civil society for peace and democracy.” Memorial had already been nominated for the prize at least six times (in 2010–2013, 2015, 2018). In 2004, Memorial was awarded the Right Livelihood Award and in 2009 the Sakharov Prize. Another 2022 Nobel Peace Prize winner, Belarusian pro-democracy activist Ales Bialiatski (1962–), had worked as a junior researcher at the Museum of the History of Belarusian Literature in 1989. On 10 December 2022, Yan Rachinsky, head of Memorial, revealed that Kremlin authorities had told him not to accept the Nobel prize because the two co-laureates were deemed “inappropriate.” Rachinsky reported threats to his safety.²⁴³

On 20 October 2022, Denis Skopin, associate professor at the Faculty of Liberal Arts and Sciences of Saint Petersburg State University, was dismissed for “an immoral act incompatible with educational functions” because he had participated in an unauthorized rally – a 21 September 2022 street protest against the Kremlin’s decision to draft Russians to fight in Ukraine – after which he spent ten days in prison. Skopin was the author of an English-language book about how people in the Stalinist USSR were forced to remove from group photographs those who had been declared “enemy of the people.” They did this with scissors and with ink.²⁴⁴

On 29 October 2022, Memorial – a history NGO liquidated in late 2021 [See above and NCH Annual Report 2022] – was forced to downsize its ceremony of “returning the names.” Since 2007, this annual tribute consisted in a day-long reading of the names, ages, professions, and dates of death of those killed under Stalin at the Solovetsky Stone on Lubyanka Square in Moscow, typically attracting thousands of attendees. After the authorities banned it, citing public safety rules related to the coronavirus pandemic as it did in 2020–2021, Memorial was forced to break it into small gatherings across Russia.²⁴⁵

²⁴² “В России появилась династия иноагентов,” Secretmag.ru (10 September 2022); Andreas Holtberget (EuroClio), personal communication (12 September 2022).

²⁴³ “Memorial,” Nobelprize.org (7 October 2022); Network of Concerned Historians, “Historians and the Nobel Peace Prize \(1901–Present\)”; Paul Kirby, “Why Memorial?” BBC News (7 October 2022); Nobel Peace Prize 2022: PRIO Director’s Shortlist; Charlie Haynes & Lucy Pawle, “Nobel Peace Prize: Russian Laureate ‘Told to Turn down Award’,” BBC News (10 December 2022).

²⁴⁴ Steve Rosenberg, “Ukraine War: Russia’s Uncertain Future a Product of Its Past,” BBC News (2 November 2022).

Following the introduction of weekly “patriotic lessons,” known as “Conversations about important things,” alongside the mandatory raising of the Russian flag and the singing of the national anthem into schools across Russia earlier in 2022 [See NCH Annual Report 2022], students at Russian universities would be required to attend mandatory lectures on State ideology from 2023 onward. The lecture content was developed under the close supervision of the Kremlin’s first deputy chief of staff, Sergei Kiriyyenko. The ideology course would consist of sections on Russian history, Russian culture, Russian foreign policy, and Russia’s “future image.” Students of history and political science would be required to attend the ideology classes throughout their studies, while those studying other disciplines from the social sciences and humanities would take the course for at least a couple of years. All other students would be expected to attend one year of ideology studies.²⁴⁶

Among the 200 Americans banned in November 2022 from visiting Russia was Timothy Snyder, a historian at Yale University and author of Bloodlands: Europe between Hitler and Stalin (2010), probably because he had made a lecture course for Yale undergraduates, “The Making of Modern Ukraine,” available on the platform YouTube. The series had more than 4.6 million views from nearly seventy countries, with more than 921,000 people having watched the first lecture.²⁴⁷

In January 2023, the Sakharov Center, a museum and cultural venue in Moscow named after Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov (1921–1989), was forced to close before the end of April 2023. A December 2022 law had barred the city of Moscow, the center’s landlord, from supporting entities designated as “foreign agents.” According to chairman Vyacheslav Bachmann and the exiled director Sergei Lukashevsky, the fate of the museum’s exhibition focusing on the repression of the Soviet Gulag and its archives with Sakharov’s records was uncertain.²⁴⁸

On 21 March 2023, after the Investigative Committee opened a criminal investigation against Memorial for alleged “rehabilitation of Nazism,” punishable by up to five years in prison, nine of its leaders – including co-chairs Yan Rachinsky and Oleg Orlov, and Galina Jordanovskaya, Alena Kozlova, Irina

²⁴⁵ Valery Hopkins, “In Russia, Nobel-Winning Rights Group Is Forced to Downsize Its Tribute,” New York Times (29 October 2022).

²⁴⁶ Kirill Zikov, “Russian Universities to Introduce Mandatory Ideology Lectures,” Moscow Times (26 October 2022).

²⁴⁷ Jennifer Rankin, “‘Russia Wins by Losing’: Timothy Snyder on Raising Funds for Ukrainian Drone Defence,” Guardian (28 November 2022).

²⁴⁸ “Sakharov Center Forced to Close as Wartime Russia Purges Human Rights Groups,” Agile Tribune (2 March 2023).

Ostrovskaya, and Alexandra Polivanova – were targeted in raids on their homes. Allegations of “rehabilitation of Nazism” dated back to 2021 when Memorial’s staff were accused of having three men on its database – of more than three million victims – who authorities took issue with, including two sentenced for treason and another convicted of working for a Nazi police unit [See NCH Annual Report 2022].²⁴⁹

On 21 March 2023, criminal investigators interrogated co-chair of Memorial Oleg Orlov (1953–) in a separate case for repeated acts of “discrediting the use of the Russian armed forces for protecting the interests of the Russian Federation and its citizens, and preserving international peace and security,” based on his single-person anti-war pickets and his social media posts containing criticism of the war and of the government’s slide toward totalitarianism and fascism. The poster he had held on Moscow’s Red Square on 6 March 2022, for example, had contained a slogan with a historical analogy: “USSR 1945 – the country that defeated fascism; Russia 2022 – the country of victorious fascism” [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. On 29 April 2023, the prosecutor’s office formally indicted him under a law introduced days after the February 2022 invasion of Ukraine. On 8 June 2023, Orlov appeared in court. He faced up to three years in prison.²⁵⁰

On 17 April 2023, Russian-British opposition activist, journalist and historian Vladimir Kara-Murza (1981–) was found guilty of treason, spreading “false” information about the conduct of the Russian army, and being affiliated with an “undesirable organization” before a closed court and sentenced to 25 years in maximum security prison. He would serve his time in a “strict regime correctional colony” and be fined 400,000 rubles ($ 4,900; £ 4,000). A week before the verdict, he had said to the closed court that his trial reminded him of a Stalin-era show trial of the 1930s. A former adviser to prominent opposition leader Boris Nemtsov (shot dead in 2015), Kara-Murza allegedly survived two poisonings (2015, 2017) by Russian authorities. He was instrumental in persuading Western governments to adopt the so-called Magnitsky Act (a key piece of legislation that helped secure the adoption of sanctions against human rights abusers in Russia). He was arrested in 2022 in Moscow, initially for disobeying a police officer. Later charges, however, were based partly on a speech to politicians in the United States in 2022 (in which he had said that Russia was committing war crimes in Ukraine with cluster bombs in residential areas and the bombing of maternity hospitals and schools), and partly on an event for political prisoners (at which he had referred to what investigators called Russia's "supposedly repressive policies"). Kara-Murza's father, Vladimir Sr (1959–2019), had also been a dissident historian and Kremlin critic; Kara-Murza's uncle Sergei Kara-Murza (1939–) was a historian and Kremlin supporter.²⁵¹

²⁴⁹ “Russia Targets Nobel Peace Prize Rights Group with Raids,” Newsmax (21 March 2023); Paul Kirby, “Memorial Raids: Russia Targets Leaders of Banned Nobel Prize-Winning Group,” BBC News (22 March 2023); Human Rights Watch, “Russia: Memorial Co-chair Indicted for ‘Discrediting’ the Military,” Ifex (2 May 2023).

²⁵⁰ Paul Kirby, “Memorial Raids: Russia Targets Leaders of Banned Nobel Prize-Winning Group,” BBC News (22 March 2023); “Russia Targets Nobel Peace Prize Rights Group with Raids,” Newsmax (13 April 2024); Human Rights Watch, “Russia: Memorial Co-chair Indicted for “Discrediting” the Military,” Ifex (2 May 2023); Steve Rosenberg, “Ukraine war: Oleg Orlov Faces Jail Time for Criticising Putin’s War,” BBC News (9 June 2023).

In May 2023, Mikhail Belousov, a history lecturer at Saint Petersburg University, was dismissed for criticizing Russia's war against Ukraine. During a meeting with students, he had reportedly stated that "There is some evidence that some topics related to World War II are distorted; however, it is forbidden to discuss the matter as it is punishable by law." On 26 June 2023, the Regional Branch of the Investigative Committee of Russia initiated a criminal investigation against him for "rehabilitating Nazism."²⁵²

In late May 2023, a case was initiated against a local resident of the Orenburg region for allegedly spreading false information about the USSR's activities during World War II. The accused had allegedly reposted information on social media claiming that the USSR was co-responsible with Nazi Germany for the outbreak of World War II due to their partition of Poland in September 1939. A resident of Krasnoyarsk was charged with spreading false information about the Russian army and exonerating Nazism. He or she had allegedly posted on social media that "Stalin was as much of an aggressor as Hitler" and that the Russian armed forces were killing civilians and destroying cities in Ukraine (while referring to the bombing of the theater in besieged Mariupol in April 2022).²⁵³

Occupied Crimea

Since 2016, Russian authorities had allegedly repeatedly damaged the Khan's Palace in Bakhchysarai, a political, religious and cultural center of the Crimean Tatar community dating from the Crimean Khanate period (1441–1783) that was placed on UNESCO's World Heritage Tentative List in 2003. The authorities had barred a UNESCO fact-finding mission from inspecting the site.²⁵⁴

²⁵¹ Steve Rosenberg & Kathryn Armstrong, "Vladimir Kara-Murza: Russian Opposition Figure Jailed for 25 Years," BBC News (17 April 2023); "Vladimir Kara-Murza Tailed by Members of FSB Squad Prior to Suspected Poisonings," Bellingcat (11 February 2021).

²⁵² Andrii Nekoliak & Elizaveta Klochkova, "Weaponizing Russia's Memory Law: On Russia's Mnemonic Dissidents," Verfassungsblog (11 July 2023).

²⁵³ Andrii Nekoliak & Elizaveta Klochkova, "Weaponizing Russia's Memory Law: On Russia's Mnemonic Dissidents," Verfassungsblog (11 July 2023).

²⁵⁴ Halya Coynash, "Russia Causes Irreparable Damage to 16th-Century Crimean Tatar Khan's Palace in Occupied Crimea," Kharkiv Human Rights Protection Group (9 February 2022).

In [early October] 2022, the Russian authorities in Crimea (annexed from Ukraine in 2014) fined Olga Valeyeva, a Crimea beauty queen, after a video showed her singing Red Viburnum, a nineteenth-century military march popular among Ukrainian nationalists. She was accused of discrediting Russia's military and promoting extremist symbols. A second woman who had sung the song along with her was given ten days in prison. Valeyeva said she had been unaware of the song's associations.²⁵⁵

In early January 2023, Duma members proposed an amendment to the anti-extremism legislation to the effect that maps disputing Russia's "territorial integrity" would be classified as punishable extremist materials. The amendment came after maps were distributed in Russia which questioned the "territorial affiliation" of the Crimean Peninsula and the Kuril Islands.²⁵⁶

See also Belarus, Estonia, Georgia, Latvia, Moldova, Poland, Ukraine, United States.

RWANDA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2017, 2019–2022.

In May 2022, genocide fugitives Pheneas Munyarugarama and Protais Mpiranya, wanted by the International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals (IRMCT), were confirmed to have died in 2002 and 2006, respectively. Munyarugarama was accused of mass killings, attacks, and sexual violence against Tutsi civilians. Mpiranya, former head of the presidential guard, was accused of ordering the killing of then Prime Minister Agathe Uwilingiyimana, and ten Belgian peacekeepers. In September 2022, the trial against Félicien Kabuga, allegedly the chief financier of the 1994 genocide against the Tutsi, began before the IRMCT in The Hague.²⁵⁷

In June 2023, Emmanuel Nkundiye [pseudonym], a history lecturer at the University of Rwanda's College of Arts and Social Sciences, reported about the problems for teaching history related to the 1994 genocide against Tutsis and moderate Hutus. First, there were overbroad and harsh laws on "genocide ideology" that not only prohibited genocide denial but also critical views of the events. In 2022, at least 44 persons had been prosecuted on this charge. Second, Rwanda no longer used "Hutu" and "Tutsi" as epithets to identify people, as it has been blamed for inciting hatred, causing divisions

²⁵⁵ "Ukraine War: Crimea Beauty Queen Fined over Song," BBC News (4 October 2022).

²⁵⁶ "Russia Backs Banning of Maps Disputing Official 'Territorial Integrity'," Reuters (9 January 2023).

²⁵⁷ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 314–315( and discrimination. However, it was problematic to teach the genocide without using these ethnic markers. Third, teachers felt anxiety because their students came from families who were either victims or perpetrators.²⁵⁸

See also Congo (Democratic Republic).

²⁵⁸ Jean d'Amour Mbonyinshuti, "Genocide: Lecturers Struggle to Teach about 1994 History." University World News (8 June 2023).

SAINT VINCENT

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

SAUDI ARABIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001, 2006, 2010–2011, 2013, 2017–2021.

SENEGAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2009, 2013, 2017–2018, 2020.

On 1 June 2023, in the context of civil unrest over the sentencing of opposition leader Ousmane Sonko for “corrupting youth,” a group of young people used Molotov cocktails to burn down part of the archives of the Cheikh Anta Diop University in Dakar. According to archivist Abdourakhmane Kounta, an estimated 20,000 records spanning from 1957 to 2010 were destroyed. Several cars from history department staff were also torched.²⁵⁹

See also France.

SERBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2021–2022. For previous entries, see Serbia / Kosovo; Serbia / Montenegro.

In July 2022, after urging the government to officially commemorate the 1995 Srebrenica genocide, the Belgrade office of the NGO Women in Black was daubed with red paint.²⁶⁰

²⁵⁹ Théa Ollivier & Coumba Kane, “Au Sénégal, neuf morts dans des affrontements avec la police après la condamnation d’Ousmane Sonko,” Le Monde (1 June 2023); Moussa Ngom, “Au Sénégal, l’université de Dakar, symbole d’une journée de chaos après la condamnation d’Ousmane Sonko,” Le Monde (3 June 2023); “Senegal: Invaluable Archives Destroyed During Unrest at Dakar’s Main University,” Africa News (10 June 2023); James Tasamba, “Vital Archives at Senegalese University Destroyed in Protests,” AA (11 June 2023); “UCAD Calm after the Riots, but Damage Keeps It Closed,” University World News (22 June 2023).

²⁶⁰ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 320.

In early September 2022, politician and founder of the right-wing Dveri party, Boško Obradović, sent a tweet calling on parents to tear out a page of an eight-grade history textbook, because it contained information about the LGBTQ+-movement, as part of a discussion of social movements and human rights activists. The textbook, written by Aleksandar Todosijević, historian and president of Udruženje za društvenu istoriju–EuroClio (UDI; Association for Social History–EuroClio), and historian Sanja Petrović Todosijević, in use for merely a year, had been the subject of multiple public attacks from right-wing political circles. Between 27–29 August 2021, UDI had been the subject of a slander campaign, falsely accusing its members of manipulating history [See NCH Annual Report 2022].²⁶¹

On 15 September 2022, during his visit in Belgrade, the Director for Eastern European Affairs of the USA-based Simon Wiesenthal Center, Efraim Zuroff, succeeded to achieve the cancelation of a historical conference on the subject of the Croatian concentration camp Jasenovac, to which revisionist historians had been invited to participate. In an interview on Serbian television, he called for the cancelation because it would seriously damage Serbia's reputation [See also NCH Annual Reports 1996, 2017, 2020].²⁶²

See also Bosnia-Herzegovina, Kosovo.

SERBIA / KOSOVO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008–2020. For previous entries, see Serbia.

SERBIA / MONTENEGRO

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2007. For previous entries, see Montenegro and Serbia; see Montenegro.

SEYCHELLES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2019, 2022.

²⁶¹ “Lekcije iz istorije poslaniku Obradoviću,” Mašina (6 September 2022).

²⁶² Simon Wiesenthal Center, “Simon Wiesenthal Center Succeeds in Cancelling Conference on Jasenovac Concentration Camp with Participation of Revisionist Historians” (Press release; 17 September 2022).

SIERRA LEONE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2016, 2021.

SINGAPORE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2009–2011, 2015–2016, 2018–2022.

See Sri Lanka.

SLOVAKIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2002, 2007, 2009, 2011, 2013–2015, 2017, 2022.

Despite an official apology by the government in 2021 for the illegal sterilization of thousands of Roma women between 1966 and 2004, no effective compensation mechanism was in place by the end of 2022. In June 2022, the government apologized for a police raid on Roma communities in Moldava nad Bodvou in 2013 and committed to paying financial compensation for “injustice and suffering, to the victims and their families for their long-term search for the truth.”²⁶³

SLOVENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2018, 2021.

In 2022, President Borut Pahor issued a formal apology to over 25,000 people who had been unconstitutionally removed from the official registry of permanent residents thirty years ago, effectively leaving them without Slovenian citizenship. Despite this apology, more than half of the so-called “Erased” did not have their status restored or receive compensation from the State [See NCH Annual Reports 2007–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2018].²⁶⁴

²⁶³ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 325.

²⁶⁴ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 327.

SOMALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2003, 2006, 2012–2014, 2019, 2022.

See Kenya.

SOUTH AFRICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2004, 2006–2010, 2012–2021.

On the tenth anniversary of the 16 August 2012 Marikana massacre, in which 34 people were killed and 78 injured when police fired at mine workers demanding better wages and housing, protesters demanded compensation for the victims, prosecution of those responsible. and the creation of a memorial [See also NCH Annual Report 2021].²⁶⁵

On [26 or 27] November 2022, the Chris Hani Memorial Site in Ekurhuleni, commemorating the former leader of the South African Communist Party and anti-Apartheid hero (1942–1993), was vandalized. The desecration followed a Constitutional Court decision to release Hani’s killer, Janusz Walus, who had been sentenced to life in prison, on parole.²⁶⁶

See also United Nations.

SOUTH SUDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2015–2021.

²⁶⁵ “South Africans Rally to Mark Marikana Massacre 10th Anniversary,” Al Jazeera (16 August 2022).

²⁶⁶ “Anti-Apartheid Hero’s Tomb Vandalized after Killer Granted Parole,” Al Jazeera (29 November 2022).

SPAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999, 2002–2022.

On 27 June 2022, the Twenty-First Investigating Court of Barcelona admitted a complaint by Òmnium Cultural (OC) – a Catalan association promoting the Catalan language and culture and supporting the right to self-determination of the Catalan people – to investigate the use of Pegasus espionage software against some of its members, including historian and vice-president Marcel Mauri. An April 2022 research by Citizen Lab had found that Mauri’s phone had been infected by Pegasus three times, including on 24 October 2019, ten days after he had become OC’s vice president.²⁶⁷

In August 2022, more than twenty associations of archivists and librarians, including the Federación Española de Sociedades de Archivística, Biblioteconomía, Documentación y Museística (FESABID; Spanish Federation of Archival, Library, Documentation, and Museum Societies), commented on the draft Law on Classified Information which would replace the 1968 Law of Official Secrets (a law adopted during the Franco dictatorship, 1939–1975). They asked not to classify information concerning human rights violations and complained that the law did not refer to article 20 of the Constitution about the right to information. Furthermore, they objected to the huge penalties for disclosing classified records, the long terms of classification (up to 65 years), and the lack of retroactive declassification which blocked research into the Franquist and transition periods. Throughout 2022, the 1968 Law had remained an obstacle to access to justice.²⁶⁸

In [October] 2022, the memorial stone for Friedrich Windemuth, a German fighter pilot of the Condor Legion – a Nazi German air force unit, sent to fight during the Civil war (1936–1939) to develop methods of strategic bombing that would later be used during World War II, and notorious for the 1937 Guernica bombing – was smashed in half. The vandalism was condemned by the Asociación de Aviadores de la República (Association of Republican Aviators), a group commemorating the Republican pilots who fought against Francisco Franco’s nationalists, because it attacked the “historical memory and dignity of combatants.”²⁶⁹

²⁶⁷ “CatalanGate: Extensive Mercenary Spyware Operation against Catalans Using Pegasus and Candiru,” Citizen Lab (18 April 2022); Mayte Piulachs, “Judge Will Investigate Espionage against Omnimium, but Discards Parts of Complaint,” El Nacional (27 June 2022).

²⁶⁸ Miguel González, “Petición para que no se puedan declarar secretas violaciones de los derechos humanos,” El País (12 August 2022); Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 342.

²⁶⁹ Sam Jones, “Anger in Spain at Vandalism of Memorial to German Fighter Pilot,” Guardian (14 October 2022).

In October 2022, the Democratic Memory Act entered into force, replacing the 2007 Historical Memory Law. Under the new law, the search for victims of enforced disappearance during the Civil War (1936–1939) and dictatorship (1939–1975) was a responsibility of the State and judgments passed by military, civil, and special courts on political grounds were annulled. However, the act did not allow for crimes under international law committed during the same period to be pursued.

Among the act's measures were the renaming of the "Valley of the Fallen" mausoleum – considered a glorification of the Franco dictatorship – to its original name, the Valley of Cuelgamuros, and the exhumation of the remains of supporters of the dictatorship from the mausoleum. On 24 April 2023, in order to pre-empt State exhumation, family members removed the remains of Falange founder José Antonio Primo de Rivera (1903–1936) from the mausoleum, to rebury them at Madrid's San Isidro Cemetery [See also NCH Annual Report 2022].²⁷⁰

See also Angola.

SRI LANKA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2004, 2008–2022.

On 21 July 2022, President Ranil Wickremesinghe took office pledging to uphold the rights of the Tamil and Muslim communities, but refused to join efforts of the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Council to advance accountability for crimes committed during and after the Civil War (1983–2009) between the government and the separatist Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) [See also NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022]. The UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Michelle Bachelet, in her September 2022 report, found that the government "had still not presented a credible new roadmap on transitional justice ... Instead, accountability processes for past crimes were obstructed, perpetrators granted Presidential pardon and the Office on Missing Persons and the Office for Reparations ... ha[d] failed to achieve the tangible results expected by victims and other stakeholders." On 6 October 2022, the UN Human Rights Council adopted a resolution extending the mandate of a UN project to collect and analyze evidence of conflict-era violations for use in future prosecutions, and mandating enhanced UN monitoring of the human rights situation.

Domestic transitional justice bodies, including the Office on Missing Persons and the Office for Reparations, lost the confidence of victims' families further after being undermined by the appointment of members not deemed independent. Families complained of being surveilled, intimidated, and restricted from holding peaceful protests and memorialization initiatives, while being pressured to accept financial compensation and death certificates in lieu of certificates of absence until the fate of those forcibly disappeared could be ascertained. In August 2022, Mothers of the Disappeared, a group campaigning to know the fate of missing loved ones, had marked 2,000 days of continuous activism.

²⁷⁰ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 342; Sam Jones, "Body of Spain's Fascist Party Founder to Be Removed from Basilica," Guardian (23 April 2023); "Primo de Rivera: Spain to Exhume Fascist Falange Leader," BBC News (24 April 2023).

On 24 July 2022, the International Truth and Justice Project filed a criminal complaint against former President Gotabaya Rajapaksa (in office between 2019–2022) with the attorney general in Singapore, where Rajapaksa lived in self-exile, for alleged war crimes and crimes against humanity against the LTTE during the Civil War when he was defense secretary [See also NCH Annual Report 2022].²⁷¹

On 18 January 2023, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights urged the government to fully compensate victims of the 2019 Easter Sunday terrorist attacks and establish mechanisms to ensure truth and justice. The statement followed an early-January ruling by the Supreme Court that had found then President Maithripala Sirisena, his former defense secretary, and two former security and intelligence officials guilty of violating the rights of the victims by failing to prevent the attack. On 21 April 2019, a series of suicide bombings by Islamic State affiliates killed more than 260 people, injuring more than 500.²⁷²

On 27 May 2023, stand-up comedian Nathasha Edirisooriya was arrested at the Bandaranaike International Airport, because she had made “derogatory remarks” about Lord Buddha (Siddhartha Gautama; [sixth or fifth century BCE] – fifth century BCE) in her comedy show Modabhimanya. On 31 May, YouTube-host Bruno Divakara was also arrested for his alleged role in broadcasting Edirisooriya’s video.²⁷³

SUDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2003, 2006–2022.

Throughout 2022, there had been no meaningful domestic steps toward accountability for abuses committed against protesters since the 25 October 2021 military coup, or for prior abuses including the ²⁷¹ Hannah Ellis-Petersen & Rubatheesan Sandran, “‘A Moment of Opportunity’: Fall of Sri Lankan President Raises Victims’ Hopes,” Guardian (30 July 2022); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 561–562; Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 345.

²⁷² Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, “Sri Lanka Must Ensure Compensation for Victims of 2019 Terrorist Attacks,” UN News (18 January 2023).

²⁷³ “Sri Lanka: Comedian and YouTube Content Creator Arrested over Buddhism Satire,” Ifex (8 June 2023).

3 June 2019 massacre, or decades of war crimes and crimes against humanity committed against civilians in Darfur, Blue Nile, and South Kordofan. On 23 August 2022, chief prosecutor of the International Criminal Court Karim Khan urged the United Nations (UN) Security Council to help deliver justice and ensure accountability for the victims of human rights violations during the War in Darfur (2003–2020). On [25] August, Khan stated that the government of General Abdel Fattah al-Burhan had promised its full cooperation [See also NCH Annual Reports 2020–2022]. On 2 February 2023, UN Human Rights Expert for Sudan Radhouane Nouicer urged authorities to ensure accountability for crimes committed since the 2021 military coup, including torture, sexual violence and arbitrary arrests and detentions. More than 120 people had allegedly been killed since the coup.²⁷⁴

On 3 June 2022, security forces used excessive force, killing one, against protesters commemorating the third anniversary of the 3 June 2019 military crackdown [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. In the crackdown protesters had demanded the resignation of dictator Omar al-Bashir (ruled 1989–2019); 128 people were killed. On 30 June 2022, large demonstrations took place nationwide, this time to protest against the 2021 military takeover. The protests were organized to coincide with the anniversary of the 1989 military coup, which overthrew the democratically elected government of President Ahmad Al-Mirghani (in power between 1986–1989) and put al-Bashir in power. Security forces again used excessive force to disperse the demonstrators, resulting in the deaths of nine protesters and injuries to more than six hundred others. Several sit-ins were organized in the capital, Khartoum, in the aftermath of the violence to denounce the use of excessive force by the security forces.²⁷⁵

During the armed conflict that broke out on 15 April 2023 between the Sudanese Armed Forces (SAF) and the Rapid Support Forces (RSF), both sides destroyed cultural artifacts and inflicted damage to cultural heritage sites. On 16 May 2023, a library containing thousands of documents, historical works and doctoral theses was destroyed in a fire set by looters at the Muhammad Omar Bashir Centre for Sudanese Studies located at Omdurman Ahlia University, Omdurman.

On 2 June 2023, RSF fighters entered the bioarcheology lab of the National Museum in Khartoum and opened storage containers with mummies and other remains. The director of the museum, Ghalia Gharelnabi – who had been forced to flee to the Netherlands after her house had been hit by an artillery shell – warned that the museum’s collection of more than 100,000 items – including embalmed mummies dating back to 2,500 BCE, and historical artifacts from the stone age, the Kingdom of Kush

²⁷⁴ “ICC Prosecutor Calls for Justice in Darfur,” Africa News (24 August 2022); “ICC Says Sudan Army Chief Vows Cooperation in Darfur Probe,” Africa News (25 August 2022); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 572; “UN Rights Expert in Sudan Urges Security Reforms, Accountability,” Africa News (3 February 2023).

²⁷⁵ “UN Expert Demands Accelerated Probe Into Sudan Post-Coup Killings,” Al Jazeera (4 June 2022); Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 346.

(1070 BCE – 550 AD), ancient Egypt and the Christian and Islamic eras – was at risk of becoming one of the centers of armed clashes. Reports in [late May] indicated that the ancient Egyptian temple of Buhen, that had been rebuilt in the courtyard of the National Museum in Khartoum, was damaged. There were similar concerns for the collections of the Natural History Museum in Khartoum.

RSF forces also occupied the building housing the tomb of the Nubian Mahdi (religious leader) Muhammad Ahmad (1844–1885) – who had led a successful war against Ottoman–Egyptian military rule in 1881, and later achieved a victory over the British colonizing army at the Siege of Khartoum in 1884–1885 – as well as a museum in the former home of Ahmad’s successor Khalifa Abdullahi ibn Muhammad (1846–1899), using it as military basis. Fighting between the SAF and RSF was also reported in and around the historical site of Merowe, housing the archaeological heritage of the former capital of the Kingdom of Kush, Meroë.²⁷⁶

In [May] 2023, Ahmed Hussein Abdelrahman Adam, associate professor of archaeology at the University of Khartoum, head of its archaeology department and director of its museums, went into temporary exile in Switzerland, where he worked at the Università della Svizzera Italiana in Lugano. In December 2018, Adam had chaired a meeting of University of Khartoum staff which had condemned the violence against civil protesters against the rising bread prices, and called for a peaceful transfer of power. As a result, he had been threatened by telephone and harassed until he had gone into exile for the first time in Germany and Ethiopia (April–June 2019). After the October 2021 coup, the situation worsened, eventually deteriorating into an armed conflict in April 2023. Archaeological sites were occupied by the military, making them inaccessible and causing Adam’s second exile.²⁷⁷

On 15 June 2023, the International Council on Archives expressed its concern about the burning of the Institute of the Industrial Research Institute, a United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO) affiliate which held rare collections of research materials and reports on Sudan, as well as the dangerous fighting in areas adjacent to the National Museum, National Record Office, Sudan National Library, Sudan Radio & TV, and the Sudan Section of the Library of the University of Khartoum.²⁷⁸

²⁷⁶ Wagdy Sawahel, “Reports of Sexual Violence Emerge as Fighting Continues,” University World News (23 May 2023); Zeinab Mohammed Salih & Jason Burke, “Sudan Officials Fear for Historical Artefacts Threatened by Fighting,” Guardian (5 June 2023); Wagdy Sawahel, “Lawyers Call for War Crime Charges as Destruction Continues,” University World News (6 June 2023).

²⁷⁷ “From Sudan to USI with the Scholars at Risk Programme,” Università della Svizzera Italiana (15 May 2023).

²⁷⁸ “The International Council on Archives Statement of Concern on Danger to and Destruction of Records during the Civil War in Sudan” (press release, 15 June 2023).

SURINAME

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2004, 2009–2010, 2012–2013, 2015–2016, 2018.

SWAZILAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011, 2013, 2016–2018.

SWEDEN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2017–2018, 2020, 2022.

SWITZERLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999–2000, 2004, 2007–2009, 2014, 2016–2018, 2022.

See also Bosnia-Herzegovina, Sudan.

SYRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2002, 2004–2022.

In its eleventh Annual Report on Enforced Disappearances published on 30 August 2022, the Syrian Network for Human Rights called on the United Nations Security Council to “establish methods and mechanisms to prevent the Syrian regime from ... tampering with ... the dead.”²⁷⁹

On 29 June 2023, the United Nations (UN) General Assembly approved a resolution (83–11 with 62 abstentions) establishing an Independent Institution of Missing Persons in the Syrian Arab Republic to determine what happened to more than 130,000 people missing as a result of the conflict in Syria (2011– present). During the conflict, nearly a half million people were killed and half of the prewar population of 23 million was displaced. In the run-up to the vote, over a hundred civil society organizations and 23 UN human rights experts had urged the General Assembly to establish such an institution to support the families' right to truth.²⁸⁰

²⁷⁹ Syrian Network for Human Rights, The 11th Annual Report on Enforced Disappearance in Syria on the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances; the Number of Victims Is Rising (30 August 2022), 52.

²⁸⁰ Edith Lederer, "UN Votes to Establish Independent Body to Clarify Fate of over 130,000 Syrians Missing in Conflict," AP (29 June 2023).

TAIWAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2008–2010, 2012, 2016–2020, 2022.

See China.

TAJIKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017–2018, 2020.

In 2022 a broad assault took place on the cultural heritage of the Pamiris – a small, unrecognized ethnic minority belonging to the Shia Islam Ismaili community. Following anti-government protests in May 2022 in the Gorno-Badakhshan autonomous region – in which according to a May 2022 report by the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Minority Issues as many as forty peaceful protesters were killed – the authorities shut down and confiscated the property of multiple local organizations linked to the Aga Khan Development Network working in the fields of education, economic development and religious instruction.²⁸¹

TANZANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2016–2017.

THAILAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2001–2002, 2005, 2007–2022.

²⁸¹ United Nations Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights, “Tajikistan: UN Expert Fears Crackdown against Pamiri Minority Could Spiral Out of Control,” (press release; 20 May 2022); “Tajikistan: Stop Abusing Autonomous Region Protesters,” Human Rights Watch (26 May 2022); Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 356–357.

TIMOR-LESTE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003–2013, 2015–2018.

On 20 August 2022, President José Ramos-Horta awarded a medal to retired Indonesian army general Abdullah Mahmud Hendropriyono for his “significant contributions to national peace and stability.” The decision was widely criticized, as Hendropriyono was implicated in human rights violations, including abuse, torture and killings, during the Indonesian invasion of East Timor (1975–1976), as military chief in Jakarta against East Timorese students (1991–1993), and as the head of the State Intelligence Agency at the time of the murder of human rights activist Munir Said Thalib [See NCH Annual Reports 2015, 2018–2019].²⁸²

See also Australia.

TOGO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2008–2013, 2017–2018, 2021.

TRINIDAD and TOBAGO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

TUNISIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2011–2022.

Security forces periodically prevented demonstrations by blocking access to certain locations and used excessive force to disperse demonstrators, including on 14 January 2022 – during the anniversary of the 2011 Revolution – when authorities banned public gatherings on health grounds.²⁸³

²⁸² “Timorese Slam Award for ‘Rights Abuser’ Ex-General,” Union of Catholic Asian News (22 August 2022).

²⁸³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 603.

In March 2023, Adel Maizi, archivist and chair of the memory committee of the Instance Vérité et Dignité (IVD; Truth and Dignity Commission; 2014–2019), and other archivists criticized the transfer in 2019–2020 of IVD archives to the National Archives (for documentary materials) and the Prime Minister’s office (for audiovisual materials containing the testimony of victims made behind closed doors) rather than to a dedicated institution for the preservation of memory. They blamed the lack of a solid legislative framework for this transfer [See also NCH Annual Reports 2015–2020].²⁸⁴

On 2 March 2023, Sihem Bensedrine, former President of the Instance Vérité et Dignité (IVD; Truth and Dignity Commission), was summoned on charges of corruption and barred from leaving Tunisia. She was one among seven former IVD members investigated since March 2019. On 31 December 2018, the IVD had sent its final seven-volume, 3,000-page report to then President Beji Caied Essebsi (in power between 2014–2019). Since then, nothing had been done with its recommendations. On 8 February 2021, four United Nations special rapporteurs had sent a letter alerting the government to the risks of using alleged instances of corruption as a pretext to obstruct the transitional justice process, and urged it to “ensure that criminal investigations are not used as a reprisal for the facts contained in the work or reports of the IVD” [See also NCH Annual Reports 2015–2021].²⁸⁵

On 11 April 2023, the University of Manouba in Tunis said it would withdraw the title of emeritus professor from historian Habib Kazdaghli, a former dean of its Faculty of Letters, Arts and Humanities, over his participation in an international academic symposium on the legal and religious status of Jews during the French protectorate in Tunisia (1881–1956), organized by the Tunisian Jewish History Society in Paris alongside Israeli academics, including historian Haïm Saadoun. The university presidency and the scientific committee of the faculty had “denounced” Kazdaghli for his participation, accusing him of using his title for a “dangerous” and “nefarious” purpose, namely the normalization of relations with Israel. Tunisia did not recognize Israel diplomatically. Kazdaghli appealed the decision to the Ministry of Higher Education and Scientific Research. He stated his opposition to the “Israeli settler project,” but at the same time denounced extremist Tunisian political positions that propagated anti-Semitism and repressed Israeli voices. [See also NCH Annual Reports 2013–2014].²⁸⁶

²⁸⁴ Olfa Behassine, “Tunisia: Battle over Truth Commission Archives,” JusticeInfo.Net (16 January 2020); Olfa Behassine, “Adel Maizi: ‘Remembrance Isn’t Just about the Past, It Helps Build the Future’,” JusticeInfo.Net (9 March 2023).

²⁸⁵ Olfa Behassine, “In Tunisia, the ‘Falsified’ Report that Threatens Transitional Justice,” JusticeInfo.Net (23 March 2023).

²⁸⁶ Simona Gonzalez, “Historian Vilified over Symposium with Israeli Academics,” University World News (4 May 2023); Kennedy McCutchen, “Tunisian Professor Stripped of Title for Participating in Symposium Alongside Israeli Academic,” Endangered Scholars Worldwide (16 May 2023).

TÜRKIYE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2000–2022.

On 21 July 2021, the Council of Higher Education established a new research institute named “International Institute of Genocide and Crimes Against Humanity.” Its aim was defined as investigating the “baseless genocide allegations about Armenians, but also crimes against humanity wherever they committed in the world, from America to Africa, from Asia to Europe.” However, historians had achieved near-consensus that the 1915 Armenian massacres had constituted a genocide.²⁸⁷

In October 2021, Caner Perit Özen, a history student, and Ersin Berke Gök, a physics student, both at Boğaziçi University, were imprisoned after they had protested against the appointment of Naci İnci as rector of the university by President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan. They reportedly spent much of their time in solitary confinement, and with no access to university exam papers, letters by friends and family members, or medication. On 7 January 2022, the Istanbul Twenty-Second Criminal Court of First Instance ordered their release. On 3 February 2023, an Istanbul court sentenced Özen to one year’s imprisonment, Gök to 18 months, and twelve other students to between 12 and 14 months.²⁸⁸

In 2022, the authorities continued to deprive a group dubbed the Saturday Mothers of their right to freedom of peaceful assembly in Galatasaray Square, where they had been gathering regularly to demand accountability for the enforced disappearances during the 1980s and 1990s. In June 2022, riot police prevented the group’s nine-hundredth peaceful vigil, detaining several people. In August 2022, police prevented a peaceful protest by the group to mark the International Day of the Victims of Enforced Disappearances at the Altınşehir cemetery and detained 14 people. In the meantime, the prosecution on bogus charges of 46 participants in the seven-hundredth gathering in August 2018 continued. In September 2022, police prevented the Saturday Mothers from making a statement to the press in front of the Çağlayan Courthouse before their fifth hearing and detained 16 people.²⁸⁹

²⁸⁷ Olga Selin Hünler, “Academic Freedom in Turkey,” in Kirsten Roberts Lyer, Ilyas Saliba & Janika Spannagel, eds., University Autonomy Decline: Causes, Responses, and Implications for Academic Freedom (London: Routledge, 2023), 157.

²⁸⁸ “Turkey: Immediately Release Ersin Berke Gök and Caner Perit Özen,” International Federation for Human Rights (6 January 2022); “Turkish Court Approves Release of Two Jailed Bogazici Students,” Al-Monitor (7 January 2022); “Turkey: Criminalisation & Ill-Treatment of Ersin Berke Gök & Caner Perit Özen,” United Nations Human Rights Special Procedures (Joint Communication; 3 May 2022); Hamdi Firat Buyuk, “Turkish Court Jails 14 University Students over Massive 2021 Protests,” Balkan Insight (3 February 2023).

²⁸⁹ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 370.

On [22] February 2022, the Diyarbakır 13th High Criminal Court acquitted nine members of the Diyarbakır Bar Association who stood trial for charges of insulting the Turkish nation and inciting hatred and hostility among the people. The charges were based on reports released between 2016 and 2018 in which the association used the term “genocide” when referring to the 1915 mass killings of Armenians and condemned the suspension of a member of parliament for using the word “Kurdistan” during a speech in parliament.

On 22 April 2022, Garo Paylan, an Armenian member of Parliament for the pro-Kurdish Peoples’ Democratic Party (HDP), said that he faced an unprecedented level of backlash due to a motion (submitted by him annually for seven years) to recognize the 1915 mass killings of Armenians as a genocide and to remove the names of the perpetrators from public venues. The motion was rejected by the Parliament Speaker on the grounds that it was against the parliamentary bylaws. Most of the criticism came from ruling Justice and Development Party (AKP) politicians.

On 25 April 2022, the Ankara Chief Public Prosecutor’s Office launched an investigation into Republican People’s Party (CHP) deputy Sezgin Tanrikulu for sharing a post on Twitter on 24 April (Armenian Remembrance Day) in which he wrote that “107 years ago on April 24, 1915, hundreds of Armenians were detained and exiled. Many died or were lost in the process.” He was charged with “public denigration of Turkishness, the Republic or the Grand National Assembly of Turkey” (Article 301 of the Turkish Penal Code, TCK).²⁹⁰

On 14 July 2022, thirty-six tombstones were vandalized and destroyed in the 600-year-old Jewish Hasköy Cemetery in Istanbul.²⁹¹

TURKMENISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2004, 2009, 2011–2012, 2015–2019.

In 2022, the authorities continued to discriminate against women and girls and LGBTQ+ people, arbitrarily restricting their rights, freedoms and bodily autonomy in the name of cultural traditions and Turkmeniçilik (Turkmen national identity).²⁹²

²⁹⁰ Stockholm Center for Freedom, “Court Acquits Diyarbakır Lawyers Tried for Armenian Genocide, Kurdistan Remarks” (22 February 2022); Stockholm Center for Freedom, “Armenian MP Faces ‘Unprecedented’ Backlash over Motion Seeking Genocide Recognition” (25 April 2022); Stockholm Center for Freedom, “Turkish Authorities Launch Investigation into CHP Lawmaker for Commemorating Armenian Remembrance Day” (25 April 2022).

²⁹¹ Zvika Klein, “600-Year-Old Jewish Cemetery in Turkey Vandalized, Graves Destroyed,” Jerusalem Post (15 July 2022).

²⁹² Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 374.

UGANDA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2017, 2019–2021.

On 8 February 2022, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) ordered Uganda to pay US$ 325 million to the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) for “wrongful international acts,” including the occupation of parts of eastern DRC and the support of armed groups during the Second Congo War (1998–2003), leading to the deaths of 10,000 to 15,000 people. The ICJ further ruled that there was “insufficient evidence” for the DRC claim that Uganda was responsible for 180,000 civilian deaths. The landmark ruling ended a legal dispute begun in 2005 when the ICJ ruled that Uganda had to pay reparations without settling an amount. In 2008, it was estimated that the war and its after-effects, such as malnutrition and diseases among displaced people, had caused the death of 5.4 million people.²⁹³

On 3 February 2023, authorities terminated the mandate of the United Nations (UN) High Commissioner for Human Rights Office in Uganda, established in 2005, from the end of 2023 onward, on the grounds that Uganda’s human rights record had improved and “dynamic internal institutions” had been developed. The decision was criticized by the opposition. In November 2022, an expert member of the UN Committee against Torture had found that torture and ill-treatment continued to be widespread, while Human Rights Watch concluded that accountability for serious human rights abuses committed by security forces had remained elusive throughout 2022. Accountability for crimes committed during the conflict between government forces and the Lord’s Resistance Army (1987–present), including abuses by the government’s armed forces, remained limited. The army claimed that soldiers who committed abuses had been prosecuted and convicted but did not provide any details of such cases.²⁹⁴

See also Congo (Democratic Republic).

²⁹³ Joe Bavier, “Congo War-Driven Crisis Kills 45,000 a Month: Study,” Reuters (22 January 2008); “Mixed Reactions Follow ICJ Ruling Asking Uganda to Pay \$325m in Reparation to DRC,” Africa News (10 February 2022); “Uganda Pays First Installment of \$325m War Reparations to DRC,” Al Jazeera (12 September 2022).

²⁹⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 628; “Uganda to Terminate Mandate of UN Rights Office,” Africa News (8 February 2023).

UKRAINE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2009–2011, 2014–2022.

Following the 24 February 2021 invasion by Russian forces, hundreds of streets, squares and other locations named after Russian historical figures were renamed and memorial plaques removed. Additionally, many statues were (scheduled to be) demolished, books written by Russian nationals could no longer be published, and Russian movies were banned.²⁹⁵

In March 2022, a 70-year-old woman was fined 35,000 rubles ($ 544) after she brought flowers and a handmade “No to war” sign on a blue and yellow paperboard to the monument for writer Taras Shevchenko (1814–1861) in Simferopol to commemorate the anniversary of his birth on 9 March. The judge dismissed the woman’s argument that she supported peace and highlighted that the use of colors of an “unfriendly country” contributed to the offense. The fine presented a significant financial burden for her as the amount corresponded to the double of her monthly pension.²⁹⁶

On 10 March 2022, Leyla Ibragimova [Leila Ibrahimova], deputy of the Zaporizhzhya Regional Council and Director of the Melitopol History Museum, was kidnapped by seven Russian soldiers who raided her home in Melitopol [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. After an interrogation and the confiscation of her family’s phones and computers, she was released. The next morning, however, she was picked up again for another interrogation. Ibragimova, an ethnic Crimean Tatar, was an advocate for her local constituency, including around 12,000 Crimean Tatars. During the interrogation, she was asked about Azad, a local Crimean Tatar organization, and pressed to give the names and addresses of activists and opinion leaders in the area, which she refused.

Subsequently, Russian forces took the museum’s curator, Halyna Kucher ([1962]–), at gunpoint to the museum and asked to show a Russian “expert” where the museum’s Scythian gold was. She refused to cooperate. On 30 April 2022, she was abducted from her home and her whereabouts remained unknown. Russian soldiers oversaw the removal of at least 198 rare gold artifacts from the museum. The gold objects dated back to the fourth century BCE and the Scythian empire.

The kidnappings were seen as an extension of Russian policies in Crimea. Since 2014, when Russian forces illegally annexed Crimea, a Russification policy discouraged schools from teaching Crimean Tatar and Ukrainian (two of the official languages, next to Russian), almost all independent Crimean ²⁹⁵ Mansur Mirovalev, “How Ukrainians ‘De-Russify’ Themselves,” Al Jazeera (15 September 2022).

²⁹⁶ Office of the UN High Commissioner of Human Rights, Situation of Human Rights in Ukraine in the Context of the Armed Attack by the Russian Federation: 24 February – 15 May 2022 (Geneva: OHCHR, 29 June 2022), paragraph 119.

Tatar media outlets were closed, activists' homes were being searched, and at least twenty people "disappeared."²⁹⁷

Russian forces continued to destroy cultural heritage sites in Ukraine [See also NCH Annual Report 2022]:

- In late February or early March 2022, the Izyum Local Lore Museum, Kharkiv region, was struck by missiles. The museum was established in 1920 to "preserve the historical and cultural heritage and spread knowledge" through a collection of books, paintings, and works of art relevant to the history of the region.²⁹⁸
- In early March 2022, Russian missiles damaged a number of V.N. Karazin Kharkiv National University buildings, exploding in the university's Rare Book Library, which housed 60,000 of the university's 3,350,000 books and manuscripts.²⁹⁹
- During the occupation of Kherson by Russian forces, between 2 March and 11 November 2022, Russian soldiers and State agents looted at least two museums (the Kherson Regional Art Museum and the Kherson Regional Museum), the St. Catherine's Cathedral, and the Kherson Regional Archives. At least some of the items were taken to Occupied Crimea. In [late-October] 2022, pro-Russian officials removed the bones of eighteenth-century Commander Grigory Potemkin (1739–1791) from the cathedral and moved them, together with his statue, further into Russian-occupied territory. As Potemkin had played a central role in the annexation of Crimea after a peace agreement with the Ottoman Empire in 1783, he was a central figure in President Vladimir Putin's justification of the 2014 invasion of Crimea, and had been mentioned in a number of his speeches since the 24 February 2022 invasion. Reportedly from June 2022 onward, and especially between 30 October and 4 November, soldiers began looting the Kherson Regional Archives, taking almost all of the eighteenth- and nineteenth-century records, including collections of regional maps, a large collection of pre-war newspapers, almost everything related to the pre-revolutionary period, a rare "Code of Laws of the Russian Empire" and a collection of the Kherson zemstvo (a local government system

²⁹⁷ Agnieszka Pikulicka-Wilczewska, "Russia's Crackdown on Crimean Tatars Foreshadows Wider Repression," AlJazeera (12 March 2022); "Andrei Kurkov on Russia's War against Ukrainian Culture," Index on Censorship (29 March 2022); Andrey Kurkov, "Culture in the Cross Hairs," Index on Censorship, 51 no. 2 (July 2022), 64; PEN America, Ukrainian Culture Under Attack: Erasure of Ukrainian Culture in Russia's War Against Ukraine (New York: PEN America, 2022); "A Second Worker at the Melitopol Museum of Local History in Ukraine Has Reportedly Been Abducted by Russian Soldiers," Artnet (5 May 2022); Jeffrey Gettleman & Oleksandr Chubko, "Ukraine Says Russia Looted Ancient Gold Artifacts from a Museum," New York Times (30 April 2022).

²⁹⁸ PEN America, Ukrainian Culture Under Attack: Erasure of Ukrainian Culture in Russia's War Against Ukraine (New York: PEN America, 2022).

²⁹⁹ Nathan Greenfield, "Crimes against the World – Russia's Attacks on Universities," University World News (14 August 2022).

- instituted by the Russian Empire during the nineteenth century).³⁰⁰
- On 28 April 2022, Russian forces stole valuable paintings, religious relics and other items from the Mariupol Museum of Local Lore and History, the Museum of Folk Life, and the Kuindzhi Art Museum, all in Mariupol.³⁰¹
 - On 30 April 2022, Russian soldiers looted the Museum of Local History in Melitopol, taking, among other things, rare Scythian gold artifacts [see above under Ibragimova].³⁰²
 - On 6 July 2022, a Russian missile strike destroyed the university museum and library of the H. S. Skovoroda Kharkiv National Pedagogical University in Kharkiv.³⁰³
 - As of 5 October 2022, UNESCO had verified damage to 199 sites since 24 February 2022 – 84 religious sites, 13 museums, 74 buildings of historical and/or artistic interest, 18 monuments, and 10 libraries. As of 22 February 2023, almost one year after the Russian invasion, UNESCO had verified damage to 241 sites – 106 religious sites, 18 museums, 86 buildings of historical and/or artistic interest, 19 monuments, and 12 libraries.³⁰⁴
 - On 17 November 2022, the Ministry of Culture and Information Policy said that 529 cultural heritage and cultural institutions had been damaged or destroyed since the Russian invasion on 24 February 2022. A report of PEN America, published on 2 December 2022, argued that deliberate attacks on cultural heritage had both been a central motive and tactic of Russia’s campaign of aggression and Russification in Crimea and Ukraine since 2014 (thereby continuing a centuries-old trend of Imperial Russian and Soviet efforts to deny, assimilate, and eliminate Ukrainian culture and language). The report distinguished damage to local “houses of culture”; the removal of Ukrainian textbooks and other books from school libraries; threats and violence to museum and other cultural workers; damage to and destruction of (at least 49) libraries and archives; the seizure and destruction of Ukrainian literature and Ukrainian-language books from public libraries in the occupied territories; and the killing of writers, artists, and cultural workers.³⁰⁵
 - On 24 November 2022, Russian forces looted the History Museum in Nova Kakhovka, Khersonska region.³⁰⁶

³⁰⁰ Anna Chernova & Rob Picheta, “Russia Removes Bones of 18th-Century Commander Revered by Putin from Occupied Ukrainian City,” CNN (28 October 2022); “Ukraine: Russians Pillage Kherson Cultural Institutions,” Human Rights Watch (20 December 2022).

³⁰¹ “Ukraine: Russians Pillage Kherson Cultural Institutions,” Human Rights Watch (20 December 2022).

³⁰² “Ukraine: Russians Pillage Kherson Cultural Institutions,” Human Rights Watch (20 December 2022).

³⁰³ “Missile Strike Kills a Security Guard and Damages University Facilities,” Scholars at Risk ([no date]).

³⁰⁴ UNESCO, “Damaged Cultural Sites in Ukraine Verified by UNESCO” (6 October 2022); UNESCO, “Damaged Cultural Sites in Ukraine Verified by UNESCO” (22 February 2023); Yasmine Salam & Dan De Luce, “‘Just the Way the Nazis Did’: Evidence Suggests Russians Are Stealing Art from Ukraine on a World War II Scale,” NBC News (6 April 2023).

³⁰⁵ PEN America, Ukrainian Culture Under Attack: Erasure of Ukrainian Culture in Russia’s War Against Ukraine (New York: PEN America, 2022); PEN America, “Report Exposes Putin’s War on Ukrainian Culture,” Ifex (5 December 2022); Jason Farago, “When Cultural Heritage Becomes a Battlefield,” New York Times (27 December 2022).

³⁰⁶ “Ukraine: Russians Pillage Kherson Cultural Institutions,” Human Rights Watch (20 December 2022).

- On 23 July 2023, Russian missiles hit the historic center of Odessa (UNESCO World Heritage), badly damaging the Transfiguration Cathedral, Odessa's largest Orthodox church. The church had already been demolished by the Soviet Union in 1939, but it had been rebuilt in 2003. Russia had stepped up attacks on Odessa, a port city, after it had withdrawn from the United Nations-backed grain deal on 17 July 2023.³⁰⁷

In September 2022, when the Ukrainian forces liberated communities that had been under Russian control for six months, it transpired that there had been a systematic attempt to eliminate the Ukrainian curriculum, in particular of history, literature, and language, and replace it with a Russian one [See also NCH Annual Report 2022]. This included the destruction of school textbooks, Ukrainian flags, and children's work. Several teachers had resisted: head teacher Lidiya Tilna was detained for 19 days and beaten for refusing to teach the Russian curriculum; head teacher Liliya Sirous hid 2,200 books after being told to destroy them. Deputy director at Balakliya Five school Inna Mandryka refused to cooperate and was dismissed, but after her dismissal she launched an underground online school from her basement and created a syllabus of online lessons and distributed it to teachers scattered all over Ukraine and Europe.³⁰⁸

Among those killed at the frontline in the war against Russia were:

- On or around 5 October 2022: historian and archaeologist Viacheslav Zaitsev (?–2022). He was the head of the information and publishing department of the Khortytsia National Reserve and a deputy of the Zaporizhzhya City Council.
- On 18 October 2022: historian Yurii Kostyk (?–2022). An alumnus of the Ivan Franko National University of Lviv, he successively worked at the Danylo Halytsky Lviv National Medical University, taught the history of Ukraine in English to foreign students, and was a researcher in the Lviv National Scientific Library of Ukraine.
- On or around 17 November 2022: Serhiy Myronov (?–2022), a Kyiv tour guide, activist, author of the blog Vanishing Kyiv. At his own expense, he restored historical doors and windows in old Kyiv houses. He died of wounds in the hospital.
- On or around 29 November 2022: Vadym Stetsyuk (1982–2022), a historian and teacher of the Kamianets-Podilskyi Ivan Ohienko National University. A history teacher and researcher at the Kamianets-Podilskyi State Historical Museum, he was the author of more than 120 scientific publications.

³⁰⁷ James Waterhouse & George Wright, "Ukraine War: Russian Strikes on Odesa Damage Orthodox Cathedral," BBC News (23 July 2023).

³⁰⁸ Zhanna Bezpiatchuk & Sofia Bettiza, "Ukraine War: Tortured for Refusing to Teach in Russian," BBC News (1 October 2022).

- On 6 January 2023, librarian Vitalii Pyvovarov (?–2023) was killed near Bakhmut. He had graduated from the history faculty of Zhytomyr Ivan Franko State University, and was pursuing a postgraduate degree. He worked in the State Archive of the Zhytomyr Region and Zhytomyr State Administration, and later at the Oleh Olzhych Regional Scientific Library. He volunteered to join the ranks of the Armed Forces.
- On 16 January 2023, after four months of being in a coma as a result of a severe battle wound, Kharkiv historian and antiquarian Valerii Romanovskyi passed away (?–2023). He was an associate professor at the Department of Cultural Studies of the Kharkiv State Academy of Culture and a member of the Kharkiv Historical and Philological Society. He taught the history of Ukrainian and world culture, worked on the memoirs of Pavlo Zholtovskyi, and wrote a commentary on the memoirs of Yuri Shevelyov.
- On 2 February 2023, archaeologist Andrii Fylypchuk (?–2023) was killed during a combat mission in the East of Ukraine. He had graduated from Lviv Ivan Franko National University. In 2011–2014, he did postgraduate studies at the archaeology department. Together with his father, archaeologist Mykhailo Fylypchuk, he had explored the Slavic sites of Ciscarpathia. Since 2015, he had worked as the deputy director for scientific work of the Old Plisnesk Historical and Cultural Reserve.
- On 14 March 2023, historian, archaeologist, ethnographer, and musician Yuri Kovalenko (?–2023) was killed in battle in the Luhansk region. He had taken part in numerous archaeological expeditions and, since 1999, headed the scientific research department at the Hlukhiv National Reserve. In 2014 he joined the Black Tulip mission as a volunteer and engaged in repatriating more than 150 deceased Ukrainian defenders' bodies back from the occupied territories of the Donetsk and Luhansk regions. He had enlisted in the Armed Forces of Ukraine in 2020, meanwhile defending his Ph.D. in 2021.

In addition:

- On 24 March 2022, historian, translator, and publicist Serhiy Zaikovsky (?–2022) was killed during an assault on the Lukyanivska village, near Kyiv. A graduate of Kharkiv National University, he specialized in the history of the ancient world and the Middle Ages.
- On 21 April 2022, historian and writer Serhiy Burov ([1938]–2022) died in besieged Mariupol. He devoted his life to researching the history of the city, and was its honorary citizen. He wrote Mariupol: The Past (2003) and Mariupol and Its People (2011).
- On April 25, Russia shelled the Kupyansk local history museum with missiles. The museum director Iryna Osadcha and worker Olena Vodopianova were killed in the workplace.

In addition:

- On 5 March 2022, Russian occupiers shot dead Church Slavonic and Greek language teacher, historian, and translator Oleksandr Kisliuk (–2022) in Bucha, near Kyiv. He worked as a teacher of ancient languages, translated classical texts and published about the history of the Cossacks based on Latin sources.³⁰⁹

On 15 December 2022, in a resolution adopted by 507 votes in favor, 12 against with 17 abstentions, the European Parliament recognized “the Holodomor, the artificial famine of 1932–1933 in Ukraine caused by a deliberate policy of the Soviet regime, as a genocide against the Ukrainian people, as it was committed with the intent to destroy a group of people by deliberately inflicting conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction.” While condemning “the current Russian regime’s manipulation of historical memory for the purpose of regime survival,” the European Parliament called “on the Russian Federation, as the primary successor of the Soviet Union, to officially recognize the Holodomor and to apologize for these crimes.”³¹⁰

Among those (temporarily) emigrated or exiled since the Russian invasion of February 2022 were:

- Linguist Yurii Kovbasko, who moved from Vasyl Stefanyk Precarpathian National University in Ivano-Frankivsk to Guarapuava, Paraná State, Brazil, with a two-year fellowship. He worked on a Diachronic Corpus of the Ukrainian Language of the Diaspora in the nineteenth- and early twentieth-century;
- Sociologist Olena Strelnyk, who was employed on a two-year emergency fellowship at the Technical University of Munich funded by the university and DFG, the German Research Foundation. She collected oral histories of the war in Ukraine and in exile.³¹¹

According to a February 2023 report from the Yale University Conflict Observatory, an initiative supported by the United States State Department, Russia had placed at least 6,000 Ukrainian children at 43 camps and institutions in Russian-occupied regions in Ukraine or in Russia, or with new families, as part of its “systematic ... approach to the relocation, re-education and, in some cases, adoption and ³⁰⁹ Rodina Iryna, “People of Culture Taken Away by the War: 2022” (PEN Ukraine; 4 February 2023); Rodina Iryna, “People of Culture Taken Away by the War: 2023” (PEN Ukraine; 19 July 2023).

³¹⁰ “European Parliament Resolution of 15 December 2022 on 90 Years after the Holodomor: Recognising the Mass Killing through Starvation as Genocide” (Strasbourg: EP, 15 December 2022). European Parliament, “Holodomor: Parliament Recognises Soviet Starvation of Ukrainians as Genocide” (press release; Strasbourg: EP, 15 December 2022).

³¹¹ Nathan Greenfield, “Will Ukraine’s Brains Return? And What If They Don’t?,” University World News (20 May 2023).

forced adoption of Ukrainian children. The report defined “re-education” as “the promotion of cultural, historical, societal, and patriotic messages or ideas that serve the political interests of Russia.” It included the inculcation of the official Russian vision of national culture and history. It took many forms, including the school curriculum, field trips to cultural or patriotic sites throughout Russia, lectures from Russia’s veterans and historians, and military activities.³¹²

On 20 July 2023, Culture and Information Policy Minister Olexander Tkachenko tendered his resignation after President Volodymyr Zelenskiy had told Prime Minister Denys Shmyhal to find alternative funding for cultural projects, among others, because “[m]useums, cultural centers, symbols, television series are important, but we have other priorities.” Tkachenko wrote on Telegram: “Culture in wartime is important as this war is not just about territory but also people – our memory, history, language and creativity despite the war ... Private and State funding for culture in wartime is no less important than for drones. Culture is the shield for our identity and our borders.” Earlier that day, Tkachenko had defended, among others, the allocation of the equivalent of $ 13.5 million to complete a museum devoted to Ukraine’s man-made 1930s famine Holodomor.³¹³

See also Estonia, Poland, Russia.

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2016.

UNITED KINGDOM

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998–2001, 2003–2004, 2006–2022.

In 2013, the Royal Military Police (RMP) launched an investigation into alleged murder raids by Special Air Service (SAS) operatives in Afghanistan, during the War in Afghanistan (2001–2021), specifically the operation of one SAS squadron in Helmand in 2010–2011 that was reportedly responsible for 54 unlawful killings in a six-month period. RMP investigators were obstructed in their efforts to gather evidence by the British military and their findings were misinterpreted by the Ministry of Defense after they had closed their investigation in 2019.

³¹² Russia’s Systematic Program for the Re-Education & Adoption of Ukraine’s Children: A Conflict Observatory Report (New Haven: Yale School of Public Health Humanitarian Research Lab) (14 February 2023), 5–6, 14, 18; Missy Ryan, “Russian ‘Re-Education Camps’ Hold Thousands of Ukrainian Kids, per Report.” Washington Post (14 February 2023).

³¹³ “Ukraine’s Zelenskiy Calls for Spending Restraint, Minister Offers to Resign.” Reuters (21 July 2023).

In August 2022, an investigation by the BBC (British Broadcasting Company) found evidence suggesting that General Sir Mark Carleton-Smith, the former head of Special Forces, was briefed about the alleged unlawful killings in Helmand, but kept the records away from the RMP investigators. Likewise, it found that high-level officers of Special Forces were aware of concerns over unlawful killings, but failed to report to the RMP, despite a legal obligation to do so. Instead, concerns had been put in a classified file with access restricted to a handful senior Special Forces officers.³¹⁴

In the autumn of 2021, historian Nicolas Bell-Romero submitted a 50-page draft report about the past links of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge University, with transatlantic slavery within the framework of larger research on the university's legacies of enslavement undertaken by him and historian Sabine Cadeau. Finding that financial benefits from enslavement outweighed the College's contribution to abolition, the report caused a rift among college faculty – with some pushing to prevent its publication. A long response to the criticisms did not change the situation and Bell-Romero refused to redraft his report in collaboration with a life fellow in history. In the summer of 2022 the newspaper The Telegraph picked up the case, quoting at length the anonymous critics but identifying Bell-Romero by name as a “woke activist.” When in July 2022 another newspaper submitted a freedom of information request to access the report, the College eventually published it online in August.³¹⁵

After freedom of information requests were issued to 140 British universities by the newspaper The Times, it was revealed that some universities removed books from reading lists or made them optional to protect students from “challenging” content, including depictions of slavery. The investigation also found 1,081 examples of trigger warnings across undergraduate courses.³¹⁶

On 28 September 2022, the Court of Appeal ruled that due to the “high value” of the Colston statue [See NCH Annual Reports 2020, 2022] and the violent way it was brought down, defendants in similar cases in the future would not be able to use human rights defenses. The judgment was seen by human rights activists as a blow to the right to protest.³¹⁷

³¹⁴ Hannah O'Grady & Joel Gunter, “SAS Unit Repeatedly Killed Afghan Detainees, BBC Finds,” BBC News (12 July 2022).

³¹⁵ Samira Shackle, “The Backlash: How Slavery Research Came under Fire,” Guardian (1 June 2023).

³¹⁶ “Universities Admit Purge of ‘Challenging’ Books to Protect Students,” Telegraph (9 August 2022).

³¹⁷ Katy Watts, “Colston 4 Judgment: ‘The Government Is Tearing Up Our Protest Rights’,” The Bristol Cable (28 September 2022).

In October 2022, Munib al-Masri (1934–), a Palestinian business owner and former politician, brought a petition to the government asking for a formal acknowledgement and apology for war crimes committed by British forces against Palestinians during the British rule of Palestine (1917–1948). The petition came with a 300–page dossier of evidence of British atrocities, including during the Arab Rebellion of 1936–1939. In a statement the Ministry of Defense said it was aware of historical allegations against armed forces personnel during the period and any evidence provided would be “reviewed thoroughly.”³¹⁸

In the autumn of 2022, the journal Index on Censorship organized a survey among 28 historians and journalists who worked with archives related to the Royal family. Ten responded, the majority of which wanted to remain anonymous. Eight respondents said that their research into the royal family had been affected by the refusal of the royal archives to grant access to key materials and deplored the excessive secrecy. One of them was historian Andrew Lownie (1961–) who gained access in 2022 to the diaries and personal correspondence (preserved at Southampton University) of Lord Louis Mountbatten and Lady Mountbatten, part of the British Royal Family’s inner circle, after a protracted and expensive legal battle (See also below).

Since 2010, there had been a blanket exemption to the Freedom of Information Act for all official correspondence relating to the monarch and to the heir and second-in-line to the throne. The exemption was introduced during the decade-long battle by Guardian journalist Rob Evans to gain access to the so-called “black spider memos” (letters and memorandums written by Prince Charles, now King Charles III, to certain government departments), arguing that they constituted lobbying and should be released in the public interest.

Rory Cormac, working at the University of Nottingham and co-author of The Secret Royals, pointed to three specific areas where more openness would contribute to a greater understanding of contemporary history: the 1956 Suez crisis, Northern Ireland, and the role played by the monarchy in the final phase of the British Empire. The personal archives of past prime ministers (Anthony Eden at the University of Birmingham and Harold Macmillan at Oxford University) were subject to restrictions on royal material. There were also files which had been reclassified after historians found information that proved uncomfortable to the Royal Family [See also NCH Annual Report 2020, Jenny Hocking case under Australia].³¹⁹ ³¹⁸ Tom Bateman, “UK Apology Sought for British War Crimes in Palestine,” BBC News (7 October 2022).

³¹⁹ “Special Report [on royal secrecy],” Index on Censorship, 51 no. 4 (December 2022), 1, 49–64 (survey results on p. 56; Lownie on pp. 57–58; Hocking on pp. 59–61); Information Commissioner’s Office: Freedom of Information Act 2000, Decision Notice (18 December 2019), Information Notice (19 December 2019) [on the Mountbatten archives]; Andrew Lownie, “Monitoring Terrorists, Gangs – and Historians,” Index on Censorship, 52 no. 2 (2023), 82–83.

In 2023 historian Andrew Lownie (1961–) revealed that his freedom of information requests over the past years demonstrated that his social media accounts, speaking engagements, newspaper articles and crowdfunding activities had been monitored by the Cabinet Office and the Foreign Office since at least 2018 and that his past, including an employment tribunal and defamation cases in which he was the defendant, was being investigated. These operations were likely mounted because Lownie had found huge gaps in the archival record (called "dry cleaning the records") during research for his 2016 biography of spy Guy Burgess (1911–1963), his 2019 biography of Lord Louis Mountbatten (1900–1979) and Lady Mountbatten (1901–1960) (see above), and his 2021 biography of the Duke of Windsor (who was King Edward VIII in 1936; 1894–1972). The gaps showed that the British government failed to adhere to the Public Record Act and the Freedom of Information Act. Lownie found similar gaps in Irish archives.³²⁰

On 15 February 2023, Human Rights Watch (HRW) published a report on the deportation by the United Kingdom (UK) and the United States (US) of the entire population of the Chagos islands in the Indian Ocean so the US could build a military base on Diego Garcia, the largest island. The boat carrying the final Chagossians to be expelled from the islands arrived in Mauritius in June 1973. HRW detailed the ongoing "colonial crimes against humanity" committed by the UK in the Chagos Islands, explaining why UK authorities should prosecute these crimes, pay full compensation, and issue a meaningful apology for losses experienced as a result of these crimes [See also NCH Annual Reports 2012–2013, 2021].³²¹

On 26 April 2023, Prime Minister Rishi Sunak dismissed a call for the government to apologize and pay reparations for the United Kingdom's prominent historical role in the slave trade and in slavery. He said: "What I think our focus should now be is, of course, understanding our history and all its parts, not running away from it, but right now making sure we have a society that's inclusive and tolerant of people from all backgrounds ... But trying to unpick our history is not the right way forward and is not something we'll focus our energies on." In 2006, then Prime Minister Tony Blair had expressed "deep sorrow" for Britain's role in slavery.³²²

In May 2023, Buckingham Palace declined a request by the Ethiopian government to return the remains of Prince Alemayehu (1861–1879) on the grounds that it would "disturb [...] the resting place of a ³²⁰ Andrew Lownie, "Monitoring Terrorists, Gangs – and Historians," Index on Censorship, 52 no. 2 (2023), 82–83.

³²¹ Human Rights Watch, "That's When the Nightmare Started": UK and US Forced Displacement of the Chagossians and Ongoing Colonial Crimes (New York: HRW, 2023).

³²² Joshua Nevett, "Slavery: Rishi Sunak Rejects Call to Apologise and Pay Reparations," BBC News (26 April 2023); Mohamed Madi & Celestina Olulode, "King Charles III as Head of State in St Vincent and the Grenadines 'Absurd'," BBC News (8 May 2023).

substantial number of others” who were buried in the catacombs of St. George’s Chapel in Windsor Castle. A previous request to then Queen Elizabeth II in 2006 was declined because of the alleged difficulty of identifying the prince’s remains. Prince Alemayehu had been taken to England by British soldiers looting his father’s imperial citadel after the 1868 Battle of Magdala.³²³

In [early May] 2023, the eyewitness statement of Captain Robin Green given for a 1982 board of inquiry related to the attempted June 1982 landing on the Falkland Islands / Islas Malvinas, was released after a freedom of information request by Crispin Black, a retired colonel and one of the survivors of the landing, prompting calls for the full release of the inquiry’s files. On 8 June 1982, the landing ships Sir Tristram and Sir Galahad were attacked by Argentinian Skyhawk planes, as part of the Falkland / Islas Malvinas War (April–June 1982), killing dozens of service personnel and injuring more than 150. In September 1982, a board of inquiry had collected witness statements of the attempted landing, which remained secret. The files were due to remain sealed until 2065, despite several declassification attempts.³²⁴

On 20 May 2023, a man climbed a scaffold at the front of the BBC headquarters in London and hit the Prospero and Ariel statue (sculpted by Eric Gill [1882–1940] in 1933) with a hammer in an apparent protest. There had been calls for the statue to be removed because, according to a 1989 biography, Gill had recorded sexually abusing his daughters in his diaries. In January 2022, another protester had damaged the statue as well.³²⁵

Northern Ireland

Despite a commitment from the Northern Irish government in November 2021, an independent public inquiry was not established into “mother and baby homes,” “Magdalene laundries,” and “workhouses.” Between 1922 and 1990, many women and girls who had become pregnant outside marriage, had been sent to these institutions, where they had suffered arbitrary detention, forced labor, ill-treatment, and the forced adoption of their babies [See also above, under Ireland, and NCH Annual Report 2016, under Ireland].³²⁶

³²³ Jamie Grierson, “Buckingham Palace Declines to Return Remains of ‘Stolen’ Ethiopian Prince, Say Reports,” Guardian (23 May 2023); Jibat Tamirat & Cecilia Macaulay, “Ethiopia’s Prince Alemayehu: Buckingham Palace Rejects Calls to Return Royal’s Body,” BBC News (23 May 2023).

³²⁴ Daniel Boffey, “UK Ministers Urged to Unseal Files on Falklands Attack that Killed 56,” Guardian (5 May 2023).

³²⁵ “Man Climbs BBC HQ Scaffolding and Hammers at Statue,” BBC News (20 May 2023).

³²⁶ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 386.

On 4 August 2022, the journal Index on Censorship (IoC) expressed concern over two lawsuits filed by Sinn Féin politician Gerry Kelly against journalist Malachi O’Doherty and columnist Ruth Dudley Edwards, claiming aggravated damages for the latter’s comments on Kelly’s role in the 25 September 1983 Maze Prison escape, in which 38 Irish Republican Army prisoners had escaped the maximum security prison HMP Maze. IoC condemned both suits as SLAPPs (Strategic Lawsuits against Political Participation) and sent a media freedom alert, the seventh on the United Kingdom since January 2022, to the Council of Europe.³²⁷

On 20 and 21 August 2022, 325 African men, women and children were ceremonially reburied on Saint Helena. In 2008, archaeological digs during the construction of the island’s airport had uncovered their remains, which had then been stored in boxes in a stock room of an old prison. The reburial followed a remembrance ceremony on 21 May 2021.

Decades after Britain’s 1807 ban on the slave trade, the Royal Navy began patrolling the Atlantic, intercepting slave ships that violated the ban and taking the captives to Saint Helena (1840–1872). Of these more than 25,000 formerly enslaved, “liberated” Africans, some were shipped further to the Caribbean islands to work on the plantations but most died in quarantine camps on Saint Helena. At least 8,000 men, women and children were buried anonymously on the island (the largest burial ground of enslaved Africans in the world). The 325 reburied persons formed part of this larger group.³²⁸

On 15 December 2022, several United Nations experts warned that the proposed Northern Ireland Troubles (Legacy and Reconciliation) Bill before the United Kingdom (UK) Parliament failed to comply with the UK’s obligation to investigate serious human rights violations committed during the “Troubles” (1969–1998) and denied truth and remedy for victims. They expressed concern that the Bill replaced Troubles-related criminal investigations with reviews to be undertaken by a planned Independent Commission for Reconciliation and Information Recovery, whose truth-seeking mandate was so severely limited that it would be tantamount to a de facto amnesty scheme [See also NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022].³²⁹

³²⁷ “Index on Censorship Files Media Freedom Alert after Sinn Féin MLA Legal Action,” Index on Censorship (4 August 2022).

³²⁸ St. Eustatius Afrikan Burial Ground Alliance, “St. Helena to Honor 325 ‘Liberated’ Afrikans with Ceremonial Reburial” (press release; 30 August 2022); Equality & Human Rights Commission, “CEO Speech at St Helena’s Day: Memorial Ceremony for the Formerly Enslaved” (12 August 2021).

³²⁹ United Nations (UN) Experts, “UK: UN Experts Voice Concern at Proposed Blanket Impunity to Address Legacy of ‘The Troubles’ in Northern Ireland” (Press release; 10 August 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 706; UN Experts, “UK: Flawed Northern Ireland ‘Troubles’ Bill Flagrantly Contravenes Rights Obligations, Say UN Experts” (Press release; 15 December 2022); UN Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence, Follow-up on the Visits to Burundi, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and Sri Lanka (UN Doc. A/HRC/48/60/Add.2) (5 August 2021), 9–16; Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 387.

See also China (Hongkong), Czech Republic, Egypt, Greece, India, Iran, Kenya, Lebanon, Malaysia, Russia, Sudan, United States.

UNITED NATIONS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2022.

On 15 September 2022, an International Roundtable on Roma and Memorialization (“Advancing Recognition and Remedy for the Dark Chapters of the Romani Past and their Impact on the Present”) under United Nations auspices stated that Romani history included periods of slavery, the Holocaust and other episodes of persecution, evictions and expulsion, and coercive sterilization of Romani women, adding that the dark chapters of Romani history had yet to be properly acknowledged and memorialized. As a result, legacies of anti-gypsyism continued to be a powerful force in societies throughout the world. It recommended action at the level of history textbooks, sites of memory, historical museums, and oral history, among others.³³⁰

On 29 March 2023, the delegations of France and South Africa at the 52nd Session of the United Nations Human Rights Council delivered a Joint Statement on Behalf of a Group of Seventy Countries on Academic Freedom, arguing, among others, that academic freedom was “key to human rights education but also essential for technical and scientific progress,” and noting that attacks on academic freedom were on the rise. It also affirmed that “[w]ithout academic freedom, there is no safeguard against the manipulation of information or against the distortion of history.”³³¹

UNITED STATES

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2022.

In June 2021, Republican Governor of Texas Greg Abbott signed House Bill 2497, creating the “1836 Project,” a committee set up to promote “patriotic education,” mainly through pamphlets given to people receiving their driver’s licenses and by advising State agencies on how to teach history at monuments, landmarks, and other public history places [See also NCH Annual Report 2021]. The bill – an allusion to the “1619 Project,” a project founded in August 2019 by historian and journalist Nikole Hannah-Jones and named after the year that slavery began in the colonies that would become the United States (US), and exploring the impact of slavery on US history and modern life [See NCH Annual Report 2020–2022] – was criticized for being part of a Republicans’ push in Texas and nationwide to limit the discussion of “critical race theory” [See also NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022] in schools, for promoting the State’s “Christian heritage,” and for excluding enslaved people and indigenous groups from a historical narrative that had Texas’s independence begin in 1836, when it broke free from Mexico (even though its 1836 constitution legalized slavery).

³³⁰ Roma and Memorialization: Advancing Recognition and Remedy for the Dark Chapters of the Romani Past and their Impact on the Present (Outcome Document of the International Roundtable; Geneva, 15 September 2022).

³³¹ “Joint Statement on Behalf of a Group of 70 Countries on Academic Freedom at the 52nd Session of the Human Rights Council” (29 March 2023).

In August 2022, the committee approved a 15-page pamphlet containing the “patriotic” telling of Texas history, that would be distributed alongside new driver’s licenses. The pamphlet was criticized for failing to hold institutions accountable for slavery and other forms of oppression of indigenous Texans, Tejanos, Blacks, and women, and for reinforcing the “Texas creation myth” – a narrative, refuted by historical research, that portrayed the 1836 battle at the Alamo as a liberation struggle, omitting that Texans specifically opposed Mexican laws that would free enslaved workers needed to farm their cotton [See also NCH Annual Report 2021].³³²

In 2022, despite unprecedented support in Congress and significant movement on reparations initiatives at State and local levels, the federal government failed to create a commission to study the legacy of enslavement and develop reparations proposals. In light of Congress’s inaction, racial justice advocates urged the Joe Biden administration to create such a commission by executive order on Juneteenth [19 June] 2022. In August 2022, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination concluded that the State had failed to implement international anti-racism legal standards, and urged it, for the first time, to establish a commission to study and develop reparations proposals.

As of July 2022, some 870,000 Native American artifacts, including nearly 110,000 human remains, that should have been returned to Native American tribes under the 1990 Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act (NAGPRA), remained in the possession of colleges, museums and other State institutions across the country. The number excluded an unknown amount of items held by private institutions not covered by the NAGPRA. Furthermore, many tribes objected to the NAGPRA requirement to explain the cultural significance, including its usage in tribal ceremonies, of items sought for repatriation, as this information had historically been kept secret from non-tribal members. In ³³² Heidi Pérez-Moreno, “Texas’ 1836 Project Aims to Promote “Patriotic Education,” But Critics Worry It Will Gloss over State’s History of Racism,” Texas Tribune (9 June 2021); Sneha Dey, “1836 Project’s Pamphlet to Promote a ‘Patriotic’ Version of Texas History,” Kera News (26 September 2022).

January 2023, a research by ProPublica found that almost half of the artifacts were held by ten institutions, including the Interior Department.³³³

On 24 January 2022, Republican Governor of Virginia Glenn Youngkin – who won the governorship in 2021 partly by promising to root out “critical race theory” and other “inherently divisive” subjects from public education – created a tipline shortly after taking office. He announced that parents should report teachers who discussed “divisive” concepts in the classroom by emailing a @governor.virginia.gov email address. Youngkin denied media outlets’ formal requests for copies of the tipline submissions under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) on the grounds that they constituted the governor’s “working papers and correspondence” exempted from the FOIA.

On 13 April 2022, The Washington Post, Associated Press, NPR and other media outlets sued Youngkin in the Richmond Circuit Court, seeking copies of submissions arguing that exemptions for working papers and correspondence did not apply to the tipline submissions – in part because the submissions were reportedly shared with individuals outside of the governor’s office, including the American Enterprise Institute, a right-leaning think tank. On 8 August 2022, nonprofit ethics watchdog group American Oversight and law firm Ballard Spahr filed a second suit in Arlington County Circuit Court, seeking documents that showed how Youngkin and his staff used the tipline, including how they responded to tips submitted.³³⁴

In April 2022, PEN America started collating an Index of School Book Bans to document decisions to ban books in school libraries and classrooms in the United States from 1 July 2021 to 31 March 2022. Among the 1,145 banned books in the Index, 16% were history books (123 titles) or biographies covering historical topics or figures (61 titles). Of the total, 111 featured individuals or narratives centered on protagonists of color (10%). This included 42 children’s picture books, including biographies of Rosa Parks, Martin Luther King Jr., Duke Ellington, Sonia Sotomayor, Nelson Mandela, and Malala Yousafzai.

Between July and December 2022, book bans increased to 1,477. Among the banned books were Ibram X. Kendi’s Stamped from the Beginning: The Definitive History of Racist Ideas in America; The Nib’s Be Gay, Do Comics: Queer History, Memoir, and Satire; Deborah Willis’s Reflections in Black:

³³³ Philip Marcelo, “Wounded Knee Artifacts Highlight Slow Pace of Repatriations,” AP News (29 July 2022); Logan Jaffe, Mary Hudetz & Ash Ngu, “America’s Biggest Museums Fail to Return Native American Human Remains,” Pro Publica (11 January 2023); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 661, 663.

³³⁴ Laura Vozzella, “Media Outlets File Suit over Va. Gov. Youngkin’s Teacher Tip Line,” Washington Post (13 April 2022); Hannah Natanson, “Va. Gov. Youngkin Faces Second Suit over Teacher Tip Line,” Washington Post (8 August 2022).

A History of Black Photographers, 1840 to the Present; and Don Nardo's Life in a Nazi Concentration Camp.³³⁵

In May 2022, a Tulsa, Oklahoma, county judge denied in part a “motion to dismiss” made by the city of Tulsa and other defendants as part of a lawsuit brought on behalf of survivors and descendants of the 1921 Tulsa race massacre for damages and continuing harm stemming from it. The denial constituted the first time a case for reparations for the massacre had made it past the “motion to dismiss” stage and would enable the last three known survivors of the massacre, all over hundred years old, to have the merits of their case heard in court [See also NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022].³³⁶

On 28 July 2022, climate change-caused rising floodwaters of the Troublesome Creek breached the Hindman Settlement School's archive in Knott County, Kentucky destroying many of its archival records.³³⁷

Research of PEN America found that up and until August 2022, the amount of proposed educational gag orders – State level bills introduced with the intent to restrict teaching and discussion of race, racism, gender and United States (US) history in K-12 schools (schools from Kindergarten to twelfth grade), higher education, and State agencies and institutions – had increased 250 percent compared to 2021, with 36 different States having introduced 137 gag order bills. Most of the bills continued to target teaching about race, however an increasing number also targeted the teaching of LGBTQ+ history. The bills, 136 of which were introduced solely by Republican legislators, were more specifically targeted at higher education (37%), put forward more severe punishment ranging from loss of State funding for institutions to criminal charges for teachers, and were more frequently accompanied by lawsuits of conservative groups and education officials asking courts to interpret the gag orders as broadly as possible. PEN America had previously concluded that the bills had chilling effects on the teaching of the history of slavery, the emancipation of women, and the treatment of Native Americans, leading to the effective banning of a wide swath of historical and other educational materials and resulting in the effective self-censoring of educators and educational institutions on these topics, leading to the erosion of academic freedom [See also NCH Annual Report 2022].

On 2 August 2022, the Critical Race Theory Forward Tracking Project, set up by the Law School of the University of California at Los Angeles, found that 495 attempts, varying from State-level to school-board level efforts, had been made to limit the teaching of critical race theory (CRT) since September 2020 (the month that a Pennsylvania local school district's anti-CRT policy began), spread over all States except Delaware. Especially in Virginia, Florida, Missouri, and in Congress, anti-CRT proposals had been most frequent. Of the 495 attempts, 94% targeted schools and colleges, of which around one hundred were official attempts to limit or eliminate CRT from college classrooms.

³³⁵ PEN America, Banned in the USA: Rising School Book Bans Threaten Free Expression and Students' First Amendment Rights (April 2022); PEN America's Index of School Book Bans \(July 1, 2021–June 30, 2022\); Pen America Index of School Book Bans – Fall 2022.

³³⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 663.

³³⁷ Tina Irvine, “Climate Change Just Erased the Past in Kentucky: Where Will It Happen Next?” History News Network (7 August 2022).

On 1 May 2023, PEN America reported that the number of gag order bills introduced since 2021 had risen to 306 in 45 States, of which 22 had become law in 16 States. Two additional States had enacted educational gag orders via executive orders or policies. It noted a trend shift from classroom censorship to curricular control, from bills that banned lists of so-called "divisive concepts" in classroom instruction toward bills that restricted curricular content, and from focusing on academic speech to focusing on academic structure, proposing to close academic departments and prohibit certain majors and minors and academic programs rather than targeting individual professors' teaching [See also NCH Annual Reports 2021–2022].³³⁸

On 1 August 2022, Airbnb promised to remove from its website rental apartments that once housed enslaved people, after outrage had erupted over the listing of the Panther Burn Cottage at the Belmont Plantation in Greenville, Mississippi, that had housed enslaved people in the 1830s.³³⁹

On 8 August 2022, agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) executed a search warrant at the Florida resort related to Trump's handling of presidential records in violation of the Presidential Records Act [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. They were looking into potential violations of the Espionage Act, which made it illegal to keep or transmit potentially dangerous national security information. They removed twenty boxes of material, including eleven sets of classified files from the property. Some of the documents reportedly required special clearance beyond top secret clearance, while another document described a foreign government's military defense, including its nuclear capabilities.

On 26 August 2022, the FBI's search-warrant affidavit revealed that a preliminary review of the fifteen boxes of documents that had been retrieved by the National Archives and Records Administration from Trump's Florida resort in mid-January 2022, fourteen contained documents with ³³⁸ Sylvia Goodman, "Researchers Did a Deep Dive Into Efforts to Restrict Critical Race Theory: Here's What They Found," Chronicle of Higher Education (3 August 2022); Jeremy Young & Jonathan Friedman, "America's Censored Classrooms," PEN America (17 August 2022); "Florida Educators and Students File Lawsuit Challenging 'Stop W.O.K.E.' Law," ACLU (18 August 2022); PEN America, PEN America Index of Educational Gag Orders (ongoing database); "CRT Forward Tracking Project," UCLA (ongoing database); Eddie Cole, "Limiting Academics' Freedom to Tell the Truth about Racism Is Not New," Washington Post (3 October 2022); Jeffrey Sachs, Jeremy Young, Jonathan Friedman, "From Classroom Censorship to Curricular Control," PEN America (1 May 2023).

³³⁹ Marlene Lenthag, "Airbnb Removes Mississippi 'Slave Cabin' From Listings After Viral TikTok Video," NBC News (2 August 2022).

classification markings, including 67 marked as confidential, 92 marked as secret, and 25 marked as top secret. On 30 August, the Department of Justice said it had evidence that classified documents had deliberately been concealed from federal investigators, when they had searched and received 38 classified documents from the resort in June, in an attempt to “obstruct the government’s investigation.”

On 9 June 2023, the District Court of Florida released a 37-count indictment, including allegations that Trump had twice illegally disclosed national security information, attempted to hide classified documents after they had been subpoenaed by the Department of Justice, and hoarded materials of the highest sensitivity after he left the White House. According to the indictment, the documents included details of United States (US) nuclear weapons programs, the potential vulnerabilities of the US and its allies, and US plans for retaliatory military attacks. Of the 37 counts, 31 were for “willful retention of national defense information,” meaning that prosecutors believed Trump knew that what he was doing was unlawful, and that they had recordings of him apparently speaking about that and the testimony of witnesses.³⁴⁰

On 20 August 2022, the American Historical Association (AHA) restricted public access to its Twitter account because “[a] conversation about history has been invaded by trolls uninterested in civil discourse in last 12 hrs. ... Therefore conversation is temporarily limited to our community. AHA condemns all harassment of members of our community & others who replied in good faith.” The move followed a controversy over a column by AHA President James Sweet on 17 August 2022, in which he had complained about presentist tendencies in the historical profession, especially when the past was read through the prism of contemporary social justice. After a wave of criticism, Sweet on 19 August 2022 had published an apology, with some finding this unnecessary, others insufficient. The “trolls” included white nationalist and neo-Nazi Richard Spencer, who on 20 August 2022 had tweeted: “I just read this man’s offending column; it was reasonable in the extreme. Apparently, being a Rankean historian causes ‘harm’ and ‘pain.’ It’s ridiculous.” On 21 August 2022, AHA executive director James ³⁴⁰ Martin Pengelly, “Trump Tore Up Records Turned Over to House Capitol Attack Committee,” Guardian (1 February 2022); Jacqueline Alemany, Josh Dawsey, Tom Hamburger & Ashley Parker, “National Archives Had to Retrieve Trump White House Records from Mar-a-Lago,” Washington Post (7 February 2022); “US National Archives Requests Legal Probe of Trump over Handling of Documents,” BBC News (10 February 2022); Hugh Lowell, “US House to Investigate whether Trump Broke Law in Handling of Documents,” Guardian (10 December 2022); Martin Belam, “FBI Seizes Documents at Donald Trump’s Mar-a-Lago Home – Live Reaction,” Guardian (9 August 2022); “Donald Trump Says FBI Agents Raided His Mar-a-Lago Florida Home,” BBC News (9 August 2022); “Trump Search Warrant: FBI Took Top Secret Files from Mar-a-Lago,” BBC News (13 August 2022); Gareth Evans, “What We Do and Don’t Know about the FBI Search of Trump’s Home,” BBC News (15 August 2022); “Classified Records: 700 Pages Retrieved at Trump Home in January,” Al Jazeera (23 Augusts 2022); Maya Yang, Martin Pengelly & Chris Stein, “Trump Search Affidavit Reveals Potential for ‘Evidence of Obstruction’ at Mar-a-Lago – As It Happened,” Guardian (26 August 2022); “FBI Says Trump Does Likely Moved in Effort to Obstruct Probe,” Al Jazeera (31 August 2022); “Seized Trump Documents Showed Foreign Nation’s Nuclear Capability,” Al Jazeera (7 September 2022); Hugo Lowell & Léonie Chao-Fong, “Indictment Charging Trump with Mishandling Classified Documents Unsealed,” Guardian (9 June 2023); Anthony Zurcher, “How Trump, Biden and Clinton Secret Files Cases Compare,” BBC News (12 June 2023).

Grossman said: "... Our priority is to make sure that our followers are not harassed by trolls, while encouraging comments from the historical community and the public ..."³⁴¹

On [11 September] 2022, the 49th anniversary of the United States-backed military overthrow of Chilean democratically-elected President Salvador Allende (1908–1973), the National Security Archive called on President Joe Biden to release former President Richard Nixon's President's Daily Briefs of 8 September 1973, believed to contain initial reporting on specific coup preparations by the Chilean military, and of 11 September 1973, containing the Central Intelligence Agency's report on the actual invasion.³⁴²

In the Fall of 2022, a number of school boards in Missouri banned Maus – a 1972 Pulitzer prize-winning graphic novel by Art Spiegelman narrating how his parents survived the Holocaust – in line with a Summer 2022 State law that made the provision of "explicit sexual material" to a student a Class A misdemeanor. In June 2023, the board in Nixa, Springfield, Missouri, also began debating the novel [See also NCH Annual Report 2022].³⁴³

On 4 October 2022, District Judge James Boasberg ruled against the National Security Archive in support of a claim from the Central Intelligence Agency that the so-called Perroots memo be classified even though it had already been published in the State Department's Foreign Relations of the United States (FRUS) series in a 2021 volume concerning United States (US)–Soviet Union relations from January 1983 through March 1985. The retrospective memo from Lieutenant General Leonard Perroots, who served as assistant chief of staff for intelligence of the US Air Forces Europe during a 1983 NATO nuclear weapons command exercise, and as director of the Defense Intelligence Agency (1985–1989), recorded his disquiet over the nuclear weapons command exercise and the Soviet reactions to it. The entire FRUS volume was taken offline by the State Department's Office of the Historian.³⁴⁴

On 11 November 2022, Hamline University in Saint Paul, Minnesota, refused to renew the contract of adjunct professor and art historian Erika López Prater, because on 6 October 2022 she showed an online class in global art history images of a fourteenth-century painting depicting the Archangel Gabriel ³⁴¹ Coleen Flaherty, "Presentism, Race and Trolls," Inside HigherEd (22 August 2022); James Sweet, "Is History History? Identity Politics and Teleologies of the Present," Perspectives on History (17 August 2022), preceded by an "Author's Note" (19 August 2022).

³⁴² Peter Kornbluh, "The Coup in Chile: What Did Nixon Know and When Did He Know It?," National Security Archive (12 September 2022).

³⁴³ Greg Sargent, "As More Schools Target 'Maus,' Art Spiegelman's Fears Are Deepening," Washington Post (14 June 2023).

³⁴⁴ US District Court for the District of Columbia, National Security Archive versus Central Intelligence Agency (4 October 2022); Editorial Board, "An Official U.S. History Revealed a Cold War Nuclear Scare: Now Back to the Vault," Washington Post (16 October 2022).

delivering to the Prophet Muhammad his first Quranic revelation. She had provided students with a content warning about two minutes prior to displaying the art, allowing students to turn off their video feeds in advance if they chose. A senior in the class, who was also president of the Muslim Student Association at Hamline, later complained that the pictorial depictions of Muhammad had offended her.

On 7 November 2022, Hamline University described the lecture as “undeniably inconsiderate, disrespectful and Islamophobic” and said that “respect for the observant Muslim students in that classroom should have superseded academic freedom.” Mark Berkson, chair of Hamline’s religion department, defended López Prater in a letter to the student paper The Oracle, which was removed from the website two days later. PEN America and several academics called the affair “one of the most egregious violations of academic freedom in recent memory.” López Prater sued Hamline’s Board of Trustees for defamation before the District Court of Minnesota. The university admitted that its use of the term “Islamophobic” was flawed.³⁴⁵

On 22 November 2022, Daily Dot – an outlet analyzing internet culture – reported that while the Wikileaks website had allegedly leaked ten million documents in the last decade, less than 3,000 remained accessible in the website archive. Wikileaks did not give an explanation. None of the tools to submit documents was working.³⁴⁶

In early January 2023, a new app, called Historical Figures, developed by Amazon software engineer Sidhant Chadda, became available in Apple’s app store. It allowed users to chat with any of 20,000 notable people from history, reanimated by artificial intelligence GPT-3 technology in an attempt to simulate their perspective. The historical people included dictators such as Adolf Hitler and other Nazi leaders, Pol Pot and other dictators from the past. It appeared that these historical figures sometimes invented answers or justified, downplayed or exonerated themselves for the atrocities committed under their responsibility. Some critics feared that the app would be used to spread hate online. Others denounced the app’s confusing categorization as, for example, Simon Wiesenthal was put in the same lineup as the people he helped to track down and prosecute. Still others criticized the fact that it cost money to ask a question, with the app charging extra to get access to high-profile historical figures such as dictators.³⁴⁷

³⁴⁵ “PEN America Cites ‘Egregious Violation’ of Academic Freedom by Hamline University” (Press release; Washington: PEN America, 23 December 2022); Amna Khalid, “Most of All, Hamline’s Decision Offends Me as a Muslim,” History News Network (29 December 2022); Scott Jaschik, “Academic Freedom vs. Rights of Muslim Students,” Inside HigherEd (3 January 2023); Vimal Patel, “A Lecturer Showed a Painting of the Prophet Muhammad; She Lost Her Job,” New York Times (8 January 2023); “US Professor Sues University over Prophet Muhammad Image Row,” Al Jazeera (18 January 2023); Ryan Quinn, “Report: Adjunct Who Showed Images of Prophet Was ‘Vilified’,” Inside HigherEd (22 May 2023).

³⁴⁶ Mikael Thalen, “WikiLeaks Website Is Struggling to Stay Online—as Millions of Documents Disappear,” Daily Dot (22 November 2022).

On 3 March 2023, entrepreneur Bert Ellis, a member of the Board of Visitors (supervisory board) of the University of Virginia (UVA), apologized after his text messages to some other board members were disclosed through a freedom of information request. In the messages, sent over the summer of 2022, he had disparaged administrators and certain student groups. In one message, Ellis pointed out the webpage of UVA Vice Provost for Academic Outreach and architectural historian Louis Nelson, writing: “Check out this numnut who works for [UVA Provost Ian] Baucom and has nothing to do but highlight slavery at UVA.” Together with Maurie McInnis, Nelson had edited the collection Educated in Tyranny: Slavery at Thomas Jefferson’s University (University of Virginia Press, 2019).³⁴⁸

On 12 April 2023, Scholastic editors offered author Maggie Tokuda-Hall to license her book, “Love in the Library” (Candlewick Press, 2022), aimed at six- to nine-year-olds, for use in the classroom on the condition that she remove a description of past and present instances of racism in the United States in the author’s note on the cover. The book narrated how Tokuda-Hall’s grandparents met and fell in love at an incarceration camp in Idaho that held Japanese Americans during World War II. After widespread protest among librarians and educators and from inside the company, Scholastic editors, one of the largest distributors of books and resources in American schools, apologized to the author and the illustrator, Yas Imamura, and offered to publish the book with the original author’s note, but Tokuda-Hall declined the offer.³⁴⁹

On 13 April 2023, Bakersfield College, California, dismissed Matthew Garrett, a historian and co-founder of the conservative campus free speech group Renegade Institute for Liberty, for what it said were “immoral” and “unprofessional” conduct, “dishonesty,” and “unsatisfactory performance.” Allegations against Garrett included holding an in-person event in violation of COVID-19 protocols; cursing at a colleague; sending a potentially threatening email to a trustee; but also penning an op-ed; distributing a flier; posting on social media; and other “hostile comments” since 2019. PEN America criticized the dismissal for mixing job-related conduct that may merit investigation with spurious

³⁴⁷ David Ingram, “A Chatbot that Lets You Talk with Jesus and Hitler Is the Latest Controversy in the AI Gold Rush,” NBC News (20 January 2023).

³⁴⁸ Nick Anderson, “U-Va. Board Member Apologizes for Disparaging Text Messages,” Washington Post (3 March 2023).

³⁴⁹ PEN America, “Suppressing Words and History Harms the Rising Generation” (Press release; 14 April 2023); Patricia Alter & Elizabeth Harris, “Asked to Delete References to Racism from Her Book, an Author Refused,” New York Times (6 May 2023; updated 11 May 2023).

speech-related charges, which complicated an assessment of whether the dismissal was fair. Garrett appealed the decision.³⁵⁰

On 13 April 2023, the Tennessee General Assembly passed Senate Bill 817, which encouraged students and employees to report professors teaching “divisive concepts” in public colleges and universities. The bill was criticized for limiting the teaching of racism, gender and sexuality issues in United States history and for its chilling effect on academic freedom [See also NCH Annual Report 2022].³⁵¹

In May 2023, the Bob Graham Education Center in Miami Lakes moved the poem, The Hill We Climb, by Amanda Gorman (1998–), from the elementary library section to the middle school section (from 11 years), after on 29 March 2023 a parent had asked the school to remove the poem entirely, claiming it contained indirect “hate messages.” Gorman, who had recited the poem at President Joe Biden’s inauguration in January 2021, said she had written this poem about the history of slavery and racial hatred “so that all young people could see themselves in a historical moment.” The parent had also asked the removal of ABCs of Black History, a book for six-to-eight-olds, alleging that it indoctrinated the critical race theory: it was moved as well.³⁵²

On 1 May 2023, the 10th District Court in Galveston, Texas, granted a request by retired oilman, philanthropist and executive director of the Texas State Historical Association (TSHA), J. P. Bryan, against TSHA President Nancy Baker Jones, in order to prevent a TSHA board meeting at which he expected to be dismissed. Bryan argued that the makeup of the board – allegedly composed of 12 academics and 8 non-academics – was not balanced, thereby violating TSHA bylaws. He feared that the academics wanted to “demean the Anglo efforts in settling the western part of the United States for the purpose of spreading freedoms for all.” TSHA member and former State land commissioner Jerry Patterson made a plea to withhold $ 480,000 from the budget of the TSHA if it did not restore the balance, thereby putting its non-profit status at risk. Several TSHA members who attended the board meeting did not want to share their names or university affiliation with the press for fear of retaliation. In recent years, controversies had arisen over the Alamo narrative and Texas colonists’ fight for ³⁵⁰ “Notice of Decision to Terminate,” Fire (14 April 2023); Sara Weissman, “A Free Speech Violation or Overdue Discipline?” Inside HigherEd (28 April 2023); PEN America, “Firing of Tenured Professor at Bakersfield College ‘Blurred Lines’ Between Protected Speech and Conduct that May Merit Investigation, Says PEN America” (Press release; 2 May 2023); District Court for the Eastern District of California, Garrett & Miller versus Kern Community College District, Complaint: Demand for Jury Trial (2021).

³⁵¹ Ryan Quinn, “Tennessee Again Targets ‘Divisive Concepts’,” Inside Higher Education (18 April 2023).

³⁵² “Amanda Gorman’s Inauguration Poem Moved by School after Parent’s Complaint,” BBC News (24 May 2023).

independence from Mexico, which some argued was primarily to preserve slavery [See also NCH Annual Report 2021].³⁵³

On 5 May 2023, the United Nations International Independent Expert Mechanism to Advance Racial Justice and Equality in Law Enforcement called on the government to boost efforts to promote accountability for past and future violations by police. It noted that slavery had left a deep and long-lasting entrenched legacy on the United States, which could be perceived through generational trauma.³⁵⁴

In early June 2023, the Davis School District north of Salt Lake City, Utah, removed the King James Bible from elementary and middle schools following a December 2022 complaint from a parent that it contained “vulgarity and violence” within the meaning of a 2022 law banning “pornographic or indecent” books from schools. The bible had also been removed from libraries in a Texas school district in 2022. In May 2023, students in Kansas requested to have the bible removed from their school library.³⁵⁵

On 28 July 2023, Judge Raag Singhal of the District Court Southern District of Florida threw out a $ 475m (£ 369m) defamation lawsuit brought by Donald Trump against news channel Cable News Network (CNN). CNN had described Trump’s unsubstantiated claim that the 2020 presidential election had been stolen from him as a “Big Lie” and Trump had argued that the phrase referred to a Nazi-era propaganda campaign used to justify the persecution of Jews and created a “false and incendiary association” between him and Hitler. The judge said that CNN’s comments constituted statements of opinion and not false statements of fact, and that therefore it was not defamation.³⁵⁶

Florida

On 15 December 2021, Ron DeSantis, governor of Florida, announced his “Stop the Wrongs to Our Kids and Employees Act” (Stop W.O.K.E Act, later redubbed Individual Freedom Act, IFA) which would give parents the power to sue local school districts that teach lessons, including history lessons, rooted in critical race theory (already banned in Florida public schools since June 2021). Critics feared that this initiative would create a witch-hunt atmosphere complete with financial incentives for nuisance

³⁵³ “Wealthy Texas Activist Sues President of State’s Historical Association,” Galveston Daily News (3 May 2023); Josephine Lee, “Those Who Don’t Know the Past ...,” Texas Observer (15 May 2023).

³⁵⁴ “USA: Slavery Has Left a Deep and Long-Lasting Legacy on the Country, UN Experts Say,” UN News (5 May 2023).

³⁵⁵ Max Matza, “Utah Primary Schools Ban Bible for ‘Vulgarity and Violence’,” BBC News (3 June 2023).

³⁵⁶ District Court Southern District of Florida, Donald Trump versus CNN (28 July 2023); Alys Davies, “Judge Dismisses Donald Trump’s ‘Big Lie’ Lawsuit against CNN,” BBC News (30 July 2023).

lawsuits. The act went into effect on 1 July 2022. A lawsuit against the act argued that it violated constitutional rights and would have a dangerous chilling effect on academic freedom. Robert Cassanello, an associate professor and president of the United Faculty of Florida at the University of Central Florida, requested a judge to block the law. Cassanello, who taught classes in Reconstruction (1865–1877), Jim Crow America (1865–1965) and civil rights movements, and argued that the law “restrict[ed] his ability to accurately and fully teach these subjects” [See NCH Annual Report 2022]. On 17 November 2022, federal judge Mark Walker issued an injunction against the act, rejecting the argument that because university professors are public employees, the State has an unfettered authority to limit what they may say in class. He also criticized the lack of precision in the definition of actions that were forbidden in the act. The State would appeal the decision.

On 29 December 2022, the University of North Florida was asked to report its “expenditure of State resources” on programs and courses related to critical race theory and to diversity, equity, and inclusion, at the behest of DeSantis.³⁵⁷

On 8 March 2022, the Republican-dominated senate in Florida passed the Parental Rights in Education bill, also known as the “Don’t Say Gay” bill, which critics said would “erase” LGBTQ+ history [See also NCH Annual Report 2021].³⁵⁸

On 12 January 2023, the Florida Department of Education rejected a draft Advanced Placement (AP) interdisciplinary course on African American Studies that would be launched as a pilot in sixty high schools nationwide in 2024–2025, on the grounds that it violated Florida State law (because it discussed critical race theory) and would serve as “a vehicle for a political agenda” and as “woke indoctrination.” The rejection included readings from African American historians, including Robin D. G. Kelley and Nell Irvin Painter, and sections including “the Movement for Black Lives,” “Black Struggle in the 21st Century,” and “the Reparations Movement.” AP courses gave students the chance to take college-level courses before graduation. The revised curriculum was published by the US College Board on 1 February 2023, the first day of Black History Month. On the same day, the Organization of American ³⁵⁷ Ed Kilgore, “DeSantis Enlists Litigious Parents for Anti-Woke Crusade,” Intelligencer (15 December 2021); Susan Svrluga & Lori Rozsa, “In Florida, DeSantis’s Plans for Colleges Rattle Some Academics,” Washington Post (1 July 2022); United States District Court Northern District of Florida (Tallahassee Division), Pernell and Others versus Florida Board of Governors of the State University System (1) Defendant’s Response in Opposition to Plaintiffs’ Motion for a Preliminary Injunction; (2) Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Motions for Preliminary Injunction (2022); Nathan Greenfield, “Judge Strikes Down Florida’s ‘Anti-Woke’ Law for Universities,” University World News (25 November 2022); Emma Pettit, “A Florida University Is Assembling List of ‘CRT’ Courses on DeSantis Request,” Chronicle of Higher Education (3 January 2023).

³⁵⁸ Maya Yang, “Florida: Republican Panel Advances Bill to Ban LGBTQ+ Discussion in Schools,” Guardian (24 January 2022); “‘Don’t Say Gay’ Bill: Florida Senate Passes Law Marginalizing LGBTQ+ People,” Guardian (8 March 2022).

Historians criticized the Florida Department of Education's decision [See also NCH Annual Report 2015].³⁵⁹

On 31 January 2023, in his budget speech, Florida Governor Ron DeSantis announced his plan to stop State universities and colleges from offering diversity, equity and inclusion (DEI) programs as well as any teaching related to critical race theory (CRT) and “to prohibit them from using any funding, regardless of source, to support DEI, CRT and other discriminatory initiatives.” Earlier, Florida College System presidents representing 28 State colleges had signed a statement endorsing this policy. DeSantis also announced that Florida would require all students in its colleges and universities to take a “Western Civilization” course.³⁶⁰

In March 2023, textbook publisher Studies Weekly faced criticism after it revised an elementary school social studies textbook for the first grade in Florida so that the story of Rosa Parks (1913–2005), a civil rights activist who refused bus segregation in 1955, no longer included references to segregation or race. The New York Times compared three versions of the Rosa Parks story in the textbook: a lesson used in March 2023, an initial version created for the State textbook review, and a second updated version. In the first, the Parks story was clearly explained; in the second, race was mentioned indirectly; in the third, race was not mentioned at all. Studies Weekly made similar changes to a fourth-grade lesson about segregation laws that arose after the Civil War (1860–1865).³⁶¹

On 3 March 2023, the American Historical Association (AHA) published a statement calling the HB 999 Bill on Postsecondary Educational Institutions filed by the Florida House of Representatives “a hostile takeover of a State's system of higher education” and a “frontal attack on principles of academic freedom and shared governance.” In highlighting the consequences for history education, the AHA emphasized that “HB 999 allow[ed] political appointees unprecedented oversight of day-to-day

³⁵⁹ Abené Clayton, “Ron DeSantis Bans African American Studies Class from Florida High Schools,” Guardian (20 January 2023); Bethany Bell, “Florida's Rejection of an AP Course Is the Latest Salvo in a Very Old War,” Washington Post (26 January 2023); Roderick Ferguson, “Fear of a Black Studies Planet,” History News Network (30 January 2023); African American Studies Faculty in Higher Ed, “Open Letter In Defense of AP African American Studies” (31 January 2023); Organization of American Historians, “OAH Statement on AP African American Studies,” (1 February 2023); Olivia Waxman, “The Real Reason Florida Wants to Ban AP African-American Studies, According to an Architect of the Course,” Time (1 February 2023); “The Black Scholars Ron DeSantis Doesn't Want Students to Read,” Boston Review (1 February 2023); “US Black History Syllabus Changed after Florida 'Woke' Claims,” BBC News (2 February 2023).

³⁶⁰ Sara Weissman, “A Subtle Subterfuge, an Outrage or Both?” Inside HigherEd (3 February 2023); Erica Hellerstein, “Why Florida's New University Restrictions Are 'Straight Out of the Global Authoritarian Playbook',” Coda Story (7 February 2023); Nathan Greenfield, “DeSantis Ignites Ideological War against Universities,” University World News (7 February 2023); Marybeth Gasman, “Let's Take Back the HE Narrative from People like DeSantis,” University World News (11 February 2023).

³⁶¹ Sarah Mervosh, “Florida Scoured Math Textbooks for 'Prohibited Topics' – Next Up: Social Studies,” New York Times (16 March 2023; updated 20 March 2023).

educational decisions” and pointed to the unreasonableness of “unelected partisan actors decid[ing] that any ‘general education core courses’ somehow ‘suppress or distort significant historical events.’” As of 22 March, eighty organizations had signed onto the statement.³⁶²

On [25] March 2023, Principal Hope Carrasaquilla of Tallahassee Classical School, Florida, was forced to resign after a parent complained that showing Michelangelo’s seventeenth-century nude marble statue of the biblical David during a sixth-grade Renaissance art class was an exposure to pornography. The lesson also included references to Michelangelo’s “Creation of Adam” painting and Botticelli’s “Birth of Venus.” The forced resignation came after on 23 March Governor Ron DeSantis had moved to expand a law that banned public schools from teaching sexual education and gender identity.

On 18 May 2023, a similar incident occurred in the United Kingdom. A poster for an Italian restaurant with Michelangelo’s David statue was barred from Glasgow subway, with the firm managing the advertising space requesting for the poster to be edited to hide the statue’s nudity.³⁶³

On 26 April 2023, in an unprecedented decision, the Board of Trustees at New College in Sarasota (the only liberal arts college in Florida’s public education system) denied tenure to five professors who had already been approved by committees made up of their colleagues, chairs and faculties. Among them was Nassima Neggaz who taught the history of religion (with a focus on Islam). The 6–4 vote against each professor was carried by the six new Board members whom Governor Ron DeSantis had appointed after dismissing six trustees in January 2023. No reason was given for the decision, which according to critics violated the collective bargaining agreement.³⁶⁴

In May 2023, Marvin Dunn, a black professor emeritus of history at Florida International University, and the non-profit Miami Center for Racial Justice launched a banned book project to ensure students learn about African American history at a time when Florida’s 2022 Stop WOKE Act (see above) was restricting the teaching of systemic racism in schools. He hoped to directly connect with parent–teacher organizations to provide banned titles and books that teach topics restricted under the law at no cost.³⁶⁵

³⁶² American Historical Association, “AHA Statement Opposing Florida House Bill 999” (3 March 2023).

³⁶³ Antoinette Radford, “Principal Fired after Florida Students Shown Michelangelo Statue,” BBC News (25 March 2023); Davide Ghiglione, “Italian Art Experts Astonished by David Statue Uproar in Florida,” BBC News (27 March 2023); Carol Duncan, “Glasgow Subway Poster Blocked over Michelangelo Statue Nudity,” BBC News (18 May 2023).

³⁶⁴ “Five New College Professors Denied Tenure,” ABC News (26 April 2023); Nathan Greenfield, “Professors Are Victims as DeSantis’ Culture War Hots Up,” University World News (6 May 2023).

³⁶⁵ Naomi Feinstein, “‘Getting the Truth to Our Students’: Black Historian Marvin Dunn to Distribute Banned Books,” Miami New Times (4 May 2023).

On 16 May 2023, the American Historical Association (AHA) condemned a recent ruling by the Florida Department of Education (FLDOE) that “would eliminate almost entirely the history of LGBTQ+ people from the Florida social studies curriculum.” The AHA asked “that the FLDOE reconsider its vague and destructive policy of censorship, and instead encourage the teaching of accurate and inclusive histories of the United States and the world.”³⁶⁶

On 19 July 2023, Florida’s Board of Education approved the 2023 Social Studies curriculum. In its African-American studies section, taught to students in sixth through eighth grades, it would include lessons on how “slaves developed skills” that could be used for “personal benefit.” On 21 July 2023, in a forceful condemnation of the curriculum, Vice President Kamala Harris tweeted about “extremists in Florida who want to erase our full history and censor our truths.” Governor Ron DeSantis dismissed the criticism.³⁶⁷

See also France, Germany, Greece, Iran, Japan, Mexico, Russia, Serbia, Ukraine, United Kingdom.

URUGUAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2013, 2015–2018, 2021.

UZBEKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2014, 2016, 2020.

³⁶⁶ American Historical Association, “AHA Statement Opposing Exclusion of LGBTQ+ History in Florida” (May 2023).

³⁶⁷ Kerry Breen, “Florida’s New Black History Curriculum Says ‘Slaves Developed Skills’ that Could Be Used for ‘Personal Benefit’,” CBS News (21 July 2023).

VATICAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000, 2004, 2009, 2011, 2015, 2019–2020, 2022.

On 25 July 2022, Pope Francis apologized for the “evils committed by so many Christians” in the residential school system in Canada [See NCH Annual Report 2021–2022]. He was criticized for failing to denounce the “Doctrine of Discovery” – a colonial-era justification to seize lands inhabited by non-Christian, indigenous nations – shifting the blame from the institutional effort of forcibly removing Indigenous children to individuals, and for not acknowledging the Church’s instigating role in committing “cultural genocide.” The criticism joined calls for the repatriation of land, artifacts, records and human remains that were taken from Indigenous nations by the Church.³⁶⁸

See also China (Hongkong).

VENEZUELA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2003–2004, 2006, 2009–2010, 2012, 2014, 2017–2021.

In June 2022, six activists were arbitrarily detained in Caracas at a vigil in memory of Neomar Lander, a teenager killed during a protest in 2017.³⁶⁹

VIETNAM

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2006, 2009–2013, 2016–2017, 2019–2020, 2022.

A decree issued on 31 August 2022 restricted international nongovernmental organizations from doing anything against “national traditions, identity or great national unity” of Vietnam. No definitions of these terms were provided in the decree, but groups deemed to violate these provisions would be shut down.³⁷⁰

³⁶⁸ Anya Zoledziowski, “The Pope’s Apology to Canadian Residential School Survivors ‘Left a Deep Hole.’” VICE (27 July 2022).

³⁶⁹ Amnesty International, Report 2022/2023: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2023), 397.

³⁷⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2023: Events of 2022 (Washington: HRW, 2023), 693.

In early May 2023, the government strongly protested against a coin issued by Australia on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of its withdrawal from the Vietnam War (1954–1975), that included an image of the controversial yellow flag of South Vietnam. The flag was flown by so-called boat people who fled the country (1975–early 1990s) after the Vietnam War (1954–1975) and unification of the country. In July 2018, a court had sentenced three women to four years in prison on charges of spreading anti-State propaganda after they held up yellow flags in public. In January 2022, national television station aired a football match between Vietnam and Australia with a ten-minute delay as some Australian fans had brought yellow-striped flags to the stadium.³⁷¹

On [3] July 2023, the Department of Cinema banned the film Barbie, due for release on 21 July 2023, over a scene featuring a 1947 Chinese map depicting contested territorial claims in the South China Sea (the so-called nine-dash line map), which was called offensive and a violation of national laws. Since 2019, the films Abominable, Pine Gap and Uncharted had been pulled for the same reason. On [7] July 2023, the organizers of a concert of South Korean pop group Blackpink in Vietnam apologized for their website displaying the same map. In 2016, the Permanent Court of Arbitration in The Hague had ruled against Chinese claims in the South China Sea, but Beijing had not recognized the judgment.³⁷²

See also Greece.

³⁷¹ Joel Guinto & Bui Thu, "Vietnam Objects to Australian Coin with War-Era Yellow Flag," BBC News (5 May 2023).

³⁷² Nicholas Yong, "Barbie Movie Gets Vietnam Ban over South China Sea Map," BBC News (3 July 2023); Joel Guinto, "South China Sea: Blackpink Vietnam Concert in Trouble over China Map," BBC News (7 July 2023).

WESTERN SAHARA

See Morocco / Western Sahara

YEMEN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2003, 2010, 2013–2016, 2018–2022.

On 25 January 2023, UNESCO added seven archaeological sites in Marib, containing landmarks of the ancient Kingdom of Saba (1200 BCE–275 CE), to the list of World Heritage Sites in danger. Since the Civil War had begun in September 2014, many cultural heritage sites in Yemen had been damaged, including the Old City of Sana’a, the twelfth-century Taiz Citadel (also known as Al-Qahira Castle), and the Dhamar Museum which used to host a collection of 12,500 artifacts that was completely destroyed in May 2015. The World Heritage Sites in danger list further included the Old Walled City of Shibam, the Old City of Sana’a and the Historic Town of Zabid [See also NCH Annual Reports 2003, 2019–2020].³⁷³ ³⁷³ Dominic Dudley, “UN Raises Alarm over World Heritage Sites in Yemen and Lebanon,” Forbes (25 January 2023); UNESCO, “Gallery: Heritage at Risk in Yemen,” ([no date]).

ZAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2015, 2021.

ZIMBABWE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2001, 2004, 2006, 2008–2015, 2018, 2021.

Network of Concerned Historians	NCH
Annual Report 2022	http://www.concernedhistorians.org

INTRODUCTION

This twenty-eighth *Annual Report of the Network of Concerned Historians (NCH) contains news about the domain where history and human rights intersect, in particular about the censorship of history and the persecution of historians, archivists, and archaeologists around the globe, as reported by various human rights organizations and other sources. It mainly covers events and developments of 2021 and 2022.

Disclaimer. The fact that the NCH presents this news does not imply that it shares the views and beliefs of the historians and others mentioned in it.

- Download this report at:
<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/22.pdf>
- Cite this report as:
Network of Concerned Historians, Annual Report 2022
(<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/22.pdf>).
- All NCH Annual Reports (1995–2022) are available at:
<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/content/ar.html>
- The complete set of NCH Annual Reports in one pdf file is available at:
<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/compilation95-22.pdf>
- Or click:

		2022	2021	2020	2019	2018	2017	2016	2015
2014	2013	2012	2011	2010	2009	2008	2007	2006	2005
2004	2003	2002	2001	2000	1999	1998	1997	1996	1995

This year's report was compiled and edited by Antoon De Baets and Ruben Zeeman.

Please send any comments to antoondebaets@concernedhistorians.org.

AFGHANISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2016, 2018, 2021.

On 4 August 2021, historian and poet Abdullah Atefi (?–2021) was tortured and killed in the Chora district, Uruzgan province. During the night of 3 and 4 August, Taliban forces allegedly took him out of his home and shot him on the street. A member of the Afghan branch of PEN International since 2008, Atefi established himself as a writer of the history of Pashto literature and culture after having graduated with master's degrees in economics and engineering. Despite featuring regularly in regional publications, several of his works remained unpublished due to financial difficulties and he had made a living by cultivating land and working as a literature teacher at a local secondary school. The Taliban denied any involvement in the murder.¹

During the presidency of Hamid Karzai (2004–2009), M. N., a history professor and author of a number of books on Afghan history, was threatened multiple times by members of the Taliban, after he had repeatedly denied their requests. Then, in 2018, his son was allegedly killed by the Taliban. After the Taliban took over Afghanistan on 16 August 2021, M. N.'s life was supposed to be in danger.²

On 18 August 2021, three people were killed in Jalalabad, when Taliban fighters fired at protesters waving the national flag. On 19 August, the 102nd anniversary of Afghanistan's independence on 19 August 1919, Taliban fighters surrounded protesters in Kabul showing the national flag and shouting "our flag, our identity." In demonstrations on the same day in Asadabad, two people were reportedly killed during a demonstration in which the white flags of the Taliban were torn down.³

After the Taliban took over power on 16 August 2021, they damaged and destroyed a number of historical sites. On [18] August, members of the Taliban damaged the statue of Abdul Ali Mazari (1946–1995), the political leader of the Hazara-dominated Hezb-e Wahdat (Unity Party), in Bamiyan, Central Afghanistan. In November, a replica of the Koran was put on the pedestal and the central Mazari square was renamed. Mazari had played a prominent role in the anti-Soviet resistance during the Soviet-Afghan War (1979–1989) and against the Taliban in the Civil War (1992–1996), during which he was abducted, tortured, and killed. In 2016, he was proclaimed a “Martyr of National Unity” by then-President Ashraf Ghani.

¹ "Afghanistan: PEN International and PEN Norway Condemn the Murder of Afghan PEN Member," PEN International (5 August 2021); "Afghan Poet, Historian Killed By Taliban, Says Official," Gandhara-RFE/RL (5 August 2021); "Afghanistan: Outrage at Second Murder of Afghanistan PEN Member by Taliban," PEN International (9 August 2021).

² Ben Kieman, personal communication (14 September 2021).

³ Hannah Ellis-Petersen & Dan Sabbagh, "Several Reported Killed as Taliban Shoot at Crowds Waving Afghan Flag," Guardian (19 August 2021).

In [September], members of the Taliban painted over a mural commemorating Tetsu Nakamura ([1956/7]–2019), a Japanese doctor and aid worker, who had worked in Peshawar and Nangarhar since 1984. The memorial was replaced by a slogan congratulating the nation for their “victory.”

On 16 September, members of the Taliban destroyed a historic fort in the town of Girishk, Helmand province, allegedly to make room for a religious school.⁴

On 29 August 2021, Abdul Baqi Haqqani, the Taliban-appointed higher education minister, announced a review of the curricula along the lines of “Islamic, national and historical values.” In September 2021, Taliban authorities also imposed a society-wide prohibition on “insulting national figures.” Many female history and archaeology students were unable to pursue their studies, as most educational institutions for girls and women closed after the Taliban took power.⁵

See also Australia, United Kingdom.

ALBANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2012, 2015–2021.

In March 2021, the construction of the Bypass Road in Gjirokaštër, a UNESCO World Heritage site, began. The construction work was in violation of national regulations and would destroy the archaeological remains of the Old Varosh neighborhood and the Zerzebili bridges, among others.⁶

On 19 October 2021, the European Commission concluded that no investigations had been conducted into cases of persons who went missing during the Communist regime (1946–1991) [See NCH Annual Report 2017, 2020–2021]. On 3 February 2022, the Authority for Information on Former State Security

⁴ Peter Beaumont, “Japanese Aid Chief among Six Dead in Afghanistan Attack,” Guardian (4 December 2019); “Taliban Blow Up Hazara Leader Abdul Ali Mazari’s Statue in Bamiyan,” India Today (18 August 2021); Akhtar Mohammad Makoi, “‘The Soul of Kabul’: Taliban Paint Over Murals with Victory Slogans,” Guardian (7 September 2021); “Taliban vernielen historische vesting in Afghanistan met bulldozers,” Nu.nl (17 September 2021); Aletta André, “Hazara vrezen voor erfgoed en veiligheid onder Taliban,” NOS (6 December 2021).

⁵ Shadi Khan Saif, “Taliban Takes Over Higher Education, Rule Threatens Women’s Education,” University World News (2 September 2021); Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2021 (New York: SAR, 2021), 44; Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 22; “Taliban Decide Against Opening Schools to Girls in Afghanistan Beyond Age of 11,” Guardian (23 March 2022).

⁶ World Heritage Watch, Report 2021, (Berlin: WHW, 2021), 65–69.

Documents and the State Police signed an agreement to work together to revive stalled efforts to find the remains of people who disappeared.⁷

After the publication of Free on 28 October 2021 – a memoir about coming of age during and after Enver Hoxha’s Communist regime (1941–1985) – Lea Ypi, professor of political theory at the London School of Economics, received “offensive, accusatory and defamatory” messages, including sexist comments and personal attacks.⁸

On 27 July 2022, the Autoriteti për Informimin mbi Dokumentet e Ish-Sigurimit të Shtetit (AIDSSH; Information Authority on Former State Security Documents) sent to parliament documents confirming that five public and elected officials, including former President Ilir Meta (in office between 2017–2022), had been involved with the Sigurimi, the secret police service of the People’s Socialist Republic of Albania (1944–1991). According to the files, Meta had voluntarily spied on a friend who had tried to illegally cross the then closed-off border. In addition to the information, the AIDSSH reiterated its request to parliament to update the law on politicians’ verification procedures. Following the dissolution of the People’s Republic, two commissions were established to run background checks on politicians’ ties to the Communist regime. The current law did not allow the AIDSSH to override the decisions of these commissions.⁹

See also Azerbaijan.

ALGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001–2019, 2021.

On 22 April 2021, Said Djabelkhir, a professor specialized in Sufi Islam, was convicted by the Sidi M’hamed Court of First Instance for “offending the Prophet of Islam” and “denigrating the dogma or precepts of Islam” and sentenced to three years in prison and a fine of 50,000 Algerian dinars. On Facebook, Djabelkhir had published three posts, in which he described certain hadiths (reports of statements by the Prophet Muhammad) as “apocryphal,” called some stories in the Quran “myths,” and made comparisons between the Islamic holiday Eid al-Adha and the Berber new year celebration. During his trial, he defended the posts as “academic reflections.”¹⁰

⁷ Gjergj Erebara, “Albanian Prosecutor Declines to Probe Communist-Era Disappearances,” Balkan Insight (22 October 2021); “Albania Reluctant To Find Its 6,000 Missing Communism Victims – Analysis,” Eurasia Review (26 October 2021); Fjori Sinoruka, “Albanian Officials Agree to Cooperate to Find Communist-Era Missing,” Balkan Insight (3 February 2022).

⁸ Matthew Weaver, “Author Says Memoir of Communist Albania Met With ‘Vicious’ Abuse,” Guardian (3 January 2022).

⁹ “Startling Revelation: Ilir Meta’s Name Found in Former-State Intelligence Files,” Euronews (27 July 2022); “Former President Ilir Meta’s Name Appears in Communist Intelligence Files,” Exit News (27 July 2022).

On 26 June 2021, authorities arrested former Member of Parliament Nordine Ait Hamouda and remanded him in custody in Algiers pending investigation for “insulting symbols of the state,” and “attacking a former President of the Republic.” The charges referred to his comments on the privately-owned local Al Hayat TV channel a few days earlier calling historic figures including Emir Abdelkader (1808–1883), a religious and military leader who fought against French colonial forces, and Houari Boumédiène (1932–1978), the chairman of the Revolutionary Council (1965–1976) and second president of Algeria (1976–1978), “traitors.” On 23 June 2021, the Ministry of Communication had also ordered a one-week suspension of Al Hayat TV. Ait Hamouda was granted provisional release on 23 August after two months in prison.¹¹

See also France.

ANTIGUA & BARBUDA

See Grenada.

ANGOLA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2009, 2017, 2020.

ARGENTINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2021.

On 24 February 2022, in a so-called truth trial, judge Zunilda Niremperger opened an investigation into the 1924 Massacre of Napalpí in the court of Resistencia, Chaco Province. On 19 July 1924, some 130 police and ranchers with guns descended on protesting residents of the Napalpí indigenous reservation where Qom and Moqoit people lived in conditions of semi-slavery, forced to work on the cotton fields. Responding to then-governor Fernando Centeno, the attackers killed between 300 and 500 people.

¹⁰ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2021 (New York: SAR, 2021), 20.

¹¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 30.

Niremperger would hear evidence about this crime against humanity from one 114-year-old survivor, from three other deceased survivors with whom taped interviews had been held, from relatives of other deceased survivors who received information according to indigenous oral traditions, from the Instituto del Aborigen Chaqueño (IDACH; Institute of the Indigenous Chaqueño) and from several historians, including Pedro Solans and Qom historian Juan Chico (?–2021). It was the first time in the history of Argentina that an act of genocide against indigenous peoples was brought to trial. Chaco Governor Jorge Capitanich, acting as the plaintiff in the case, said that even though they were no longer alive, the perpetrators “must and deserve to be convicted in the collective memory of the indigenous peoples.” In 2008, Capitanich had apologized on behalf of the government to the Napalpí victims.

On 19 May 2022, the court found the state guilty of the Napalpí massacre and ordered reparations to be awarded, including the massacre being added to Argentina’s school syllabus and continuing forensic efforts to find the victims’ remains. No financial reparations were sought.¹²

See also United Kingdom.

ARMENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2006, 2010, 2014–2016.

See Azerbaijan, Greece.

AUSTRALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2001, 2003, 2007–2009, 2014–2016, 2018–2021.

In 2018, Benjamin Roberts-Smith, a former Special Air Service (SAS) corporal, filed a defamation suit against Fairfax Media and journalists Nick McKenzie, Chris Masters, and former journalist David Wroe, claiming that articles published in The Sydney Morning Herald, The Age, and The Canberra

¹² “Resistencia: Este jueves realizarán una audiencia preliminar al juicio por la verdad para la Masacre de Napalpí,” Fiscales.gob.ar (22 February 2022); “Landmark Napalpí Massacre Trial Begins in Argentina, 98 Years after Indigenous Killings,” Buenos Aires Times (20 April 2022); “Argentina Found Guilty of Massacre of Qom and Moqoit People,” BBC News (20 May 2022).

Times about unlawful killings allegedly committed by or implicating Robert-Smith during the War in Afghanistan (2001–2021), had damaged his reputation. The respondents were relying on a defense of truth. The trial was ongoing in 2022.¹³

On 14 May 2021, the Yoo-rook Justice Commission, the first independent truth-telling body in Australia, was established in the state of Victoria. Its mandate was to create an official record of the impact of colonization on First Peoples in Victoria using First Peoples' stories and make detailed recommendations about practical actions and reforms needed in Victoria.¹⁴

In June 2021, during federal parliamentary inquiry sessions into Rio Tinto's destruction of Juukan Gorge [See below and see NCH Annual Reports 2020–2021], the Eastern Guruma – Aboriginal owners of the Marandoo mine in Western Australia – told that they had been kept in the dark for decades over the destruction by Rio Tinto of hundreds of cultural artefacts from ancestral burial sites between 1995–1997. On 2 February 1992, the Western Australian government had granted consent under the Aboriginal Heritage Act – the same legislation which allowed Rio Tinto to blow up the Juukan Gorge in May 2020 – to Rio Tinto's application for a large mine at Marandoo on the condition that it would avoid a significant rock art complex, protect the Thoongari burial sites, and salvage important materials of the sites that would be destroyed. Three days later, the government had passed an additional law, the Marandoo Act, which effectively prevented any legal challenges from Aboriginal people. Rio Tinto's CEO Simon Trott said the company was “not proud of its history” at the Marandoo Mine and was engaging with traditional owners to right “historical wrongs.” The company continued to operate under the 1992 Marandoo Act.¹⁵

In 1990, investigative journalists Brian Toohey and William Pinwill published Oyster: The Story of the Australian Secret Intelligence Service, a history of the role played by the Australian Secret Intelligence Service (ASIS) in CIA operations in Chile in the 1970s. The book was censored by the government before publication to keep details of ASIS's operations secret. Over thirty years later, during a closed hearing at the Administrative Appeals Tribunal (AAT) in June 2021, government officials provided Clinton Fernandes, a former army intelligence analyst and professor of international and political studies at the University of New South Wales, Canberra, with several hundred records related to the opening, administration, and closing of the ASIS Office in Santiago, Chile, between 1970 and 1973. However, the documents handed over to Fernandes, who had previously pressed the government to declassify historical national security files on ASIS operations in Indonesia and Cambodia [See NCH Annual Reports 2014–2015], were heavily redacted reports that contained little information about its actual operations or its liaison relations with the CIA in Chile. On 2 June, a government executive at the AAT hearing had contended that any release of documents, fifty years later, would “harm” Australia’s ability to conduct international relations. In the aftermath of the case, the AAT deliberated whether to compel the government to re-release the heavily censored historical records with fewer redactions.¹⁶

¹³ Jamier McKinnell, “Everything You Wanted to Know about Ben Roberts-Smith's Defamation Case,” ABC News (29 June 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 23–24.

¹⁴ “Yoo-rook Justice Commission,” First Peoples' Assembly of Victoria (14 May 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 53; First Peoples – State Relations Group, “Truth and Justice in Victoria,” Victoria State Government (5 October 2021).

¹⁵ Lorena Allam, “Rio Tinto Accused of Allowing Irreplaceable Indigenous Artefacts To Be Dumped in Rubbish Tip,” Guardian (25 June 2021).

In October 2021, the Joint Standing Committee on Northern Australia, a parliamentary commission, published its report on the destruction of indigenous heritage sites at Juukan Gorge [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2021] and recommended, among others, that the Australian parliament amend the Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Heritage Protection Act 1984 to make the Minister for Indigenous Australians responsible for all Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Cultural Heritage matters and to adopt minimum standards which include “a record of past destruction of cultural heritage sites (with adequate safeguards to protect secret information and ensure traditional owner control of their information on any database).”¹⁷

Throughout 2021, military historians from the official Australian War Memorial (AWM) history unit, set up in 2016 to investigate Australia’s combat operations in Iraq (2003–2011) and Afghanistan (2001–2014), and peacekeeping operations in East Timor (1999–2012) and led by historian Craig Stockings, were denied access by the Defense Department to the unredacted final report of the Brereton Inquiry, an inquiry into war crimes committed by the Australian Defense Force during the War in Afghanistan (2001–2021), that had been published in November 2020. The reason stated was that disclosure could ¹⁶ Australia rechaza revelar su rol en el golpe de Estado en Chile,” Der Welt (2 June 2021); Peter Kornbluh, “Australian Spies Aided and Abetted CIA in Chile,” National Security Archive (10 September 2021).

¹⁷ “Mining Firm Rio Tinto Sorry for Destroying Aboriginal caves,” BBC News (31 May 2020); “Mining Firm Desecrated Australia Aboriginal site,” BBC News (2 August 2013); Tiffanie Turnbull, “Destruction of Ancient Aboriginal Site Sparks Calls for Reform in Australia,” Thomson Reuters Foundation News (29 May 2020); Deanna Kemp, Andrew Hopkins & John Owen, “How Rio Tinto Can Ensure Its Aboriginal Heritage Review Is Transparent and Independent,” The Conversation (22 June 2020); “Rio Tinto Chief Jean-Sébastien Jacques to Quit over Aboriginal Cave Destruction,” BBC News (11 September 2020); Nick Toscano & Hamish Hastie, “Rio Tinto CEO, Top Executives Resign amid Cave Blast Crisis,” Sydney Morning Herald (11 September 2020); Melanie Burton, “Rio Tinto Should Pay Restitution for Sacred Aboriginal Caves Blast – Inquiry,” Reuters (9 December 2020); “Rio Tinto Chief to Step Down over Cave Destruction,” BBC News (3 March 2021); Joint Standing Committee on Northern Australia, A Way Forward: Final Report into the Destruction of Indigenous Heritage Sites at Juukan Gorge (Canberra: Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia, 15 October 2021), xxv–xxvi; Scarlett Evans, “Dreams of Saving Sacred Land Dies in the Dust,” Index on Censorship, 50 no. 4, 30–33.

inadvertently tip off suspects and prejudice ongoing court trials. According to the AWM, “official historians are granted unrestricted access to closed period and security classified government records.”¹⁸

In February 2022, independent senator Rex Patrick asked the Administrative Appeals Tribunal (AAT) to order “the release of previously secret cabinet documents about Australia’s dealing with Timor-Leste following its 1999 independence vote.” At the time, Timor-Leste was governed by the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET). Former Australian foreign affairs department officer Philip Dorling had filed an affidavit with the AAT recalling a 2000 private conversation with the Australian foreign minister Alexander Downer in which the latter made remarks that Dorling interpreted as confirming that East-Timorese leaders, including Xanana Gusmão, José Ramos-Horta and Joao Carrascalao, had been the subject of an extensive electronic surveillance campaign mounted by Australia. Patrick had already secured the release of parts of the documents which showed that the Australian cabinet in 2000 was preoccupied with the interests of big oil and gas corporations, fearing that the independence of Timor-Leste could disrupt access to the vast underwater reserves in the Timor Sea [See NCH Annual Reports 2014–2015, 2021].¹⁹

AUSTRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2005–2007, 2009, 2018, 2020.

AZERBAIJAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–1998, 2008–2013, 2015–2021.

On 31 January 2022, Fakhraddin Hasanzade, producer of the history program “Secrets of a Hundred Years” at the state-run broadcaster AzTV, filed his resignation, after AzTV had canceled the screening on his program of a film about Mammad Amin Rasulzade (1884–1955), who was the President of the Azerbaijani National Council when it proclaimed the Azerbaijan Democratic Republic (1918–1920). AzTV did not give an explanation for the cancelation of the film, which had repeatedly been announced by Hadanzade on social media, but it was allegedly related to two lines – “Rasulzade is the founder of ¹⁸ Chris Masters & Nick McKenzie, “War Memorial Historians Denied Access to Afghanistan War Crimes Report,” The Age (23 November 2021).

¹⁹ Christopher Knaus, “Alexander Downer Called Timor-Leste an ‘Open Book’ for Australia in 2000, Tribunal Hears,” Guardian (8 February 2022).

Azerbaijan” and “Rasulzade is the sincerest love of the Azerbaijani nation” – in the movie. Rasulzade was part of an ongoing controversy between the ruling Yeni Azərbaycan Partiyası (YAP; New Azerbaijan Party) and the liberal-nationalist opposition party Müsavat: the government had repeatedly downplayed the legacy of Rasulzade and the Democratic Republic, allegedly because the latter’s democratic credentials were more impressive than YAP’s autocratic rule and to discredit Müsavat, founded by Rasulzade in 1911.²⁰

On 3 February 2022, Minister of Culture Anar Karimov announced the formation of a working group tasked with removing “fictitious traces written by Armenians” on churches in territories reclaimed during the 2020 Nagorno-Karabakh war. This referred to a theory that gained prominence, but was dismissed by historians, that Armenian inscriptions in churches on now-Azerbaijani territory were later additions to churches built when the region was known as Caucasian Albania (2nd–8th centuries). After widespread criticism, the ministry published a statement on 7 February, reaffirming the working group but not mentioning any future removal, and stating that “Azerbaijan has always been respectful of its historical and cultural heritage” [See NCH Annual Report 2021].²¹

²⁰ Ulkar Natiqzizi, “Cancellation of Azerbaijani Historical Biopic Sparks Controversy,” Eurasianet (31 January 2022).

²¹ “Azerbaijan Walks Back Plans to Erase Armenian Traces from Churches,” The Moscow Times (8 February 2022).

BAHAMAS

See Grenada.

BAHRAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2008–2012, 2015–2017, 2021.

In April and November 2020, police in Hamad Town interrogated Jameel J., then 15, about his participation in the ninth anniversary of the 2011 Arab Spring uprising (a series of anti-government protests in which at least almost hundred people were killed and more than 3000 wounded). On 11 February 2021, three days before the tenth anniversary of the uprising, three other children, ages 16 to 17, were also arrested for their participation in 2020, and all were taken to the Criminal Investigation Directorate (CID) in Manama. At the CID, police reportedly beat them and threatened them with rape and electric shocks. Prosecutors and judges refused to allow the children’s parents or lawyers to be present during their interrogations and enabled the abuses. On 11 March 2021, the Fourth Criminal Court in Manama convicted them all on a six-month suspended sentence, after heavy international coverage of children abuse in Bahrain.²²

BANGLADESH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2019, 2021.

On 1 June 2021, alleged members of the Bangladesh Chhatra League, the student wing of the ruling Awami League, attacked members of the Jatiyatabadi Chhatra Dal, the student wing of the Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP), while they were commemorating the anniversary of the death of Ziaur Rahman (1936–1981), Bangladesh’s seventh president (1977–1981) and founder of the BNP (established in 1978). At least twenty students were injured.²³

²² “Bahrain: Stop Denying Abuse of Detained Children,” Human Rights Watch (7 June 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 70.

²³ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2021 (New York: SAR, 2021), 47–48.

On 13 April 2022, a Dhaka court sentenced four people to death for the murder of Humayun Azad (1947–2004), leading writer and professor of German literature at Dhaka University [See NCH Annual Reports 2004–2005].²⁴

BARBADOS

See Grenada.

BELARUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2000, 2005–2007, 2009–2011, 2014–2021.

Amid widespread anger over President Alexander Lukashenko’s landslide 9 August 2020 re-election, which the opposition and many governments denounced as fraudulent, a number of historians and history producers were dismissed, arrested and detained [See also a previous list in NCH Annual Report 2021]:

- On 19 November 2020, historian Jaŭhen Malikaŭ ([1979/1980]–) was dismissed from the Belarusian State University of Transport in Gomel after he had been arrested and sentenced to five days in prison for participating in a protest against Lukashenko’s re-election. Following his dismissal, he was drafted into the army, despite the age limit of conscription being 27.²⁵
- In November 2020, poet and regional historian Aleś Harbul was briefly detained.²⁶
- On 22 November 2020, Vital Byl, a Ph.D. candidate at the History Institute of the University of Greifswald, Germany, was briefly detained during a rally in Minsk.²⁷

²⁴ Faisal Mahmud, “Bangladesh Sentences Four to Death for Prominent Writer’s Murder,” Al Jazeera (13 April 2022); Amnesty International, Public Statement (ASA 13/002/2004; 4 March 2004); Index on Censorship, 2004, no. 3, 99–100; International PEN Writers in Prison Committee, Rapid Action Network 7/04 (London: PEN, 8 March & 28 July 2004); International PEN Writers in Prison Committee, Half-Yearly Caselist to 31 December 2004 (London: PEN, 2005): 32.

²⁵ “More Solidarity than Arrests: What Belarusian Culture Experienced Over the Week,” PEN Belarus (1 December 2020); PEN International, PEN International Case List 2020 (London: PEN, 2021), 119.

²⁶ PEN International, PEN International Case List 2020 (London: PEN, 2021), 119.

²⁷ “More Solidarity than Arrests: What Belarusian Culture Experienced Over the Week,” PEN Belarus (1 December 2020); PEN International, PEN International Case List 2020 (London: PEN, 2021), 118.

- In [late 2020], Ihar Baranoŭski, a local historian from Brest, was detained for thirty days for participation in protest rallies.²⁸
- In September 2021, Viktor Yakubov, associate professor in history at Polack State University (PSU) in Novopolotsk, Vitebsk Oblast, was formally dismissed because of “absenteeism” between 2 and 15 September, when he was serving “administrative arrest” for having reposted “extremist materials.” At the time of his dismissal, he was serving his fourth administrative arrest. In 2007, Yakubov had finished his Ph.D. in history at PSU.²⁹
- In [September] 2021, Vladimir Alexandrovich Lobach, doctor of historical sciences at Polack State University, left the university by “consent of both parties.” Lobach ran a blog in which he expressed his views on Lukashenka’s re-election and the ensuing protests.³⁰
- On 27 September 2021, Andrey Kalas, local historian and teacher of Belarusian history and culture in Vaukavysk, was detained for ten days. Officially, he was arrested for owning an unchecked hunting rifle, but many teachers at his school cited the ongoing pressure on those teaching on Belarusian culture and language.³¹
- On 10 November 2021, Matvey Grinkevich, a fourth-year student of the Faculty of History at the Belarusian State Pedagogical University, was detained and had a criminal case against him initiated on accusations that he had participated in an “unauthorized mass event.”³²
- On 24 November 2021, Anastasia Voytovich (Vaitovich), student at the Faculty of History of the Belarusian State University, was detained on the accusation of having participated in one of the 2020 protests. In 2020, she had been expelled from Minsk State Linguistic University for “political reasons.” In mid-March 2022, she was sentenced to three years in restricted freedom in an open penal facility.³³
- Between December 2021 and January 2022, two people [names unknown] from the history faculty were among 55 people dismissed for political reasons at the Belarusian State University.³⁴

²⁸ “More Solidarity than Arrests: What Belarusian Culture Experienced Over the Week,” PEN Belarus (1 December 2020).

²⁹ “Пока сидел, поставили прогул. Уволили доцента Полоцкого университета после 14 лет работы,” Nasha Niva (28 September 2021); Belarusian Students’ Association, The State of Academia in Belarus 2021 (Belarusian Students’ Association, February 2022), 21.

³⁰ Belarusian Students’ Association, The State of Academia in Belarus 2021 (Belarusian Students’ Association, February 2022), 21.

³¹ “Vaukavysk: Prominent Local Historian and Teacher Arrested for 10 Days over Video Posted in 2018,” Belsat (1 October 2021).

³² Belarusian Students’ Association, The State of Academia in Belarus 2021 (Belarusian Students’ Association, February 2022), 16.

³³ Belarusian Students’ Association, The State of Academia in Belarus 2021 (Belarusian Students’ Association, February 2022), 13; Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 3 (March 2022), 3; “Anastasiya Vaitovich,” Viasna Human Rights Centre ([22 March] 2022).

³⁴ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 1 (January 2022), 1.

- In February 2022, security forces searched the home of Aliaksandr Aheeu, Ph.D. candidate in historical sciences and former faculty member of Mahilou State Arkadz Kuliashou University. Aheeu had previously been dismissed because of his political position.³⁵
- In February 2022, Roza Turarbekova, associate professor of history at the Faculty of International Relations at the Belarusian State University, was dismissed.³⁶
- On 23 March 2022, Albina Semianchuk, Ph.D. candidate of historical sciences and associate professor of the Belarusian culture department at Hrodna State University, had her contract not renewed for political reasons.³⁷
- In May 2022, Andrei Darakhovich, a history teacher at Minsk Language and Humanities College, was detained and accused of having signed up to a Telegram channel organizing demonstrations against Lukashenko. On 14 July 2020, he had been detained at a protest rally.³⁸
- On 10 May 2022, Dzmitry Niachayau, a third-year student at the Faculty of History of the Belarusian State University, was detained in Minsk.³⁹
- On 13 June 2022, Aliena Zubrova, a history teacher in Navapolatsk, was sentenced to fifteen days in prison for “distribution of extremist materials,” related to a social media post she had shared.⁴⁰
- On 1 July 2022, historian Aliaksandr Hrusha was dismissed as director of the Central Scientific Library of the National Academy of Sciences, despite having signed a new contract in January.⁴¹

On 6 January 2022, during a meeting to discuss official history politics, President Alexander Lukashenko stressed that the “correct interpretation of history” was key to state security. He argued that the mass protests that followed his re-election in August 2020, denounced by many as fraudulent, had been caused by a view of Belarusian history as part of Europe’s historical heritage that was “excessively promoted in school curricula and museums.” Already on 1 January, Lukashenko had signed a decree that proclaimed 2022 the “year of historical memory” with the goal to “propagate an objective attitude to the past among citizens” and “to sustain and to consolidate the unity of the Belarusian nation.”

In February 2022, the Republican Council for Historical Policy was created. The permanent body under supervision of the Presidential Administration would give “recommendations on preventing and suppressing violations in the field of preserving historical memory.” In [March] 2022, the government announced that as of 1 September all universities and colleges would have to introduce three new compulsory courses: History of Belarusian Statehood, Modern Political Economy, and Philosophy.

³⁵ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 2 (February 2022), 1–2.

³⁶ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 5 (May 2022), 7.

³⁷ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 3 (March 2022), 3.

³⁸ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 5 (May 2022), 2.

³⁹ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 5 (May 2022), 2.

⁴⁰ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 6 (June 2022), 3.

⁴¹ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 6 (June 2022), 3.

Minister of Education Andrei Ivanets commented that the courses would allow first-year students to “be able to view the well-known historical facts in the context of social and political developments.”

Changes to the history curriculum reportedly mainly affected how World War II and contemporary history were taught. Mentions of Nobel prize winner and oral historian Svetlana Alexievich [See NCH Annual Reports 2016, 2021] had been stripped from the textbooks.⁴²

On 21 February 2022, the house of Larysa Shchyrakova, a historian by education and a freelance journalist working for Belsat TV channel and the human rights website Gomel Spring, was searched for the fourth time in a year: her phone, camera and computer were confiscated, and she was taken in for questioning [See NCH Annual Report 2021].⁴³

On 31 March 2022, the court of Babruysk sentenced history teacher Larysa Sekiarzhytskaya to paying a fine of 2,240 Belarusian rubles (€ 631,56) because of her “political and social attitude to the events in the Ukraine.” On 4 March, she had worn a yellow-blue ribbon in her hair to school to express support for the Ukrainian people after the 24 February invasion by Russian forces.⁴⁴

In April 2022, Dzmitry Yatsevich, who had been director of the National Historical Archives of Belarus for ten years and was a major specialist in Belarusian history, had his contract not extended. He was replaced by Major General Aleh Voinau, who had until recently been an assistant to the Minister of Defense.⁴⁵

On 13 July 2022, the Gomel District Court sentenced Belsat journalist Katsyaryna (Katerina) Bakhlova (pen name: Katsyaryna Andreyeva) to eight years in prison on undisclosed charges in a trial behind closed doors. On 15 November 2020, Andreyeva and her camerawoman Darya Chultsova, a graduate from the Faculty of History and Philology of Mahiliou State University, Mogilev, had been detained for covering a violently dispersed memorial service for Roman Bandarenka, who had reportedly been beaten to death by security forces four days prior at Peremen Square (also known as Square of Changes), one of the centers of the August 2020 protests against President Aleksandr Lukashenko’s re-election [See above and NCH Annual Report 2021]. On 18 February 2021, Andreyeva and Chultsova were ⁴² Kamil Kłysiński, “The Anti-Western Narrative in Belarus’s Historical Policy Becomes Harsher,” Centre for Eastern Studies (14 January 2022); Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 2 (February 2022), 4; Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 3 (March 2022), 4; Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 5 (May 2022), 7.

⁴³ Veera Nikkanen, “Belarus: Belsat TV Journalists Mark One Year in Penal Colony,” International Press Institute (27 February 2022).

⁴⁴ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 3 (March 2022), 2.

⁴⁵ Asveta, Digest of Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya’s Office on Education and Science: Issue 4 (April 2022), 2.

sentenced to two years in the Penal Colony No. 4 in Homiel, where they were labeled as people “prone to extremism and other destructive activities” and further restricted in their freedom. Chultsova was scheduled for release on 5 September 2022.⁴⁶

BELGIUM

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2008, 2010–2012, 2021.

On 26 October 2021, the parliamentary Commission spéciale chargée d’examiner l’État Indépendant du Congo et le passé colonial de la Belgique au Congo, au Rwanda et au Burundi (Special Commission on the Colonial Past) published a 689–page report (commissioned from ten experts) on the history of the colonization of Congo (by King Leopold II in the Congo Free State, 1885–1908, and by Belgium in 1885–1960), and Rwanda–Urundi (as trust and mandate territories, 1922–1962). The experts’ report concluded that exploitation, violence and racism were systemic features of the colonization and recommended, among others, the restitution of stolen objects, archives, and human remains, and reparations (including financial reparations) for its “colonial debt in light of Belgium’s moral responsibility.” The experts further stressed the “paramount importance” of declassifying the archives.

On 19 January 2022, while participating in a debate entitled “After colonization: seeking truth and reparation,” historians Anne Wetsi Mpoma and Gillian Mathys, who were both members of the expert group, expressed concern over the partial and conditional access to the colonial archives, highlighting that “Belgian researchers can obtain an exemption to have access to classified documents, but not Congolese, Rwandan or Burundian researchers.”⁴⁷

See also Italy, Latvia.

⁴⁶ “Belsat Journalist Sentenced to 8 Years for ‘High Treason’,” Belsat.eu (13 July 2022); “Belarus Journalist Given Extra 8 Years for ‘State Treason’,” Moscow Times (13 July 2022); “Darya Chultsova,” International Women’s Media Foundation ([no date]).

⁴⁷ Chambre des Représentants de Belgique / Belgische Kamer van Volksvertegenwoordigers, Commission spéciale chargée d’examiner l’État Indépendant du Congo et le passé colonial de la Belgique au Congo, au Rwanda et au Burundi, ses conséquences et les suites qu’il convient d’y réserver: rapport des experts (doc. 55, 1462/002; 26 October 2021); Nick Amies, “Experts Deliver Report to the Special Committee on Belgium’s Colonial Past,” The Bulletin (28 October 2021); Gaëlle Ponselet, “Colonial Crimes: Experts Recommend that Belgium Compensate,” Justiceinfo.net (2 November 2021); Colette Braeckman, “La Belgique se confronte à son histoire coloniale,” Histoire coloniale et postcoloniale (4 November 2021); Jennifer Rankin, “New Evidence of Belgian Complicity in 1961 Killing of Burundian PM,” Guardian (5 January 2022); Gaëlle Ponselet, “Belgium’s Colonial Past Commission Stalls,” Justiceinfo.net (31 January 2022).

BELIZE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

See Grenada.

BOLIVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2021.

In March 2021, the Truth Commission, set up in 2017 to investigate serious human rights violations committed by successive military dictatorships between 1964 and 1982 [See NCH Annual Reports 2017–2021], presented its final report to President Luis Arce Catacora. However, the eleven-volume report, documenting killings, forced disappearances and torture by state agents, was only made public in the form of an executive summary. The report was not published online and the government did not act on it.⁴⁸

In August 2021, a report by the Grupo Interdisciplinario de Expertos Independientes (Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts) exposed failures by the Attorney General's Office to ensure accountability for crimes committed under the governments of Evo Morales (2006–2017) and Jeanine Áñez Chávez (2019–2020). It also criticized a February 2021 amnesty, issued by current-President Luis Arce Catacora, for crimes related to the 2019 political crisis during which at least 33 people died and 715 were injured. Following the report, Arce revoked the amnesty.⁴⁹

BOSNIA and HERZEGOVINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2021.

On 8 April 2021, Serb and Croat lawmakers in the House of Peoples (the Bosnian parliament) voted seven against six with one abstention against changes to the criminal code to prohibit the denial of facts about the July 1995 Srebrenica genocide. It was the latest in a series of failed attempts over more than a decade to adopt a new law to outlaw denial of the 1995 genocide [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. In June 2021, the United Nations Special Advisor on Prevention of Genocide warned against the increasing glorification of convicted war criminals. On [28] July 2021, the United Nations High Representative Valentin Inzko amended the criminal code, sanctioning the glorification of war criminals convicted by final and binding judgments and the denial of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, making them punishable with a maximum prison sentence of five years. On 30 July, the parliament of the Serb-run Republika Srpska passed a law on non-implementation of the criminal code and another providing for penalties of up to fifteen years in prison for “violating the reputation of the Republika Srpska.” The law took effect on 8 October 2021.⁵⁰

⁴⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 91; Thomas Graham, "Bolivian Victims of Dictatorships Still Waiting for Justice: 'We Are Forgotten'," Guardian (30 March 2022).

⁴⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2021), 89.

On 10 August 2021, the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe Mission to Bosnia and Herzegovina reported a sharp decline in the number of completed war crimes cases and in the number of new indictments. On 19 October, the European Commission published a report stating that judicial cooperation with other countries in the region on the prosecution of war crimes committed during the Yugoslav wars of succession (1991–1995) remained ineffective [See NCH Annual Report 2021].⁵¹

On 28 September 2021, the twenty-eighth anniversary of the closure of the Detelj detention camp in 1993, it remained impossible for survivors to hold a memorial event. After the Wars of Yugoslav Succession (1991–1995), the site of the camp was privatized under the ownership of the Hercegovacka Bank. After the bank’s liquidation in 2012, the site remained shut. In the spring and summer of 1992, the camp had been used by Bosnian Croats to detain Serb prisoners. After conflicts erupted between Bosnian Croat and Bosniak forces, Dretelj became a detention camp for Bosniaks. The Association of Detainees of Bosnia and Herzegovina estimated that around 3,000 Serb and Bosniak detainees had been subjected to torture, beating, rape, and murder during the war.⁵²

⁵⁰ Office of the High Representative, “High Representative Valentin Inzko Introduced Today Amendment to the BH Criminal Code” (Press release; 23 July 2021); Nejra Dzaferagic, “Bosnia Under Pressure to Adopt Srebrenica Genocide Denial Law,” Balkan Insight (16 April 2021); Guy Delauney, “Bosnian Serbs Defy Top UN Official Inzko over Genocide Denial,” BBC News (28 July 2021); “Bosnian Serbs Reject Imposed Ban on Genocide Denial,” Al Jazeera (30 July 2021); “Srebrenica: Bosnia’s Peace Envoy Outlaws Genocide Denial,” Deutsche Welle (24 July 2021); “Bosnian Serbs Reject Imposed Ban on Srebrenica Genocide Denial,” TRT World (30 July 2021); “Bosnian Serb Entity’s President Reverses International Overseer’s Ban On Genocide Denial,” RFE/RL (13 October 2021); Julian Borger & Daniel Boffey, “EU Working to Amend Genocide Denial Law that Is Blamed for Bosnia Crisis,” Guardian (22 December 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2021), 96.

⁵¹ Lamija Grebo, “Bosnia Completing Fewer War Crimes Cases, OSCE Warns,” Balkan Insight (11 August 2021); Milica Stojanovic, Samir Kajosevic, Xhorxhina Bami & Semir Mujkic, “European Commission Raps Serbia’s ‘Weak’ War Crimes Case Record,” Balkan Insight (19 October 2021).

⁵² Teo Zoric, “Bosnian War Prisoners Unable to Commemorate Detention Camp Closure,” Balkan Insight (28 September 2021).

In the run-up to 31 May 2022, Bosnian Serb authorities banned White Armband Day (named after a May 1992 decree by Bosnian Serb authorities forcing all non-Serbs to mark their houses with white flags and wear white armbands when going outside), an annual event commemorating the Bosnian Serb-led ethnic cleansing of Bosnian Muslims and Bosnian Croat populations in the Prijedor area, and celebrated by the survivors of the ethnic cleansing on 31 May 2022, because of “a serious danger of violence” due to threats from Samopostovanje (Self-Respect) and Princip (Principle), two far-right Bosnian Serb nationalist groups. In Prijedor, 3,173 people were killed during the 1992–1995 war, with almost 31,000 detained in prison camps and 53,000 forced to flee, totaling 94% of the Bosnian Muslim and Bosnian Croat population from the Prijedor municipality.⁵³

On 15 June 2022, vandals destroyed the Yugoslav Partisans’ Necropolis in Mostar, one of the largest monuments commemorating anti-Fascist fighters who died in World War II. All 700 gravestones of the memorial cemetery, which for years had been the target of right-wing vandals who had previously defaced the stones with graffiti, were destroyed.⁵⁴

See also Croatia, Serbia.

BOTSWANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

BRAZIL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2021.

On 11 June 2021, the Fundação Palmares (Palmares Foundation; established 1988) published an electronic report Retrato do acervo: três décadas de dominação marxista na Fundação Cultural Palmares (Portrait of the Collection: Three Decades of Marxist Domination in the Palmares Cultural Foundation). The Associação Nacional de História (ANPUH; National Historical Association) and other critics feared that the report was the first step in systematically destroying or excluding Marxist publications which were part of its collections. ANPUH argued that these publications were necessary to understand not only the history of the foundation but more broadly the history of racism and emancipation in Brazil. On 23 June 2021, the Federal Court in Rio de Janeiro imposed an injunction on the foundation.⁵⁵

⁵³ Enes Hodzic, “How Right-Wingers Thwarted a War Crime Commemoration in Bosnia,” Balkan Insight (4 July 2022); “White Armband Day,” Remembering Srebrenica ([no date]).

⁵⁴ “Vandals Attack Yugoslav Partisans’ Necropolis in Bosnia,” Al Jazeera (16 June 2022).

On 24 July 2021, activists of Revolução Periférica (Peripheral Revolution) set fire to the statue of Manuel de Borba Gato (1649–1718). They saw him as a symbol of the “bandeirantes,” a group of explorers who colonized Brazil and were involved in massacring and enslaving indigenous peoples and in recapturing fugitive slaves. The statue had been targeted several times by protesters in the past. Three activists were arrested, charged with “arson,” “criminal association,” and “license plate tampering” but released on 10 August 2021, although the charges were not withdrawn.⁵⁶

On 23 August 2021, the Bahia Section of the Associação Nacional de História (ANPUH; National Association of History) denounced the fact that the previous week Carlos Zacarias Figueiró de Sena Júnior, a historian working at the Universidade Federal da Bahia (UFBA; Federal University of Bahia), was attacked by a producer of denialist historical content (that is, content denying the crimes of the past) after Figueiró de Sena had criticized it on his Facebook page following the nomination of one of the producer’s videos by the Secretaria Estadual de Educação da Bahia (State Department of Education of Bahia).⁵⁷

In [November] 2021, the film Marighella by director Wagner Moura, about the life of Marxist-Leninist Communist, politician, writer and guerrilla fighter Carlos Marighella (1911–1969), was released after it had been delayed for almost two years by the Agência Nacional do Cinema (Ancine; National Cinema Agency). Ancina withheld funding for its distribution, alleging a problem in the accounts for another production by O2 Filmes, the film’s producer. Most believed that the film was informally censored because it was “not aligned with the government.” The Special Secretary of Culture, former actor Mário Frias, allegedly tweeted the following in response to statements by Moura: “Did you think I was going to get public funds for this pamphlet garbage?” Since its release without the benefit of government funding, Marighella became the most watched Brazilian production of the last two years, with 100,000 spectators in 300 theaters across Brazil.⁵⁸

⁵⁵ ANPUH, Nota de repúdio da Associação Nacional de História \(ANPUH\) à decisão da direção da Fundação Palmares de censurar e extirpar parte de seu patrimônio bibliográfico (press release; 28 June 2021).

⁵⁶ “Arrest of Activists Involved in Protest Action,” Civicus Monitor (19 August 2021); ANPUH, “Libertação imediata de Galo, Géssica E Bju” (Press release; 30 July 2021); ANPUH, “Nota sobre o incêndio da estátua de Borba Gato” (Press release; 2 August 2021).

⁵⁷ Diretoria da ANPUH, Seção Bahia, Press release (Ilhéus, 23 August 2021); ANPUH, “O comércio da mentira e os ataques à história profissional” (Press release; 23 August 2021).

⁵⁸ Luiz Gustavo Vilela, “Marighella’s Delayed Release Shows Censorship Is Alive and Well in Brazil,” Index on Censorship (19 November 2021).

In the run-up to the Exame Nacional do Ensino Médio (Enem; National High School Exam) on 21 November 2021, critics denounced the fact that President Jair Bolsonaro had reportedly asked his Minister of Education Milton Ribeiro in the first half of 2021 that Enem change the wording referring to the 1964 military coup (which led to a military dictatorship between 1964–1985) into the term “Revolution,” thus endorsing a far-right version of history. In addition, a director of the Instituto Nacional de Estudos e Pesquisas Educacionais Anísio Teixeira (Inep; National Institute for Educational Studies and Research “Anísio Teixeira”; the agency responsible for Enem) apparently demanded the exclusion of more than twenty exam questions, many of which dealt with Brazil’s recent history. Other forms of interference and intimidation were also reported. In early November 2021, 37 Inep members resigned in protest against the censorship attempt. Since 2018 Bolsonaro had frequently criticized Enem and the usual question about the 1964 coup had reportedly disappeared from the 2020 exam. On 15 November 2021, Bolsonaro commented that the Enem would now start “looking more like the government,” saying that nobody should worry about “those absurd issues from the past.”⁵⁹

On 19 November 2021, President Jair Bolsonaro nominated Ricardo Braga (Ricardo Borda D’Água de Almeida Braga) as the Director of the Brazilian National Archive. The owner of a private security company, Braga lacked the necessary expertise for the job. Many critics, including the Fórum Nacional das Associações de Arquivologia do Brasil (National Forum of Associations of Archivists of Brazil) and the Brazilian Historians in the United States, condemned the nomination, expressing fears that it would lead to the rewriting of the history of the Brazilian dictatorship (1964–1985) and perhaps to a destruction of records. Bolsonaro, a member of the armed forces during the dictatorship, had repeatedly publicly alluded to the dictatorship as a positive period in Brazilian history and said that the dictatorship made a mistake by torturing people when it should have killed them. In 2009, he hung a poster on his office door in Congress that said, “whoever looks for bones is a dog,” in reference to the search for the remains of suspected members of the Araguaia guerrilla group who were forcibly disappeared.⁶⁰

On 26 November 2021, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights filed an application before the Inter-American Court of Human Rights against Brazil, claiming that it had, among others, failed to preserve crucial evidence for the investigation of the 1997 murder of Manoel Luiz da Silva, a rural laborer and member of the peasant movement Movimento Sem Terra.⁶¹

⁵⁹ Beatriz Jucá, “Censura e “pressão ideológica” no Enem para que ele tenha “a cara do Governo.”” El País (15 November 2021); Clement Verite, “Bolsonaro Tried to Revisit Brazil History in High School Exam.” Newsdip (19 November 2021).

⁶⁰ Fórum Nacional das Associações de Arquivologia do Brasil, Nota em defesa do arquivo nacional (November 2021); Brazilian Historians in the United States, Open Letter on Mr. Ricardo Braga’s Nomination as Director of the Brazilian National Archive (29 November 2021); Human Rights Watch, “Brazil: Bolsonaro Celebrates Brutal Dictatorship” (press release; 27 March 2019) (quotes).

On 10 February 2022, the Fórum Nacional de Ensino e Pesquisa em Arquivologia (FEPARQ; National Forum for Teaching and Research in Archival Science), the Fórum Nacional das Associações de Arquivologia do Brasil (FNArq; National Forum of Brazilian Associations of Archival Science), and the Associação Nacional de História (ANPUH; National Historical Association) complained to Ricardo Borda D'Água de Almeida Braga [See above], the Director-General of the Arquivo Nacional (National Archives) about Federal Court decisions ordering the anonymization of the name of former colonel of the Pernambuco Military Police Olinto de Sousa Ferraz in six pages of the final report of the Comissão Nacional da Verdade (CNV; National Truth Commission) – which in 2011–2014 investigated human rights violations committed in 1964–1988 – and the censorship of passages about former governor of Paraná Ney Braga in the report of the Truth Commission of Paraná. The CNV report was held by the National Archives. The court decision regarding Sousa Ferraz was the result of a lawsuit filed by his relatives in late 2019. They referred to the 1991 Law of Archives and the 2011 Access to Information Law. In Art. 31, V, § 4, however, the latter stated that “[t]he restriction of access to information relating to a person’s private life, honor, and image may not be invoked with the intention of hindering the process of verification of irregularities in which the holder of the information is involved, as well as actions aimed at the recovery of historical facts of greater relevance.”⁶²

BULGARIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2002, 2006, 2009, 2012, 2015–2017, 2019–2020.

On 6 October 2021, President Rumen Radev stated that Bulgaria would lift its veto for European Union accession talks with North Macedonia if its government would, among others, recognize the “historical truth.” He referred, for instance, to the term “Bulgarian Fascist Occupying Forces” used in history textbooks in North Macedonia to describe the occupation by the then Kingdom of Bulgaria during World War II, after it had joined the Axis powers in 1941, and insisted that it be changed into “Bulgarian administration” [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. In December, newly-elected Prime Minister Kiril Petkov reiterated that North Macedonia should amend its history textbooks.⁶³

⁶¹ “IACHR Takes to Inter-American Court of Human Rights Case Concerning Brazil’s Lack of Due Diligence to Investigate Murder of Rural Laborer.” Organization of American States (10 January 2022).

⁶² “Justiça determina “anonimização” de partes do relatório da Comissão Nacional da Verdade,” Giro da Arquivo (3 February 2022); “Denúncia sobre a ‘anonimização’ de documentos do arquivo nacional!” (Statement; 10 February 2022).

See also North Macedonia.

BURKINA FASO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2004, 2005, 2013, 2015–2018, 2021.

On 6 April 2022, a military tribunal sentenced former President Blaise Compaoré in absentia to life imprisonment after being found guilty of complicity in the 1987 murder of former President Thomas Sankara (1949–1987) [See NCH Annual Reports 2001, 2016–2018, 2021]. Compaoré was living in exile in Ivory Coast.⁶⁴

BURUNDI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2015, 2017–2021.

⁶³ “Bulgaria Tells North Macedonia to Stop ‘Erasing’ Bulgarians,” Balkan Insight (6 October 2021); Sinisa Jakov Marusic, “Bulgaria Again Blocks North Macedonia, Albania, EU Accession Talks,” Balkan Insight (15 December 2021).

⁶⁴ Emmanuel Akinwotu, “Burkina Faso’s Ex-President Guilty of Complicity in Murder of Predecessor,” Guardian (6 April 2022).

CAMBODIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2018, 2020–2021.

On 16 February 2021, Prime Minister Hun Sen signed into law the Sub-Decree on the Establishment of a National Internet Gateway which allowed, among others, for network connections “that affect safety, national revenue, social order, dignity, culture, tradition and customs” to be blocked or disconnected.⁶⁵

In August 2021, a Phnom Penh court convicted nine activists and former opposition members of incitement and sentenced them to between twelve and twenty months in prison. They had peacefully protested near the Chinese Embassy in Phnom Penh as part of a 2020 campaign to commemorate the anniversary of the 1991 Paris Peace Accords (concluded among various Cambodian parties that had officially ended the Cambodian–Vietnamese War [1978–1989] and the Third Indochina War [1975–1991]).⁶⁶

On 30 December 2021, a French court issued indictments against Huy Piseth and Hing Bun Heang, the then chief and deputy chief of the bodyguard unit of Prime Minister Hun Sen (in office since 1985), for ordering and carrying out an attack on opposition party leader Sam Rainsy on 30 March 1997. The court also summoned Hun Sen for his role in the attack, but the summons was blocked by the French government citing head of state immunity. It was the first time in almost twenty-five years that a step was made toward accountability for the attack that killed sixteen and injured more than 150.⁶⁷

See also Australia.

CAMEROON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2012–2014, 2016, 2020–2021.

⁶⁵ Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 111.

⁶⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 121.

⁶⁷ Brad Adams, “At Long Last, Signs of Justice for 1997 Cambodia Massacre,” Human Rights Watch (30 March 2022).

CANADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000, 2002–2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2009, 2012–2021.

In October 2021, the National Center for Truth and Reconciliation (NCTR) criticized the government for withholding records about the residential school system (between the 1870s and 1996 the government removed about 150,000 indigenous children from their homes and sent them to church-run “residential schools,” in what the 2015 Truth and Reconciliation Commission [TRC] had described as a “culture of genocide” targeting indigenous people [See NCH Annual Report 2021]).

In November 2021, historians and archivists expressed concern that some of these records were destroyed or hidden away. Brenda Macdougall, a professor of the history of Métis and First Nations at the University of Ottawa, and a colleague historian found in 2021 that a series of significant records on early residential school history had been transferred to the Vatican without leaving any transcripts in Canada. Following Macdougall’s findings, renewed calls were made to the Vatican to release historical documents on the residential school system. In previous years, access to the relevant archives had been obstructed at least twice: in 2011, after a few months of archival research, TRC researchers had been denied access to the archives in Ottawa. In 2014, a group of Ph.D. students from the University of Ottawa had found records dumped in a bin outside the Deschâtelets Archives.

In December 2021, Crown-Indigenous Relations Minister Marc Miller said that some of the records would be handed over to the NCTR within thirty days, with others being reviewed. On 7 December, a joint statement by the NCTR and Missionary Oblates of Mary Immaculate, which operated 48 residential schools in Canada, said that the Oblates’ archives in Rome were to be opened to the NCTR and that it would grant full access to critical residential school records.⁶⁸

In November 2021, a committee led by retired Canadian Supreme Court justice Michel Bastarache delivered its report on the case of art historian Verushka Lieutenant-Duval, who had used the N-word for educational purposes in class at the University of Ottawa and had been suspended for three days [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. The committee ruled that Lieutenant-Duval was protected by academic freedom: the racial epithet was not directed toward any individual, nor was it gratuitous, adding that “[t]here is no right not to feel offended since academic freedom protects controversial and hurtful statements.”⁶⁹

⁶⁸ Julie Ireton, “Residential School Records Once Held in Canada Now in Rome, Researchers Say,” CBC (15 November 2021); Stephanie Taylor, “Federal Government Will Soon Hand Over More Residential School Records: Miller,” CBC (6 December 2021); “Catholic Order Says It Will Open Up Residential School Records in Rome - but Survivor Remains Skeptical,” CBC (8 December 2021).

⁶⁹ Amanda Pfeffer, “Ottawa Professor Apologizes for Using N-word, Regrets Growing Controversy,” CBC (21 October 2020); Nathan Greenfield, “Bastarache Report – Academic Freedom and University of Ottawa,” University World News (11 November 2021).

On 29 January 2022 and the following days onward, people protesting against COVID-19 measures desecrated the National War Memorial, the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and the statue of athlete and cancer activist Terry Fox (1958–1981) in Ottawa.⁷⁰

In late March 2022, two University of Montreal students launched a petition against history professor Michael Carley over comments he made on social media that supported Russia’s invasion of Ukraine. Carley’s Twitter and Facebook accounts had since been deleted. A university spokesperson declared on 27 March that “Carley [was] expressing his opinions in his personal capacity, not in the exercise of his duties as a professor.” However, one of the petitioners said that his social-media accounts listed him as a University of Montreal professor, giving his tweets more credibility.⁷¹

On 26 April 2022, Ryerson University was renamed Toronto Metropolitan University in response to the debate about Egerton Ryerson (1803–1882), deemed one of the architects of Canada’s residential school system that was labeled “cultural genocide” by the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in 2015 [See above and NCH Annual Report 2021].⁷²

See also United States.

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2009, 2011–2012, 2014–2021.

In early July 2021, the eleven commissioners of the Truth, Justice, Reconciliation and Reparation Commission (CVJRR) were sworn in. The CVJRR would investigate serious crimes committed since 1959 – the year that David Dacko (1930–2003) took over the leadership of the Mouvement pour l’évolution sociale de l’Afrique noire, the first ruling party after independence from France in 1960.⁷³

Following allegations of human rights violations by the United Nations in relation to the Civil War (2012–present) – especially since the 2020 offensive by the oppositional Coalition des patriotes pour le changement (CPC; Coalition of Patriots for Change) led by former President François Bozizé – a ⁷⁰ “Trudeau: Canadians Disgusted by Anti-Vaxxers Who Desecrated Monuments,” Guardian (31 January 2022).

⁷¹ Emerald Bensadoun, “Students Launch Petition against University of Montreal Professor over Comments Supporting Russia’s Invasion of Ukraine,” Globe and Mail (27 March 2022).

⁷² Joe Friesen, “Ryerson Will Be Called Toronto Metropolitan University after Board Approves Name Change,” Globe and Mail (26 April 2022).

⁷³ “Central African Republic: Creation of the Truth, Justice, Reconciliation and Reparation Commission,” Teller Report (17 July 2021).

Commission of Inquiry was set up. In October 2021, the Minister of Justice presented the results of the commission report, acknowledging some of the allegations against the national forces and their allies. However, it was not made public and no further steps were taken.⁷⁴

CHAD

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2015–2016.

CHILE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2021.

On 4 January 2021, a court in Valparaíso dismissed all charges against historian Paula Cometa Stange and the other members of the feminist collective LASTESIS. In May and June 2020, police complaints had been filed and a criminal investigation was approved after the collective had denounced acts of police violence against women in the context of confinement due to COVID-19.⁷⁵

See also Australia.

CHINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2021.

On 19 April 2020, Beijing police detained Chen Mei and Cai Wei for archiving censored news articles, interviews, and personal accounts related to the outbreak of the COVID-19 epidemic in Wuhan [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. They remained out of contact with their families. In August 2021, a Beijing court sentenced them to fifteen months in prison after convicting them of “picking quarrels and provoking trouble.”⁷⁶

⁷⁴ “CAR Says Ex-President Attempting ‘Coup’ as Rebels Form Coalition,” Al Jazeera (19 December 2020); Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 120.

⁷⁵ PEN International, PEN International Case List 2020 (London: PEN International, 2021), 40.

⁷⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 167; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 122; Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 165.

On 1 March 2021, an amendment to the 2018 Heroes and Martyrs' Protection Law came into force, allowing for people who "insulted, slandered, or infringed upon" the memory of China's national heroes and martyrs to be sentenced to up to three years in prison [See NCH Annual Reports 2018, 2021]. By October 2021, the amendment had reportedly been used at least fifteen times to punish people for insulting the history of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP).

In April 2021, a man in Beijing ([1958]–) was charged for mocking Navy fighter pilot Wang Wei who crashed in the South China Sea after colliding with an American surveillance aircraft in 2001. In October 2021, the authorities arrested a man in Nanchang after he posted an irreverent comment about the events surrounding the death of Mao Zedong's son in 1950. Former journalist Luo Changping responding to the movie blockbuster that depicted a major Chinese attack during the Korean War (1950–1953) known as "The Battle at Lake Changjin," was detained in Hainan after he wrote a blog questioning the rationale for China's intervention in that war and the catastrophic cost for those "volunteers" sent to fight and die in it. A woman named Xu ([1994]–) was sentenced to seven months in prison for mocking imitators of Dong Cunrui (1929–1948), a soldier in the People's Liberation Army who blew himself up during the Chinese Civil War (1927–1949) to destroy a bunker and who is seen by the CCP as a war hero.⁷⁷

On May 9, 2021, after roughly two years in state custody, Yuan Keqin, a Chinese professor of East Asian political history at Hokkaido University of Education (HUE), Japan, was allowed to meet with his legal counsel for the first time [See NCH Annual Report 2021].⁷⁸

On 31 May 2021, political commentator and former journalist Qiu Ziming ([1983]–), who had questioned the Chinese regime's transparency regarding a violent border clash between Chinese and Indian soldiers in June 2020, was sentenced to eight months in prison on the charge of "defaming heroes and martyrs" [See above].⁷⁹

On 1 August 2021, Yu Ying-shih (1930–2021) died. Yu, a student in the history department of Yenching University, Beijing, went to Hong Kong in 1950 for a reunion with his father, historian Yu Hsieh-chung and stayed there in exile. Yu studied under historian of ideas Qian Mu (1895–1990) at the newly founded New Asia College which he would head himself in 1973–1975. Yu became a professor of East Asian Studies and History at Princeton University (1987–2001). In 2006 he received the John Kluge

⁷⁷ Cate Cadell, "China Launches Hotline for Netizens to Report 'Illegal' History Comments," Reuters (11 April 2021); Joseph Brouwer, "The Historical Nihil-list: Cyberspace Administration Targets Top Ten Deviations From Approved History," China Digital Times (16 August 2021); Steven Lee Myers, "Shutting Down Historical Debate, China Makes It a Crime to Mock Heroes," New York Times (2 November 2021).

⁷⁸ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2021 (New York: SAR, 2021), 57.

⁷⁹ Reporters without Borders, The Great Leap Backwards of Journalism in China (Paris: RSF, 2021), 9.

Prize for the Study of Humanity. He advocated a new Confucianism. He often returned to the theme that China's long traditions could be a wellspring, not an enemy, of enlightenment, individual dignity, and democracy. He was probably China's best-known historian.⁸⁰

On 11 November 2021, the sixth plenary session of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) passed a resolution on China's history, confirming President Xi Jinping's leadership within the narrative of the CCP's 100-year history (1921–2021). It praised Xi's significance in propelling the nation into a "new era" of strength and summarized China's "historic achievements" reached under his leadership (2012–), with traumatic times like the famine (1959–1961) and purges acknowledged but not elaborated. The resolution would dictate how authorities teach China's modern history in textbooks, films, television shows and classrooms, and encouraged censors and police officers to apply laws against criticism of the CCP and its "martyrs." A 531-page official CCP history ([2021]) devoted over a quarter of its pages to Xi's term in office. In January 2013, Xi was quoted as saying: "To destroy a country, you must first eradicate its history," citing Qing scholar Gong Zizhen (1792–1841). In 2017, he had added his personal ideology, known as "Xi Jinping thought for socialism with Chinese characteristics in a new era," to the CCP charter.

Only three CCP resolutions on history were ever passed: the first, in 1945, gave full authority to Mao Zedong (1893–1976) as the leader of the future People's Republic of China (established in 1949); the second, passed in 1981 under Deng Xiaoping (1904–1997), criticized the "errors" made by Mao during the Cultural Revolution (1966–1976) and laid the foundation for economic reforms.⁸¹

In December 2021, Zhao Dexin ([1932]–), a retired professor of economic history at Zhongnan University of Economics and Law in Wuhan, won a copyright infringement case against the research publishing database China National Knowledge Infrastructure (CNKI), attracting huge publicity. Zhao claimed that CNKI had acquired his papers (through acquiring the journals they were published in) without informing or paying him. CNKI was ordered to pay CNY 700,000 (US$ 107,000) to Zhao in damages. Zhao's case was seen as a rare victory against the publishing platform.⁸²

⁸⁰ Library of Congress, "China Rediscovered Its Own History" (2007); "Yu Ying-shih," Wikipedia (retrieved 24 January 2010); Chris Buckley, "Ying-shih Yu, Renowned Scholar of Chinese Thought, Dies at 91," New York Times (10 August 2021).

⁸¹ Chris Buckley, "To Steer China's Future, Xi Is Rewriting Its Past," New York Times (7 September 2021); Vincent Ni, "Chinese Communist Party Elevates Xi's Status in 'Historical Resolution'," Guardian (11 November 2021); Christian Shepherd, "China Passes History Resolution to Enshrine Open-Ended Rule of Xi Jinping," Washington Post (11 November 2021); Waiyee Yip, "China's Xi Jinping Cements His Status with Historic Resolution," BBC News (12 November 2021).

⁸² Mimi Leung & Yojana Sharma, "Chinese Academy of Sciences Drops Huge Research Database," University World News (20 April 2022).

On 16 December 2021, Song Gengyi, a lecturer of journalism at Shanghai Aurora College (SAC), was dismissed because she had questioned the government's official death toll of 300,000 for the 1937 Nanking massacre. In a lecture, which was recorded by one of her students, leaked online and causing an online firestorm, Song called the death toll a "rough estimate that lacked statistical support" and said that the Chinese Communist Party was not interested in investigating it more thoroughly. SAC announced that she was dismissed because she had "made the wrong comments." When Li Tiantian, a school teacher in southern China, protested the dismissal on the internet, she was locked up in a mental hospital.

Also on 16 December, Gao Weijia, a staff member from Qingdao University, had her teaching license revoked and she was transferred to a non-teaching post after she had published an opinion on Weibo that people should "feel free to visit the Yasukuni Shrine," a controversial shrine in Tokyo honoring Japanese soldiers killed in wars since the nineteenth century and containing memorials for convicted war criminals [See NCH Annual Report 2021].⁸³

On 26 February 2022, five historians – Sun Jiang (Nanjing University), Wang Lixin (Peking University), Xu Guoqi (Hong Kong University), Zhong Weimin (Tsinghua University), and Chen Yan (Fudan University) – published an open letter on social media platform WeChat in which they condemned the 24 February 2022 Russian invasion of Ukraine and asked for an immediate end to the fighting. The letter was almost instantly removed by censors, but not before it had been viewed and commented upon – including attacking the historians on social media with some calling them spies or traitors. Xu later said that initially he had hoped that the letter would attract other scholars to sign up and that he did not expect it to be blocked so soon. He singled out "narrow and blind nationalism" as a risk for all countries.⁸⁴

In late March 2022, several provincial governments made it mandatory for university teachers to attend lectures to "correct" their views on the 24 February Russian invasion of Ukraine. The lectures would include topics such as "political corruption in Ukraine," how the United States caused the war and "how Nazis killed 14,000 people in Ukraine and Eastern Russia." It closely followed a recent Russian law on "false information" [See below].⁸⁵

⁸³ Mandy Zuo, "2 Mainland University Lecturers Punished for Comments Touching Sino-Japanese Sensitivities," South China Morning Post (17 December 2021); Ian Buruma, "Propaganda bij wijze van geschiedschrijving," NRC Handelsblad (21 January 2020).

⁸⁴ Yojana Sharma, "Academic Dissent Emerges on War in Ukraine but Is Censored," University World News (9 March 2022).

⁸⁵ Mimi Leung, "Political Education to Include Party View on Ukraine War," University World News (31 March 2022).

On 27 March 2022, postgraduate history student Sun Jian walked with two signs saying “Unblock Ludong” and “Resolutely oppose high nucleic acid testing for all staff” on the campus of Ludong University, Yantai, Shandong, for twenty minutes in order to protest against the university’s harsh COVID-19 lockdown and mass testing. The local Public Security Bureau issued a warning to him after he posted videos of himself holding up the placards, saying he had disrupted order and “incited students to boycott” the university’s measures in social media posts since December 2021. The university maintained that Sun’s behavior “seriously violated national laws” and expelled him.⁸⁶

On 3 June 2022, the eve of the 33rd anniversary of the Tiananmen Square massacre, Li Jiaqi, an influencer on Douyin with over 64 million followers and one China’s most popular online salesmen, had his livestream abruptly cut short when he appeared to present an ice-cream cake that looked like a tank – a reference to the Tank Man, one of the most recognizable symbols of the 1989 Tiananmen Square Massacre. An investigation was reportedly started. According to some, the abrupt cut of Li’s stream had led his mostly young audience to search for the massacre of which they had little previous knowledge, calling the censorious act the Li Jiaqi Paradox.⁸⁷

Hong Kong

In 2020, authorities had banned Hong Kong’s annual candlelight vigil to commemorate the Tiananmen Square massacre of 4 June 1989 on public health grounds related to the COVID-19 pandemic. However, tens of thousands of people had participated [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2021]. On 9 September 2021, a group of twelve people pled guilty to charges relating to the 2020 vigil. On 13 December, media tycoon Lai Chee-ying (also known as Jimmy Lai) (1947–), Chow Hang-tung [See below], opposition politician and former journalist Gwyneth Ho, Lee Cheuk-yan [See below], and four others – charged with inciting and taking part in an unlawful assembly – were sentenced to up to fourteen months in prison for organizing, taking part in, and inciting participation in the 2020 vigil. During the trial, Lai declared in a letter: “If commemorating those who died because of injustice is a crime, then inflict on me that crime and let me suffer the punishment ... so I may share the burden and glory of those young men and women who shed their blood on 4 June [1989].”

In 2021, authorities again banned the vigil on public health grounds, despite allowing other large scale open air events to take place. On 4 June, the day of the vigil, Hong Kong police arrested barrister and human rights activist Chow Hang Tung and charged her with “inciting others to knowingly participate in a banned rally,” after publishing a social media post asking people to commemorate the date in a private manner. On 4 January 2022, she was sentenced to fifteen months in prison, on top of the twelve months she had already been sentenced to [See above]. Chow appeared defiant during the hearing, reading from the memoirs of families of people killed at Tiananmen before being admonished by the judge.

⁸⁶ Mimi Leung, “Harsh Lockdown Curbs Prompt Student Protests, Expulsion,” University World News (8 April 2022).

⁸⁷ Frances Mao, “Li Jiaqi: China Lipstick King Sparks Tiananmen Questions,” BBC News (7 June 2022); Vincent Ni, “Li Jiaqi: Chinese Influencer’s Career Hangs in Balance After ‘Tank Cake’ Stream,” Guardian (9 June 2022).

On 8 September 2021, four senior leaders of the Hong Kong Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movement of China (established in 1989), which among others organized the annual vigil and ran the June 4th Museum, were arrested after the alliance, accused of working as a “foreign agent,” refused to hand over information, reportedly including personal details of all members and financial records since the Alliance’s foundation. The next day, authorities raided the museum, which had for years displayed information and historical items related to the 1989 massacre. The raid was carried out by the newly created national security unit. The museum had been closed down by officials in June [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. On 25 September, the Alliance announced that it would disband. The Alliance and its leaders, Lee Cheuk-yan, Albert Ho and Chow Hang-tung, were charged with “incitement to subversion” [See above]. The group denied that it was a threat to national security.⁸⁸

In the run-up to the 33rd anniversary massacre on 4 June 2022, authorities again announced a ban on the annual vigil in Hong Kong warning residents not to attend or organize any commemorative events or share any social media posts and threatening prosecution on the grounds of “incitement.” For the first time, the Catholic Diocese of Hong Kong decided against holding memorial masses citing safety concerns. One of its cardinals, ninety-year-old Joseph Zen, was in prison awaiting trial on charges of collusion with foreign forces. On 4 June, police officials arrested five men and one woman in the vicinity of Victoria Park, where the annual vigil had traditionally been held. They faced prison sentences of up to five years. Self-ruled Taiwan was one of the only parts of the Chinese-speaking world where the Tiananmen massacre could be commemorated openly, and on 4 June hundreds of people gathered in the capital Taipei. Taiwan’s President Tsai Ing-wen criticized the “collective memory of 4 June being systematically erased in Hong Kong.”⁸⁹

⁸⁸ Chris Yeung, “Hong Kong Will Be Dark on the Anniversary of the Massacre This 4 June as the National Security Law Bites,” Index on Censorship (3 June 2021); “Tiananmen: Hong Kong Vigil Organiser Arrested on 32nd Anniversary,” BBC News (4 June 2021); “Hong Kong: Tiananmen Vigil Organisers Arrested,” BBC News (8 September 2021); Helen Davidson, “Hong Kong Police Raid Tiananmen Massacre Museum,” Guardian (9 September 2021); “Hong Kong: Police Raid Tiananmen Square Museum,” BBC News (9 September 2021); “Hong Kong: Jimmy Lai Convicted for Taking Part in Tiananmen Vigil,” BBC News (9 December 2021); “Hong Kong: Media Tycoon Jimmy Lai Gets 13 Months Jail for Tiananmen Vigil,” BBC News (13 December 2021); “Hong Kong Tycoon Jimmy Lai Sentenced Over Banned Tiananmen Vigil,” Guardian (13 December 2021); “Hong Kong: Activist Gets 15-Month Jail Term for Tiananmen Vigil,” BBC News (4 January 2022); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 162; Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 129.

⁸⁹ Jemimah Steinfeld, “China’s Fifth Most Wanted Democracy Advocate Looks Back at Tiananmen,” Index on Censorship (1 June 2022); Erin Hale, “Police in Hong Kong Warn over Vigil as Tiananmen ‘Erased’,” Al Jazeera (3 June 2022); Helen Davidson, “Hong Kong Police Warn Tiananmen Anniversary Gatherings Will

On 1 March 2021, Patrick Li took up his government-appointed position as Radio Television Hong Kong's (RTHK) Director of Broadcasting. While in office, at least twelve new productions were pulled from the air at short notice and more than two hundred archived programs were removed from RTHK's YouTube channel. An episode of the political show LegCo Review, which included footage of an event commemorating the 1989 Tiananmen massacre, was removed from RTHK's archives for having been broadcasted without Li's "final approval."⁹⁰

In July 2021, the two-volume Through the Storm, written by independent historian Yu Ruxin ([1951]–), was published by New Century Press in Hong Kong. The book explained the role of the military, especially of Mao Zedong's designated successor, Marshal Lin Biao (1907–1971) during the Cultural Revolution (1966–1976). The publisher, Bao Pu, said that he would print only 1,000 copies and that he could not find a vendor willing to display the book at the Hong Kong Book Fair. Yu said that the one book that had appeared in mainland China about the People's Liberation Army in the Cultural Revolution had been withdrawn from sale soon after appearing in 1989.⁹¹

In October 2021, several thousand Hong Kong university students were the first to take compulsory courses on Hong Kong's 2020 national security law (which punished the crimes of "secession," "subversion," "terrorism," or "collusion with foreign forces" with up to life in prison). The courses stressed the need for greater patriotism and included the history of Hong Kong and China, highlighting the subjugation of China by foreign powers in the past, and referencing the existence of national security laws in large democratic countries such as the United States and the United Kingdom.⁹²

During the November 2021 launch of Disney's streaming service in Hong Kong, it became known that an episode of the satirical animated sitcom The Simpsons that made references to the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre was missing. In the episode, named "Goo Goo Gai Pan," the Simpsons visit Beijing, including Tiananmen Square where a sign reads: "On this site, in 1989, nothing happened" – a nod to official Chinese censorship of the massacre. They also visit the embalmed body of Mao Zedong, who is referred to as "a little angel that killed 50 million people." In October, Hong Kong's legislature had passed a new law banning films that violated China's national security interests.⁹³

Break the Law," Guardian (3 June 2022); "Tiananmen: Six Held in Hong Kong on Anniversary of Massacre," BBC News (5 June 2022); Oiwan Lam, "Tiananmen Massacre Vigils Are Banned in Hong Kong, though Memorials Persist across the World," Global Voices (5 June 2022).

⁹⁰ Reporters without Borders, The Great Leap Backwards of Journalism in China (Paris: RSF, 2021), 39; Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 130.

⁹¹ Chris Buckley, "Rescuing China's Muzzled Past, One Footnote at a Time," New York Times (25 July 2021).

⁹² Jessie Pang & Sara Cheng, "New Hong Kong University Classes Set Out Dangers of Breaking Security Law," Reuters (5 November 2021).

⁹³ "The Simpsons: Tiananmen Episode Not Found in Hong Kong," BBC News (29 November 2021).

On 22 December 2021, the University of Hong Kong (HKU) removed the Pillar of Shame statue from its campus and brought it to an undisclosed location. The statue, made by Danish sculptor Jens Galschiøt and installed in 1997, showed fifty anguished faces and tortured bodies piled on one another and had the texts “The Tiananmen Massacre,” “June 4th 1989,” and “The old cannot kill the young forever” engraved into its base. It had been a centerpiece of the annual 4 June vigil to commemorate the victims of the 1989 Tiananmen Square Massacre. In October, HKU had sent a letter to the Hong Kong Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements in China [See above] demanding the removal of the Pillar of Shame statue from its campus ground before 13 October, citing safety reasons and “legal risks” under Hong Kong’s colonial-era Crimes Ordinance. The deadline passed without the sculpture being removed from the campus. Galschiøt had declared that he owned the sculpture (which was on permanent loan to the Alliance), saying on 12 November 2021 that he wanted to bring it back but fearing arrest under the national security law. He considered suing the authorities and demanding compensation. In the run-up to the 33rd anniversary of the massacre, activists assembled a new version of the Pillar of Shame in Taiwan.

On [23] December 2021, the Chinese University of Hong Kong (CUHK) tore down a Goddess of Democracy statue (modelled in 2010 after the original statue erected by Chinese students in 1989 and paraded in Tiananmen Square just before the 4 June crackdown), while Lingnan University removed a Tiananmen wall relief sculpture. Both universities, like HKU, cited “legal and safety risks” to explain the removals. On 28 February 2022, CUHK told USA-based Chen Weiming, the sculptor behind the Goddess of Democracy statue [See NCH Annual Report 2011], to bear all legal liability and costs if he wanted the statue back. In the run-up to the 2022 anniversary of the 1989 massacre, students at Hong Kong university hid tiny figures of a “democracy goddess,” modeled after the statue, around the campus.

In [January 2022], HKU covered up the “martyrs’ slogan” – a three-decade-old tradition in which HKU students would annually repaint a slogan in Chinese characters reading “The souls of the martyrs shall forever linger despite the cold-blooded massacre” in commemoration of the victims of the 1989 Tiananmen Square Massacre – on the HKU Swire Bridge.⁹⁴

⁹⁴ “Hong Kong: University Orders Tiananmen Statue’s Removal,” BBC News (8 October 2021); “Hong Kong University Orders Removal of Tiananmen Square Massacre Statue,” Guardian (9 October 2021); Mimi Leung, “Tiananmen Sculpture Row a ‘Litmus Test for HE Autonomy,’” University World News (14 October 2021); Reuters, “Danish Sculptor Seeks Legal Protection to Pick Up Tiananmen Statue from Hong Kong,” Guardian (12 November 2021); Rhoda Kwan & Vincent Ni, “Outcry as Hong Kong University Memorial to Tiananmen Square Victims Is Removed,” Guardian (23 December 2021); “Pillar of Shame: Hong Kong’s Tiananmen Square Statue Removed,” BBC News (23 December 2021); “Hong Kong Universities Remove More Monuments Marking Tiananmen,” BBC News (24 December 2021); Mimi Leung & Yojana Sharma, “Removing Campus Tiananmen Artworks ‘Obliterates History,’” World University News (5 January 2022); “Hong Kong: One of City’s Last Tiananmen Square Memorials Covered Up,” BBC News (29 January 2022); Hillary Leung, “Chinese University of Hong Kong Tells Tiananmen Artist to Bear All Legal Liability and Costs If He Wants Statue Back,” Hong Kong Free Press (17 March 2022); “Artist Says University of Hong Kong May Allow Retrieval of Removed Tiananmen Statue, though Shunned by Crane Firms,” Hong Kong

On 10 May 2022, Hui Po-keung, a cultural studies scholar at Lingnan University, Hong Kong, was arrested for “collusion with foreign forces” under the national security law while on his way to take up an academic post in Europe. Hui was a trustee of the 612 Humanitarian Relief Fund, which helped arrested democracy protesters pay for their legal and medical bills (and which was disbanded shortly before the arrest). In 2021, Lingnan University had dismissed Hui but declined to state a reason on personal privacy grounds. Hui had published several historical articles, such as “Comprador Politics and Middleman Capitalism” (1999) and, with others, “Historical Capitalism, East and West” (2003).⁹⁵

In June 2022, the authorities announced new textbooks that would teach students that Hong Kong had never been a British colony, but that the British only “exercised colonial rule,” a distinction intended to suggest China’s unbroken sovereignty over Hong Kong – a move mirroring previous decisions to deny the past independence of Xinjiang and Tibet. The United Kingdom had governed the area between 1841–1941 and from 1945 until 1997, after which it handed back the territory to China. Already in 2020, government museums had been forced to erase descriptions of Hong Kong as a British colony.⁹⁶

Xinjiang

To the list of historians and related professionals imprisoned since 2015 in Xinjiang [See NCH Annual Report 2021], the following should be added:

- In July 2009, Niyaz Kahar (Qahar) (1975–), a journalist and blogger, was detained by security officials in Urumqi. Kahar was the founder of the Uyghur language website Golden Tarim, where he authored articles on Uyghur history, politics and culture. In a closed trial, Kahar was sentenced to thirteen years in prison for “publish[ing] illegal news and propagate[ing] ideas of ethnic separatism on his website.” His family was only allowed to visit him for fifteen minutes every four months. In September 2015, his mother had warned that his health was deteriorating in prison.⁹⁷
- On 28 June 2015, the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) officially started an investigation into Alimjan Memtimin (1959-), a former Deputy Director General of the Xinjiang Education Department and high-profile local politician. On 28 February 2016, he was stripped of his CCP membership, and

Free Press (8 April 2022); “Hundreds Gather in Taiwan to Mark Tiananmen Square Anniversary,” Guardian (4 June 2022); Frances Mao, “Tiananmen: Hong Kong Students Hide Tiny ‘Democracy Goddesses’ on Campus,” BBC News (4 June 2022).

⁹⁵ “Hong Kong Protest Defence Fund Trustee Hui Po-keung Arrested at Airport – Sources,” Hong Kong Free Press (10 May 2022).

⁹⁶ Frances Mao, “Hong Kong: New School Books Claim Territory Was Not a British Colony,” BBC News (15 June 2022); Jemimah Steinfeld, “Beijing Is Rewriting Hong Kong’s Handover History. We Must Not Allow It,” Index on Censorship (21 June 2022).

⁹⁷ Congressional-Executive Commission on China, China: List of Political Prisoners Detained or Imprisoned as of October 11, 2018 \(1424 cases\) (October 2018), 539; “Niyaz Kahar,” Shahit.biz (1 January 2020).

sentenced to life in prison for assisting “separatist forces” by “distorting historical facts,” allegedly in connection to his role in producing Uyghur textbooks containing historical figures. He was listed together with Sattar Sawut, an editor at the Xinjian Education Department who was sentenced to death with a two-year reprieve in 2020, as a “two-faced” official plotting separatism [See NCH Annual Report 2021].

Details about the textbooks were presented in a 2 April 2021 documentary entitled “The War in the Shadows: Challenges of Fighting Terrorism in Xinjiang,” by CGTN (China Global Television Network, the overseas arm of state broadcaster CCTV, China Central Television) in a ten-minute segment. It included on-camera “confessions” by Memtimin and Sawut. The documentary claimed that the portrayal of revolutionary Uyghur leader Ehmetjan Qasimi (1914–1949) and Uyghur hero Gheni Batur (1902–1981) in textbooks for primary and middle schools constituted acts of terrorism and separatism, and that the story of the “Yette qizlirim” (Seven girls), telling of a local rebellion against the Qing Dynasty in eighteenth-century East Turkestan, was similarly “terroristic” in nature. The textbooks were published and republished only after high-level approval and not considered problematic until 2017. Kamaltürk Yalqun, the son of Yalqun Rozi, one of the detained textbook editors [See NCH Annual Report 2021], said that the passages highlighted by the government were about old historical tales and figures that had nothing to do with terrorism.⁹⁸

- In [2016], Peyzulla Ablimit, a history graduate from Xinjiang University, was detained, after having attempted to visit his wife and children in Turkey.⁹⁹
- On 19 July 2016, public security authorities detained Zhang Xiaoxiong and Dai Xuelin for selling and advertising banned books imported from Hong Kong and Taiwan, including How the Red Sun Rose, a history of the Chinese Communist Party. Zhang was sentenced to three and a half years and Dai to five years in prison.¹⁰⁰
- On 8 December 2016, Xiong Yingxue (pen name: Xiong Feijun), an independent scholar and blogger, was detained and kept in Hubei province until his release on bail on 13 January 2017. For the first weeks he was not allowed to see a lawyer. Xiong had authored several books about Chinese history and contemporary affairs.¹⁰¹

⁹⁸ “Alimjan Memetimin,” Shahit.biz (18 May 2021); “China Condemns 2 Ex-Xinjiang Officials in Separatism Cases,” AP News (7 April 2021); Huizhong Wu, “A Uyghur Gets Death Sentence, as China Bans Once OK’d Books,” AP News (1 February 2022); Uyghur Human Rights Project, Briefing: The Disappearance of Uyghur Intellectual and Cultural Elites (Washington, UHRP, 2021), 14–15; Bradley Jardine, Great Wall of Steel: China’s Global Campaign to Suppress the Uyghurs (Washington: Wilson Center, 2022), 7–8.

⁹⁹ Jilil Kashgary, “Four Uyghurs Facing Persecution After Deportation by Saudi Arabia to China Identified,” Radio Free Asia (16 October 2020); “Peyzulla Ablimit,” Shahit.biz (20 February 2021).

¹⁰⁰ Congressional-Executive Commission on China, China: List of Political Prisoners Detained or Imprisoned as of October 11, 2018 \(1424 cases\) (October 2018), 271.

¹⁰¹ Congressional-Executive Commission on China, China: List of Political Prisoners Detained or Imprisoned as of October 11, 2018 \(1424 cases\) (October 2018), 303.

- In 2017, Tursunjan Hezim, a former high school history teacher and author of several articles on Uyghur history and local regional history, was again detained [See NCH Annual Report 2011]. His whereabouts were unknown.¹⁰²
- In 2017, Akber Ebeydulla (Ekber Abaidulla), a history researcher and former official with the Kashgar Department of Cultural Heritage, was interned, allegedly because he had been “too proud” while explaining Uyghur cultural heritage to foreigners. Ebeydulla had received multiple awards for his work at both the prefectural and regional levels.¹⁰³
- In [2017], historian, calligrapher, and theologian Ehmetjan [Exmet] Momin Tarimi was detained. Momin was the director and senior editor at the historical cultures department of the Xinjiang People’s Press, the author of Statement on the History of Uyghur Historiography (2014) and Uchturpan: The Pearl on the Silk Road (2015) and more than seventy articles, and translator of more than thirty books into Uyghur (including the General History of the World and the banned Ruining the Pipe Dream of the East Turkestan State (2007), written in Chinese by Ma Dazheng and Shu Jianying). Tarimi had participated in various international conferences in Germany and Turkey before his detention. He was simultaneously pursuing a Ph.D. in history at Nanjing University, nearly completing a doctoral dissertation on Yaqub Beg (1820–1877), a statesman who established an independent state called the Kingdom of Kashgaria in 1864.¹⁰⁴
- In 2017, Abbas Muniyaz ([1966/7]-), a writer of more than twenty books about Uyghur literature and history, was allegedly detained in Urumqi.¹⁰⁵
- In April 2017, Abdugheni Abdulla, a bookstore owner in Kashgar, was allegedly sentenced to seven years in a closed trial. The official verdict remained unknown, but his bookstore was searched after his arrest, suggesting that his arrest was related to the selling of banned books, including the historical novels Iz and Oyghnaghan Zemin. Around the same time, his son and co-owner of the store, Mawlanjan Abdugheni was also arrested.¹⁰⁶
- In May 2017, Ehmetjan Jume, a political scientist and director of the Konash eher No. 1 High School in Kashgar, was detained for two years at a camp in Opal Township, after which he was sentenced to ¹⁰² Nabijan Tursun & Rachel Vandenbrink, “Uyghur Historian Given 7 Years,” Radio Free Asia (6 March 2011); “Uyghur Website Editor Sentenced in Secret in China,” Committee to Protect Journalists (10 March 2011); Ifex Alert (11 March 2011); PEN, Half-Yearly Caselist To 30 June 2011 (London: PEN, 2011), 45; International PEN, Caselist – January to June 2012 (London: PEN, 2012), 28–29; Uyghur World Congress, “Tursunjan Hezim” (4 August 2011); Pen International Writers In Prison Committee, Caselist (January–December 2014), 142; Uyghur Human Rights Project, The Persecution of the Intellectuals in the Uyghur Region: Disappeared Forever? (October 2018); “Tursunjan Hezim,” Shahit.biz (2 October 2020).

¹⁰³ Shohret Hoshur & Joshua Lipes, “Uyghur Detainee in BBC Video Report on Xinjiang Camps Identified as Cultural Official,” Radio Free Asia (29 July 2019); Abduweli Ayup, “List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present” (13 March 2021).

¹⁰⁴ “Ehmetjan Momin,” Shahit.biz (11 April 2021); Uyghur Human Rights Project, Briefing: The Disappearance of Uyghur Intellectual and Cultural Elites (Washington, UHRP, 2021), 11–13.

¹⁰⁵ Uyghur Human Rights Project, The Persecution of the Intellectuals in the Uyghur Region: Disappeared Forever? (October 2018); “Abbas Muniyaz,” Shahit.biz (2 October 2020).

¹⁰⁶ “Mawlanjan Abdugheni,” Shahit.biz (21 April 2019); “Abdugheni Abdulla,” Shahit.biz (10 April 2020).

approximately fourteen years in prison. Jume was the author of multiple high-school textbooks, including The World and Me, Society and Me, and History and Me. In 2006, he was detained for a month, during which he was allegedly tortured. Between July and November 2009 he had been detained again after having tried to get a visa for the United States.¹⁰⁷

- On 17 May 2017, Zhazira Qalyasqar was detained and sentenced to ten years in prison for keeping books about Kazakh history at her house and listening and reading speeches and books from Kazakh activists.¹⁰⁸
- In July 2017, Abdusemet Muhemmedomer, a history student at Al-Azhar university in Egypt, disappeared after having been deported back, presumably to Kashgar. He had been studying in Egypt for ten months before his deportation.¹⁰⁹
- In October 2017, Reyhangul Imam ([1987/8]–), a history teacher at Kizilsu No. 1 High School was detained, and in March 2018 sentenced to twelve years in prison.¹¹⁰
- On 15 November 2017, public security officials detained Ye Jianke, Zhang Yunfan, Sun Tingting, and Zheng Yongming for attending a book club at Guangdong University of Technology in the Panyu district. Participants had discussed Chinese politics and history, including the 1989 Tiananmen Square Massacre. Four other participants were placed on a fugitive list.¹¹¹
- Since December 2017, Qurban Mahmut ([1950]–), who had been the vice chief editor of Xinjiang Civilization (1985–2011) in charge of selecting for publication the most influential works on Uyghur culture, politics and history, was believed to have been detained.¹¹²
- In January 2018, Azat Sultan (1950–), former Vice President of the Chinese Uyghur Historical and Cultural Scientific Association and author of History of 20th Century Uyghur Literature, was detained, allegedly for having displayed “two-faced tendencies.” He was released in May 2019.¹¹³
- In February 2018, Feng Siyu ([1994/5]–) was sentenced to two years in prison. One year before, in February 2017, she had returned to Xinjiang University’s Minorities Folklore Research Center to work as a translator with Rahile Dawut ([1966]–), the Center’s founder [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. Feng

¹⁰⁷ Shohret Hoshur & Joshua Lipes, “Uyghur School Director, Brother of RFA Reporter Jailed For 14 Years After Stint in Xinjiang Camp,” Radio Free Asia (3 May 2021); “Ehmetjan Jume,” Shahit.biz (15 June 2021).

¹⁰⁸ “Zhazira Qalyasqar,” Shahit.biz (21 March 2019).

¹⁰⁹ Uyghur Human Rights Project, Detained and Disappeared: Intellectuals Under Assault in the Uyghur Homeland (March 2019); “Abdusemet Muhemmedomer,” Shahit.biz (16 February 2021).

¹¹⁰ “Reyhangul Imam,” Shahit.biz (16 June 2021).

¹¹¹ Congressional-Executive Commission on China, China: List of Political Prisoners Detained or Imprisoned as of October 11, 2018 \(1424 cases\) (October 2018), 167, 172.

¹¹² PEN International, PEN International Case List 2020 (London: PEN International, 2021), 86.

¹¹³ Shohret Hoshur & Joshua Lipes, “Five Uyghur Professors from Xinjiang University Held in Political ‘Re-education Camps’” Radio Free Asia (18 September 2018); Shohret Hoshur & Joshua Lipes, “Uyghur Former Xinjiang University Vice President Detained For ‘Two-Faced’ Tendencies,” Radio Free Asia (24 September 2018); “Azat Sultan,” Shahit.biz (1 July 2021).

had studied history at Amherst College, Massachusetts, and Uyghur at Indiana University in the United States. Her current whereabouts were unknown.¹¹⁴

The government systematically attempted to destroy Uyghur heritage sites [See NCH Annual Report 2020]. Many mazars (sacred sites, often graves) had been destroyed since 2018. For more than two decades, the authorities had prevented mass pilgrimages (seyla) to the mazars and had closed the sites off for religious worship. Somewhere between 10 and 17 March 2018, the mazar of Imam Je'firi Sadiq, a founding father of Islam, in Niya was demolished. Satellite images further indicated the destruction of the Ordam Padishah mazar in Yengisar, the biggest in Xinjiang. Sometime between December 2017 and April 2019 the khaniqah (Sufi meeting place) and all other buildings of the Imam Ashim shrine in Hotan were torn down, leaving only the tomb of Imam Asim (Hashim), one of the first Islamic missionaries in China (ca. 1000 CE).

In addition, authorities destroyed more than a hundred Uyghur graveyards, including many smaller mazars that lay adjacent to them (as people often wanted to be buried near the mazar sites), with the sites having been turned into parks or parking lots, or remaining empty. In 2019, the Sultanim Maziri cemetery in Hotan, named after four commanders of the Kashgar Kara-Khanid Khanate (840–1212 CE) who had conquered Hotan and spread Islam in the then-Buddhist kingdom and were buried there around 960 CE, was destroyed and turned into a parking area. The gravesite of the Uyghur poet and journalist Lutpulla Mutellip (1922–1945), one of the most important figures in modern Uyghur literature, was razed and made into a theme park [See NCH Annual Report 2021].

Thousands of mosques were either razed or transformed into restaurants or hotels, including the most important mosques of Karghalik and Keriya, as part of a “rectification” campaign that had demolished nearly seventy percent of mosques in the city of Kashgar, since late 2016, and an unknown number of mosques in other parts of Xinjiang. In October 2019, the Uyghur Human Rights Project presented evidence of the complete or partial destruction of over hundred mosques by the authorities, citing a report of the destruction of 5,000 mosques in three months as part of the 2016 Mosque Rectification Program. In 2019, authorities in Ghulja leased the city’s oldest mosque (the “Uzbek Mosque”) to a Han-Chinese businessman from Beijing, who turned it into a hotel. In August 2020, the Tokul mosque was demolished to make room for a public toilet in the city of Atush. In the same month, the construction of a Hampton hotel started in Hotan, on the site of a razed mosque. In October, Asahi Shimbun reported that several mosques in Urumqi and Kashgar had been turned into restaurants for tourists [See NCH Annual Report 2021].

Authorities also removed a number of statues. Sometime between November 2019 and December 2020, the statue of Mahmud Kashgari (1005–1102), one of most important scholars of the Turkic world who had compiled the “Grand Turkish Dictionary,” was removed from the grounds of a mazar dedicated to him in Kashgar. The move came after a statue by Ghazibay (460–375), a pioneer of Uyghur medical science, had been taken down in front of the Hospital of Uyghur Medicine in Urumqi between October 2017 and March 2018. The site had thereafter been used for flag-raising ceremonies, the singing of patriotic songs and other forms of compulsory Chinese Communist Party–led education. In July 2017, the statue of Hussayn Khan Akbar Tejelli (1856–early 20th century), an Uyghur poet and medical scholar, was taken away from the grounds of the Kargilik County Hospital of Uyghur Medicine in Kashgar. At the same time, authorities built new heritage sites, commemorating historical periods that fitted the official Han-dominated narrative.¹¹⁵

¹¹⁴ Yael Grauer, “Revealed: Massive Chinese Police Database,” The Intercept (29 January 2021); “Feng Siyu,” Shahit.biz (2 June 2021).

Through a policy known as “becoming family,” government officials were reportedly sent to stay in Uyghur homes to control bans on cultural practices (e.g., owning Uyghur-language books or wearing traditional clothing).

In 2022, a huge cache of documents including more than 5,000 photographs of Uyghurs taken between January and July 2018 and hacked from police computer servers in Xinjiang was published under the name “Xinjiang Police Files” by a consortium of fourteen media organizations. The documents provided evidence for a policy targeting almost any expression of Uyghur identity, culture or Islamic faith – and of a chain of command running all the way up to President Xi Jinping. One official document reportedly described the purpose of the so-called “re-education centers” built since 2014 as to “break their lineage, break their roots, break their connections, and break their origins.”¹¹⁶

On 9 January 2022, Haji Mirzahid Kerim [Kerimi] ([1939/40]–2022), a writer and retired editor at Kashgar Uyghur Press, died while serving a prison sentence, reportedly in the hospital after an incident

¹¹⁵ Lily Kuo, “Revealed: New Evidence of China’s Mission to Raze the Mosques of Xinjiang,” Guardian (7 May 2019); Bahram Sintash, “China Destroyed a One Thousand Years Old Cemetery Along With Others in XUAR in March 2019,” Uyghur Cultural Heritage Preservation (1 July 2019); “Satellite Images Reveal China Is Destroying Muslim Graveyards Where Generations of Uighur Families Are Buried and Replacing Them with Car Parks and Playgrounds ‘to Eradicate the Ethnic Group’s Identity’,” Daily Mail (9 October 2019); “UHRP Report: Demolishing Faith: The Destruction and Desecration of Uyghur Mosques and Shrines,” Uyghur Human Rights Project (28 October 2019); Bahram Sintash, Demolishing Faith: The Destruction and Desecration of Uyghur Mosques and Shrines (Uyghur Human Rights Project: Washington, 2019), 2; Rian Thum, “The Spatial Cleansing of Xinjiang: Mazar Desecration in Context,” Made in China (24 August 2020); Bahram Sintash & Joshua Lipes, “Xinjiang Authorities Remove Statue of Revered Uyghur Scholar Mahmut Kashgari,” Radio Free Asia (2 December 2020); Mihray Abdilim & Joshua Lipes, “Mosque in Xinjiang’s Ghulja City Repurposed as Hotel,” Radio Free Asia (29 April 2021); Sophia Yan, “Hilton Hotel to Be Built in Xinjiang after China Bulldozes Mosque,” The Telegraph (12 June 2021); Magnus Fiskesjö, “Bulldozing Culture: China’s Systematic Destruction of Uyghur Heritage Reveals Genocidal Intent,” Cultural Property News (23 June 2021); Dale Berning Sawa, “‘This Is Our Voice’: The Uyghur Traditions Being Erased by China’s Cultural Crackdown,” Guardian (10 December 2021).

¹¹⁶ Ben Dooley, “Inside China’s Internment Camps: Tear Gas, Tasers and Textbooks,” AFP (25 October 2018); Dale Berning Sawa, “‘This Is Our Voice’: The Uyghur Traditions Being Erased by China’s Cultural Crackdown,” Guardian (10 December 2021); John Sudworth, “The Faces from China’s Uyghur Detention Camps,” BBC News (24 May 2022).

in which he had “jumped and fell.” In [November 2018], he had been sentenced to eleven years in prison, despite a serious health condition, reportedly for writing about Uyghur history and historians and for a speech on an event which was dedicated to his life [See NCH Annual Report 2021].¹¹⁷

See also Cambodia, Czech Republic, Japan, Lithuania, United States, Vietnam.

COLOMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2004, 2006–2021.

On 18 October 2021, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights ruled that journalist Jineth Bedoya suffered “grave verbal, physical and sexual aggression” for which the state was responsible. On 25 May 2000, Bedoya had been abducted in Bogotá, after which she was tortured and raped. In March 2021, during the hearing of Bedoya’s testimony, the government had withdrawn its representatives and objected to five of the six judges, but resumed participation after widespread backlash. A [2021] report by the National Center of Historical Memory estimated that more than 13,500 women had been victims of sexual violence between 1985 and 2016.¹¹⁸

On 28 June 2022, the Commission for Clarification of the Truth, Coexistence and Non-Repetition (CEV) – established as a result of the 2016 peace accords reached between the government and the largest rebel group, Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) – launched its report on the causes and consequences of Colombia’s conflict (1948–2016). The report made recommendations about the role of the security forces, denouncing the concept of the “internal enemy” and the systematic victimization of the political left, and condemning decades of punitive counternarcotics programs pushed and backed by the United States.¹¹⁹

See also Cuba.

¹¹⁷ Shohret Hoshur, “Elderly Former Editor of Uyghur Publishing House Jailed Over ‘Problematic’ Books, Speech,” Radio Free Asia (28 November 2018); Simina Mistreanu, “The Capital of Xinjiang Is Now in Turkey,” Foreign Policy (30 September 2019); Uyghyr Yardem, “Detained & Imprisoned Literary Artists,” Shohret Hoshur & Joshua Lipes, “Prominent Uyghur Poet and Author Confirmed to Have Died While Imprisoned,” Radio Free Asia (25 January 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2021), 163.

¹¹⁸ Joe Parkin Daniels, “Colombia Found Responsible for 2000 Kidnap and Torture of Journalist,” Guardian (19 October 2021).

¹¹⁹ Michael Evans (ed.), “‘There is Future if There Is Truth’: Colombia’s Truth Commission Launches Final Report,” National Security Archive (28 June 2022).

CONGO (Democratic Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2000, 2003–2021.

In August 2021, the government of President Felix Tshisekedi established a commission tasked with delivering a roadmap for transitional justice, but it had yet to fully commit to ending impunity for past and current serious crimes. Military courts and other tribunals adjudicating cases of war crimes and crimes against humanity had made little progress [See NCH Annual Report 2021].¹²⁰

CONGO (Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004–2006, 2008, 2010–2012, 2019.

COSTA RICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

See Honduras, Nicaragua.

CÔTE D’IVOIRE

See Ivory Coast.

CROATIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2001, 2003–2013, 2015–2021.

In January 2021, politician-turned-writer Vladimir Šeks sued the Croatian state before the European Court for Human Rights (ECHR), because he had been denied access to transcripts of conversations from former President Franjo Tuđman (1922–1999; in office between 1990 and 1999) that he needed for a book he was writing on the foundation of modern Croatia, and the disclosure of which was in the public interest. Šeks had been denied access to the documents that were held in the Office of the President of Croatia, on the grounds that they were a state secret – a decision confirmed by Croatia’s Administrative and Constitutional Courts. On 3 February 2022, the ECHR ruled that there had been no violation of Šeks’s right to free expression, including to receive and impart information and ideas without interference by public authority – because the “interference with the applicant’s freedom of access to information had been necessary and proportionate to the important aim of national security.”¹²¹

¹²⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2021), 200.

On 23 November 2021, the parliamentary committee for war veterans’ affairs endorsed a proposal to establish a military graveyard in Zagreb for Ustaša and Home Guard soldiers who fought for the Independent State of Croatia (1941–1945), a puppet state of the Axis powers, and to describe them as members of the Croatian army. The proposal was condemned by anti-Fascist organizations and some committee members. Approximately 380,000–400,000 people were killed by the Ustaše regime.¹²²

On 14 June 2022, Chief Prosecutor of the International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals Serge Brammertz criticized the government for blocking justice and failing to cooperate with prosecutors in Bosnia and Herzegovina and Serbia over crimes committed during the Yugoslav wars of succession (1991–1995), reporting that “there is a widespread impression that in Croatia there is a will to pursue justice for Croatian victims but not for victims of other ethnicities.”¹²³

See also Serbia.

CUBA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2002, 2006, 2010–2012, 2015–2016, 2018, 2021.

On 4 February 2021, art historian and anti-censorship activist Carolina Barrero was arrested after she had handed in a demand, signed by 1252 artists and intellectuals, for the dismissal of Minister of Culture Alpidio Alonso the day before. She was released the same day after a long interrogation. On 6 February, ¹²¹ European Court of Human Rights, Case of Šeks v. Croatia (Application no. 39325/20) (3 February 2022); Matea Grgurinovic, “ECHR Backs Croatia’s Right to Keep Tadjman Documents Secret,” Balkan Insight (3 February 2022).

¹²² Matea Grgurinovic, “Croatian Anti-Fascists Criticise Memorial Graveyard for Nazi-Allied Troops,” Balkan Insight (25 November 2021).

¹²³ International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals, Address of Mr. Serge Brammertz, Prosecutor, International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals, to the United Nations Security Council, 14 June 2022 (14 June 2022), 3.

she was again summoned and interrogated for the alleged crime of “clandestine printing.” She was accused of making and disseminating drawings of José Martí (1853–1895), a writer and national hero of the nineteenth-century liberation movement, wearing a shirt with stars. She was urged to return to Spain, where she resided, and her house in Old Havana was searched. The printed drawings of Martí and some pages with signatures demanding Alonso’s resignation were seized. She could face up to nine months in prison. On 25 March 2021, the case was shelved.¹²⁴

On [24] June 2022, Luis Manuel Otero Alcantará, a prominent member of the artistic collective Movimiento San Isidro, was sentenced to five years’ imprisonment for, among others, defamation of the national flag. In February 2022, he had been charged with “insulting national symbols” for his 2019 performance Drapeau, in which he carried the national flag with him 24 hours a day for a month. In March 2020, the National Symbols Law had taken effect, restricting the use of national symbols to developing “patriotic awareness” and “veneration” for the “historical tradition of the nation” [See NCH Annual Report 2021].¹²⁵

On 25 June 2022, art historian and political activist Omara Ruiz Urquiola ([1973]–) was forbidden re-entry in Cuba after a stay of eighteen months in the United States for cancer treatment. In July 2019, she had been dismissed as a lecturer in Cuban culture and the history of design at the Instituto Superior de Diseño (Higher Institute of Design) of the University of La Habana. In the summer of 2020 she had co-founded the Observatorio de Libertad Académica (Academic Freedom Observatory) in Bogotá together with researchers from the Universidad Sergio Arboleda in Colombia with the purpose of documenting human rights violations against students and academics in Cuba since 1959 (when Fidel Castro took power). In late 2020, she had participated in the protests of artists of the Movimiento San Isidro to ask for respect for human rights [See above].¹²⁶

¹²⁴ “Cuban Activist Arbitrarily Arrested over a Letter Calling for the Resignation of Alpidio Alonso as Minister of Culture,” Democratic Spaces (4 February 2021); “The Political Police Threaten Carolina Barrero and ‘Advise’ Her to Leave Cuba,” Translating Cuba (8 February 2021); “The Case in Cuba against Carolina Barrero for ‘Clandestine Printed Matter’ Has Been Shelved,” Translating Cuba (25 March 2021).

¹²⁵ “Cuban Court Sentences Two Dissident Artists to Prison Terms,” Al Jazeera (24 June 2022); “Prison or Exile: Cuba’s Systematic Repression of July 2021 Demonstrators,” Human Rights Watch (11 July 2022).

¹²⁶ Valentina Oropeza Colmenares, “Omara Ruiz Urquiola, la profesora a la que Cuba no deja regresar,” BBC News (7 July 2022).

CYPRUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2005, 2008–2011, 2013, 2015–2018, 2021.

On 6 September 2021, the Ministry of Education sent an instruction urging all English teachers to tear out page 36 from the English Oxford Discover Futures 3 Workbook before handing it out to second-grade lyceum students. The text on page 36 presented Mustafa Kemal Atatürk (1881–1938), Turkey’s founder and first president (1923–1938), as “Turkey’s most important hero.” The ministry called the text “unacceptable” because it praised Atatürk as an example of leadership, citing crimes against minorities, such as Armenians, Pontians and Assyrians, and the “ethnic cleansing” of Hellenism in Smyrna and elsewhere. After a wave of criticism, including from secondary education teachers’ union Oelmek, the ministry decided on 8 September to withdraw the textbook altogether.¹²⁷

CZECH REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2010, 2013–2021.

In November 2021, head of the presidential office Vratislav Mynář allegedly ordered the shredding of classified intelligence documents related to the 2014 sabotage of a munition depot in Vrbětice by Russian military intelligence officers that killed two people. President Miloš Zeman was considered one of the European Union’s most Kremlin-friendly leaders.¹²⁸

In late May 2022, a panel on memory politics in China hosting Zhou Fengsuo, a student who had participated in the 1989 Tiananmen Square protests and number five on China’s most wanted list, and dissident artist Badiucao was interrupted when the Chinese embassy called the event’s curator threatening that the event would damage Czech–Chinese relations. The curator ignored the call.¹²⁹

See also Slovakia.

¹²⁷ Stavros Nikolaou, “Ministry Withdraws Textbook over Ataturk Reference \(Update 3\),” Cyprus Mail (8 September 2021).

¹²⁸ Tony Wesolowsky, “Czech PM’s Remarks on 2014 Blasts Trigger Outrage, Underscore Split over Russia Ties,” RFE/RL (20 April 2021); Ian Willoughby, “Zeman’s Office Chief Personally Ordered Shredding of Sought Documents,” Radio Prague International (28 March 2022).

¹²⁹ Jemimah Steinfeld, “China’s Fifth Most Wanted Democracy Advocate Looks Back at Tiananmen,” Index on Censorship (1 June 2022).

DENMARK

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2007, 2013, 2016–2020.

On 15 February 2022, Danish Prime Minister Mette Frederiksen delivered a final apology in Nuuk, Greenland, for Denmark's role in an experiment in which twenty-two Greenland Inuit children aged 4 to 9 were taken away from their families to raise them in Denmark in 1951, with the aim of creating a new Greenlandic elite by raising the children with a Danish mindset and returning them to Greenland to act as role models for other children. In December 2020, Denmark had issued a written apology for its role in the experiment following an investigation published a month prior. Six children of the experiment who were still alive had sued Denmark for violating their privacy. The parties settled the case in February, with Denmark paying each of them about $37,000.¹³⁰

DJIBOUTI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013.

¹³⁰ Lasse Sørensen, "Denmark Issues Final Apology for 1950s Social Experiment on Inuit Children from Greenland," Courthouse News (15 March 2022).

ECUADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2007, 2009–2021.

EGYPT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2001, 2003, 2006–2007, 2010–2021.

On 11 July 2021, security forces arrested Alia Mosallam, a historian and postdoctoral fellow at the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation, Germany. Flown to Cairo from Berlin with her husband and three children, she was held at the airport for seventeen hours and interrogated several times by intelligence officers. No official reason was given by the security services for her detention.¹³¹

In February 2022, authorities took a collection of Jewish documents from the al-Basatin cemetery, believed to be the second-oldest Jewish cemetery in the world dating back to the ninth century, without following the normal procedures and without consulting representatives from the Jewish community. Authorities claimed that they were afraid that the documents might otherwise be smuggled out of Egypt.¹³²

See also China, Morocco.

EL SALVADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2021.

On 31 August 2021, the Legislative Assembly approved changes to the Law of Judicial Careers and the Organic Law of the Attorney General's Office without the required plenary debate. The law would force judges and prosecutors to retire once they turned sixty or after completing thirty years of service, affecting one-third of all judges and dozens of prosecutors. One of the judges forced to retire in September 2021 was Jorge Guzmán, who led the trial of the 1981 El Mozote Massacre [See NCH

¹³¹ "Egyptian Academic Briefly Detained upon Arrival at Cairo Airport," Middle East Eye (12 July 2021); Ebby Abramson, "Alia Mosallam, Egyptian Academic Detained upon Arrival at Cairo Airport," Endangered Scholars Worldwide (20 July 2021).

¹³² Batya Jerenberg, "Egyptian Authorities Confiscate Valuable Jewish Archives in Cairo," World Israel News (27 March 2022).

Annual Report 2021]. His removal was likely to cause further delays in the trial. Throughout 2020, the government of President Nayib Bukele had repeatedly denied Guzmán to access military operation files related to the massacre.

On 14 October 2021, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) presented a report on the human rights situation in El Salvador in which it urged the government to increase its efforts to fight impunity, provide reparation, make every effort to search for missing people and guarantee access to archives, all in relation to the Civil War (1979–1992). In March 2021, victims of the 1981 El Mozote massacre had reported to the IACHR that the authorities refused to provide access to the military archives despite a November 2019 promise to open them [See NCH Annual Reports 2008, 2012–2013, 2015, 2017, 2019–2021].¹³³

On 25 February 2022, a court filed charges against former President Alfredo Cristiani (in office between 1989–1994) for alleged involvement in the 1989 massacre of six Jesuit priests, their housekeeper and her daughter [See NCH Annual Reports 2009, 2012, 2017–2018, 2021].¹³⁴

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2019.

ERITREA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008, 2016, 2018.

See Ethiopia.

¹³³ Rhina Guidos, “After Outcry, Salvadoran Archbishop Will Grant Access to Archive on Massacre,” National Catholic Reporter (22 January 2021); “Bukele Purges Judiciary,” El Faro English (1 September 2021); Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, Situation of Human Rights in El Salvador (14 October 2021); Organization of American States, “IACHR Presents Report on the Situation of Human Rights in El Salvador,” (2 November 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 223; Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 158.

¹³⁴ “El Salvador Court Orders Arrest of Former President over 1989 Priest Massacre,” Guardian (12 March 2022).

ESTONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2010, 2015, 2017.

ETHIOPIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2011, 2015–2021.

Between November 2020 and April 2021, the government’s military operation in Tigray, which was bolstered by troops from neighboring Eritrea, led to attacks on twelve churches and mosques, among others. The sixth-century Debre Damo monastery was among the sites Eritrean troops allegedly looted of its old manuscripts and other cultural treasures. When in its turn the Tigray People’s Liberation Front (TPLF) took control of several key towns in the Amhara region in August 2021, a number of churches in the region of Lalibela were looted for money, food and ancient manuscripts. The fifth-century church of Checheho Medhanialem was damaged after coming under heavy artillery fire from the TPLF.¹³⁵

Following the 1 April 2022 decision of the United Nations Human Rights Council to deploy an independent investigation team into the mass killings during the civil war which broke out in November 2020, Amhara security forces and militia, which occupied western Tigray, were identified as digging up fresh mass graves, exhuming hundreds of bodies, burning them and then transporting what remained out of Tigray. Witnesses said the campaign of the disposal of evidence of ethnic cleansing started on 4 April 2022 and was supervised by experts from Gondar University.¹³⁶

¹³⁵ Fasikaw Menberu & Farouk Chothia, “Ethiopia Tigray Crisis: From Monk to Soldier – How War Has Split a Church,” BBC News (3 October 2021).

¹³⁶ Lucy Kassa, “Ethiopia War: Evidence of Mass Killing Being Burned – Witnesses,” BBC News (7 May 2022).

FIJI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006, 2010.

FINLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2017, 2020.

On 28 October 2021, the government appointed a five-member Truth and Reconciliation Commission to examine historical and current injustices suffered by the indigenous Sámi people, including the Finnish state's assimilation policy and violations of the indigenous community's rights, as part of a process that had started in 2017. Its final report was due on 23 November 2023 [See NCH Annual Reports 2017, 2020].¹³⁷

See also Russia.

FRANCE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1999, 2001–2009, 2011–2014, 2016–2018, 2020–2021.

In March 2021, the Duclert commission, established to review state archives concerning France's role and engagement in Rwanda between 1990 and 1994, published its final report. It found that, although not an accomplice to the genocide, France bore responsibility for its blindness to the preparation for a genocide and its slowness to break with the regime responsible for it. President Emmanuel Macron acknowledged France's responsibility and sought forgiveness from the Rwandan people. In April, the Muse Report, commissioned by the Rwandese government, went further, stating that France bore "significant responsibility for having enabled a foreseeable genocide."¹³⁸

On 2 July 2021, the Council of State annulled Interministerial General Instruction No. 1300, which blocked access to public archives more than fifty years old on national security and national defense grounds, thus giving priority to the 2008 Code du patrimoine (heritage code) which stipulated that after fifty years all archival documents pertaining to the French state (except a few categories such as information on weaponry and on secret agents) should enter the public domain without any conditions. However, on 30 July 2021 a law on the prevention of terrorist acts and on intelligence contained a new declassification procedure for all documents classified since 1934. Moreover, on 9 August 2021, Instruction générale interministérielle sur la protection du secret de la défense nationale (General Interministerial Instruction on the Protection of National Defense Secrecy) No. 1300/SGDSN/PSE/PSD was reissued, which, citing national security concerns, particularly stifled access to archives on the history of colonialism, World War II, and the development of nuclear forces [See NCH Annual Report 2021].

¹³⁷ "Finland Appoints Sámi Reconciliation Commission to Investigate Indigenous Injustices," YLE News (30 October 2021); Prime Minister's Office, "Background of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission" [no date].

¹³⁸ Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 315–316.

On 6 April 2022, the Association des archivistes français (Association of French Archivists), Historiennes et historiens du contemporain (Contemporary Historians) and l'Association Josette et Maurice Audin expressed their dissatisfaction over the 30 July law and its application decree 2022–406 signed on 21 March 2022, stating that they would further complicate archival access in opposition to the Council of State's ruling and the public announcements of President Emmanuel Macron. They further noted that they would make some documents that currently had declassification limits between fifty and hundred years remain closed for the public indefinitely, that the Commission d'accès aux documents administratifs (CADA; Commission for Access to Administrative Documents), an independent commission responsible for ensuring freedom of archival access, would be turned into a useless but obligatory and time-consuming administrative mechanism, and that writing about the history of the security services and security politics would become impossible.¹³⁹

On 11 August 2021, the stone memorial commemorating the life of the former minister and Holocaust survivor Simone Veil (1927–2017) in Perros-Guirec, Western Brittany, was defaced with swastikas.

¹³⁹ Conseil d'État, "L'accès aux archives 'secret-défense' doit être possible sans procédure préalable une fois expirés les délais légaux de non-communication," ([2] July 2021); Conseil d'État, Association des archivistes français, Association des historiens contemporanéistes de l'enseignement supérieur et de la recherche, Association Josette et Maurice Audin and others versus Prime Minister: Decision (2021); "Communiqué de presse: Réaction du Collectif 'Accès aux archives publiques' à l'annulation de l'Instruction Générale Interministérielle n° 1300 par le Conseil d'État," Association des Archivistes Français (6 July 2021); "Instruction générale interministérielle sur la protection du secret de la défense nationale No. 1300/SGDSN/PSE/PSD" (9 August 2021); "AHA Statement Concerning Access to French Archives" (press release; 23 November 2020); "Declassification of Archives over 50 Years Old: Not Everything Is Unlocked for Historians," Teller Report (10 March 2021); Jürgen Finger, "CFP \(Conference\): Strategies of Blockade: Access to Archive Records in France and Germany in an International Perspective," H-German (13 July 2021); Sylvie Braibant, "L'accès aux archives continue à être entravé: Les images de la rencontre 'L'accès aux archives publiques, un enjeu citoyen' du 13 septembre 2021," Histoire coloniale et postcoloniale (16 November 2021); "Communiqué de presse: Des Paroles ... et des actes," Association des archivistes français (19 April 2022).

The memorial had been daubed twice earlier that week with mustard and excrement. The defacement was seen as part of a worrying increase in anti-Semitic incidents in France.¹⁴⁰

On 13 September 2021, a statue of Modeste Testas (1765, Eastern Africa – 1870, Haiti), an African enslaved person who was bought by a family in Bordeaux, was defaced in Bordeaux. The act was labeled as “probably racist.” The statue had been inaugurated in 2019, as part of a number of initiatives addressing the colonial past of Bordeaux, which was one of France’s major trading hubs for enslaved persons.¹⁴¹

On 17 October 2021, during the commemoration for the Algerian protesters who were killed by the Paris police on 17 October 1961, President Emmanuel Macron called the police operation at the time an “unforgivable” crime. The statement was criticized by some historians for stopping short of an apology. They repeated their calls to make the historical archives, including those on the police killings, fully available for researchers. On 17 October 1961, 30,000 people had participated in protests in Paris against the Algerian War (1954–1962). After police chief Maurice Papon ordered a police crackdown, historians estimated that as many as 200 protesters were killed, with many of them beaten and thrown into the Seine [See NCH Annual Reports 1997, 2002, 2013, 2017, 2021]. On 6 June 2022, newly opened archival records showed that then-President Charles de Gaulle (in office between 1959–1969) was quickly informed about the massacre and had demanded prosecution of those responsible. However, no one was ever convicted.¹⁴²

On 5 February 2022, in the middle of the presidential election campaign during which immigration and Islam were significant issues, a sculpture of Emir Abdelkader (1808–1883) – an Algerian religious and military leader who led the struggle against the French colonial invasion of Algiers in 1830–1847 but was captured and transported to Amboise – was vandalized hours before it was inaugurated. The sculpture had been commissioned to mark sixty years of Algerian independence from France in 1962.¹⁴³

Confirming an earlier ruling of January 2022, the Paris appeals court on 12 May 2022 acquitted far-right politician Éric Zemmour of denying a crime against humanity by saying that Marshall Philippe

¹⁴⁰ “French Holocaust Survivor Simone Veil’s Memorial Vandalised,” Guardian (11 August 2021).

¹⁴¹ “French Slave Statue Defaced in Apparent Racist Attack,” BBC News (13 September 2021).

¹⁴² “Cérémonie de commémoration des 60 ans du 17 octobre 1961” (Elysée press release; 16 October 2021); Ahmed Rouaba, “How a Massacre of Algerians in Paris Was Covered Up,” BBC News (16 October 2021); Kim Willsher, “Macron: Police Violence at 1961 Algerian Protest ‘Unforgivable’,” Guardian (17 October 2021); Kim Willsher, “Macron Statement on 1961 Protest Killings ‘Falls Short,’ Say Critics,” Guardian (18 October 2021); Fabrice Afri, “De Gaulle et le massacre des Algériens à Paris en octobre 1961,” Histoire coloniale et postcoloniale (20 June 2022).

¹⁴³ “Emir Abdelkader: French Sculpture of Algerian Hero Vandalised,” BBC News (5 February 2022).

Pétain, in collaborating with the Nazis, had saved most French Jews. On the basis of Article 24 bis of the 1881 press law (the so-called 1990 Gayssot Act about Holocaust denial, amended in 2017), the Ligue internationale contre le racisme et l'antisémitisme (Licra; International League against Racism and Anti-Semitism), the Mouvement contre le racisme et pour l'amitié entre les peuples (Mrap; Movement against Racism and for Friendship between the Peoples) and the Union des étudiants juifs (UEJF; Union of Jewish Students) had filed the case after Zemmour's statement in October 2019 during a television debate with philosopher Bernard-Henri Lévy that Pétain, whom the Nazis allowed to administer a part of France after they occupied it in 1940, had sacrificed foreign Jews living in France to save Jewish nationals. Almost all historians called Zemmour's interpretation a gross falsification of history. The complainants planned to bring the case before the Court of Cassation.¹⁴⁴

See also Cambodia, Central African Republic, Morocco.

¹⁴⁴ Cnaan Liphshiz, "Éric Zemmour Acquitted of Holocaust Denial Charge for Saying French Nazi Collaborator Saved Jews," Forward (16 May 2022); Marc Bensimhon & Julien Bensimhon, "Relaxé d'Éric Zemmour: une motivation choquante et dangereuse," Actu-Juridique.fr (18 and 23 May 2022); AFP, "Eric Zemmour relaxé: Le Parquet général forme un pourvoi en cassation," Le Monde (19 May 2022); Zemmour contre L'Histoire (Paris: Gallimard, 2022), 40–42; European Court of Human Rights, Case of Lehideux and Isomi v. France (Application 55/1997/839/1045) (23 September 1998); Jon Henley, "Rise of Far Right Puts Dreyfus Affair into Spotlight in French Election Race," Guardian (30 October 2021).

GABON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016, 2018.

GAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016–2018, 2021.

On 25 November 2021, after repeated delays, the Truth, Reconciliation and Reparations Commission (TRRC; set up in 2017) presented its 17–volume final report on the human rights violations committed during the rule of Yahya Jammeh (in office as chairman of the Armed Forces Provisional Ruling Council in 1994–1996, and as president in 1996–2017) to President Adama Barrow [See NCH Annual Reports 2018, 2021]. On 24 December, the report was published. An estimated 400 people were tortured, raped, and killed by state agents, often at the hands of “Junglers,” Jammeh’s death squads. The TRRC recommended the prosecution of perpetrators, some of whom were still working in the security apparatus. On 25 May 2022, Justice Minister Dawda Jallow announced the creation of a special court to prosecute alleged perpetrators, including Jammeh.¹⁴⁵

GEORGIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2003, 2010–2012, 2014, 2016, 2019.

The archives law prohibited full access to Soviet-era archives and in those available for inspection names of victims of political repression were redacted. Under Soviet rule (1922–1991), some 80,000 people reportedly became victims of repression and between 10,000 and 15,000 of them were shot. Additionally, around 200,000 members of minority communities were deported.¹⁴⁶

¹⁴⁵ “The Gambia Delays Report on Former Longtime Leader Jammeh,” AlJazeera (30 September 2021); “Gambia: Truth and Reconciliation Report Must Lead to Justice and Reparations for Victims,” Amnesty International (25 November 2021); “Gambian Commission Urges Prosecutions for Yahya Jammeh-era Abuses,” AlJazeera (25 November 2021); Mustapha Darboe, “Gambia: Truth Commission Report Hangs on Election Result,” Justiceinfo.net (26 November 2021); Erome Egbejule, “Adama Barrow’s Re-election and the Gambia’s Long Walk to Justice,” AlJazeera (9 December 2021); “The Gambia Panel Recommends Ex-president Yahya Jammeh Face Trial,” AlJazeera (25 December 2021); Mustapha Darboe, “Gambia Validates Truth Commission’s Work and Promises Justice,” Justiceinfo.net (26 May 2022).

¹⁴⁶ Manon Bokuchava, “Last Address: Tbilisi,” Transitions (6 August 2021).

GERMANY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–2000, 2003, 2006–2013, 2015–2017, 2019–2021.

Since 2012 occasionally, but from August 2019 massively, Georg Friedrich, Prince of Prussia (1976–), head of the Hohenzollern family – Germany’s most important noble family and the source of nine Prussian kings and three German Kaisers, including Wilhelm II (1859–1941) – initiated a series of Strategic Lawsuits against Public Participation (SLAPPs) by sending cease and desist letters and/or suing dozens of historians, politicians, and journalists over their portrayal of his family, its past, and its actions in public space, leading to 63 injunctions.

In 1926, under the Weimar Republic, and again in 1945 in the Sowjetische Besatzungszone in Deutschland (SBZ; Soviet Zone of Occupation), much Hohenzollern property (crown jewels, art, furniture, books, castles worth millions of euros) was confiscated. After the 1990 German reunification, Louis Ferdinand, Prince of Prussia (1907–1994) and Wilhelm II’s grandson, initiated a campaign for the restitution of this property. A major obstacle, however, was article 1(4) of the 1994 Ausgleichsleistungsgesetz (law on restitution payments) which stipulated that restitution was excluded in those cases where the beneficiaries or their heirs “gave substantial assistance (erheblichen Vorschub) to the National Socialist system or to the Communist system in the Soviet Zone of Occupation or in the German Democratic Republic.”

Among the statements found objectionable by the Hohenzollern family were those about ongoing legal cases; access to the Hohenzollern archives; secret negotiations with the government over property restitution; and the Crown Prince’s past, among others. A very large majority of historians had opined that Wilhelm II’s son, Crown Prince Wilhelm (1882–1951), had “given substantial assistance” to the National Socialists. The Hohenzollern family claim that Crown Prince Wilhelm had not collaborated, was dismissed in the Bundestag (parliament) during a hearing on 29 January 2020 with historians, lawyers, and politicians from all parties covered by all German media outlets and broadcast on German television.

Among the historians sued by the Hohenzollern were Stephan Malinowski, a historian at the University of Edinburgh who had authored an expert report on the Hohenzollern property, and Winfried Süß, a historian at the Leibniz-Zentrum für Zeithistorische Forschung in Potsdam who had claimed that the Hohenzollern had tried to influence the historical representation of the family in public institutions. Among the historians sent cease and desist letters was Karina Urbach, Institute for Advanced Study, Princeton, who had to retract her statement that the Hohenzollern family had closed its private archive for research. On 15 June 2021, the Verband der Historiker und Historikerinnen

Deutschlands (Association of Historians of Germany) launched a website on which all the legal cases were documented.¹⁴⁷

In [January 2022], the religious group Jehovah's Witnesses filed a lawsuit against the government to reclaim family records of the group's persecution by the Nazis during World War II, currently held by the Museum of Military History in Dresden. The 31 files of documents had been purchased by the museum in 2009 from a family member, but Jehovah's Witnesses argued that the sale went against the 2005 will of the archives' owner Annemarie Kusserow and deprived them of an "invaluable part of [their] cultural heritage." In April 2021, a regional court had ruled that the museum had purchased the archive in good faith and was entitled to keep it. An estimated 1,600 Jehovah's Witnesses died as a result of Nazi persecution and around 4,200 were sent to concentration camps.¹⁴⁸

On 7 and 18 April 2022, the Soviet War memorial in Berlin's Treptower Park (built in the wake of World War II to commemorate Soviet soldiers who perished in the 1945 Battle of Berlin) was defaced with graffiti slogans relating to the ongoing war in Ukraine.¹⁴⁹

On 20 June 2022, organizers of the international art exhibition Documenta in Kassel covered and later removed the work "People's Justice," a nearly sixty-foot-long painted banner by the Indonesian collective Taring Padi, after Israeli diplomats and Germany's culture minister Claudia Roth said it contained anti-Semitic images. The banner's cartoonlike and satirical depiction of political resistance against President Suharto (in power between 1967–1998), created in 2002 to commemorate the victims of that regime, involved hundreds of individual figures, two of which could have anti-Semitic overtones. Taring Padi apologized and declared that the work was "not meant to be related in any way to anti-Semitism." On 16 July 2022, Documenta Director Sabine Schormann resigned as a result of the affair.¹⁵⁰

See also Belarus, China, Egypt, Palestine, Paraguay, Poland, Ukraine, United Nations.

¹⁴⁷ Website of the Hohenzollern family; website of the Verband der Historiker und Historikerinnen Deutschlands (VHD) about the legal cases (divided into six groups): "Die Klagen der Hohenzollern"; Website on which four secret expert reports about the Hohenzollern properties were uploaded; Website of the Prinzenfonds of the transparency project FragDenStaat supporting the VHD.

¹⁴⁸ Evelyn Blackwell, "Jehovah's Witnesses Sue German Museum for Archive of Nazi-Era Abuses," World News Era (January 2022).

¹⁴⁹ "Russian Embassy Notifies German Foreign Ministry about Vandalized Memorial in Berlin," Tass (8 April 2022); "Soviet-Era Memorial in Berlin Defaced with Ukraine War Graffiti," The Nomad Today (19 April 2022).

¹⁵⁰ Alex Marshall, "Documenta Takes Down Art after Antisemitism Accusations," New York Times (21 June 2022).

GHANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2004–2008, 2017, 2019.

Throughout 2021, “witch” camps remained open, despite the government’s promise to close them. Older women accused of witchcraft were at risk of being banished to such camps. A commemorative forum was held on 23 July 2021, a year after a mob lynched an elderly woman, to call on parliament to criminalize the labeling of people as witches.¹⁵¹

GREECE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2004–2011, 2013–2019.

In its 2021 annual report, the Germany-based NGO World Heritage Watch (WHW) voiced objections over completed and planned construction projects around the Acropolis in Athens. WHW argued that the projects were in violation of four of the five UNESCO World Heritage Monument criteria, and had been implemented by circumventing international and national legal frameworks and institutional standards. Additionally, the projects had led to immediate and predictable damages, and had used techniques and materials that were inconsistent with the architecture of the site, thus erasing the sense of historic unity and continuity.¹⁵²

On 9 December 2021, the Central Board of Jewish Communities in Greece published a statement saying that Russia would return the pre-war archives of Jewish communities that had been plundered from thirty synagogues in Thessaloniki by Nazi forces and that had subsequently been transferred to Moscow in May 1945. No date for the return was given.¹⁵³

On 30 December 2021, Turkish-Armenian historical linguist Sevan Nişanyan (1956–), editor of the Etymological Dictionary of the Turkish Language and creator of the Index Anatolicus (a website looking at the toponymy of 53,000 place names in Turkey, Greece, North Macedonia and Armenia), faced deportation from Greece after being put on the so-called EKANA “list of undesirable foreigners” and denounced as a national security threat for creating a database of Greek place names and how they had changed through history. On 7 January 2022, a court ordered Nişanyan’s release but gave him

¹⁵¹ Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 177.

¹⁵² World Heritage Watch, Report 2021, (Berlin: WHW, 2021), 21–23.

¹⁵³ “Russia to Return Pre-War Jewish Archives to Greece,” Moscow Times (9 December 2021).

fifteen days to leave Greece voluntarily. On 13 January 2022, his appeal against the court decision and his request to remove his name from the list were rejected. He was forced to leave.

In 2017 Nişanyan had escaped from a Turkish prison (where he had been serving a sentence since 2014 on alleged charges of illegal construction) to Samos in Greece. Nişanyan had also previously been sentenced to 13,5 months of prison on blasphemy charges in Turkey over a 2012 blog defending an anti-Islam film that ridiculed the Prophet Mohammed and sparked angry protests across the world [See NCH Annual Reports 2010, 2014].¹⁵⁴

See also Germany, Turkey.

GRENADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007.

On 22 April 2022, the Earl and Countess of Wessex, Prince Edward and Sophie, canceled a stop in Grenada of their Caribbean tour to mark the Queen's Platinum Jubilee because the National Reparations Commission on slavery wanted an apology and reparations from the British government and Queen Elizabeth for the Royal Family's role in the slave trade and slave plantations. The Royal African Company, set up in the seventeenth century with a charter granted by King Charles II, had played a critical role in both. The issue of reparatory justice for the victims of slavery also came up during royal visits in other Caribbean states such as Barbados, Jamaica, Belize, the Bahamas, St Vincent and the Grenadines, St Lucia, and Antigua and Barbuda.¹⁵⁵

GUATEMALA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2021.

¹⁵⁴ "Turkish-Armenian Writer Facing Deportation after Greece Arrest, Says Wife," Greek City Times (2 January 2022); Mark Frary, "Turkish-Armenian Academic Faces Deportation from Greece over Controversial Views," Index on Censorship (14 January 2022); "Academic Forced to Leave Greece," Index on Censorship, 2022 (51 no. 1), 7.

¹⁵⁵ Laura Trevelyan, "Earl and Countess of Wessex: Why Grenada Wanted to Talk to Royals about Slavery," BBC News (22 April 2022); Charley Adams, "Earl and Countess of Wessex: Prince Edward and Sophie Postpone Grenada Trip," BBC News (22 April 2022); André Rhoden-Paul, "Royal Couple Told of Antigua and Barbuda's Wish To Be Republic," BBC News (22 April 2022); Gemma Handy, "Why British Royals Face Simmering Resentment in Caribbean," BBC News (29 April 2022).

In March 2019, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights ordered Guatemala, in a binding ruling, to shelve the proposed legislation that would provide amnesty for genocide and other atrocities [See NCH Annual Report 2020–2021]. In April 2021, the bill was finally shelved. However, in June 2021, legislators presented a Peace and Reconciliation bill, that similarly sought to end proceedings for crimes committed during the Civil War (1960–1996).¹⁵⁶

On 12 October 2021, a group of protesters tried to topple a statue of Christopher Columbus in Guatemala City. Twelve October marks Hispanic Heritage Day, a day commemorated worldwide to mark Columbus’s arrival in the Americas, which has faced criticism for not recognizing the effects on indigenous people varying from enslavement to death.

Another group of protesters splashed red paint on a monument of former President José María Reina Barrios (1854–1898), after which they tore away the head on the monument.¹⁵⁷

On 6 March 2022, judge Miguel Ángel Gálvez, who had previously sent former President Efraín Ríos Montt (1926–2018; in power between 1982–1983) to trial on charges of genocide and crimes against humanity, ordered nine retired military and police officials to trial on charges including illegal detention, torture, murder and forced disappearance of more than 195 people during the military regime of Óscar Humberto Mejía Victores (1930–2016; in power between 1983–1986). Following the order, Gálvez became the victim of an online smear campaign: he was followed by unmarked vehicles and received death threats and threatening phone calls.¹⁵⁸

GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2021.

In 2021, the government of Alpha Condé – the president until the coup of 5 September 2021 – failed to meet a self-imposed June 2020 deadline for the trial of alleged perpetrators of the 2009 stadium massacre [See NCH Annual Reports 2015–2016, 2018–2021]. The new President Mamady Doumbouya announced on 5 September that “justice will be the compass that will guide every Guinean citizen,” making a symbolic appearance at the commemoration of the stadium massacre on 28 September.¹⁵⁹

¹⁵⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 283.

¹⁵⁷ Sofía Menchú, “Guatemala Protesters Strain to Topple Columbus Statue, Protesting Colonizer Legacy,” Reuters (13 October 2021).

¹⁵⁸ Jo-Marie Burt & Paulo Estrada, “Guatemalan Judge under Threat after Ordering Trial in 1980s ‘Death Squad Dossier’ Case,” WOLA (24 May 2022).

¹⁵⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 294–295.

GUINEA-BISSAU

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2012, 2015.

GUYANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997.

On 9 August 2021, the National Assembly adopted Resolution no. 23, accepting and implementing the 2016 findings of the Commission of Inquiry Appointed to Enquire and Report on the Circumstances Surrounding the Death in An Explosion of the Late Dr. Walter Rodney on Thirteenth Day of June, One Thousand, Nine Hundred and Eighty at Georgetown, that stated that there was no doubt that Gregory Smith, an active-duty sergeant in the Guyana Defense Force, had been responsible for the murder of historian and opposition politician Walter Rodney and that the killing could only have been “a state-organized assassination with the knowledge of Prime Minister [Forbes] Burnham [prime minister in 1964–1980 and president in 1980–1985].” However, as of November 2021, the commission’s full report had not been released.

In 2014, then President Donald Ramotar (in office in 2011–2015) had established a commission to investigate the death of Walter Rodney (1942–1980), a Marxist history lecturer, author, and the founder and leader of the left-wing opposition party Working People’s Alliance, a revolutionary and multiracial party opposed to Burnham’s rule. Rodney was killed on 13 June 1980 by a bomb hidden in his brother’s car [See NCH Annual Report 1997]. The commission was dissolved after President David Granger (in office in 2015–2020) was elected into office, but it nevertheless concluded that state authorities had been behind the murder. Meanwhile, Guyana’s National Archives had been renamed the Walter Rodney National Archives and his grave and the site where he was killed were slated to become national monuments.¹⁶⁰

¹⁶⁰ Mary Curry, ed., “The Walter Rodney Murder Mystery in Guyana 40 Years Later,” National Security Archive (13 June 2020; updated 12 November 2021).

HAITI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2000–2003, 2006, 2008–2009, 2013–2021.

In late October 2021, a safe containing records, among others, on the killing of Port-au-Prince Bar Association chief Monferrier Dorval (1956–2020) on 28 August 2020, were stolen from the Tribunal de Première Instance (TPI; Court of First Instance) in Port-au-Prince. The theft was seen as part of a pattern in which “every time there is a huge case” before the court “the files always disappear.” Around the same time, the office of Investigative Judge Garry Orélien, who led the inquiry into the murder of former President Jovenel Moïse (1968–2021), who was killed on 7 July 2021, was broken into and some documents were allegedly tampered with. On 10 June 2022, gang members occupied the TPI and on 14 June set fire to an unknown number of its archival records, including court files.¹⁶¹

On 1 January 2022, gunmen tried to kill Prime Minister Ariel Henry (1949–) during a ceremony at a church in Gonaïves to mark the anniversary of Haiti’s independence on 1 January 1804. At the time, Haiti was the second colony in the Americas to become independent.¹⁶²

See also France.

HONDURAS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998, 2001–2002, 2009–2015.

In early February 2022, an anti-corruption team from the Attorney General’s Office visited the presidential offices one week after President Juan Orlando Hernández stepped down on 27 January 2022 and found that all evidence of wrongdoing had disappeared or was shredded. The Hernández administration (2014–2022) had argued that official documents were protected under a law dubbed the “Official Secrets Law,” promulgated in 2014 and covering national security and defense. On 2 March 2022, the new congress repealed the law, allowing access to documents previously classified as secret.

¹⁶¹ Jacqueline Charles, “Stolen Court Safe Held Secrets of a High-Profile Killing: Can Justice Survive in Haiti?,” Miami Herald (26 November 2021); “Des bandits détruisent des archives au tribunal de première instance de Port-au-Prince,” Le Nouvelliste (15 June 2022).

¹⁶² “Haiti PM Ariel Henry Survived Assassination Attempt – Officials,” BBC News (3 January 2022).

Hernández was taken in custody on 15 February 2022, following a request by the United States government for his extradition on drug trafficking and weapons charges.¹⁶³

On 30 March 2022, Eduardo Enrique Urbina Ayala, a former history student at the National Universidad Nacional Autónoma de Honduras (UNAH), Tegucigalpa, returned from exile in Costa Rica. Urbina had fled Honduras on 11 December 2017, before the government of Juan Orlando Hernández (in office between 2014–2022) issued an arrest warrant for his alleged participation in the burning of a military truck – an event that occurred days after his arrival in Costa Rica. Urbina, who was a member of the Movimiento Estudiantil Universitario (University Student Movement) and the left-wing opposition party Libertad y Refundación (Liberty and Refoundation), had been one of the leaders of a UNAH group of students protesting against the 2017 re-election of Hernández, which was widely considered as fraudulent.¹⁶⁴

HONG KONG

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996. From 1997: See China.

HUNGARY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997, 2004, 2007–2021.

In 2021, no official commemoration was held for the victims of the first deportation of Jews from Hungary to Kamianets-Podilskyi (in the then German-occupied Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic) in the summer of 1941.

In 2013, the government of President Viktor Orbán had founded the historical institute “Veritas,” which critics said promoted a version of history favoring Orbán’s political agenda [See NCH Annual Report 2019]. “Veritas” allegedly denied that anti-Semitism had been part of the state’s policy during the Horthy regime (1919–1944) [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. In 2014, Sándor Szakály, the military historian who headed “Veritas” and who had met opposition for his revisionist views of history for almost twenty years, stated in an interview that the 1941 deportation to Kamianets-Podilskyi had been an “alien police procedure,” claiming that the Hungarian gendarmes could never have done such a thing. His comments had led Jewish organizations to demanding his dismissal, but to no avail.¹⁶⁵

¹⁶³ “Honduras Repeals ‘Secrets Law’ in Fight against Corruption,” Reuters (3 March 2022); Marlon González, “Honduras Prosecutor: Ex-president’s Offices Swept of Papers,” AP News (4 March 2022).

¹⁶⁴ Riccy Ponce & Sandra Rodríguez, “Eduardo Urbina, el estudiante de historia que debería estar en clases,” Defensores en línea (13 April 2018); Brent Patterson, “PBI-Honduras Accompanies COFADEH during the Return of Criminalized Student Eduardo Urbina from Exile in Costa Rica,” Peace Brigades International Canada (5 April 2022).

In late November 2021, Andrea Pető, a historian in the Central European University Department of Gender Studies [See NCH Annual Report 2020], resigned from the humanities subcommittee of the Hungarian Accreditation Committee after she was asked to withdraw criticism of the European Association for Quality Assurance in Higher Education (ENQA). In a draft article, Pető had argued that the ENQA failed to confront the “illiberalization” of educational policy in Poland and Hungary [See NCH Annual Report 2020–2021] and that the illiberal turn in higher education policy was leading to self-censorship among Hungarian academics.¹⁶⁶

¹⁶⁵ Karl Pfeifer, “Ohne Druck von deutscher Seite,” Jüdische Allgemeine (18 July 2021).

¹⁶⁶ Sally Gimson, “Macho Politics Drive Academic Closures,” Index on Censorship, 2019 no. 3, 103; “Andrea Peto” (CEU website, September 2019); Jennifer Rankin, “‘How Dictatorship Works’: Hungarian Academic Quits in Censorship Row,” Guardian (30 November 2021).

INDIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1997, 2000–2021.

On 17 May 2021, the Central University of Kerala suspended Gilbert Sebastian, an assistant professor in the Department of International Relations, for describing the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (RSS; National Volunteer Corps, founded in 1925), a militant political organization connected to the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party, as “proto-Fascist.” He had made the remark in a virtual session of his course on “Fascism and Nazism,” in which he also considered Spanish dictator Francisco Franco and the South-African Apartheid government as examples of proto-Fascism. Members of the RSS student wing had complained to the university about Sebastian’s remark.¹⁶⁷

In July 2019, activists affiliated to the right-wing student group Akhil Bharatiya Vidyarthi Parishad (All Indian Student Council) reportedly stormed a meeting of Delhi University’s Academic Council, demanding that the council remove materials from syllabi that they considered offensive. The university responded by forming an oversight committee to scrutinize the syllabi. In July 2021, the committee revised syllabi from the English, history, political science, and sociology departments despite its members lacking expertise in those subjects and without consulting department members. Revisions, later approved by the university, included the removal of works by Dalit and Tamil feminist authors from an English syllabus and their replacement with works by upper-caste writers.¹⁶⁸

In July 2021, the University Grants Commission (UGC) released a new undergraduate history curriculum for centrally funded public universities after consultations with stakeholders during February and March 2021. It was widely criticized for its pro-Hindu bias: Muslim contributions to Indian history and the contribution of post-independence secular politicians were downplayed; Vedic and Hindu religious literature was singled out at the cost of ancient secular texts. Overall, the cultural diversity of India was ignored. Bibliographies were adjusted accordingly. The authors of the curriculum revision committee remained anonymous and their methodology was not explained.¹⁶⁹

On 14 August 2021, the eve of Independence Day, Prime Minister Narendra Modi announced that 14 August would henceforth be observed as “Partition Horrors Remembrance Day” to commemorate the victims of Partition (1947–1948), in which about two million people were killed and another twelve to ¹⁶⁷ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2021 (New York: SAR, 2021), 23.

¹⁶⁸ Scholars at Risk’s Submission to the Fourth Cycle of the Universal Periodic Review of India: 41st Session of the United Nations Human Rights Council (New York: SAR, 2022), § 26.

¹⁶⁹ Shuriah Niazi, “Row over Hindu Bias in Revision of History Syllabus,” University World News (23 July 2021).

fifteen million expelled. While many welcomed the initiative, others criticized it for being a veiled attack on Nehruvian politics at the time intended to target the Congress opposition and for coinciding with Independence Day in Pakistan.¹⁷⁰

On 29 August 2021, Congress leader P[alaniappan] Chidambaram criticized the Indian Council for Historical Research (ICHR) for omitting the photograph of Jawaharlal Nehru, India's first prime minister in 1947–1964, from the first digital poster to celebrate the 75th year of India's 1947 independence, accusing the ICHR of bowing to hate and prejudice. In a reaction on 30 August 2021, ICHR director Om Jee Upadhyay said that ICHR "had no intention to diminish Nehru's contribution toward India's independence" and that there was a misunderstanding. The poster had been only the first of seven or eight and Nehru would appear on one of the following posters. Upadhyay said that Nehru's name was mentioned seventeen times in the NCERT book on modern India and that his images appeared multiple times as well.¹⁷¹

In November 2021, a civil court rejected a petition by Hari Shankar Jain asking to restore 27 temples demolished in 1192 in the area surrounding the Qutub Minar minaret (itself built in 1192 by the first sultan of Delhi, Qutbuddin Aibak, after defeating the Hindu rulers). The court said that India had been ruled by several dynasties and that wrongs committed in the past "cannot be the basis of disturbing peace of our present and future." The decision was challenged in a higher court.¹⁷²

On 17 February 2022, the Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment announced revised guidelines for the National Overseas Scholarship (NOS), a scholarship scheme for students from marginalized sections of society for higher studies at foreign universities. The guidelines prohibited NOS scholars to study Indian culture, or do research in the fields of heritage, history and social studies with India as the research subject. Moreover, they placed the final decision of whether research topics could be pursued under the authority of an NOS screening committee. Critics said that the criteria would restrict research in foreign universities on the caste system in Hindu religion, gender inequality in India, Brahminical cultural traditions, and poverty in the context of caste, among others. They also feared that the screening committee could narrow down the range of permissible topics even further.¹⁷³

¹⁷⁰ Press Information Bureau, Government of India, Press Release Ministry of Information & Broadcasting (14 August 2021); "PM: Aug 14 Now Partition Horrors Remembrance Day, Lest We Forget," Indian Express (15 August 2021).

¹⁷¹ "Chidambaram Slams Indian Council for Historical Research for Omitting Nehru's Image," Telegraph (31 August 2021); Sharangee Dutta, "Nehru's Image Could Be in Next Poster, Says ICHR Chief Amid Controversy," Hindustan Times (30 August 2021).

¹⁷² Soutik Biswas, "Qutub Minar: Why India's Tallest Minaret Is Embroiled in Dispute," BBC News (26 May 2022).

¹⁷³ Basant Kumar Mohanty "Scholarship Holds Students back from Caste Home Truths," Telegraph (19 February 2022).

On 18 February 2022, the Delhi High Court passed an ad-interim order directing United States-based historians Audrey Truschke (Rutgers University), Ananya Chakravarti (Georgetown University), and Rohit Chopra (Santa Clara University) not to publish any defamatory content alleging plagiarism against historian Vikram Sampath in relation to his journal article (2017) and two-volume biography (2019, 2021) on Hindutva ideologue Vinayak Damodar Savarkar (1883–1966). According to Truschke, Chakravarti, and Chopra, the plagiarized parts came from works by historians Ramesh Chandra Majumdar (1888–1980), Janaki Bakhle, Paul Schaffel (?–2013), Vinayak Chaturvedi, among others. Sampath claimed that the plagiarism allegations were part of an international smear campaign to discredit him for challenging the prevailing narratives around Savarkar. Accusing the three historians of defamation, he sought two crore (20 million rupees) in damages from them and a permanent injunction on the publication of a 11 February 2022 letter to Emma Griffin, president of the Royal Historical Society (RHS) in London, which was widely shared on Twitter. In the letter, the defendants had alleged that they had found a “pervasive, long-standing pattern of plagiarism” in the work of Sampath who had recently been elected a RHS member. On 24 February 2022 and 4 May 2022, the Court ordered Twitter to take down tweets of Truschke containing the plagiarism allegation. On 4 March 2022, the Court rejected an application by Sampath seeking to ban Truschke’s website in India and alleging that an open letter in her support carried forged signatures. Truschke said that the letter “was vandalized by Hindu Right IT cells, with the goal of manufacturing confusion and fear.” The Court posted the case for hearing on 28 July 2022.¹⁷⁴

In April 2022, Gursang Preet Kaur, a lecturer at Lovely Professional University in Jalandhar, Punjab, was dismissed after a video in which she was seen to be criticizing the deity Ram went viral.¹⁷⁵

¹⁷⁴ High Court of Delhi, Vikram Sampath versus Audrey Truschke and Others (2 May 2022); “Savarkar Biographer Vikram Sampath Accused of Plagiarism, Historians Say Others’ Work Not Cited Fairly,” The Wire (14 February 2022); Prashant Jha, “Vikram Sampath Moves Delhi High Court Seeking ₹2 Crore Compensation from Historians Who Accused Him of Plagiarism,” Bar and Bench (17 February 2022); Prashant Jha, “Delhi High Court Restrains Audrey Truschke, Others from Publishing Defamatory Content against Vikram Sampath,” Bar and Bench (18 February 2022); Nupur Thapliyal, “Delhi High Court Restrains Historian Audrey Truschke & Others From Publishing Defamatory Material Against Vikram Sampath” Live Law (18 February 2022); Abhijit Iyer-Mitra, “Want to Grasp the Leftist Manual of Targeting Opponents? Just Look at Sampath-Sanyal Saga,” First Post (9 February 2022); Akash Bhattacharya, “How Historian Vikram Sampath Uses Decolonisation Rhetoric to Make Hindu Domination Sound Reasonable,” Scroll.in (13 November 2021); “Twitter Ordered to Delete US Academic’s Tweets Accusing Savarkar Biographer of Plagiarism,” Indian Express (25 February 2022); Vandana Menon, “Didn’t Sign Open Letter to Condemn Vikram Sampath’s Defamation Suit, Guha & Mehta Say Amid Row,” The Print (27 February 2022); Shreya Agarwal & Gargi Chatterjee, “Can’t Curtail Discussion on Subject by Academics’: Delhi High Court Refuses Vikram Sampath Relief against Truschke’s Non-compliance with Restraint Order,” LawBeat (4 March 2022); “You Can’t Curtail Discussion in Academic World: Delhi HC,” Free Press Journal (5 March 2022); “Delhi HC Directs Twitter To Take Down Five More Tweets By Audrey Truschke Against Historian Vikram Sampath,” Swarajya (4 May 2022).

¹⁷⁵ “Attack on Critical Thinking? Lovely Professional University Professor Sacked for ‘Insulting’ Ram,” National Herald (25 April 2022).

On 6 May 2022, Waqas Farooq Kuttay, an assistant professor at Sharda University, Greater Noida, Uttar Pradesh, was suspended after some students complained to university officials about an “objectionable” question in a mid-term political science paper for undergraduate students. The question was: “Do you find any similarities between Fascism/Nazism and Hindu right wing (Hindutva)? Elaborate with arguments.” The university also formed a three-member committee to investigate the affair. Kuttay was an interim faculty member who had submitted a Ph.D. in political science at Jamia Millia Islamia, New Delhi. In a press note, the university expressed regret over the question, saying that it “distorted the great national identity and the inclusive culture inherent in our national ethos.”¹⁷⁶

On 17 May 2022, the Supreme Court ruled that the complex containing the Vishwanath temple (a 1585 Hindu shrine partially destroyed on orders of Mughal Emperor Aurangzeb in 1669) and the Gyanvapi mosque (built by Aurangzeb on the same spot in Banaras in 1669) in Varanasi would be protected and prayers would continue in the mosque. The ruling came after a group of Hindu petitioners had gone to a local court asking for access to pray at the shrine behind the mosque, following which a part of the mosque had been sealed by that court.

On 27 May 2022, during a television debate on the Gyanvapi mosque dispute, the Bharatiya Janata Party’s (BJP) official spokesperson Nupur Sharma made controversial comments about the Prophet Muhammad that incensed Indian Muslims and outraged more than a dozen Islamic nations. Sharma apologized but claimed that her remarks were in response to “the continuous insult and disrespect towards the Hindu god Shiva.” On 5 June, the BJP suspended her from the party; on 9 June, Delhi police said they had opened investigations against her. On 28 June, a tailor in Udaipur, Rajasthan, who publicly supported Sharma’s remarks was killed, putting the state on alert.¹⁷⁷

On 19 May 2022, the tomb of Mughal Emperor Aurangzeb (1618–1707) in Khuldabad, Maharashtra, was shut to visitors after a regional politician questioned “the need for its existence” and called for its destruction. In March 2016, the hashtag “Remove Mughals From Books” aimed at deleting references to the Mughal dynasty (1526–1857) from history textbooks became trending on Twitter after a speech by Human Resource Development Minister Smriti Irani, a member of the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party.

¹⁷⁶ “University Suspends Lecturer Who Set Question on Fascism,” Times of India (8 May 2022); “India: Professor Suspended for Exam Question,” Scholars at Risk (no date; after 6 May 2022).

¹⁷⁷ Soutik Biswas, “Gyanvapi Masjid: India Dispute Could Become a Religious Flashpoint,” BBC News (18 May 2022); Vikas Pandey, “Nupur Sharma: Prophet Muhammad Remarks Deepen India’s Diplomatic Crisis,” BBC News (7 June 2022); Geeta Pandey, “Nupur Sharma: The Indian Woman behind Offensive Prophet Muhammad Comments,” BBC News (9 June 2022); “Udaipur: India State on Alert after Prophet Muhammad Row Beheading,” BBC News (29 June 2022).

In the speech, Irani had railed against a history book aimed at primary school pupils, claiming that it misrepresented religious tensions in India and insulted the Hindu warrior King Shivaji (1630–1680).¹⁷⁸

On 19 May 2022, a court in Uttar Pradesh allowed a lawsuit in which nine petitioners asked for the removal of the Shahi Idgah mosque at Mathura based on the claim that it was built on land belonging to the Keshav Dev temple, believed to be the birthplace of Hindu deity Krishna. The mosque, built in 1669–1670, was located next to the temple. The petitioners alleged that a 1968 compromise agreement on the sharing of property was illegal. Similar lawsuits had earlier been dismissed on grounds that they were in violation of the Places of Worship Act of 1991, which maintained the religious status of any place of worship as it was on 15 August 1947 (the Rama temple in Ayodhya [See NCH Annual Reports 2002–2004, 2006, 2010–2011, 2015, 2017, 2020–2021] being the only exception to this act).¹⁷⁹

On 20 May 2022, police officials arrested Ratan Lal, a history professor at the University of Delhi and an outspoken critic of the government, allegedly for a social media post in which he compared a structure – which according to some represented the Hindu deity Shiva – found on the site of the Gyanvapi mosque [See above] with the phallic symbolism of the lingam. On 17 May, the same day of the post, lawyer Vineet Jindal had filed a criminal complaint against him for “promoting enmity between different groups on grounds of religion” and “malicious acts intended to outrage religious feelings.” On 21 May, a court ordered Lal’s release on bail and instructed him to refrain from social media posts or interviews.¹⁸⁰

A new history book for Class 9, available from 20 May 2022 and prepared by the Board of Secondary Education in the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP)-ruled State of Haryana created a row because it blamed Congress for the 1947 Partition of India and lauded the “positive” role played by the Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh (the ideological fountainhead of the BJP) and its founder Keshavrao Baliram Hedgewar (1889–1940) in “awakening cultural nationalism and freedom struggle.” The new Class 10 history textbook reportedly carried similar distortions. Former Chief Minister and Congress leader Bhupinder Singh Hooda said that it was an attempt by the BJP to “politicize” education and to “saffronize” history.¹⁸¹

¹⁷⁸ “Some Indians Are Calling for a Muslim Empire To Be Wiped from History Books,” BBC News (23 May 2022); Geeta Pandey, “Aurangzeb: Why is a Mughal Emperor Who Died 300 Years Ago Being Debated on Social Media?” BBC News (21 May 2022).

¹⁷⁹ “UP Court Allows Lawsuit Asking for Removal of Shahi Idgah Mosque in Mathura,” The Wire (19 May 2022).

¹⁸⁰ “History Professor Detained for a Social Media Post,” Scholars at Risk ([no date]; after 20 May 2022).

¹⁸¹ Vivek Gupta, “Haryana: Class 9 History Book Blames Congress for Partition, Lauds RSS, Hedgewar, Savarkar,” The Wire (12 May 2022).

On 25 June 2022, human rights activist Teesta Setalvad ([1962]–) was arrested in Mumbai on trumped-up charges of criminal conspiracy and forgery for her activities while pursuing accountability for the 2002 mob violence targeting Muslims in Gujarat. In 2002, Hindu mobs had targeted Muslims to avenge an attack on a train that caused the death of 59 Hindu pilgrims, killing over thousand Muslims. Setalvad sought the prosecution of senior officials, including then Chief Minister of Gujarat Narendra Modi, who was elected prime minister in 2014. After the riots, based on submissions by activists including Setalvad, the National Human Rights Commission had strongly condemned the Gujarat government for its failure to deliver justice and the Supreme Court had rebuked the authorities and local justice system for protecting those responsible for abuses.

The Gujarati authorities prosecuted Setalvad for nearly two decades, filing a series of false charges, many of which remain pending. This time, Setalvad was detained a day after the Supreme Court had dismissed a petition filed by Zakia Jafri, the widow of Ehsan Jafri, a member of parliament who was murdered during the 2002 riots. In her petition, with the support of Setalvad's organization, Citizens for Justice and Peace, Jafri had challenged the report of a special investigation team that had absolved Modi of involvement in the riots [See NCH Annual Reports 2003, 2005–2012, 2014–2015, 2017].¹⁸²

See also China, Singapore, United Kingdom, United States.

INDONESIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2001–2002, 2004–2013, 2015–2019, 2021.

On 2 May 2021, police beat and arrested a student leader during a demonstration commemorating Hari Pendidikan Nasional (National Education Day), an annual remembrance of Ki Hajar Dewantara (1889–1959) the founder of the Javanese educational system Taman Siswa, on the Alauddin State Islamic University campus.¹⁸³

In March 2022, the State Islamic University Bandung stripped Moeflich Hasbullah, a senior lecturer at the Faculty of Islamic History and Culture, of his right to teach, limited his payment and expelled him from his office at the University. In October 2017, after the Indonesian branch of Hizb-ut Tahrir (HTI), an Islamist party seeking to establish a global Caliphate, had been banned by the government in July, ¹⁸² Human Rights Watch, "India: Free, Drop Charges Against Teesta Setalvad" (28 June 2022).

¹⁸³ Joint Submission to the Universal Periodic Review of Indonesia by Scholars at Risk and the Indonesian Caucus for Academic Freedom Fourth Review Cycle, 41st Session of the United Nations Human Rights Council (New York: SAR, 2022), § 22.

Hasbullah had provided an expert opinion on the disbandment as part of an HTI-requested judicial review. In January 2020, he was summoned for his opinion, which was considered by some to support HTI, and interrogated by the general inspectorate of the Religious Affairs Ministry. In April 2020, then Religious Affairs Minister Fachrul Razi signed a “letter of punishment” over an article by Hasbullah in which the latter criticized Vice President Ma’ruf Amin. After the letter, Hasbullah was stripped from his academic rights, a sanction that was supposed to end in March 2022, but that was extended indefinitely.

Suteki, a law professor specialized in the sociology of law and the philosophy of Pancasila (a set of principles that have been Indonesia’s official ideology since 1945), was also suspended from his position at Diponegoro University, Central Java, after his allegedly HTI supportive opinion at the HTI judicial court proceeding in 2017. Both suspensions were considered part of a trend against academic freedom that had started around the time that President Joko Widodo took office in October 2014. In May 2022, the Indonesian Caucus for Academic Freedom and Scholars at Risk highlighted “a pattern of repression targeting outspoken scholars and students.”¹⁸⁴

See also Australia, Germany, Netherlands.

IRAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2021.

On 5 August 2019, Touraj Amini (1968–), a Baha’i historian and writer, was arrested by security forces who confiscated some of his books, his notes, and his laptop. He was sentenced by the Karaj Islamic Revolutionary Court to one year in prison and two years in exile for alleged “propaganda against the state.” On appeal his sentence was reduced to six months in prison, for which he was sent to Karaj Central Prison on 29 January 2021. His imprisonment was reportedly related to his research on the Qajar (1789–1925) and the Pahlavi (1925–1979) royal dynasties, during which, Amini argued, a genocide of Baha’is had been carried out. On 3 April 2021, more than forty academics wrote a letter to the authorities requesting the release of Amini. He was released at the end of his sentence on 28 July 2021. Among his works was Documents of the Baha’is of Iran (five volumes) and Interaction of Religious Minorities and the Iranian Constitutional Revolution.¹⁸⁵

¹⁸⁴ “Indonesian Authorities Fight Radicalism on Campus,” Study International (7 November 2017); Kafil Yamin, “Rights Groups Expose Rising ‘Repression’ of Academics, Students,” University World News (31 May 2022); “Suteki,” Wikipedia (last updated 11 May 2022).

¹⁸⁵ “Touraj Amini,” Journalism Is Not a Crime ([between April and July] 2021); “Writers at Risk Database,” PEN America (last updated 4 June 2022).

On 28 June 2021, Javaid Rehman, the United Nations investigator on human rights in Iran, called for an independent inquiry into allegations of state-ordered executions of political prisoners in 1988 and the role played by President-elect Ebrahim Raisi. Rehman further expressed concern over reports that mass graves were being destroyed as part of a continuing cover-up. On 27 January 2022, 460 people, including former President of the International Criminal Court Sang-Hyun Song, called on UN High Commissioner of Human Rights Michelle Bachelet to investigate the 1988 killings [See NCH Annual Reports 2017, 2021].

On 27 July 2021, prosecutors in Sweden charged Hamid Nouri ([1961–]), who was arrested in Sweden, with war crimes over the mass execution of sympathizers of the armed leftist opposition group Mujahedin-e Khalq in July–August 1988. He denied the charges. The trial started in August 2021. It was the first time anyone went on trial over the 1988 killings. On 14 July 2022, the Stockholm District Court sentenced him to life in prison for war crimes committed as the assistant deputy prosecutor of the Gohardasht prison, Karaj.¹⁸⁶

On 7 January 2022, social media platform Instagram blocked posts using a hashtag in memory of the victims of a Ukrainian airliner shot down by Iranian security forces on 8 January 2020. The Association of Families of the Victims, representing the 176 victims from six countries, found that posts with the hashtag #IWillLightACandletoo, as well as its Persian version, were not visible to users. Cybersecurity experts said that Iran had possibly orchestrated the block by reporting the posts. Instagram declared that the hashtag was “restricted by mistake” and restored it after 24 hours.¹⁸⁷

On 8 January 2022, Baktash Abtin (1974–2022), an imprisoned film director and member of the Iranian Writers’ Association (IWA) who had been transported to a prison hospital in mid-December 2021, died there from complications relating to COVID-19 which could have been avoided had he received medical care earlier. He had contracted the disease while in Tehran’s Evin prison after having been sentenced in 2019 to five years’ imprisonment on charges of “illegal assembly and collusion against national security” and to one year for “spreading propaganda against the state,” in relation to his joint authorship of a book on the history of the IWA [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2021].¹⁸⁸

¹⁸⁶ Amnesty International, “Iran: Key Officials Named over 1988 Mass Prison Killings – New Report” (press release; 4 December 2018); Stephanie Nebehay, “Exclusive U.N. Expert Backs Probe Into Iran’s 1988 Killings, Raisi’s Role,” Reuters (29 June 2021); “Sweden Charges Man over 1988 Iran Prison Massacre,” BBC News (28 July 2021); “Sweden Tries Hamid Nouri over 1988 Iran Prison Massacre,” BBC News (10 August 2021); Joshua Nevett, “Hamid Nouri: How Sweden Arrested a Suspected Iranian War Criminal,” BBC News (4 September 2021); Stephanie Nebehay, “UN Urged to Open Query Into Iran’s 1988 Killings and Raisi Role,” Reuters (27 January 2022); “Report 31: Expert Witness Hearings Pt. 1” (expert witness of historian Rouzbeh Parsi), Civil Rights Defenders (1 April 2022); “Sweden Hands Life Sentence to Ex-Iranian Official over 1988 Purge,” Al Jazeera (14 July 2022).

¹⁸⁷ Rana Rahimpour, “Instagram Blocked Hashtag in Memory of Iran Plane Crash Victims,” BBC News (7 January 2022).

On [12 January 2022], Franco-Iranian Fariba Adelkhah (1959–), social and political anthropologist, specialist in Shia Islam, and director of research at Sciences Po’s Center for International Studies (CERI) in Paris, was sent back to prison from house arrest [See NCH Annual Report 2020–2021].¹⁸⁹

See also Iraq, Morocco, Norway, United Nations, United States.

IRAQ

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2021.

In March 2021, parliament passed the Law on Yazidi Female Survivors, which recognized crimes committed by Islamic State (IS) against women and girls from the Yezidi, Turkmen, Christian and Shabaks minorities during the Iraqi conflict (2003–) as genocide and crimes against humanity, but little progress was made toward the application of the law and no IS members had been convicted of war crimes, crimes against humanity or genocide. Moreover, despite IS’s systematic rape, sexual slavery, and forced marriage, no members were prosecuted for these crimes. Instead, judges routinely prosecuted suspects only on the charge of IS affiliation.¹⁹⁰

On 16 July 2021, Prime Minister Mustafa Al-Kadhimi announced that the authorities had arrested a man allegedly responsible for the murder of historian Hisham al-Hashimi [See NCH Annual Report 2020].¹⁹¹

¹⁸⁸ International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 119; PEN International, “Iran: Three Writers Face Lengthy Prison Sentences” (3 May 2019; with an update on 17 May 2019); PEN International, “Iran: Writers Baktash Abtin, Reza Khandan-Mahabadi and Keyvan Bazhan Imprisoned” (Rapid Action Network, update 2: no. 02/2020) (30 October 2020); PEN International, PEN International Case List 2020 (London: PEN International, 2021), 142, 148–149; Freemuse, The State of Artistic Freedom 2021 (Copenhagen: Freemuse, 2021); “Baktash Abtin,” Index on Censorship, 2022 (51 no. 1), 8; Maziar Motamedi, “Jailed Iranian Writer Baktash Abtin Dies after Contracting COVID,” AlJazeera (8 January 2022).

¹⁸⁹ “Iran Sends French-Iranian Academic Back to Jail at Key Point in Nuclear Talks,” Guardian (12 January 2021); Committee of Concerned Scientists, “Anthropologist Fariba Adelkhah Still in Prison on Seemingly Fabricated Charges” (25 June 2022).

¹⁹⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 344, 346.

¹⁹¹ Mustafa Salim & Louisa Loveluck, “Leading Iraqi Researcher Assassinated Outside His House in Baghdad,” Washington Post (6 July 2020); “Hisham al-Hashimi,” Wikipedia (9 July 2020); Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project, “Hisham al-Hashemi” (6 July 2020); Gulf Centre for Human Rights, “Iraq: Journalist and Security Expert Dr. Hisham Al-Hashemi Assassinated in Front of His House in Baghdad” (7 July 2020); AP, “Iraqi Expert on Islamic State Shot Dead in Baghdad,” The Guardian (6 July 2020); “Iraq

Throughout 2021 and 2022, water shortages caused by dams in Turkey and Iran, years of mismanagement of water resources, and the effects of climate change accumulated into damage to multiple cultural heritage sites. Rising salt concentrations significantly damaged the walls of Babylon, capital of the ancient Babylonian Empire (1895–539 BCE), and the Temple of Ishtar. In Samarra, capital of the Abbasid Caliphate (836–892 CE), sandstorms were causing erosion of the city, and in Umm al-Aqarib desertification led to the slow disappearance of its White Temple, palace and cemetery.¹⁹²

On 20 March 2022, Jim Fitton ([1955]–), a British retired geologist, was arrested by airport security after shards of broken pottery were found in his luggage. Fitton had participated in an archaeological expedition to Eridu, southern Iraq, where he had collected fragments about which he had allegedly been informed that they held no economic or historical value to Iraq. On 6 June, a Baghdad court sentenced him to fifteen years in prison under the 2002 Iraqi artifacts law. On 27 July, the Court of Cassation overturned the conviction, reportedly because of his age.¹⁹³

See also Australia, Morocco.

IRELAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000, 2002, 2004, 2006, 2013, 2015–2016, 2021.

See United Kingdom.

Armed Groups Expert Hisham al-Hashemi Shot Dead in Baghdad,” Al Jazeera (6 July 2020); Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2020 (New York: SAR, 2020), 25, 28.

¹⁹² Hannah Lynch, “Iraq’s Ancient Buildings Are Being Destroyed by Climate Change,” Guardian (15 April 2022).

¹⁹³ Tom Ambrose, “Family of British Geologist Facing Death Penalty in Iraq Urge UK to Intervene,” Guardian (30 April 2022); “British Geologist Jailed for 15 Years in Iraq for Smuggling Artefacts,” Guardian (6 June 2022); “British Geologist Jailed in Iraq after Taking Artefacts,” BBC News (6 June 2022); “Geologist Jim Fitton Jailed in Iraq ‘Shell Shocked’ over Verdict,” BBC News (7 June 2022); “Jim Fitton: Iraqi Court Overturns Conviction of British Geologist,” BBC News (27 July 2022).

ISRAEL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000–2003, 2008–2014, 2016–2021.

In August 2021, the Israeli Supreme Court upheld the government policy of withholding the bodies of Palestinians killed in “security incidents,” as leverage to secure Hamas’s release of the bodies of two Israeli soldiers presumably killed in 2014 hostilities. The Haifa-based human rights group Adalah found that as of August 2021, authorities held the bodies of 81 Palestinians killed since 2015.¹⁹⁴

On 4 April 2022, a lawyer for the national intelligence agency Mossad told the High Court of Justice that it had difficulties locating historical documents in its archives relating to ties between the Mossad and Lebanese Christian militias that committed massacres in the Palestinian refugee camps of Sabra and Shatila in Lebanon in 1982. Dozens of human rights advocates had sought the disclosure of documents demonstrating Mossad’s links to Lebanese Christian militias in the 1970s and 1980s. Supreme Court President Esther Hayut called the Mossad’s claim “strange.” She noted that the Mossad was legally required to preserve the documents, which were to be opened in 2072.¹⁹⁵

On 29 May 2022, known as Jerusalem Day in Israel to celebrate the capture of East Jerusalem during the Six Days War (1967), thousands of Israelis waved Israeli flags at Jerusalem’s holy esplanade – also known as Har haBayit (Temple Mount), the holiest site in Judaism, and Haram al-Sharif (Noble Sanctuary), containing the al Aqsa mosque, the third holiest place in Islam –despite a long-standing agreement forbidding non-Muslims to pray or display any religious or national symbols at the site.¹⁹⁶

On 2 June 2022, the Knesset (parliament) approved a provisional bill banning the display of “enemy flags,” including the Palestinian one, at state-funded institutions. The bill was tabled after Palestinian flags had been waved throughout Israel, including at Ben Gurion University, Negev, on 15 May, known by Palestinians as Nakba Day (to commemorate the 1948 Declaration of Independence of Israel and the accompanying ethnic cleansing of Palestinians).

On 25 September 2021, the Jerusalem Magistrate’s Court had ruled that the flying of Palestinian flags was not illegal. However, confiscation of Palestinian flags by Israeli forces continued throughout 2021 and 2022. On 11 May 2022, dozens of Israeli police attacked people carrying the Palestinian flag-

¹⁹⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2021), 358.

¹⁹⁵ Ofer Aderet, “Mossad Says Can’t Find Files on 1982 Lebanon Massacre,” Haaretz (5 April 2022).

¹⁹⁶ Raffi Berg, “Jerusalem Flag March: Israeli Nationalists Stream Through Muslim Quarter,” BBC News (29 May 2022).

draped coffin of Al Jazeera journalist Shireen Abu Aqla (1971–2022), who was reportedly shot by Israeli forces during an Israeli army raid on the Jenin refugee camp, north of the occupied West Bank.¹⁹⁷

On 14 June 2022, the Education Ministry canceled an annual education trip to Poland (in which thousands of high school students travel to Poland to visit former extermination and concentration camps), citing alleged attempts by the Polish government to manipulate the trip’s educational material about the Holocaust. Foreign Minister Yair Lapid claimed that the alleged revisions fitted within a widely criticized 2018 memory law (also known as the Holocaust Law) that outlawed reference to the collaboration or complicity of Poles in crimes committed in Poland during the Holocaust [See NCH Annual Reports 2018–2019], and a 2021 property restitution law that set a statute of limitations for the right of Shoah survivors and victim’s families to claim restitution for wrongly seized properties [See NCH Annual Report 2021].¹⁹⁸

See also Germany, Mexico, Netherlands, Palestine, Poland, United Nations, United States.

ITALY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2003, 2008, 2010, 2012, 2016–2019, 2021.

On 25 November 2021, in Biancardi versus Italy, the European Court of Human Rights obliged online news platforms and archives (and not only search engines) to de-index (but not delete) online news articles on request by persons invoking the “right to be forgotten,” thus broadening the scope of this right to the detriment of the integrity and accessibility of online (news) archives. In Biancardi, the Court said that the article, related to an “ordinary person” rather than a public figure, was no longer current and, therefore, not of public interest anymore. On 22 June 2021, the Court, in Hurbain versus Belgium, had already upheld a Belgian court order to anonymize an archived online press article. On 11 October 2021, however, Hurbain was referred to the Grand Chamber.¹⁹⁹

¹⁹⁷ Nir Hasson, “Flying Palestinian Flags in Israel Is Not Illegal, Court Confirms,” Haaretz (27 September 2021); Arwa Ibrahim, “Palestinian Identity and Israel’s Long Attempt to Suppress It,” Al Jazeera (20 May 2022); Yolande Knell, “Israel and Palestinians in Flag Furor Amid Ban Move,” BBC News (2 June 2022).

¹⁹⁸ Zvika Klein & Lahav Harkov, “Israel Cancels Poland Youth Trips, Lapid Cites Manipulations,” Jerusalem Post (15 June 2022); “Israel Nixes Youth Trips to Poland over Holocaust Education Spat,” Times of Israel (16 June 2022).

¹⁹⁹ European Court of Human Rights, Hurbain versus Belgium: Judgment (22 June 2021); European Court of Human Rights, Biancardi versus Italy: Judgment (25 November 2021); Andrea Monti, “The European Court of Human Rights and the Right to Erase History,” Inform (9 December 2021).

On 19 January 2022, the defamation trial against United States filmmaker Kelly Duda (1966–) in Rome was postponed until July. In 2005, Duda had made a documentary, entitled Factor 8: The Arkansas Prison Blood Scandal, which included cases of victims of contaminated blood transfers in Italy in the 1980s and 1990s. In December 2017, Duda was testifying in a manslaughter trial, related to the blood transfers, in Naples, during which he criticized prosecutor Lucio Giugliano, for what he believed was an attempt to discredit his testimony despite him being a prosecution witness. Duda was briefly detained for insulting Giugliano and in 2019 charges were filed against him under an offense dating back to Italy’s Fascist period for “offending the honor or prestige” of Giugliano.²⁰⁰

On 15 February 2022, a number of Catholic groups and sexual abuse survivors called on the Roman Catholic Church in Italy to create an independent commission to investigate the church’s handling of clerical sexual abuse cases and to open the private church archives.²⁰¹

See also Paraguay.

IVORY COAST (Côte d’Ivoire)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006–2021.

See Burkina Faso.

²⁰⁰ Angela Giuffrida, “US Film-Maker Tried in Italy on Fascist-Era Charge over Tainted Blood Testimony,” Guardian (20 January 2022).

²⁰¹ Elisabetta Povoledo, “In Italy, a Call for a National Investigation into Clerical Sexual Abuse,” New York Times (15 February 2022).

JAMAICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017–2018.

See Grenada.

JAPAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2021.

On 17 March 2022, nine South Korean, Chinese, and Dutch survivors of the Japanese sexual slavery (“comfort women”) system during the Pacific War (1931–1945) and a support group including historian Alexis Dudden sent a petition to the United Nations Special Rapporteurs and Working Groups on Human Rights to press Japan and South Korea to jointly refer their dispute about the system to the International Court of Justice which would then decide whether Japan violated the 1984 United Nations Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. In case this would fail, the survivors would then press South Korea to submit a complaint to the United Nations Committee against Torture to the effect that Japan violated the Convention by denying or downplaying the system. With this initiative, the survivors wanted to buttress their demand since the early 1990s that the Japanese government fully accept culpability and offer an unequivocal apology. In 1996 a United Nations report had concluded that at the time sex slaves were taken through “violence and outright coercion.”²⁰²

See also Afghanistan, China, Korea, South.

²⁰² “Petition to United Nations Special Rapporteurs and Working Groups on Human Rights \(with appendices\)” (17 March 2022; 148 pages); Kim Tong-Hyung, “S. Korean Slavery Victim Seeks UN Justice as Time Runs Out.” AP News (21 March 2022); Special Rapporteur on Violence against Women, Its Causes and Consequences, Radhika Coomaraswamy, Report on the Mission to the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea, the Republic of Korea and Japan on the Issue of Military Sexual Slavery in Wartime (E/CN.4/1996/53/Add.1; 4 January 1996).

JORDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003–2004, 2015, 2018.

On 24 March 2021, the tenth anniversary of the 24 March Movement (a 2011 youth-led movement calling for political reform), security forces arrested dozens of individuals who were set to join commemorations in Amman and other cities, citing COVID-19 related health risks.²⁰³

²⁰³ Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 216.

KAZAKHSTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999–2001, 2007, 2012.

On [5] January 2022, demonstrators in Almaty pulled down a statue of Nursultan Nazarbayev (in office between 1990–2019), Kazakhstan’s first president after it became independent from the USSR in 1991, amid political protests.²⁰⁴

Historians researching the governance of the Kazakh Soviet Socialist Republic (1936–1991) and Kazakhstan’s independence in 1991 were unable to consult many archival documents, as they were located in Moscow and the Russian government refused most requests to access them.²⁰⁵

See also China.

KENYA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2000, 2002–2005, 2007, 2009–2018, 2020–2021.

In 2021, the Lamu Old Town, a UNESCO World Heritage site, was under threat of collapse, due to, among others, poor management of its historical buildings.²⁰⁶

In [June] 2022, a conference on Africa’s stolen cultural heritage organized by the British Council in Nairobi pleaded for restitution for and repatriation of the large repository of African audio-visual materials, in addition to material heritage, taken during the colonial period and kept in European archives. Over ninety per cent of the material cultural legacy of sub-Saharan Africa was estimated to be preserved and housed outside of the African continent, with demands for repatriation dating as far back as 1944 when descendants of the Toucouleur Empire (1861–1893) called for the return of thousands of pieces of cultural heritage including the saber of their founder El Hadj Omar Tall (1794–1864).²⁰⁷

²⁰⁴ Agnieszka Pikulicka-Wilczewska, “What Is Behind the Protests Rocking Kazakhstan?,” AlJazeera (5 January 2022).

²⁰⁵ Paul A. Globe, “Stalin’s Centralization of Archives Leaves Post-Soviet States Without Key Sources on Their Histories,” Euromaidan Press (3 February 2022).

²⁰⁶ World Heritage Watch, Report 2021 (Berlin: HWH, 2021), 83.

²⁰⁷ Njeri Wangari, “Africa’s Heritage Restitution Debate Extends to Audio and Visual Archives,” Good Men Project (29 June 2022).

KOREA, NORTH

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2006–2007, 2009–2011, 2013–2015, 2017, 2019.

See United States.

KOREA, SOUTH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998–2001, 2003, 2006, 2008–2010, 2012–2013, 2016–2021.

In January 2021, a new law allowed prison sentences of up to five years for people who spread “falsehoods” about the 1980 Gwangju uprising. In May 2021, a bill was submitted calling for up to ten years in prison for those who praised Japan’s colonial rule of Korea (1910–1945) and proposing the establishment of a panel of experts on “truthful history.” They were part of a set of laws intended to combat false narratives about sensitive historical topics. In June 2021, the Korea History Society and twenty other historical research institutes issued a joint statement warning that the government of President Moon Jae-in was undermining democratic values by using the threat of criminal penalties to dictate history.²⁰⁸

On 7 June 2021, the Seoul Central District Court dismissed a collective suit for damages launched in 2015 by 85 South Korean victims of wartime forced labor in Japan and their families against 16 Japanese companies, saying that the plaintiffs did not have litigation rights. Referring to the 1965 agreement between South Korea and Japan on resolving colonial-era issues, the court said: “It cannot be said that individual claims are terminated or waived due to the Korea-Japan treaty. But it was decided that the individual rights cannot be exercised through lawsuits.” The ruling stood in contrast to an October 2018 ruling from the Supreme Court, which upheld a 2013 appeals court ruling that ordered Nippon Steel to pay each of four Korean plaintiffs 100 million won (US$ 87,720) in compensation for their wartime forced labor and unpaid work.²⁰⁹

In April 2020, Nguyen Thi Thanh, a survivor of the Phong Nhi and Phong Nhat massacre of 12 February 1968, filed a lawsuit against the South Korean government over the role of South Korean troops during the Vietnam War (1954–1975), in the first lawsuit of its kind in a South Korean court. On 12 February 1968, a marine unit had swept through Phong Nhi and Phong Nhat, two villages in central Vietnam, after which more than seventy villagers were found dead. In 1969, South Korea’s intelligence agency had begun questioning members of the marine unit on this war crime.

²⁰⁸ Choe Sang-Hun, “‘Historical Distortions’ Test South Korea’s Commitment to Free Speech,” New York Times (18 July 2021); Ian Buruma, “Uitingsvrijheid eindigt waar geweld begint,” NRC Handelsblad (11 August 2021).

²⁰⁹ “Court Rejects Damages Suit against Japanese Firms by Korean Forced Labor Victims,” Yonhap News Agency (7 June 2021).

In June 2021, alongside the lawsuit, a series of general public hearings began as part of an attempt by lawmakers and civic groups to push for a special law calling for government-led investigations into crimes committed during the Vietnam war. Discussion about the role of South Korean troops had been a taboo until the 1990s. After the opening of diplomatic ties with Vietnam in 1992, a study based on interviews with survivors and witnesses reported that dozens of alleged mass killings carried out by South Korean troops had resulted in 8,000 to 9,000 civilian deaths. In April 2018, the People’s Tribunal on War Crimes by South Korean Troops during the Vietnam War, a citizens’ tribunal made up out of a number of social organizations, had issued a non-binding resolution that South Korea should compensate the survivors, launch an investigation into atrocities committed between 1964–1973, and amend all public memorials pertaining to South Korea’s participation in the Vietnam War. In 2019, the “103 victims” petition, named after the 103 survivors of massacres at seventeen Vietnamese villages, including Phong Nhi and Phong Nhat, was launched, requesting to disclose intelligence agency reports, to investigate allegations of war crimes and to issue a public apology. However, the Defense Ministry said it could “neither confirm nor deny” whether an investigation had taken place, and that it could not look into the allegations because Vietnam was not ready to cooperate.²¹⁰

See also Japan.

KOSOVO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2021. For previous entries: see Serbia.

After negotiations with Serbia on 7 and 8 September 2021, Deputy Minister Besnik Bislimi claimed that Serbia had agreed to open up its military archives, including those on the former Kosovo Liberation ²¹⁰ Hoang Do, “The Forgotten History of South Korean Massacres in Vietnam,” The Diplomat (15 May 2020); “People’s Tribunal on War Crimes by South Korean Troops during the Vietnam War,” Wikipedia (17 September 2020); Choe Sang-Hun, “Vietnam War Victims Wanted Justice: They Were Given ‘30 Bags of Rice’,” New York Times (21 August 2021); Park Chan-kyong, “Vietnam War Survivors Push Seoul to Compensate for Korean Troop Atrocities,” South China Morning Post (30 August 2021).

Army [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. In [May] 2022, the International Committee of the Red Cross stressed the importance of allowing access to the archives.²¹¹

On 30 December 2021, the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) Mission in Kosovo condemned the desecration of a number of tombstones in a Serbian Orthodox cemetery in Gračanice / Gračanica around 27 December.²¹²

See also Switzerland.

KUWAIT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2000, 2004–2005, 2018, 2021.

KYRGYZSTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010–2013, 2016–2017, 2021.

In July 2021, President Sadyr Japarov approved a new “concept on spiritual-moral development and physical education of individuals.” The concept called on state bodies to promote traditional values and recommended that media outlets propagate the values of a traditional society [and] the ideals of the family.²¹³

²¹¹ Milica Stojanovic, “Serbia, Kosovo Urged to Publish ‘Deal to Open Up War Archives’,” Balkan Insight (13 September 2021); Xhorxhina Bami, “Kosovo Seeks Satellite Images of Suspected War Grave in Serbia,” Balkan Insight (31 May 2022).

²¹² “OSCE Condemns Desecration of Serb Gravestones in Kosovo,” Balkan Insight (30 December 2021).

²¹³ Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 227.

LATVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2006, 2008, 2015–2016, 2019.

In early December 2021, an independent international panel of fifteen historians published its recommendations on the “Latvian Beehive for Freedom,” a monument set up in Zedelgem, Belgium, in September 2018 on the terrain of a former British prisoners of war camp, to honor the memory of approximately 12,000 Latvians who were interned there from September 1945 to May 1946. The large majority of these internees belonged to the Latvian Legion, a division of the Waffen-SS (the SS military branch) created in January 1943 and consisting of Latvian conscripts (the majority) and volunteers (the minority). The municipality of Zedelgem had asked the panel to reflect on the monument after an international controversy had erupted in late 2020 over the fact that before its creation “a sizeable part of the recruits” of the Latvian Legion had committed war crimes (when fighting on the side of Nazi-Germany at the Eastern Front) and crimes against humanity (when assisting in the Holocaust in Latvia), and that no reference had been made to their victims. The panel concluded that the site risked becoming “an inspiration for revisionist narratives of the legacy of the SS” and unanimously recommended to rename the memorial square, remove the current plaque, and redefine and relocate the monument itself. In a reaction on 3 December 2021, the municipality of Zedelgem expressed the intention to follow the panel’s recommendations.

Following the recommendations, panel member Didzis Bērziņš, a lecturer at the Department of Social Sciences at the University of Latvia, Riga, specialized in the study of Nazi propaganda and the memory of the Holocaust, was intimidated and attacked in public. On 10 December 2021, the Latvijas Okupācijas muzejs (Museum of the Occupation of Latvia), which had co-funded the monument, questioned the panel’s findings and stated that “not one historian from Latvia could take part [in it],” claiming that Bērziņš was not a historian but a “social scientist.” The museum neglect the fact that the panel had members from the Latvian diaspora. The interpretation of the Legionnaires was highly controversial in Latvia, with the Veterans’ League organizing an annual march in the capital Riga on 16 March commemorating the Legionnaires as patriots who fought against the USSR’s Red Army.²¹⁴

²¹⁴ “The Legacy of the British POW Camp on the Vloethemveld Site” (Workshop Zedelgem, Friday 26 & Saturday 27 November 2021), Belgium WWII [early December 2021]; Municipality of Zedelgem, “Reactie gemeente op advies internationaal panel betreffende De Letse Bijenkorf en de erfenis van het Britse krijgsgevangenkamp op site Vloethemveld” (3 December 2021); Andris Auzāns & Alina Lastovska, “Spried ar Delfi’ par latviešu karagūstekniem veltītā pieminekļa iecerēto aizvākšanu Beļģijā. Pilns ieraksts,” Delfi (7 December 2021); Andris Auzāns, “Strīdus raisījušais piemineklis latviešu leģionāriem Beļģijā: vai Latvijas viedoklis uzskaitīts?,” Delfi (8 December 2021); Latvian Ministry of Culture, “Zedelģeimā uzstādītā pieminekļa latviešu leģionāriem iespējamā pārvietošana būtu pārprasta politikorektuma piemērs,” (9 December 2021); Museum of the Occupation of Latvia, “The Latvian Occupation Museum’s Response to the Conclusions Reached by a Workshop Organized by the Municipality of Zedelgem, 26–27 November 2021,” (press release; 10 December 2021); Latvian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, “The Latvian Foreign Minister Edgars Rinkēvičs Addresses the Belgian Foreign Minister on the Matter of the Zedelgem Monument,” (10 December 2021);

LEBANON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2003, 2006–2021.

Throughout 2021, the government insufficiently funded a number of investigative institutions. Operations of the Special Tribunal for Lebanon (STL), which in 2020 had convicted a senior member of Hezbollah for the bombing of former Prime Minister Rafik Hariri in 2005 [See NCH Annual Reports 2010–2011, 2013–2015, 2021], were uncertain due to funding constraints, while a 2018 independent national commission to investigate the fate of an estimated 17,000 people who were kidnapped or “disappeared” during the Civil War (1975–1990), had not yet received any governmental funding.

On 10 March 2022, the STL appeals chamber reversed the earlier acquittal of two defendants, Hassan Habib Merhi and Hussein Hassan Oneissi, and instead found them guilty on charges of terrorism and murder for their role in the murder of Hariri.²¹⁵

On 30 September 2021, the Beirut-based Samir Kassir Eyes Center for Media and Cultural Freedom published a report entitled A Social Media Analysis of the Hate Network Surrounding Lokman Slim's Assassination, in which it concluded that between 4 January and 4 March 2021 a disinformation campaign involving influencers (mainly journalists), fake accounts, and fake news was acted out on Twitter with hundreds of thousands of tweets and retweets. The campaign aimed at pushing a hate narrative against publisher and archivist Lokman Slim and his family before and after his assassination, and of formulating a joint response after the killing against accusations that Hezbollah had played a part in the attack. On 4 February 2021, Slim (1962–2021), a Shiite publisher, archivist, and critic of Hezbollah, was found shot in a car in an area reportedly controlled by Hezbollah forces [See NCH Annual Report 2021] [On Samir Kassir: See NCH Annual Report 2005].²¹⁶

In December 2021, Legal Action Worldwide (LAW) published a report on torture and sexual violence against women during the Civil War (1975–1990), finding that systematic violence against Lebanese and Palestinian women and girls by government forces and militias took place throughout the war. It

Didzim Bērziņam, “Latvijas Okupācijas muzeja direktores Solvitas Vības Atklātā vēstule par raidījuma “Spried ar Delfi” izteiktajiem atzinumiem.” Latvijas Okupācijas muzejs (10 December 2021); Latvian Ministry of Defense, “In a Letter to Belgian Defence Minister, Pabriks Calls for Understanding of Latvia's Complex History and Respect for Latvian Prisoners of War.” (12 December 2021); Koen Aerts, personal communications (15 & 19 & 26 December 2021); Marc Reynebeau, “Koude Oorlog laait op in Zedelgem.” De Standaard (18 December 2021); Aivars Sinka, “An Honourable Monument to Freedom – Why the Zedelgem Beehive Should Stay.” Latviesi (23 December 2021).

²¹⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 421; Janet H. Anderson, “Special Tribunal for Lebanon's ‘Second Best Justice’.” Justiceinfo.net (17 March 2022).

²¹⁶ Nasri Messarra, A Social Media Analysis of the Hate Network Surrounding Lokman Slim's Assassination (Beirut: Samir Kassir Foundation, September 2021; 32 pages); Nicholas Frakes, “The Hate Network.” Now Lebanon (5 October 2021).

further concluded that a 1991 Amnesty Law that granted immunity for crimes committed against civilians had laid the “foundation for the impunity that has characterized the post-conflict era in Lebanon.” In 2018, parliament had passed a law setting up a national commission to investigate disappearances during the war, enabling LAW to begin its investigation.²¹⁷

See also Israel.

LIBERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2004–2015, 2018, 2021.

LIBYA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2005–2021.

LITHUANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005, 2009, 2015, 2018, 2021.

On 21 September 2021, a report by the National Cyber Security Center concluded that phones made by Chinese manufacturer Xiaomi had a built-in functionality that, if enabled (advertently or not), would detect and censor phrases referring to the independence of Taiwan or Tibet.²¹⁸

On 13 January 2022, six Lithuanian citizens filed a lawsuit against former Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev (in office from 1985 to 1991) for failing to stop the January 1991 assault on independence supporters that killed fourteen people and wounded more than 700. Lithuania had declared independence from the USSR in March 1990 but it was only recognized by Moscow in September 1991.

²¹⁷ Legal Action Worldwide, “They Raped Us in Every Possible Way, in Ways You Can’t Imagine: Gendered Crimes During the Lebanese Civil Wars,” (December 2021), 41; Tessa Fox, “Rape Used ‘Systematically’ During Lebanon’s Civil War, Report Finds,” Guardian (9 June 2022).

²¹⁸ Tom Bateman, “‘Throw Away Your Chinese Phone’ Says Lithuania, after New Report Reveals Built-In Censorship Tech,” Euronews (22 September 2021).

In 2019, a Lithuanian court had convicted dozens of Soviet-era officials for war crimes, but refused to investigate Gorbachev.²¹⁹

Following an order of Culture Minister Simonas Kairys that allowed municipalities to remove Soviet memorials, the city of Kaunas decided to remove all Soviet monuments. Other municipalities followed suit. In early April 2022, a monument in Bubiai in memory of Soviet soldiers killed during World War II was destroyed and painted in the colors of the Ukrainian flag.²²⁰

²¹⁹ “Lithuanians Sue Gorbachev Over Deadly Soviet Crackdown,” Moscow Times (13 January 2022).

²²⁰ Linas Jegelevicius, “Some Lithuanian Municipalities Hesitate to Remove Soviet Heritage after Minister’s Backing,” Baltic News Network (12 May 2022).

MACEDONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2006–2008, 2010–2015, 2017–2018.

See North Macedonia.

MADAGASCAR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

MALAWI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2019, 2021.

MALAYSIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2002, 2007–2008, 2010–2011, 2016–2017, 2019–2021.

On 19 August 2021, 31 people were forcibly detained by police while they were holding an outdoor candlelight vigil for the victims of the COVID-19 pandemic (2019–). At least one participant filed a police report over physical injuries, allegedly caused by the police.²²¹

MALDIVES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2009–2010, 2013, 2020–2021.

MALI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011, 2013–2021.

²²¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 433.

MALTA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2012, 2021.

MARSHALL ISLANDS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2015.

MAURITANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2002, 2009, 2011, 2017, 2019–2020.

MAURITIUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2012.

MEXICO

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999, 2001–2021.

On 8 March 2021, International Women’s Day, police officials shot rubber bullets at crowds in Mexico City demonstrating for better protection of women’s rights and commemorating the victims of femicide. The protesters were laying flowers and painting the names of femicide victims at the Zócalo (the capital’s central square) when clashes erupted. In 2020, Mexico recorded the murder of 3,723 women, of which only 940 were investigated as femicide. In May 2021, a statue in memory of Karla Pontigo (?–2012) was installed in San Luis Potosí as part of the reparation for her killing. Her murder remained unpunished.²²²

²²² Sarah Johnson, “‘It Was Civil War’: Photographing Mexico’s Women’s Rights Protests,” Guardian (30 December 2021); Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 251.

June 2021 marked the fiftieth anniversary of the Corpus Christi Massacre (also known as Halconazo), with complete impunity for the perpetrators still in place. On 10 June 1971, a group of “Halcones” (hawks; pay-for-hire thugs) attacked some 10,000 student demonstrators in Mexico City.

In 2002, the Fiscalía Especial para movimientos sociales y políticos del pasado (FEMOSPP; Office of the Special Prosecutor for Social and Political Movements of the Past) had started a five-year investigation, among others into the role of then President Luis Echeverría Álvarez (1922–2022) [See NCH Annual Report 2006], and in 2006 published a report on the Guerra sucia (Dirty War; 1964–1982). However, no convictions followed and the FEMOSPP closed in the same year. In March 2021, Undersecretary of Human Rights Alejandro Encinas suggested to establish a new truth commission to investigate crimes committed during the Guerra sucia.²²³

In July 2021, President Andrés Manuel López Obrador urged the Israeli government to cooperate in the extradition of Tomás Zerón, who had headed the Criminal Investigation Agency that led the inquiry into the disappearance of 43 students in Iguala in 2014 [See NCH Annual Reports 2015, 2021]. Zerón was one of the architects of the so-called “historical truth” – the official version of the disappearances that was presented by the government of then President Peña Nieto in January 2015 and that had been rejected by the victims’ families. In January 2021, Zerón, who was charged himself with kidnapping, torturing suspects, manipulating evidence, and embezzling around $50m of public funds, had sought asylum in Israel.

On 28 March 2022, the Grupo Interdisciplinario de Expertos Independientes (Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts), created by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights in 2014, released a report revealing that the armed forces had intentionally destroyed, falsified, and hidden information during and following the Iguala disappearances.²²⁴

On 5 September 2021, Mexico City mayor Claudia Sheinbaum said that a prominent statue of Christopher Columbus would be moved to a park [See NCH Annual Report 2021], adding that relocating the statue was not an attempt to “erase history” but to deliver “social justice.” On 12 October, ²²³ Megan DeTura, “Mexico’s 1971 Corpus Christi Massacre, Fifty Years Later,” National Security Archive (10 June 2021).

²²⁴ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think: Report of the Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (New York: Scholars at Risk, 2015), 18; “Mexico Students v. the State: Anniversary of 1968 Massacre Reopens Recent Wounds,” BBC News (1 October 2018); “Mexico Urges Israel to Extradite Former Investigator in 43 Missing Students Case,” Guardian (22 July 2021); “Mexico Missing Students: Parents Angry at Military’s Obstruction,” BBC News (30 March 2022); Kate Doyle & Claire Dorfman, “Mexican Military Archives Produce New Revelations in the Ayotzinapa Case,” National Security Archive (1 April 2022); “Ayotzinapa Investigations Special Exhibit Page Launch,” National Security Archive (26 April 2022).

city officials said a replica of a sculpture depicting what was believed to be member of the Huastec people, called “the young woman of Amajac,” would replace the statue.²²⁵

On 7 October 2021, President Andrés Manuel López Obrador issued a decree establishing a Comisión para el Acceso a la Verdad, el Esclarecimiento Histórico y el Impulso a la Justicia (Commission for Access to Truth, Historical Clarification, and Promotion of Justice) to investigate the crimes, including disappearances, of the Guerra sucia (1964–1982; Dirty War) [See above]. The decree specified that all information available in the Archivo General de la Nación (General Archives of the Nation) from the Secretariat of Defensa Nacional (National Defense), the Estado Mayor Presidencial (Presidential Staff), the Dirección Federal de Seguridad (Federal Security Directorate), the Centro de Investigación y Seguridad Nacional (Center for Investigation and National Security), and all state intelligence agencies would be available for analysis and research. Civil society organizations praised the inclusion of victims in the process yet highlighted the need to guarantee collaboration from the army in making the archives available.²²⁶

In November 2021, Mexico became the first country to accept an official visit by the United Nations (UN) Committee on Enforced Disappearances, which held more than 150 meetings with authorities, victims’ organizations and NGOs around the country. However, on 17 May 2022, UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Michelle Bachelet pointed out the “staggering rate of impunity” for enforced disappearances and urged the authorities to ensure justice and continue reforms. More than 100,000 people were officially registered as “disappeared” since 1964. In only 35 cases the perpetrators had been convicted.²²⁷

²²⁵ “Mexico City to Swap Columbus Statue for One of Indigenous Woman,” BBC News (6 September 2021); “Mexico City to Swap Columbus Statue For One of indigenous Woman,” BBC News (13 October 2021); Sofia Menchú, “Guatemala Protesters Strain to Topple Columbus Statue, Protesting Colonizer Legacy,” Reuters (13 October 2021).

²²⁶ Guadalupe Vallejo, “Nace Comisión de la Verdad que investigará guerra sucia en México,” Expansión política (7 October 2021); Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 249.

²²⁷ “Mexico’s 100,000 ‘Disappeared’ Is a Tragedy, Says UN Rights Chief Bachelet,” United Nations News (17 May 2022).

MOLDOVA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2003, 2010.

Throughout 2021, impunity for grave past abuses by law enforcement agencies remained endemic. In March 2020, the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe had reiterated the need to ensure accountability of the security services in relation to the abduction and forcible return of seven Turkish private high school teachers, who were reportedly connected to the movement led by Fethullah Gülen, in 2018, and to implement the 2019 European Court of Human Rights' decision Özdil and Others v. Republic of Moldova that had concluded the forcible return to have been illegal.²²⁸

MONGOLIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2013.

MONTENEGRO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2017, 2021.

On 19 October 2021, the European Commission urged the Montenegrin authorities to more actively and effectively investigate and prosecute war crimes committed during the Yugoslav wars of succession (1991–1995). On 6 December 2021, coinciding with the 30th anniversary of the Yugoslav People's Army 1991 bombardment of Dubrovnik, Croatia, a joint statement by three NGOs – the Center for Civic Education, Human Rights Action, and Documenta – Center for Dealing with the Past – reiterated the call [See NCH Annual Report 2021].²²⁹

²²⁸ European Court of Human Rights, Case of Özdil and Others v. The Republic of Moldova \(Application no. 42305/18\): Final Judgement (Strasbourg: ECHR, 2019); Madalin Necsutu, "Turkish Court Jails Professor Deported from Moldova," Balkan Insight (19 July 2019); Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 254.

²²⁹ Milica Stojanovic, Samir Kajosevic, Xhorxhina Bami & Semir Mujkic, "European Commission Raps Serbia's 'Weak' War Crimes Case Record," Balkan Insight (19 October 2021); Samir Kajosevic, "Montenegro Urged to Make War Crimes Prosecution Priority," Balkan Insight (6 December 2021).

MOROCCO / WESTERN SAHARA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2013, 2015–2018, 2020–2021.

In October 2021, historian, journalist, and human rights activist Maâti Monjib (1962–) was prevented from traveling to France for a medical appointment and to see his family, due to an arbitrary travel ban imposed since October 2020 [See NCH Annual Report 2016, 2020–2021].²³⁰

On 10 January 2022, Jamaâ Baïda, director of l'Association marocain pour la recherche historique (Moroccan Association for Historical Research), expressed support for an initiative by the Archives du Maroc to return the “Ben Abdelkrim papers” from France, as they were of great scientific importance and constituted a “moral symbol for generations to come.” As President of the Republic of the Rif (1921–1926), Muhammad ibn Abd al-Karim al-Khattabi (Ben Abdelkrim) (1880–1963) led a large-scale revolt against French and Spanish colonizer troops during the Rif War (1921–1926), after which he had to surrender to the French forces and his archives were seized and taken to France. On 16 January 2021, the Archives du Maroc had sent an official letter to the diplomatic archives of France requesting the return of the personal documents, but it had not received any response.²³¹

When two organizers of the feminist platform Tanit were interviewed about their project Tarikhona Hona (Our History Is Here) to construct an archive of the LBGTQI+ community in Morocco, they announced that they would publish only one part of the archive online and keep secret the other part due to safety concerns. Archive volunteers who would conduct interviews were trained in cybersecurity in order for interviewees to be able to speak safely and for the interviews not to be hacked. Some of the volunteers withdrew from the project. One of the organizers preferred to be named by her initials only. In Morocco, same-sex relations were criminalized under Article 489 of the penal code and punishable by up to three years in prison.²³²

In June 2022, cinema authorities banned the British film Lady of Heaven, after it was condemned by the Supreme Ulema Council as a “flagrant falsification of the established facts” of Islam. The film, claiming to tell the story of Prophet Muhammad’s daughter Fatima ([605]–632 CE) and written by Shia Muslim film-maker and cleric Yasser Al-Habib, was criticized for its depiction of prominent revered figures in early Sunni Islam implicitly comparing their actions to those of the Islamic State group in ²³⁰ Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 258.

²³¹ Ghita Zine, “Archives du Maroc: Pour la restitution par la France des ‘papiers de Ben Abdelkrim’,” Yabiladi (11 January 2022).

²³² Kristin Gee Hickman, “Our History Is Here: An Interview with Marwan Bensaïd and L.A.,” Africa Is a Country (without date [2022]).

Iraq. The film also sparked protests in Egypt, Pakistan, Iran, Iraq, and the United Kingdom – where one of the biggest cinema chains, Cineworld, canceled many of its screenings.²³³

MOZAMBIQUE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018, 2020.

MYANMAR (BURMA)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2001, 2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2021.

At the beginning of the 1 February 2021 military coup, writer, history professor and PEN Myanmar member Maung Thar Cho (1958–) was blindfolded and taken by the military alongside other notable cultural figures. On 22 February 2022, after having been held under poor conditions for a year, a special court in North Okkalapa Township, Yangon, sentenced him and fellow author Htin Lin Oo to two years' imprisonment with hard labor and three years' imprisonment respectively, for alleged incitement. Cho had been a satirical writer for the newspaper 7Day and had delivered popular speeches around Myanmar criticizing the Tatmadaw (Armed Forces).²³⁴

On 28 February 2021, Tin Nwe Yee (Tin Nwae Yee; Tin Nwet Yi) ([1962]–2021), a history and math teacher at the Basic Education High School Hlaing Thar Yar in Yangon, was tear-gassed and killed by security forces during a teachers' protest against the military coup of 1 February 2021 in front of an office of the Education Ministry in Yangon. During the protest, Tin Nwe Yee, who suffered from asthma, was hit under the shoulder after she went behind a fence, because she had difficulty breathing after having been suffocated by tear gas. She allegedly attempted to take her inhaler, which was then kicked away by a police officer. An hour later, police allowed a volunteer rescue team to take Tin Nwe Yee to the hospital, but she had already died of a heart attack. On her Facebook account, Tin Nwe Yee had called on the regime to stop harming Myanmar's precious youths. On 2 March, tens of thousands of mourners attended her funeral, with many bringing school uniforms to the protest site where she had died. The Basic Education Worker Union (BEWU) called for a country-wide strike on [7] March.²³⁵

²³³ “Cineworld’s Cancellation of Lady of Heaven Screenings: An Unheavenly Response,” Index on Censorship (8 June 2022); “The Lady of Heaven Film: Morocco Bans ‘Blasphemous’ British Film,” BBC News (12 June 2022).

²³⁴ “Authors Maung Thar Cho and Htin Lin Oo Sentenced to Prison on Incitement Charges,” Development Media Group (22 February 2022); “Maung Thar Cho,” Wikipedia (last updated 7 May 2022); “Writers at Risk Database,” PEN America (last updated 4 June 2022).

On 27 April 2021, Felix Thang Muan Lian ([1998/9]–2021), a first-year history student at Kalay University, was shot dead by soldiers of the Light Infantry Battalion 269 of the Tatmadaw (Armed Forces) in Tedim Township, Chin State, while he was driving to his work at a gas station. Much of the violence occurred in Chin State, where some of the strongest resistance against the military junta took place.²³⁶

In June 2021, the Education Ministry under the exiled National Unity Government (NUG) announced an Interim Advanced Education initiative which began the same month. It started the first short courses for final-year master's degree students and final-year undergraduate students of history, among others. The courses came as a lecture series which were extended to the public with open live streams on Facebook, YouTube, and other social media.²³⁷

In the run-up to the first anniversary of the military coup of 1 February 2021 which ousted the democratically elected government of Aung San Suu Kyi, the junta arrested a number of shop owners who were planning to close their businesses as part of a "silent strike" to protest against the military rule and commemorate the coup victims. According to the Assistance Association for Political Prisoners, more than 1,500 people had been killed since the coup, with at least 11,838 having been arrested.²³⁸

²³⁵ Assistance Association for Political Prisons, Recent Fatality List \(Last Updated on 18 August 2021\); Kyaw Ye Lynn, "Myanmar: Honor Planned for Teacher Killed by Police," Anadolu Agency (7 March 2021); "Myanmar Protesters Honor Slain Teacher," Albawaba (7 March 2021); Sebastian Strangio, "Myanmar Post-Coup Death Toll Tops 1,000: Activist Group," Diplomat (19 August 2021); "Tin Nwe Yee," Memoirs of the Fallen ([between March and June] 2021); "Voices of Myanmar's Martyrs Will Not Be Silenced by the Junta," The Irrawaddy (11 May 2021).

²³⁶ "Thang Muan Lian," The Irrawaddy (Twitter; 28 April 2021); "CHRO Demands Accountability for Killing of Youth," Chin Human Rights Organization (press release; 29 April 2021); "Myanmar: Another Wave of Atrocity Crimes in Chin State," Human Rights Watch (4 November 2021); "Felix Thang Muan Lian," Memoirs of the Fallen ([no date]).

²³⁷ Nilar Aung Myint, "Exiled Government Establishes Alternative HE Programmes," World University News (24 July 2021).

²³⁸ Min Ye Kyaw & Rebecca Ratcliffe, "Myanmar's Junta Struggles to Prevent Protests Planned for Coup Anniversary," Guardian (31 January 2022); Min Ye Kyaw & Rebecca Ratcliffe, "Silent Strike Empties Streets in Myanmar on Anniversary of Coup," Guardian (1 February 2022).

NAMIBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 2006–2009, 2011, 2016–2018.

NEPAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007–2021.

NETHERLANDS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 2004–2005, 2007–2021.

In October 2021, research by the newspaper NRC Handelsblad revealed that many educational publishers instructed primary-school textbook authors to avoid controversial topics, including evolutionism, in order not to lose the market of Reformed schools with hundreds of thousands of pupils.²³⁹

On 28 November 2021, Yitzhak Melamed, a professor of philosophy at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, United States, and an expert in the work of philosopher Baruch Spinoza (1632–1677), was denied a visit to the Portuguese synagogue complex in Amsterdam (where Spinoza himself presumably studied) with an Israeli crew that planned to film Melamed conducting research in the library's archives. Rabbi Joseph Serfaty, a leader of Amsterdam's Sephardic community, wrote to Melamed that he was "persona non grata," barring him from the building while citing his "study of Spinoza's banned works and the development of his ideas." On 2 December, the ban was withdrawn but it was unclear whether filming would be allowed. In 1656, Spinoza had been excommunicated "for all time" from the Spanish-Portuguese Jewish community in Amsterdam for heresy. In 2015, a debate was held over whether to end the 1656 ban, but ultimately it was not lifted.²⁴⁰

²³⁹ Maarten Dallinga, "Dino's en korte rokjes worden uit de schoolboeken geweerd," NRC Handelsblad (9–10 October 2021), 24–26.

²⁴⁰ Shira Hanau, "In Echo of Excommunication, Top Spinoza Scholar Banned from Amsterdam Synagogue," Times of Israel (30 November 2021); Juurd Eijsvogel, "365 jaarna dato blijkt Spinoza's banvloek nog steeds intact," NRC Handelsblad (30 November 2021), 2; "Spinoza-expert is toch welkom in Portugees synagoge-complex," NRC Handelsblad (2 December 2021), 2.

On 15 December 2021, far-right politician Thierry Baudet was ordered to delete social media posts in which he had textually and visually compared COVID-19 restrictions for unvaccinated people to the Holocaust. His remarks had prompted legal action from four Holocaust survivors and Jewish groups (including the Central Jewish Consultation and the Center for Information and Documentation on Israel). A judge ruled against him for “pointlessly offending Holocaust victims and their relatives,” adding that the freedom of expression of politicians is not absolute. While removing the posts, Baudet, who claimed that historical comparisons cannot be defamatory, intended to appeal the judgment.²⁴¹

On 13 January 2022, the Federatie Indische Nederlanders (FIN; Federation of Dutch-Indonesians) filed a complaint for group defamation with the Public Prosecutor about an opinion article in NRC Handelsblad three days prior, in which Bonnie Triyana, the Indonesian guest curator of the exhibition “Revolusi! Indonesia Independent” in the Rijksmuseum, Amsterdam, had made statements that according to FIN were insulting to Dutch-Indonesians. Triyana had allegedly downplayed and denied the responsibility of the Indonesian perpetrators for massive violence committed in a period called Bersiap (1945–1946) and, in so doing, distorted historical facts and one-sidedly presented the Indonesians as victims and the Dutch as perpetrators of the violence. On 9 February 2022, the Public Prosecutor dismissed the complaint, saying that Triyana’s statements were protected by the right to free expression, did not contain negative conclusions about the group of Dutch-Indonesians as a whole, and were part of a public debate about historical events.

On 21 January 2022, the Komite Utang Kehormatan Belanda – Stichting Comité Nederlandse Ereschulden (KUKB; Foundation Dutch Debt of Honor Committee) also filed a complaint for group defamation against the Rijksmuseum (national museum), its director and a curator because they used the term Bersiap [See above] in the exhibition, which according to KUKB was racist and defamatory to Indonesians. On 9 February 2022, the Public Prosecutor dismissed the complaint, saying that using the term Bersiap was not criminal because the term referred to historical events and did not contain any negative conclusions about Indonesians as a group because of their race. The use of the word Bersiap was protected by the right to free expression and was part of a public debate about historical events.²⁴²

²⁴¹ Rechtbank Amsterdam, Centraal Joods Overleg, CIDI, and others versus Thierry Baudet (16 December 2021); “Baudet Should Be Ashamed of Covid, Holocaust Comparisons: Israel Group,” NL-Times (15 November 2021); CIDI, “Baudet voor de rechter om zijn Holocaust vergelijkingen” (press release; 7 December 2021); “Jewish Groups Take Baudet to Court over Holocaust Covid Comparison,” Dutch News (7 December 2021); “Jewish Groups File New Legal Case against Far Right Leader Baudet,” NL-Times (7 December 2021); “Baudet moet tweets met Holocaustvergelijking verwijderen na kort geding,” Nu.nl (15 December 2021); Marcel Haenen, “Baudet moet tweets met vergelijking coronaregels en Holocaust verwijderen,” NRC Handelsblad (15 December 2021); “Dutch MP Ordered to Delete Covid Holocaust Social Media Posts,” BBC News (16 December 2021); Wilmer Heck, “Het vonnis over de Holocaustvergelijkingen van Baudet is volgens experts ‘stevig onderbouwd’,” NRC Handelsblad (16 December 2021).

²⁴² Public Prosecutor, “Gebruik term ‘Bersiap’ bij tentoonstelling in Rijksmuseum niet strafbaar” (9 February 2022); Public Prosecutor (Amsterdam), Dismissal of Complaint by Federation of Dutch-Indonesians and Dismissal of Complaint by Foundation Dutch Debt of Honor Committee (in Dutch; 9 February 2022).

On 3 May 2022, one day before the Remembrance of the dead, the annual 4 May commemoration for all Dutch victims of war since the beginning of World War II, the Liberation Monument in Leiden was daubed with graffiti, including a dagger and an anarchist symbol.²⁴³

Saint Eustatius

On 28 July 2021, the special Dutch municipality of the island of Saint Eustatius suspended the archaeological excavation of a mass grave of dozens of slaves which it had itself commissioned, after Kenneth Cuvalay of the Ubuntu Connected Front (Saint Eustatius's largest political party, established 2017) had started an online petition to protest the fact that the archaeologists were all white. The municipality said that a commission of independent Caribbean experts had to investigate the project and that the international archaeological team led by Ruud Stelten had to seek advice from the local community. Several islanders expressed support for the excavations.²⁴⁴

See also Japan, Yemen.

NEW ZEALAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2003, 2005, 2007, 2017, 2019–2021.

NICARAGUA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2020–2021.

On 8 September 2021, President Daniel Ortega issued an arrest warrant for writer and former Vice President Sergio Ramírez (1942–), with all copies of his new book being impounded upon publication. Ramírez's latest novel, Tongolele no sabía bailar (Tongolele Did Not Know How To Dance), examined the protests against Ortega in 2018, when tens of thousands of people took to the street and more than 300 people were killed. Ramírez had been residing in Costa Rica since June.²⁴⁵

²⁴³ "Bevrijdingsmonument in Leiden beklad, gemeente doet aangifte," Nu.nl (3 May 2022).

²⁴⁴ Kees Broere, "Witte archeologen leggen begraafplaats slaafgemaakten bloot, en dat valt slecht op Sint Eustatius," Volkskrant (18 July 2021).

²⁴⁵ Sam Jones, "A Feeling of Deja Vu: Author Sergio Ramírez on ex-Comrade Ortega and Nicaraguan History Repeating," Guardian (18 September 2021).

NIGER

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2013, 2021.

NIGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2006, 2008, 2010–2013, 2016–2021.

Sharia laws in twelve northern states criminalized “blasphemy,” resulting in harsh punishments. On 10 August 2020, Yahaya Sharif-Aminu, a Muslim gospel musician, was sentenced to death by hanging by a Sharia court in Kano for using blasphemous expressions against the Prophet Muhammad in one of his songs (circulated on Whatsapp).

On 5 April 2022, Mubarak Bala, President of the Humanist Association of Nigeria, was sentenced to twenty-four years in prison after pleading guilty to blasphemy charges. On 28 April 2020, the State Police Command had arrested Bala in Kano, following a petition filed by a law firm alleging that he had insulted the Prophet Muhammad in his Facebook posts. He was refused access to his lawyers until October 2020 and detained without charges until August 2021, when a court charged him with ten counts of causing a public disturbance in connection to “blasphemous” Facebook posts. In 2014, Bala had been drugged and committed to a psychiatric unit by his family members after he had told them that he was an atheist. He had been released shortly thereafter and became an outspoken advocate for atheists rights and freedoms.

On 12 May 2022, Deborah Samuel, a Christian second-year student of economics at the Shehu Sagari College of Education in Sokoto was stoned and beaten by an angry mob of Muslim students at the school premises before being set on fire for sending a voice note alleged to be blasphemous against the Prophet Muhammad on her class WhatsApp group. The act was recorded by the perpetrators and widely shared on social media.²⁴⁶

On 24 October 2020, police officials of the Lagos State Task Force (LSTF) killed Pelumi Onifade ([1999 or 2000]–2020), a second-year student at the history department of Tai Solarin University of ²⁴⁶ “Sharia Court in Nigeria Sentences Singer to Death for Blasphemy,” Deutsche Welle (11 August 2020); Humanists International, Freedom of Thought Report 2020 (New York: Humanists International, 2020), 103; United States Commission on International Religious Freedom, “Mubarak Bala” (no date); Emmanuel Akinwotu, “Nigerian Humanist Jailed for 24 Years After Pleading Guilty to Blasphemy,” Guardian (5 April 2022); “Mob Kills Student over ‘Blasphemy’ in Northern Nigerian College,” Al Jazeera (12 May 2022); “Female Student in Nigeria Beaten to Death over ‘Blasphemy’,” Guardian (12 May 2022); Olabisi Deji-Folutile, “Female Student Killed after ‘Blasphemy’ on WhatsApp Group,” University World News (19 May 2022).

Education in Ijagun, Ogun State. Onifade was also a journalist intern at Gboah TV, an online television station, and had joined one of his colleagues in covering an attempted burglary at the Ministry of Agriculture in Ikeja, Lagos State. The burglary was part of a widespread wave of violence and looting that broke out after #EndSARS protesters – demanding the dissolution of the Special Anti-Robbery Squad (SARS), a police unit formed to combat armed robbery and other serious crimes set up in 1992 in Lagos, which had been implicated in human rights violations across Nigeria – had been attacked by police forces on 20 October 2020 at the Lekki tollgate. Despite wearing a press jacket, police attacked Onifade and dragged him into a police van together with others, after which he disappeared. Already on 20 October, Onifade had covered an #EndSARS protest at Abule Egba, Lagos State, that saw police forces shooting at unarmed protesters.

Following the disappearance of Onifade, his family and the television management searched for four days in hospitals, police stations, and prisons all over Lagos State. On the evening of 27 October, they posted a message about his disappearance on social media platforms, after which a LSTF officer reached out to them to schedule a meeting. On 28 October, officers told them that Onifade had died in police custody from the injuries he had sustained during the protest and that his body was sent to a mortuary in Ikorodu, north of Lagos State. On 30 October, the family identified Onifade's corpse. His death generated outrage throughout Nigeria, with people demanding justice on social media through the hashtag #JusticeforPelumi. However, after the identification of Onifade, police officials changed their statement and said that he had not been among those arrested on 24 October, but that his body had been found on the ground at an unspecified location. Moreover, his family was not allowed to take the corpse, because they needed to wait for a police report.

Meanwhile, on 6 November 2020, Onifade's family submitted a petition before the Lagos State Judicial Panel of Inquiry on the Restitution and Compensation of Victims of SARS-Related Abuse and Other Matters, a panel of inquiry investigating allegations of police brutality that had been set up on 19 October 2020. The Panel reportedly started an investigation around 11 November. On 18 November, UNESCO Director-General Audrey Azoulay called on the authorities to shed light on Onifade's death. On 10 April 2021, Abiodun Owonikok, the lead counsel to the Lagos State government, objected that the case did not fall within the panel's jurisdiction because the death was not caused by SARS forces, having been committed after SARS had officially been disbanded by the government. The LSTF had been repeatedly implicated in human rights abuses and extortion: on 15 October 2020, an anonymous group had issued a call for the disbandment of the LSTF, saying that it operated with impunity and had been as deadly as its "twin brother" SARS.

In February 2021, the Lagos State government asked Onifade's parents to do a DNA test, but they never received the results. On 12 May 2021, the family returned to the Ikorodu mortuary, but the attendant said that the corpse had already been checked out. It was presumably still kept in government custody.²⁴⁷

NORTH MACEDONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2021. See also Macedonia.

In July 2022, as part of a bilateral agreement with Bulgaria, the government promised to fully open the archives of the state security services during the Communist period (1945–1991). The two countries further agreed to jointly celebrate historical events and figures that were agreed as part of a common historical heritage, such as Tsar of the First Bulgarian Empire (681–1018) King Samuel (d. 1014) for whom a seventh-grade example lesson would be prepared.²⁴⁸

See also Bulgaria, Greece.

NORWAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2012, 2016–2017.

In December 2021, the Fritt Ord foundation, a freedom of speech organization, called for a state commission to investigate the murder attempt, on 11 October 1993, of William Nygaard (1943–), director of the Aschehoug publishing house, the second biggest of Norway, after new information about a prime suspect had become available. Nygaard was shot three times and left for dead outside of his home in Oslo. Although nobody claimed responsibility, the shooting was widely believed to be linked to Aschehoug's publication of the historical novel The Satanic Verses in Norwegian and Nygaard's support of its author, writer and historian Salman Rushdie (1947–). On 14 February 1989, Ayatollah ²⁴⁷ Sada Malumfashi, "Nigeria's SARS: A Brief History of the Special Anti-Robbery Squad," AlJazeera (22 October 2020); Mojeed Alabi, "#EndSARS: How Police Killed 20-Year-Old Nigerian Journalist," Premium Times (3 November 2020); Victor Oluwole, "Nigerians Mourn Pelumi Onifade, the Young Reporter Who Was Found Dead after Covering #EndSARS Protests," Business Insider Africa (4 November 2020); UNESCO, "Nigeria: UNESCO Director-General Calls for Investigation into the Death of Journalist Pelumi Onifade" (18 November 2020); "Onifade Emmanuel Pelumi," Committee to Protect Journalists ([after 19 November 2020]); "Justice Demanded for Death of 20-Year-Old Pelumi Onifade," IFEX (16 March 2021); Shola Soyele, "Pelumi Onifade: Lagos Govt. Challenges Jurisdiction of Panel to Hear Petition," Channels TV (11 May 2021); "#MySARSstory: Killed and Missing," International Centre for Investigative Reporting (3 November 2021).

²⁴⁸ Krassen Nikolov, "Sofia, Skopje to Fight Propaganda on Both Sides of Border," Euractiv (19 July 2022).

Ruhollah Khomeini had issued a fatwa (religious edict) which called for the killing of Rushdie [See NCH Annual Reports 1996, 1998–1999, 2013].²⁴⁹

See also Russia.

²⁴⁹ Dominic Hinde, “Call for Investigation into Historical Police Handling of Norwegian Publisher’s Attempted Murder,” Index on Censorship (17 December 2021).

OMAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2017, 2019, 2021.

PAKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2004, 2006, 2009–2012, 2014, 2016, 2018–2019, 2021.

See India, Morocco.

PALESTINE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998–2002, 2008–2010, 2013–2015, 2018, 2021.

In June 2021, the Georg Eckert Institute (GEI), a Germany-based research institute in Germany specialized in conducting and facilitating research into educational media, published a Report on Palestinian Textbooks, the result of a study announced in May 2019 by the European Commission (EC) to analyze how Palestinian textbooks, including for history education, that were published between 2017 – when the Palestinian Authority had introduced fundamental curriculum reforms – and 2020 addressed themes such as tolerance and human rights.

In July 2020, the GEI had completed an “interim report.” The document, allegedly only intended for internal communication and to be spread among partners for discussion about the preliminary results and used methodology, was reviewed by the Institute for Monitoring Peace and Cultural Tolerance in School Education (IMPACT-SE), a Jerusalem-based organization specialized in researching intolerance in school textbooks, mainly in the Middle East, whose previous heavy criticism of the Palestinian textbooks had prompted the EC to launch its investigation. IMPACT-SE found that, among others, textbooks distributed and financed by the Israeli Ministry of Education for schools in occupied East Jerusalem had been “misleadingly included” in GEI’s research, that GEI had ignored instances of anti-Semitism, and that GEI’s research contained “significant omissions within the quantitative analysis” such as the absence of the term Holocaust.

On 10 October 2020, following IMPACT-SE’s review, the GEI project’s leader professor Riem Spielhaus claimed in an interview that the use of Israeli textbooks had been noticed during the GEI research. The GEI stated that these textbooks, issued by the Palestinian Authority, had to be approved and possibly amended by Israeli authorities for use in schools, and that they were part of a separate analysis that had been mandated by the EC. On 16 October, Peter Stano, the European Union’s Lead Spokesperson for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy, released a statement in support of GEI, stressing that the report was intended for internal use only and reassuring that the final report would find any errors being properly addressed. In August 2021, IMPACT-SE criticized GEI’s final report for allegedly

“shield[ing] the P[alestinian] A[uthorities] textbooks from criticism for teaching violence and rejection of peace.”²⁵⁰

On 9 April 2022, Palestinians in Nablus vandalized the tomb where the biblical figure Joseph was said to be buried as Israeli forces carried out raids in the occupied West Bank in the wake of a gun attack in Tel Aviv by a Palestinian on 7 April, which left three Israelis dead and eleven others injured. Palestinian security forces detained the perpetrators. The tomb had previously been a flashpoint for violence, having been set alight by Palestinian rioters in 2015 and 2000.²⁵¹

See also Israel, United States.

PANAMA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2008, 2013, 2015–2017.

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

PARAGUAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2005, 2007, 2009–2010, 2012, 2015, 2020.

In May 2021, writer and teacher Nelson Aguilera (1961–) [See NCH Annual Reports 2015, 2020] was given back his passport and had his rights restored after his case had expired on 3 February.²⁵²

²⁵⁰ Georg Eckert Institute, “Answers to Frequently Asked Questions,” (no date [2020–2021]); IMPACT-se, EU Interim Report Results of the Palestinian Authority Curriculum: An IMPACT-se Review (20 September 2020; 25 pages); Muhamad Abdi & Sebastian Leber, “Wie Deutschland Antisemitismus mitfinanziert,” Tagesspiegel (10 October 2020); Georg Eckert Institute, Report on Palestinian Textbooks (June 2021; 194 pages); IMPACT-se, IMPACT-se Review of the Georg Eckert Institute Report of Palestinian Authority Textbooks (August 2021).

²⁵¹ “Palestinians Attack Biblical Figure Joseph’s Tomb in West Bank,” BBC News (11 April 2022).

²⁵² Lucina Kathmann, “Nelson Aguilera, Free at Last,” PEN International (23 June 2021); “Nelson Aguilera,” Escritores.org ([no date]).

On 22 October 2021, Bernard Raymond von Bredow (1959–2021), a self-taught paleontologist and experimental archaeologist, was tortured and killed in Areguá, Departamento Central, together with his 14-year old daughter. Three Germans were arrested. The murder was allegedly related to two of von Bredow's violins that were believed to be made by the Italian luthier Antonio Stradivari (1644–1737). The murderers were “looking for authentication certificates” which they could use to sell the violins. In 1975, the sixteen-year-old Bredow had found a large mammoth skeleton in Traunstein, Germany. Ten years later, he participated in the excavation of the skeleton under the auspices of the paleontologist Kurt Heißig. In 1991, Bredow set up the Mammutheum, a museum for experimental archaeology. He had migrated to Paraguay in [2016/7].²⁵³

PERU

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2021.

On 29 July 2021, Guido Bellido from the Marxist Free Peru party was sworn in as prime minister at the site of a 1824 battle that sealed independence from Spain. At the moment of his inauguration Bellido was investigated for “apology for terrorism,” a crime in Peru, after having defended members of the Maoist Shining Path in an interview with local media in April 2021. The 2003 Truth and Reconciliation Commission had estimated that almost 70,000 people had died or had been subject to enforced disappearance during the armed conflict (1980–2000), with many having become victims of atrocities by the Shining Path and other insurgent groups.²⁵⁴

In early January 2022, vandals smashed a hole in a replica statue of a ceramic vessel representing a fertility symbol of the Mochica culture in Moche, La Libertad, that had been on display there since the beginning of 2002. The Mochica (or Moche) lived in the region between 100 and 700 CE.²⁵⁵

²⁵³ “Stradivarius Violin Link Suspected in Killing of Germans in Paraguay,” Guardian (10 November 2021); “Bernard von Bredow,” Wikipedia (10 November 2021); “Paraguay: Police Probe Stradivarius Violin Theft Motive in Double Murder,” BBC News (10 November 2021).

²⁵⁴ Dan Collyns, “Peru: New President Appoints Marxist as Prime Minister,” Guardian (30 July 2021).

²⁵⁵ Dan Collyns, “Peruvian Statue’s Giant Penis Thrills Tourists but Vandals Are Turned Off,” Guardian (7 January 2022).

PHILIPPINES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2015, 2019–2021.

In the lead-up to the 9 May 2022 presidential elections, campaigners for Ferdinand “Bongbong” Marcos Jr. alleged that the administration of his father Ferdinand Marcos (1965–1986) had brought glory and wealth to the Philippines and that no arrests had been made under martial law (1972–1986). Already on 10 January 2020, Marcos Jr. had declared that it was time to revise the content of history textbooks and blamed the opposition for their “political propaganda” which had depicted the Marcos family in a bad light. The Commission on Human Rights, however, called his statement a direct affront to the 11,000 victims of summary execution, torture, and other human rights violations under Marcos’s dictatorship.

When Sara Duterte was appointed Minister of Education in the government of Marcos Jr., critics raised concerns that she would lead a campaign to rewrite the history of the administrations of Ferdinand Marcos and Rodrigo Duterte (2016–2022) in the history textbooks.

On 19 May 2022, around 1,700 scholars and educators signed a manifesto calling for the defense of historical truth and academic freedom, signaling an “intensified struggle over historical knowledge,” and pledging to “combat all attempts at historical revisionism” related to the Marcos dictatorship, including the martial law period. The signatories also vowed to protect historical, educational and cultural institutions and to “preserve books, documents, records, artifacts, archives and other source materials pertaining to the martial law period.” There was further concern about the future of the Human Rights Violations Victims’ Memorial Commission (HRVVMC), a commission set up in 2012 to establish the facts and preserve the evidence about human rights violations committed during the Marcos dictatorship. The HRVVMC, set to start building a memorial museum featuring exhibitions on martial law, depended for its budget on the annual renewal by Congress.

In a 6 July 2022 webinar, more than two hundred educators and scholars attended the formal launch of the Network in Defense of Historical Truth and Academic Freedom, which previously vowed to promote academic initiatives “to protect the memories of a most violent and traumatic period” during the martial law period. At the webinar, Francis Gealogo, history professor at the Ateneo de Manila University and one of the authors of the manifesto, said that history, as a discipline, tended to become more vulnerable with organized troll networks distorting the way information was spread on social media. Michael Tan, former Chancellor of the University of the Philippines Diliman, suggested that Filipino scholars should not only counter historical revisionism but also document the history of minority groups.²⁵⁶

²⁵⁶ Glee Jalea, “Marcos Pushes for Revision of History Textbooks: ‘You’re Teaching the Children Lies’,” CNN Philippines (10 January 2020); Krixia Subingsubing, “Revisionism, Denialism: Academics Explain Views on Marcos Era,” Inquirer.net (22 September 2020); Regine Cabato & Shibani Mahtani, “How the Philippines’

POLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2000–2001, 2004–2005, 2007–2011, 2014–2021.

On 16 August 2021, the court of appeals overturned the ruling against historians Jan Grabowski and Barbara Engelking [See NCH Annual Reports 2020–2021], saying that the litigation constituted an unacceptable violation of freedom of expression and of scientific research and that the “courtroom was not the right place for historical debate.”²⁵⁷

On 5 October 2021, anti-Semitic graffiti were discovered at the Auschwitz II-Birkenau death camp site. Nine barracks were spray-painted with anti-Semitic phrases and slogans in German and English denying the Holocaust. Earlier in 2021, the wall of a Jewish cemetery near the camp was defaced with swastikas and other Nazi symbols.²⁵⁸

On 9 November 2021, Sławomir Poleszak, a historian specialized in contemporary history and the Polish Communist underground movement, was dismissed from the Instytut Pamięci Narodowej – Komisja Ścigania Zbrodni przeciwko Narodowi Polskiemu (IPN; Institute of National Remembrance – Commission for the Prosecution of Crimes against the Polish Nation) by IPN president Karol Nawrocki. In 2020, Poleszak had published a paper in which he suggested that Józef Franczak, considered by many as a national hero for his anti-Communist resistance, had been involved in the murder of Jews during the Holocaust. In the dismissal letter, Nawrocki had allegedly stated that Poleszak’s dismissal was due to his research as well as to his work as an editor of the ohistorie website (ohistorie.eu), on which articles critical of the IPN were published.

One day before Poleszak’s dismissal, on 8 November 2021, Sławomir Łukasiewicz, a professor of twentieth-century history and the history of historiography at the Katolicki Uniwersytet Lubelski (KUL; Catholic University of Lublin), had been forced to resign from the IPN, because Nawrocki had refused him permission to give classes at the KUL, despite the fact that these did not overlap with his IPN work. Łukasiewicz had been one of Poleszak’s most outspoken defenders at the IPN. Both decisions were Brutal History Is Being Whitewashed for Voters,” Washington Post (12 April 2022); “Sara Duterte on DepEd Post: PH Needs New Generation of Advocates for Peace, Discipline,” CNN Philippines (12 May 2022); “Concerns Mount over Duterte’s Appointment as DepEd Chief,” CNN Philippines (13 May 2022); “Manifesto in Defense of Historical Truth and Academic Freedom” (19 May 2022); Pola Lem, “Academics Warn Against Historical Revisionism in Philippines,” Times Higher Education (6 June 2022); Rebecca Ratcliffe, “Archivists Rush to Preserve Records of Atrocities Under Ferdinand Marcos Sr,” Guardian (7 June 2022); Sui-Lee Wee, “The Museum Was Built So No One Would Forget – Now It’s Falling Apart,” New York Times (7 June 2022); Jan Cuyco, “‘Academia in Peril’: Filipino Scholars Push Back against Disinformation, Red-Tagging,” Interaksyon (7 July 2022).

²⁵⁷ “Polish Appeals Court Overturns Ruling against Holocaust Historians,” Guardian (16 August 2021).

²⁵⁸ “Anti-Semitic Graffiti Discovered by Staff at Auschwitz Death Camp,” BBC News (7 October 2021).

criticized by Holocaust remembrance organizations in Israel and Germany, and in an open letter by historians, who stated that they constituted censorship and intimidation attempts by the IPN leadership and that it was no longer possible to cooperate with IPN under its current leadership.²⁵⁹

On 28 December 2021, Minister of Education and Science Przemysław Czarnek introduced a new subject, “History and the Present,” for the 2022–2023 high school and technical school curricula. Czarnek said the aim was to protect young people from being manipulated so that “the youth will know the truth.” The new subject would, among others, instruct children about the “partial betrayal that accompanied” the overthrow of the Communist regime in 1989 – a theory pushed by the government that baselessly posits that Communists were still secretly in control of Poland.²⁶⁰

In May 2022, President Andrzej Duda was accused of having blocked for three years the promotion to full professor of Michał Bilewicz, head of the Center for Research on Prejudice at the University of Warsaw and an expert of the psychology of genocide. Critics saw this as a sign that the right-wing government pressurized scholars who implicated Poles in the Holocaust [See NCH Annual Report 2018].²⁶¹

See also Israel, Russia.

PORTUGAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017, 2021.

See Netherlands.

²⁵⁹ Mirosław Filipowicz, personal communication (13 November 2021); Sam Sokol, “Top Polish Institute Accused of Firing Historians over Holocaust-Era Research,” Haaretz (21 November 2021).

²⁶⁰ “Przemysław Czarnek on a New Subject – History and Present: Students Will Learn about the Circumstances of the Round Table and ‘Partial Betrayal’,” Polish News (28 December 2021).

²⁶¹ Ben Upton, “Polish President Stifles Genocide Researcher’s Professorship Bid,” Times Higher Education (26 May 2022).

QATAR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

ROMANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000, 2003, 2005, 2007–2008, 2010, 2019, 2021.

In 2021 and 2022, the Direcția Generală de Protecție Internă (General Directorate for Internal Security) of the Ministry of Internal Affairs started verifications of the Arhivele Naționale ale României (ANR; Romanian National Archives) under Law no. 182/2002 on the protection of classified information and Government Decision no. 585/2002 establishing application standards for that law. Two researchers and two archivists came under investigation by the Service for Investigating Organized Crime and Terrorism, being accused of “organized crime and terrorism” because they had access or allowed others to have access to classified historical documents from the ANR. On 26 May 2022, the ANR issued an administrative measure to the effect that any requested file would be reviewed for classified information and that this might cause delays in answering the researchers’ requests of documents. On 29 May 2022, sixteen historians and academics signed an open letter protesting against the ANR decision.

Critics feared that the measure blocked access to historical records from any period (including World War II and the Communist era [1947–1989]) indefinitely, meaning that any historical document held by the ANR that was labeled classified by the creating agency (whether that agency was the Romanian Communist Party or the Austro-Hungarian Empire) would remain to be considered sensitive information that must be protected. In other words, access to such historical documents would de facto be blocked indefinitely. Many documents that had been made public in the past were reclassified. Critics also revealed that records from the National Archival Fund had been destroyed and continued to be destroyed at the request and under the supervision of the secret services. No law had ever declassified the historical records held by the ANR, regardless of the year of creation, the creating agency or their content. According to some whistleblowers, documents created after 1990 were no longer transferred to the ANR.²⁶²

On 2 December 2021, the High Court of Cassation and Justice ruled in favor of reopening the criminal investigation into the role of former President Ion Iliescu (in office 1989–1996 and 2000–2004) in the 1990 “Mineriada” events. Between 13 and 15 June 1990, thousands of demonstrators had protested against the election of ex-Communist Iliescu in the first multi-party elections since the overthrow of dictator Nicolae Ceausescu (1918–1989; in office as General Secretary of the Communist Party, 1965–1989) in December 1989. Iliescu had ordered security forces and miners to end the demonstrations, resulting in the deaths of at least six people, with protest leaders claiming that up to a hundred people were killed. In 2009, Iliescu had been removed from prosecution.²⁶³

²⁶² Elena Dragomir, “The End of Archive Research on Communist and Post-communist Romania?” H-Romania (8 June 2022); “Scrisoare deschisă privind accesul istoricilor la documente din Arhivele Naționale,” Contributors.org (29 May 2022); Madalin Necsutu, “Romanian Historians Protest Curbs on Access to Archives,” Balkan Insight (30 May 2022); Vera and Donald Blinken Open Society Archives, “Blinken OSA on the Restriction of Access to the National Archives of Romania” (press release; 7 July 2022).

RUSSIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1998, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2021.

On 22 December 2020, agents of the Federal'naya sluzhba bezopasnosti (FSB; Federal Security Service) seized part of the print run of Neizvestnaja severnaja istorija ("Unknown Northern History"), a work of popular history and ethnography by Agnes Haikara about Norwegian and Finnish communities of colonists who moved to the Kola Peninsula in the nineteenth century and were eradicated in 1938–1940. The book was based on official documents and stories of descendants and immigrants, including some of Haikara's family members. On 12 May 2021, the Deputy Prosecutor General of the Russian Federation reported that the FSB had found unspecified "signs of extremism" in Haikara's book and confiscated it. On 15 December 2021, the European Parliament condemned the confiscation as an example of the policy of historical revisionism and glorification of Stalinism promoted by the Russian government.²⁶⁴

In July 2021, Team 29, an association of lawyers and journalists aiming at counteracting the increasing governmental campaign against freedom of information, was forced to delete all its publications and web archives to prevent prosecution under the "foreign agents" law.²⁶⁵

In July 2021, a presidential decree ordered the creation of an interagency commission on historical education "in order to ensure a planned and aggressive approach to the matter of defending the national interests of the Russian Federation" [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. It would be chaired by Vladimir Medinsky – Culture Minister (2012–2020), head of the Military-Historical Society, and Putin's personal adviser – and would include representatives of the Federal Security Service (FSB), the Interior Ministry, the Investigative Committee of Russia, the presidential administration, the staff of the Security Council, the Prosecutor-General's Office, the foreign intelligence service (SVR), among others. The commission's brief covered both formal historical education and informal historical education through ²⁶³ Madalin Necsutu, "Romanian Ex-President Faces Probe Over 1990s Violence Against Protesters," Balkan Insight (3 December 2021).

²⁶⁴ "Агнеса Хайкара добивается возвращения части тиража своей книги о репрессиях на Кольском полуострове," SOVA Center for Information and Analysis (27 August 2021); European Parliament Resolution on the Continuous Crackdown on Civil Society and Human Rights Defenders in Russia: The Case of Human Rights Organisation Memorial \(2021/3018\(RSP\)\) (15 December 2022), paragraph 9.

²⁶⁵ Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 311.

museums, culture, and entertainment. Medinsky had headed a similar commission in 2012 aimed at combating the purported falsification of history when he was culture minister under President Dmitry Medvedev [See NCH Annual Reports 2009, 2013, 2016–2021]. Russian historians were alarmed by the news.²⁶⁶

On 3 July 2021, President Vladimir Putin published a decree “On the National Security Strategy of the Russian Federation.” It outlined “attempts deliberately to erode traditional values, distort global history ... [and] rehabilitate Fascism” as one of the threats to the federation and stated that “traditional Russian spiritual, moral and cultural-historical values are under active attack by the U.S. and its allies.” The decree was seen as the main point of reference for Russia’s national interests, strategic priorities, and threat perceptions. One of the main changes – as compared to the preceding 2015 Strategy – was its new focus on “the protection of traditional Russian spiritual and moral values, culture and historical memory” [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. On 24 January 2022, the Ministry of Culture published “Fundamentals of State Policy for the Preservation and Strengthening of Traditional Russian Spiritual and Moral Values,” a proposal to strengthen “traditional Russian values” by “countering the spread of destructive ideology,” such as denial of patriotism, in arts and culture. The proposal was criticized by some of Russia’s most prominent theater directors.²⁶⁷

On 12 July 2021, President Vladimir Putin published an article on the presidential website, entitled “On the Historical Unity of Ukrainians and Russians.” It contained an elaboration of the official state narrative that the Russian nation dates back to the adoption of Christianity by Prince Vladimir of Kyiv in 988. The Russian and Ukrainian peoples, Putin continued, had thereafter been artificially separated, first by the Mongols, the Turks, and the Polish-Lithuanian commonwealth, then by the Bolsheviks, who had “often imposed [Ukrainization] on those who did not see themselves as Ukrainians.” Putin further stated that the Ukrainian language was nothing more than a “regional language peculiarity.” Defense minister Sergei Shoigu signed an order requiring the armed forces to study the article. The article was seen as fitting within a broader government effort to distort history [See NCH Annual Report 2021].²⁶⁸

On 31 July 2021, the European Court of Human Rights published its judgment on the murder of historian and journalist Natalia Estemirova (1958–2009). It ruled that the Russian State had violated its obligations to conduct a full and thorough investigation into the murder and found “certain contradictions in the expert evidence” that remained unsolved. It further said that the government “undermined its [i.e., the Court’s] ability to assess the quality of the investigation” by refusing to hand over its full case file to the Court. On 15 July 2009, Estemirova, a journalist for Novaya Gazeta and head of Memorial’s Chechnyan desk in Grozny, was abducted and shot dead in the neighboring republic of Ingushetia. Her murder came amid a pattern of threats against Memorial staff members and the murder of other activists. None of the suspected killers had been brought to justice [See NCH Annual Reports 2010–2012, 2015, 2020].²⁶⁹

²⁶⁶ Mikhail Sokolov & Robert Coalson, “‘A Dangerous Commission’: Russian Historians Alarmed As Putin Creates State Body On ‘Historical Education’,” RFE/RL News (10 August 2021).

²⁶⁷ Mark Galeotti, “New National Security Strategy Is a Paranoid’s Charter,” Moscow Times (5 July 2021); “Russian Theater Execs Protest Ministry’s ‘Traditional Values’ Push,” The Moscow Times (4 February 2022).

²⁶⁸ “Article by Vladimir Putin ‘On the Historical Unity of Russians and Ukrainians’,” Kremlin (12 July 2021); Peter Rutland, “In Putin’s Hands, History Becomes a Weapon,” Transitions (27 July 2021).

On 12 October 2021, Sergey Zuev (1954–), art historian and rector of the Moscow Higher School of Social and Economic Sciences (also known as Shaninka, named after its founder, sociologist Theodor Shanin), was allegedly taken from a hospital, where he had been admitted with a hypertensive crisis, and put in pre-trial detention, reportedly in relation to a large-scale investigation into alleged money laundering of former Deputy Minister of Education Marina Rakova. After his arrest, he was again hospitalized for heart surgery. On [24 or 25] November 2021, he was charged under the Criminal Code with “fraud committed by an organized group or on an especially large scale” for the fictitious employment of employees. The case showed the risks that non-state institutions faced, being almost entirely dependent on government funding, due to government’s attempts to scare off foreign donors and forcing institutions that do receive funding to register as “Foreign Agents” [See Memorial below]. In an open letter published by Novaya Gazeta, 59 academicians, corresponding members and professors of the Russian Academy of Sciences called the charge absurd.²⁷⁰

On 14 October 2021, a screening of the Polish-British film Mr. Jones (also known as Red Secrets) by director Agnieszka Holland about the Holodomor (the famine that as a result of Stalin’s farm collectivization program killed millions of people in Ukraine in 1932–1933) in Memorial’s Moscow premises was interrupted by masked men who threatened the audience and yelled that “our history should not be distorted.” When they disappeared, police detained and interrogated the organizers and audience for hours and took away a video recording device.²⁷¹

²⁶⁹ European Court of Human Rights, Case of Estemirova v. Russia (Application no. 42705/11) (31 August 2021); “Russia Failed to Properly Investigate Activist Estemirova’s Murder, ECHR Rules,” Moscow Times (31 August 2021); “European Court’s Judgment on Natalia Estemirova’s Abduction and Killing Highlights Unabated Impunity in Russia,” Amnesty International (31 August 2021).

²⁷⁰ “Ректор “Шанинки” Сергей Зуев задержан по делу Марины Раковой,” BBC News (12 October 2021); Elena Gunkel, “СМИ: В Москве задержан ректор “Шанинки” Сергей Зуев,” Die Welt (12 October 2021); “Outcry as Head of Top University Arrested in Fraud Case,” The Bell (18 October 2021); Andrey Karev, “Ректору Шанинки Сергею Зуеву предъявили обвинение по делу о фиктивном трудоустройстве в РАНХиГС,” Novaya Gazeta (25 November 2021); “The Investigation Brought Charges against Sergey Zuev, the Rector of the Moscow Higher School of Social and Economic Sciences (Shaninka),” Times Higher Education (29 November 2021); “Open Letter from Academicians in Defense of Sergei Zuev,” Times Higher Education (29 November 2021).

On 26 October 2021, law enforcement authorities started an investigation into rapper Alisher Tagirovich Morgenshtern (1998–) for criticism of Victory Day, the annual commemoration of World War II on 9 May. In a YouTube interview, Morgenshtern had said that he did not understand Victory Day and that the millions spent on it every year were because “[t]here’s probably simply nothing else to be proud of.” The investigation followed a request by a veterans’ organization to verify whether the comments violated article 354.1 of the Criminal Code (which criminalizes “rehabilitation of Nazism”) [See NCH Annual Report 2021].²⁷²

On [26] October 2021, authorities opened an inquiry into artist Kirill Miller, for his painting “The Living and the Dead,” depicting people carrying portraits of decomposing bodies, after complaints that it was an offensive allusion to the “Immortal Regiment” – an annual commemorative event during Victory Day on 9 May, in which people carry pictures of those who served and died during World War II. On 26 September, the last day of an exhibition at the Pig’s Snout Art gallery in St. Petersburg that featured the painting, someone had posted a critique of it in the “Memories of Veterans” group on social media platform VKontakt, after which its moderators had urged people to appeal to the St. Petersburg department of the Investigative Committee of Russia. Then, on 22 October, a video of lawyer Pavel Astakhov on the Facebook page of the Immortal Regiment of Russia, a non-profit organization, announced a complaint against Miller, stating that “evil, no matter how it disguises itself as alternative art, must be punished and destroyed.”²⁷³

On 11 November 2021, the Prosecutor-General’s Office filed a lawsuit with the Supreme Court to liquidate Memorial, an international historical and human rights society founded in 1987, and all of its regional and structural units for alleged repeated violations of the “foreign agents” act – a controversial 2012 law that required NGOs to register as “foreign agents” if they engaged in political activity and received foreign funding [See NCH Annual Report 2017]. International Memorial was added to the “foreign agents” registry in 2014 and had since been fined at least 21 times, for a sum of more than 4.2

²⁷¹ Inna Hartwich, “Menschenrechtler*innen in Russland: Konzertierte Attacke in Moskau,” taz (15 October 2021); Pjotr Sauer, “Masked Men Storm Moscow Screening of Film About Stalin-Era Famine,” Guardian (15 October 2021); “Moscow Human Rights Group Stormed During Holodomor Film Screening,” Moscow Times (15 October 2021).

²⁷² “Russia to Probe Rapper’s Criticism of WWII Victory Parade,” Moscow Times (27 October 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 551.

²⁷³ “Петербургский художник написал картину, на которой толпа живых людей идет с портретами мертвых,” Meduza (27 October 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 564.

million rubles (£ 44,000) as of 2020 [See also NCH Annual Report 2021]. On 25 November 2021, the first hearing of the case took place. Memorial's acting director Yelena Zhemkova argued it would be wrong to shut an organization that "helps preserve shared memory" on a "technicality." On 23 November, a second trial against Memorial, accusing its Human Rights Center (MHRC) of "justifying the activities of terrorist and extremist organizations" for compiling a list of current political prisoners in Russia, had started before the Moscow City Court.

On 28 December 2021, the Supreme Court ordered International Memorial's liquidation for failing to mark a number of social media posts with its official status as a "foreign agent." The prosecutor accused Memorial of distorting historic memory, saying that "by cashing in on the subject of political reprisals of the twentieth century, Memorial is mendaciously portraying the USSR as a terrorist state and whitewashing and vindicating Nazi criminals having blood of Soviet citizens on their hands." The statements echoed earlier comments by President Vladimir Putin, who called Memorial "one of the most reputable organizations" during a meeting with his human rights council this month, but also accused it of glorifying Holocaust perpetrators. Police arrested several Memorial supporters at the court who held up signs with slogans such as "We are Memorial" and "Hands off Memorial." One of them, Aleksei Belenkin, served twenty-five days in prison. On 29 December 2021, the Moscow City Court authorized the dissolution of the MHCR.

Memorial appealed the ruling, including as an application before the European Court of Human Rights, which on 29 December ordered a stay of the decisions to shut down Memorial. On 28 February 2022, the Supreme Court turned down Memorial's appeal. It was unclear what would happen to Memorial's databases of three million victims and nearly 42,000 collaborators of the Soviet secret police between 1935 and 1939, its archive with personal files, and other physical items. In March 2022, the International Council on Archives expressed its deep concern for the future of the archives, library and museum of International Memorial, urging the Russian government to protect the archives and enable uninterrupted access to them.²⁷⁴

²⁷⁴ NCH Campaign 1 (2021); NCH Campaign 2 (2021); "On the Liquidation of International Memorial" (International Memorial Board Statement; 28 December 2021); Andrew Roth, "Russia Moves to Shut Down Country's Most Celebrated Civil Rights Group," Guardian (11 November 2021); "Memorial: Russia Moves to Close Major Human Rights Group," BBC News (11 November 2021); "Russian Prosecutor-General's Office Takes Aim at Memorial Rights Group," RFE/RL (11 November 2021); Deutsche Gesellschaft für Osteuropakunde, "Erklärung zur beantragten Auflösung von Memorial International" (petition; 14 November 2021); The Observatory for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders, "Appeal RUS 007 / 1121 / OBS 117" (15 November 2021); Joint Statement by Russian and International Human Rights Groups in Support of Memorial, "Memorial: Russian Authorities Move to Shut Down a Human Rights Giant" (press release; 15 November 2021); Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights, "Statement: The Russian Authorities Should Discontinue the Liquidation of Memorial and Repeal the 'Foreign Agents Law as a Matter of Priority'" (press release; 17 November 2021); "Попытка ликвидировать «Мемориал»" [An attempt to liquidate Memorial; Polish petition], Novaya Gazeta (19 November 2021); Andrew Roth, "Court Cases Threatening Human Rights Group Memorial Start in Russia," Guardian (24 November 2021); "Relatives of Stalin's Victims Fret about Possible Closure of Top Rights Group," Reuters (24 November 2021); Hands off 'Memorial'! (Petition; November 2021); "Protest at Russian Court as Future of Rights Group 'Memorial' Hangs in Balance" (Petition Update; 1 December 2021); European Parliament Resolution on the Continuous

In December 2021, the group Veterans of Russia accused Memorial of “denying, concealing and falsifying the crimes of Nazi accomplices by memorializing them as victims of political repression,” claiming that nineteen victims of Soviet repression in Memorial’s database of more than three million names were Nazi collaborators [See above]. On 5 February 2022, the Investigative Committee launched a criminal probe into “rehabilitation of Nazism” (punishable with imprisonment of up to five years). Memorial rejected the veterans’ claims for sixteen individuals, admitting possible errors in the three remaining cases “due to the lack of documentation about their rehabilitation.”²⁷⁵

On 27 December 2021, a court in Petrozavodsk increased the prison term for Karelian historian Yuri Dmitriyev (1956–) from thirteen to fifteen years. On 10 January 2022, Dmitriyev lodged an appeal with the Supreme Court of Karelia [See NCH Annual Reports 2018–2021].²⁷⁶

On 17 January 2022, an investigation for “grievances towards the dead and their burial site” was opened against Ivan Volkov, a painter who had created a snow sculpture in the shape and colors of giant excrements at the Field of Mars, a central square in St. Petersburg that also houses the graves of victims of the 1917 Revolution. If convicted, he would face up to five years in prison.²⁷⁷

On 22 February 2022, the State Duma (lower house of parliament) introduced a bill attaching fines and prison sentences to the 2021 memory law banning “any public attempt to equate the aims and actions of the Soviet Union and Nazi Germany during World War II, as well as to deny the decisive role of the Soviet people in the victory over Fascism” [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. One of the bill’s co-authors, Crackdown on Civil Society and Human Rights Defenders in Russia: The Case of Human Rights Organisation Memorial \(2021/3018\(RSP\)\) (15 December 2022); Sarah Rainsford, “Russian Court Orders Oldest Civil Rights Group Memorial to Shut,” BBC News (28 December 2021); Andrew Roth, “Rights Group’s Closure Is Part of Rapid Dismantling of Russian Civil Society,” Guardian (28 December 2021); Council of Europe, “Secretary General: Liquidation of International Memorial Marks a Dark Day for Civil Society in the Russian Federation” (Press release; 28 December 2021); Ivan Nechepurenko & Andrew Kramer, “Russian Court Orders Prominent Human Rights Group to Shut,” New York Times (28 December 2021); Robyn Dixon, “Russian Court Abolishes Country’s Most Prominent Human Rights Group, Memorial,” Washington Post (28 December 2021); Andrew Roth, “Russian Court Orders Closure of Another Human Rights Group,” Guardian (29 December 2021); “Memorial: Russia’s Civil Rights Group Uncovering an Uncomfortable Past,” BBC News (2 January 2022); Masha Gessen, “The Russian Memory Project that Became an Enemy of the State,” New Yorker (6 January 2022); “Russia’s Top Court Upholds Decision To Shut Down Memorial Rights Group,” RFE/RL (28 February 2022); Tom Blanton & Svetlana Savranskaya, “The ‘Liquidation’ of Memorial,” National Security Archive (3 March 2022); Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 311; International Council on Archives, “Statement of the International Council on Archives on the Situation of the Archives of International Memorial” (Statement; no date [March 2022]).

²⁷⁵ “Russia Investigates Veterans’ Complaint Against Memorial Rights Group,” RFE/RL (5 February 2022); “Russia Probes Shuttered Rights Group Memorial for ‘Nazi Rehabilitation’ – Reports,” Moscow Times (7 February 2022).

²⁷⁶ “Russian Court Increases Jail Sentence for Gulag Historian,” Guardian (27 December 2021).

²⁷⁷ “They Arrested a Painter in Russia for a Sculpture That Simulates Excrement Near a Monument,” Today in 24 (17 January 2022); “Russian Artist Arrested For Giant Poop Snow Sculpture,” RFE/RL (18 January 2022).

Alexei Pushkov, described the law as “a moral imperative.” One of its stated aims was to prevent people from “insulting the memory of the defenders of the Fatherland.” In the past year, the Foreign Ministry had accused scholars who discussed Soviet-German collaboration between August 1939 and June 1941 of smearing the memory of the war.²⁷⁸

On 24 February 2022, the day Russian troops invaded Ukraine, International Memorial and the Memorial Human Rights Center said that “[t]he war unleashed against Ukraine by Putin’s regime is a crime against peace and humanity” and said that “[t]his war will remain a shameful chapter in Russian history.

On 25 February 2022, the Royal Historical Society in the United Kingdom condemned “the unprovoked act of aggression by the Russian government, justified by historical myths, distortions and lies, attacking the right to self-determination of a European nation.

On 27 February 2022, the European Association of History Educators EuroClio condemned the abuse of history which it said was committed by President Vladimir Putin in his justification of the invasion of Ukraine on 24 February as an effort to “de-nazify” the country which “had no tradition of statehood.”

Also on 27 February 2022, a group of Scholars of Genocide, Nazism and World War II rejected the Russian government’s abuse of the term genocide, the memory of World War II and the Holocaust, and the equation of the Ukrainian state with the Nazi regime to justify its unprovoked aggression.

On 28 February 2022, the American Historical Association condemned Russia’s invasion of Ukraine and Russian President Vladimir Putin’s abuse of history and “outlandish historical claims” as justification for the attack, saying that he was “distort[ing] Ukraine’s history, essentially erasing its distinct past.

Also on 28 February 2022, the Association of German Historians (VHD) expressed full support “to all historians who oppose[d] the aggressive nationalist politics of history (Geschichtspolitik) of the Russian leadership and President Putin.”

In March, the International Council on Archives (ICA) expressed its solidarity with Ukrainian archives and records professionals during the Russian invasion, calling on the Russian government not to harm any documentary or cultural heritage professionals remaining in Ukraine as well as to refrain from destroying documentary and cultural heritage protected by the 1954 Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict. On 10 March 2022, the ICA Executive Council reportedly decided to suspend relations between ICA and all archival institutions of Russia and Belarus, which are ICA members, and impede them from taking part in events and conferences.

²⁷⁸ Francine Hirsch, “Putin’s Memory Laws Set the Stage for His War in Ukraine,” Lawfare (28 February 2022).

On 3 March 2022, more than thousand Russian historians published an open letter against the war with Ukraine, condemning the manipulation of history involved in its justification.

On 4 March 2022, the International Committee of Historical Sciences “condemn[ed] the abuse of history employed by President Putin in rationalizing Russia’s aggression against Ukraine,” saying that “[h]istory is not owned by states or rulers, and we deplore the use of history to foster enemy images and distorted myths.” On 16 April 2022, the committee also decided to ban the official participation of the National Committee of Historians of the Russian Federation and the Russian universities at the twenty-third International Congress of Historical Sciences in Poznan, Poland, in August 2022. Russian historians could still attend the congress as unaffiliated scholars.

On 7 March 2022, the Historical Dialogues, Justice and Memory Network “condemn[ed] the Russian invasion of Ukraine,” saying that “Putin’s falsification of history is part of his attempt to reassert control over the past, and to politicize perceived historical injustices as a means to legitimize the atrocities he is committing today. In so doing, Putin exemplifies the ways in which historical myth is abused in international conflicts.”

On 3 April 2022, Liberation Route Europe condemned the Russian government’s aggression “and its misleading propaganda that tries to justify the war as a means to ‘liberate’ Ukraine from neo-Nazism. This narrative serves a great dishonor to the men and women, including millions of Soviet soldiers, who gave their lives to liberate Europe during World War II, as well as to the victims of the Nazi persecution.”²⁷⁹

In [March 2022], Minister of Science and Higher Education Valery Falkov called on people to report professors who violated the norms set by the regime when it came to historical facts.²⁸⁰

²⁷⁹ Tom Blanton & Svetlana Savranskaya, “The ‘Liquidation’ of Memorial,” National Security Archive (3 March 2022); Royal Historical Society, “Invasion of Ukraine: A Statement from the Royal Historical Society” (25 February 2022); EuroClio, “Statement against the Abuse of History and in Solidarity with the People of Ukraine” (press release; 27 February 2022); Izabella Tabarovsky & Eugene Finkel, “Statement on the War in Ukraine by Scholars of Genocide, Nazism and World War II,” Jewish Journal (27 February 2022); American Historical Association, “Historians Condemn Russian Invasion of Ukraine” (statement; 28 February 2022); Verband der Historiker und Historikerinnen Deutschlands, “Stellungnahme: VHD verurteilt den russischen Krieg gegen die Ukraine” (28 February 2022); “Открытое письмо историков против войны с Украиной” (3 March 2022) [text taken off-line on 5 March 2022; on file with the Network of Concerned Historians]; International Committee of Historical Sciences, “ICHS Statement” (statement; 4 March 2022); Historical Dialogues, Justice and Memory Network, email circular (statement; 7 March 2022); International Council on Archives, “Solidarity with Ukrainian Archives and Records Professionals” (statement; no date [March 2022]); Liberation Route Europe, “Statement from the LRE Foundation’s Supervisory Board on the Russian Invasion of Ukraine” (3 April 2022); “In Chernihiv Region, Russians Destroy Archived Documents on Soviet Repression against Ukrainians,” Ukrinform (25 March 2022); International Committee of Historical Sciences, “CISH Board to Her Magnificence the President of the Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań” (statement; 16 April 2022).

²⁸⁰ Philip Altbach & Hans de Wit, “In the Mad Rush to Disengage, We Join in Putin’s Extremism,” University World News (2 April 2022).

In [March or April] 2022, a monument to Mykhailo Hrushevsky (1866–1934), a Ukrainian historian and politician who was one of the most important figures in the Ukrainian national revival movement, was dismantled in Kazan. At the time, Hrushevsky was called the dean of Ukrainian historians. From March 1917 until April 1918, he had been President of the Central Rada (Central Council; parliament), the foremost leader of revolutionary Ukraine whose purpose was its independence.²⁸¹

Following the invasion of Ukraine, authorities pushed a number of policies aimed at distorting the coverage and, by extension, the future historiography of the war:

On 1 March 2022, the Education Ministry provided school teachers with “information for a social studies session,” a two-page text falsely claiming that the “fact” that the Ukrainian government was committing genocide in the Donbass region justified the 24 February invasion. The text was supposed to be read out loud by teachers in their classrooms. The text further provided guidance to answering possible student questions about the invasion.

On 4 March 2022, the State Duma passed a law (the so-called “fake news law”) criminalizing “false information” about the armed forces by a unanimous vote, with President Vladimir Putin signing it on the same day. Taking effect on 5 March, it punished anyone spreading “false information” about Ukraine invasion with fines and up to fifteen years in prison and made it a crime to call the war a “war” or an “invasion” rather than a “special military operation” on social media or in a news article or broadcast. The law pushed many Russian independent media outlets to shut down. For example, digital lifestyle magazine The Village said it was retroactively editing its articles to change any mention of the word “war” to “special operation.”²⁸²

On 6 March 2022 Oleg Orlov [See NCH Annual Reports 2012, 2010], former chairman of the now-banned Memorial Human Rights Center, was arrested on Moscow’s Red Square after attending a peaceful protest against the war in Ukraine. Following a ten-hour detention, he was released but fined. On 10 April 2022, he staged a one-man anti-war protest; he was released the same day.²⁸³

In May 2022, Nikolai Patrushev, the chief of the Russian Security Council, demanded a major overhaul of the education system to develop a new “patriotic” generation, saying that teachers were at the forefront of a “hybrid war being waged against Russia.” He complained that many teachers distorted history, criticizing the history curriculum, lamenting that textbooks did not cover Soviet heroism in World War II properly, and warning that authorities could target school heads whose students did not have books about World War II or could not name Russian war heroes from past centuries. On 9 June 2022, the parliament rejected as unsatisfactory the Education Ministry’s plan on how it would review history textbooks, calling this a matter of “national security” and asking the Director of the Foreign Intelligence Service and chairman of the Russian Historical Society, Sergey Naryshkin (former chairman of the Historical Truth Commission from May 2009 to February 2012), to take charge of reviewing history textbooks, because “the current situation requires a special attitude” to teaching.

²⁸¹ Eduard Andryushchenko, “In Russia’s War on Ukraine, Historians Find Themselves on the Front Lines, Figuratively and Literally,” RFL/RE (10 April 2022).

²⁸² Bill van Esveld, “Russia Instructs Teachers to Spread Disinformation About Ukraine,” Human Rights Watch (4 March 2022); Anton Troianovski, “Russia Takes Censorship to New Extremes, Stifling War Coverage,” New York Times (4 March 2022); Victor Jack, “BBC Suspends Russian News Operation amid Free Speech Curbs,” Politico (4 March 2022); Sarah Rainsford, “Ukraine War: Living in Fear or in Jail – Russia’s Defiant Truth Tellers,” BBC News (23 May 2022).

²⁸³ Index on Censorship, 2022 (51) no. 2, 8; “Prominent Russian Activist Detained after Moscow Anti-War Protest,” Al Jazeera (10 April 2022).

Schools were ordered to conduct “patriotic” classes following closely the Kremlin line on the war with Ukraine [See above]. Publishers purged their textbooks of almost all references to Ukraine and its capital, Kyiv. After the invasion, management at Russia’s main textbook publisher, Prosveshchenie (Enlightenment), ordered editors to delete references to Ukraine and Kyiv. Some teachers who refused to teach the patriotic lessons were dismissed. For example, Kamran Manfly ([1994]–), a geography teacher from Moscow, refused to hold the “patriotic” lessons. On 8 March 2022, he wrote on Instagram that he did not want to be the mirror of state propaganda. On 9 March, he was dismissed.²⁸⁴

On 19 May 2022, the Central District Court in Tyumen, Siberia, sentenced Vladimir Fofanov to fourteen days in prison on charges of “Nazi propaganda.” He had played the Ukrainian national anthem on a piano in Tyumen and posted the video online.²⁸⁵

In [early June] 2022, President Vladimir Putin compared the 24 February 2022 invasion of Ukraine to the Great Northern War (1700–1721), in which Tsar Peter the Great (1682–1725) seized land that until then had belonged to the Swedish Empire (1611–1721), in what was considered the strongest acknowledgement yet that the invasion was a land grab. He further stated that Peter “seized nothing: he reclaimed it!” adding that “[i]t seems it has fallen to us, too, to reclaim.” His comments fitted within a broader attempt to distort history in the war against Ukraine [See above].²⁸⁶

²⁸⁴ Robyn Dixon, “Russia Seeks to Militarize Schoolchildren and Censor Textbooks amid War,” Washington Post (11 June 2022); Mary Ilyushina, “Putin’s War Propaganda Becomes ‘Patriotic’ Lessons in Russian Schools,” Washington Post (20 March 2022).

²⁸⁵ “Siberian Pianist Jailed for ‘Nazi Propaganda’ after Playing Ukrainian Anthem,” Moscow Times (20 May 2022).

²⁸⁶ Sarah Rainsford, “Putin and Peter the Great: Russian Leader Likens Himself to 18th Century Tsar,” BBC News (10 June 2022); Andrei Zorin, “Why Putin Needs Peter the Great,” Russia Matters (23 June 2022); Olivia Durand, “Ukraine Invasion Suggests Putin Is More Vladimir the Reactionary than Peter the Great,” The Conversation (30 June 2022).

On 24 June 2022, officials removed the Polish flag at the Katyń cemetery, commemorating the estimated 22,000 Polish military officers that were killed by Soviet forces during the April 1940 massacres at Katyń and elsewhere. After having blamed Nazi forces for the massacre for decades, in 1990 the USSR admitted that its own forces had been responsible. Mayor of Smolensk Andrei Borisov stated that the Ministry of Culture's decision to remove the flag was "correct," because "Katyń is a Russian memorial, it is Russian history."²⁸⁷

See also Belarus, Canada, China, Czech Republic, Greece, Kazakhstan, Syria, Ukraine, United Kingdom.

RWANDA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2017, 2019–2021.

In February 2021, Yvonne Idamange ([1979]–), a Tutsi genocide survivor and online commentator who made videos about the 1994 genocide as well as crimes committed by the ruling Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) in its aftermath, was arrested after she had accused the government in YouTube videos of monetizing the genocide and said that the remains of the victims should not be on display at memorials. On 30 September, the High Court sentenced her to fifteen years in prison and a two million Rwandan Francs fine (US$ 1,930) in a trial held behind closed doors, after finding her guilty of "inciting public disorder," "disposing of or degrading evidence or information relating to genocide," and "publication of rumours."

On 31 May 2021, Aimable Karasira, another online commentator and former professor of information communication technology at the University of Rwanda, was arrested and charged with denying and justifying the genocide, instigating divisions, and fraud. For several months, he had repeatedly been harassed and summoned by the authorities for posting critical videos on YouTube, speaking about his family's history, the 1994 genocide, and killings by RPF soldiers in its aftermath. On 14 August 2020, he had been dismissed from the university after Culture and Youth Minister Edouard Bamporiki had attacked him on social media saying that he should not be allowed to teach.

In March 2021, Human Rights Watch documented a growing crackdown on online commentators, with at least eight people having been threatened, prosecuted, or "disappeared" between March 2020 and March 2021. In March 2022, it further noticed that "speaking about crimes committed by the ruling ²⁸⁷ "Poland to Protest After Russia Removed Its Flag From War Memorial," Reuters (27 June 2022).

Rwandan Patriotic Front in the aftermath of the genocide or sometimes even simply commemorating Hutu who were killed during the genocide, is perceived as crossing a red line.”²⁸⁸

On [19] June 2022, renewed calls were made to the newly appointed President of the International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals Graciela Gatti Santana to transfer the archives of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda – kept in Arusha, Tanzania, and containing, among others, 26,000 hours of testimony by 3,200 witnesses – to Rwanda, since they were “the people’s history. They should own it.” The United Nations (UN) Security Council had suggested to digitalize the archives and make them accessible by everyone. According to the UN, the archives were not transferred because they contained full details of protected witnesses who testified during the trial.²⁸⁹

See also France, United Kingdom.

²⁸⁸ “Rwanda: Arrests, Prosecutions over YouTube Posts,” Human Rights Watch (30 March 2021); Will Ross, “Rwandan YouTube Content Creator Sentenced to Jail,” BBC News (30 September 2021); “Rwanda: Crackdown on Opposition, Media Intensifies,” Human Rights Watch (19 October 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 564–565; “Rwanda: Wave of Free Speech Prosecutions,” Human Rights Watch (16 March 2022); Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 315.

²⁸⁹ Edwin Musoni, “Activists Renew Call to Return UN Court Archives to Rwanda,” New Times (29 June 2022).

SAINT VINCENT

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

SAUDI ARABIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001, 2006, 2010–2011, 2013, 2017–2021.

See United States, Yemen.

SENEGAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2009, 2013, 2017–2018, 2020.

SERBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2021. See also Serbia / Kosovo; Serbia / Montenegro.

In March 2021, Dinko Gruhonjić, a journalist and lecturer at the Faculty of Philosophy of the University of Novi Sad, received death threats on Facebook after he had criticized the involvement of convicted war criminals in popular culture in an online column. In the summer of 2021, a local assembly of Niš, the third largest city of Serbia, made Vladimir Lazarević, a former general who was sentenced to fourteen years in prison by the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia for crimes against humanity committed during the Kosovo War (1998–1999), an honorary citizen.

On 19 October 2021, the European Commission criticized the Serbian authorities' failure to process cases of crimes committed during the Yugoslav wars of succession (1991–1995) and their continued public support for convicted war criminals. On the same day, parliament voted against a resolution to condemn the 1995 Srebrenica genocide and to ban its denial as well as the glorification of convicted war criminals [See NCH Annual Report 2021].

On 26 October 2021, the Humanitarian Law Center published a report entitled Memory Politics of the 1990s Wars in Serbia: Historical Revisionism and Challenges of Memory Activism, concluding that historical revision had become a state policy, through memorialization of Serbian forces, including convicted war criminals, and exclusively Serbian victims of the Yugoslav wars of succession and the Kosovo War (1998–1999) [See NCH Annual Report 2021].²⁹⁰

In April 2021, Croatian President Zoran Milanović cautioned that Serbia needed to clarify the fate of missing Croats before joining the European Union.²⁹¹

Between 27–29 August 2021, the Udruženje za društvenu istoriju–EuroClio (UDI; Association for Social History – EuroClio) – the Serbian history teachers’ association and a member of the European Association of History Educators EuroClio – was subjected to a slander campaign in tabloids and on social media over its work on the recent history of the region. Some UDI members were accused of manipulating history and had their photos published online without their permission. The slander campaign came after UDI had organized a teacher training seminar on the use of archival material, made available by the United Nations International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals (IRMCT). Serbian tabloids and social media then rumored that the material was actually imposed by the IRMCT. The slander campaign was condemned by EuroClio.²⁹²

See also Croatia, Kosovo.

SERBIA / KOSOVO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008–2020. See Serbia.

SERBIA / MONTENEGRO

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2007. See Montenegro and Serbia. See Montenegro.

²⁹⁰ Milica Stojanovic, “Serbian Municipal Honour for War Criminal Dismissed as ‘Political Game’,” Balkan Insight (5 August 2021); Milica Stojanovic, Samir Kajosevic, Xhorxhina Bami & Semir Mujkic, “European Commission Raps Serbia’s ‘Weak’ War Crimes Case Record,” Balkan Insight (19 October 2021); Milica Stojanovic, “Serbian Parliament Refuses to Discuss Srebrenica Genocide Resolution,” Balkan Insight (19 October 2021); ; Milica Stojanovic, “Historical Revisionism Is Serbian State Policy, Report Claims,” Balkan Insight (27 October 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 581.

²⁹¹ Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 322.

²⁹² EuroClio, “Press Release: Solidarity with Association for Social History UDI – Euroclio” (1 September 2021); NCH Campaign (2021).

SEYCHELLES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2019.

On 9 August 2021, Gabrielle McIntyre, chairperson of the Commission vérité, réconciliation et unité nationale (TRNUC; Truth, Reconciliation and National Unity Commission), requested more funding, stating that the TRNUC had lacked sufficient resources from its origins. In 2018, the TRNUC was set up to provide the public with the opportunity to settle past political divisions and grievances that began with the 1977 coup d'état which made the Seychelles a one-party state until 1993. Its mandate was set to end on 9 August 2022 [See NCH Annual Report 2019].²⁹³

SIERRA LEONE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2016, 2021.

SINGAPORE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2009–2011, 2015–2016, 2018–2021.

A 2021 academic freedom survey suggested that the lack of access to government data and archives was a serious setback to academic inquiry.²⁹⁴

On 9 May 2022, the Infocomm Media Development Authority (IMDA), in a joint statement with the ministries of culture and home affairs, banned the 170-minute Hindi-language film The Kashmir Files for its “provocative and one-sided” (anti-Muslim) portrayal with the potential “to cause enmity between different communities, and disrupt social cohesion and religious harmony in our multiracial and multi-religious society.” The film portrayed the exodus of Hindus from the disputed Muslim-majority Kashmir region. Released in India in March 2022 to mixed reviews (with Prime Minister Modi praising it), it told the fictional story of a university student who learns that his Kashmiri Hindu parents were killed by Islamist militants during the violent uprising against Indian rule (1989–1990), in which ²⁹³ Rita Joubert-Lawen & Betymie Bonnelame, “Seychelles’ Truth and Reconciliation Commission to Set Coup d’Etat Reparations Policy,” Seychelles News Agency (9 August 2021).

²⁹⁴ AcademiaSG, Academic Freedom in Singapore: Survey Report (Singapore: AcademiaSG, 2021), 17.

hundreds of thousands of people, many of them Hindus, lost their homes and lives after being forced out of Kashmir.²⁹⁵

SLOVAKIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2002, 2007, 2009, 2011, 2013–2015, 2017.

On 14 June 2022, a Bratislava regional court rejected an appeal by former Czech Prime Minister Andrej Babiš against claims by the Ústav Pamäti Národa (UPN; Institute of the Nation's Memory) that he had collaborated with the Štátna bezpečnosť (StB; State Security), the Czechoslovak Communist-era secret police. In 2014, Babiš had filed the libel case against UPN, after it had claimed that StB files contained evidence that he had been an agent since 1982. The defamation case had already been rejected in 2018, but the Constitutional Court had ordered a retrial.²⁹⁶

SLOVENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2018, 2021.

SOMALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2003, 2006, 2012–2014, 2019.

On 25 November 2021, a bomb targeting a United Nations convoy detonated near Mocaasir Primary and Secondary School while classes were in session. At least thirteen students and four educators were injured during the attack and the school building and buses sustained significant damages. Abdisalan Omar Ibrahim (13 years) said the sound of the blast came as he was writing the heading of a history

²⁹⁵ Jalelah Abu Baker, "‘Provocative and One-Sided’: The Kashmir Files Movie Banned in Singapore," Channel News Asia (9 May 2022); Francis Mascarenhas, "Singapore Bans Controversial Kashmir Film Praised by India's Modi," Reuters (10 May 2022); Shilpa Jamkhandikar, "Controversial Kashmir Movie Praised by India's Modi Is Box Office Hit," Reuters (16 March 2022).

²⁹⁶ Ian Willoughby, "Testimony to Continue in Libel Case Taken by Finance Minister Babiš over StB Allegations," Radio Prague International (14 April 2014); "Andrej Babiš: Former Czech PM Loses Secret Police Collaboration Case," Euronews (14 June 2022); Ian Willoughby, "Bratislava Court Rejects Babiš Petition over Secret Police Record," Radio Prague International (14 June 2022).

lesson his teacher had begun at the chalkboard. A brick hit his head and he and the other injured students were taken to hospital.²⁹⁷

SOUTH AFRICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2004, 2006–2010, 2012–2021.

See India.

SOUTH SUDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2015–2021.

SPAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999, 2002–2021.

On 26 August 2021, the United Nations Human Rights Committee (UNHCR) concluded that the criminal proceedings against Baltasar Garzón (1955–), a former judge at the Spanish National Court, in his role as the investigating judge in the Franco and Gürtel cases were “arbitrary” and “did not comply with the principles of judicial independence and impartiality.” In 2012, Garzón had been criminally prosecuted and tried for alleged wilful abuse of power in two cases of major political significance. In the Franco case, he assumed jurisdiction to investigate enforced disappearances during the Civil War (1936–1939) and the dictatorship of General Francisco Franco (1939–1975). In the Gürtel case, a large-scale investigation into political corruption, he had decided to monitor communications between defendants and their representatives to prevent the commission of crimes.

Garzón was acquitted in the Franco case, but convicted of willful abuse of power in the Gürtel case and disbarred from office for eleven years. In the Franco proceedings, the UNHRC specified that Garzón’s decisions did not “constitute misconduct or incompetence that could justify his inability to perform his duties.” In 2016, Garzón had filed a complaint against Spain before the UNHRC. It was the first time that the UNHRC ruled and condemned a state for the use of criminal law against a judge in the course of his or her duties, thus establishing new jurisprudence.²⁹⁸

²⁹⁷ Abdi Sheikh, “Islamist Bombing near School in Somalia Kills 8, Wounds 13 Children,” Reuters (25 November 2022); Global Coalition to Protect Education from Attack, Education under Attack 2022 (New York 2022), 179, 260.

In November 2021, the council of Madrid ordered the removal of a street art project by conceptual artist Mateo Maté, entitled Fachada derecha – Fachada izquierda (Right Façade- Left Façade). On the left wall, it showed 24 street signs commemorating poets and writers, such as Carmen Laforet (1921–2004) and Federico García Lorca (1898–1936), and on the right wall people like former dictator Francisco Franco (1892–1975) and former Francoist General José Millán-Astray (1879–1954). Each wall contained a QR code that would give detailed biographies of all those featured. The aim of the work was to spark dialogue and reflection and “to see whether our democracy was genuinely mature and whether we could talk about this,” but the council said that the signs were confusing and that it alone could decide on street names.²⁹⁹

On 17 November 2021, the government filed an amendment to reinterpret Law 64/1977 (also known as the Amnesty Law) in accordance with international law, in particular “International Humanitarian Law, according to which war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide and torture are considered to have no statute of limitation nor can be subject to amnesty.” The 1977 Amnesty Law was approved during the transition to democracy after the death of Francisco Franco (1892–1975), who ruled as a dictator between 1939 and 1975. It initially served to secure the release of political prisoners, but was later used to block the prosecution of crimes committed under the Franco regime [See Baltasar Garzón case above]. The amendment would further prohibit the exhibition of portraits or other artistic representations of figures linked to the Franco-era repression in public areas.³⁰⁰

On 6 December 2021, anti-Semitic graffiti was found on the walls of the Sephardic memory center, and other buildings, in Castrillo Mota de Judíos, Burgos. The memory center was under construction to become a place to highlight the medieval persecution of the village’s Jewish population.³⁰¹

See also Cuba, India, Morocco, Netherlands, Peru, United States.

²⁹⁸ Comité de Derechos Humanos de las NNUU, Garzón contra España (25 August 2021); United Nations Human Rights Committee, “Baltasar Garzón Trials Were Arbitrary and Failed to Comply with Principles of Judicial Independence and Impartiality – UN Committee” (Press release; Geneva 26 August 2021); “Trials of Former Spanish Judge Lack Independence, Impartiality: Landmark Case,” UN News (26 August 2021).

²⁹⁹ Sam Jones, “Sign of the Times: Row over Street Art Shines Light on Spain’s Divisions,” Guardian (18 November 2021).

³⁰⁰ Samuel Sánchez, “Spanish Government Makes Legal Move that Could See Franco-Era Crimes Prosecuted,” El País (17 November 2021).

³⁰¹ Sam Jones, “Spanish Village That Dropped ‘Kill Jews’ Name Hit by Antisemitic Graffiti Attack,” Guardian (8 December 2021).

SRI LANKA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2004, 2008–2021.

In 2019, President Gotabaya Rajapaksa, who was the top defense official during the Civil War (1983–2009), prohibited commemorating members of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), who fought the government attempting to create an independent Tamil state [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. Throughout 2021, law enforcement officers arrested participants in such commemorations under the guise of COVID-19 restrictions. On 23 September 2021, Tamil Member of Parliament Selvarajah Kajendran was arrested for commemorating a LTTE member. In late November 2021, relatives of deceased LTTE members were forced out of cemeteries by armed troops when they attended the graves. On 29 November, multiple Tamil journalists, covering a commemoration in the northeastern town of Mullaittivu, were assaulted by soldiers.³⁰²

In 2021, the cabinet of ministers approved policies and guidelines produced by the Office for Reparations, which related to reparations for victims of the armed conflict (1983–2009) and civil or political unrest. The document had not been published by the end of 2021. Law enforcement officers brought court orders against war-related memorialization initiatives under the guise of COVID-19 restrictions, and arrested those taking part.³⁰³

On 5 August 2021, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence expressed concern over the unwillingness of the administration led by President Gotabaya Rajapaksa to ensure accountability for past human rights violations, the withdrawal of Sri Lanka's international commitments regarding transitional justice and the continued absence of a truth commission [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. It further condemned possible government interference in the working of the Office on Missing Persons.³⁰⁴

ST. LUCIA

See Grenada.

³⁰² “Sri Lanka Arrests Tamil MP for Commemorating Separatist Rebel,” Al Jazeera (24 September 2021); “Sri Lankan Troops Break Up Tamil Remembrance of Civil War Dead,” Al Jazeera (29 November 2021); Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 345.

³⁰³ Amnesty International, Report 2021/22: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2022), 345.

³⁰⁴ United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence, Follow-Up On the Visits to Burundi, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and Sri Lanka (5 August 2021).

ST VINCENT & GRENADINES

See Grenada.

SUDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2003, 2006–2021.

On 11 May 2021, the armed forces used excessive and lethal force against peaceful protesters gathered in Khartoum leading to two deaths. The protests commemorated the victims of the deadly crackdown against the 3 June 2019 sit-in in Khartoum. Ninety-nine army soldiers were reportedly arrested, of which at least seven were charged.³⁰⁵

On 11 August 2021, Foreign Minister Mariam al-Mahdi reiterated the government's commitment to hand former dictator Omar al-Bashir and other suspects to the International Criminal Court (ICC) [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. After the military coup of 25 October 2021, however, cooperation with the ICC was obstructed.

On 5 April 2022, the trial against Ali Muhammad Ali Abd-al-Rahman (also known as Ali Kushayb) began at the ICC. It was hailed as a landmark case, as for the first time a leader was held accountable for crimes committed during the War in Darfur (2003–present) [See NCH Annual Reports 2008–2012, 2021].³⁰⁶

On 19 December 2021, security forces fired teargas at a crowd in Khartoum commemorating the third anniversary of the protests that led to the removal of long-time dictator Omar al-Bashir (ruled between 1989–2019) on 11 April 2019. The protesters demanded General Abdel Fattah al-Burhan to step down as chairman of the Transitional Sovereignty Council after he had attempted a military coup on 25 October 2021. The commemoration coincided with the 66th anniversary of the declaration of independence from British colonial rule.³⁰⁷

³⁰⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: Human Rights Watch, 2022), 627.

³⁰⁶ "Sudan to Hand Bashir, Other Wanted Officials to ICC: Minister," France24 (11 August 2021); Jason Buike, "Darfur War Crimes Trial Opens as Army Cracks Down in Sudan," Guardian (3 April 2022).

³⁰⁷ "Sudan Police Fire Teargas as Anti-Coup Protesters Stage Mass Rally," Guardian (19 December 2021); Zeinab Mohammed Salih & Peter Beaumont, "Sudan's Army Seizes Power in Coup and Detains Prime Minister," Guardian (25 October 2021); Peter Beaumont, "Sudanese PM's Release Is Only Small Step in Resolving Crisis," Guardian (21 November 2021); Zeinab Mohamed Salih & Peter Beaumont, "Sudan Military Agrees to Reinstate PM and Release Political Detainees," Guardian (21 November 2021).

On 3 June 2022, security forces used excessive force, killing one, against protesters commemorating the third anniversary of the 3 June 2019 military crackdown. In the 2019 crackdown protesters demanded the resignation of dictator Omar al-Bashir (ruled 1989–2019); 128 people were killed.³⁰⁸

In [mid-June] 2022, museum officials pledged to officials in the United Kingdom to return historical artifacts stolen by British colonizers during the Anglo-Egyptian occupation (1899–1956), including the human remains of two Sudanese soldiers who were killed during the 1899 battle of Omdurman and whose skulls were held at the Edinburgh Anatomical Museum.³⁰⁹

SURINAME

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2004, 2009–2010, 2012–2013, 2015–2016, 2018.

SWAZILAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011, 2013, 2016–2018.

SWEDEN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2017–2018, 2020.

On [16] November 2021, a person (name unknown) sued the video-sharing platform Netflix for posthumous defamation of insurance company employee Stig Engström (1934–2000) because in its five-part drama series “Den osannolika mördaren” (The Improbable Killer), released on 5 November 2021 and based on a 2018 award-winning book by investigative reporter Thomas Pettersson, it portrayed the latter as the person who shot dead Prime Minister Olof Palme (1927–1986) on 28 February 1986. The complaint, submitted to the Chancellor of Justice, accused Netflix of introducing “completely unfounded” elements into its screenplay which were absent from Pettersson’s book. Netflix argued that ³⁰⁸ “UN Expert Demands Accelerated Probe Into Sudan Post-Coup Killings,” Al Jazeera (4 June 2022).

³⁰⁹ Jason Burke & Zeinab Mohammed Salih, “Sudanese Museums Seek Return of Artifacts Taken by British Colonizers,” Guardian (20 June 2022).

a text at the end of each episode noted that the series was a fictional dramatization inspired by Pettersson's book and that Engström had not been proven to be the murderer.³¹⁰

See also Iran.

SWITZERLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999–2000, 2004, 2007–2009, 2014, 2016–2018.

Since December 2020, Dick Marty, author of a 2010 report for the Council of Europe that linked former Kosovo President Hashim Thaçi [See NCH Annual Report 2021] to war crimes committed during the Kosovo War (1998–1999), was under protection of the Federal Police, allegedly because members of the Serbian secret service planned an assassination that would then be blamed on the Kosovo government.³¹¹

SYRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2002, 2004–2021.

A number of archaeological sites that were part of the UNESCO World Heritage list, were severely damaged during the ongoing Syrian Civil War (2011–). In the Jabal al-Zawiya region, northwestern Syria, the ancient village of Al-Bara (established in the fourth century) was damaged by vandalism, secret digging, and military use, and the Serjila site (established in the fifth century) was bombed by Russian warplanes in 2020. In the Jabal al-Ala region, northwestern Syria, the Rewiha village and the Qalb Lozeh Church were damaged by military presence, the breaking down of ancient stones, and neglect.³¹²

In 2021 the Commission for International Justice and Accountability, which gathered war crimes evidence of ongoing conflicts, went undercover out of fear for the security of its people and operations

³¹⁰ AFP/The Local, "Netflix Sued over Series on Murder of Swedish Prime Minister," The Local (16 November 2021).

³¹¹ Milica Stojanovic, "Serbian Spy Agency Denies Swiss Report of Assassination Plot," Balkan Insight (11 April 2022).

³¹² World Heritage Watch, Report 2021, (Berlin: WHW, 2021), 31–41.

in Syria after disinformation about its activities became widespread. It kept secret the location of its archives.³¹³

In February 2022, in a report published to mark the fortieth anniversary of the February 1982 massacre in Hama by the regime of Hafez al Assad (ruled 1971–2000), the Syrian Network for Human Rights (SNHR) urged the United Nations to finally acknowledge the massacre. In the massacre, targeting members of the Muslim Brotherhood, at least 3,762 civilians were abducted and 7,984 killed. Seventy-nine mosques (including the al-Nouri mosque), three churches, the al-Assi Clock Tower, and archaeological and historical areas (including the al-Keilaniya, al-Aseida, al-Shamaliya, al-Zanbaqi and Bein-al-Heirin neighborhoods) were destroyed in part or in full.³¹⁴

³¹³ Nerma Jelacic, “Spinning Bomb,” Index on Censorship, 50 no. 2 (July 2021), 16–23.

³¹⁴ Syrian Network for Human Rights, The Fortieth Anniversary of the 1982 Hama Massacre Coincides with Rifaat al Assad’s Return to Bashar al Assad ([London]: SNHR, 2022), 3, 7, 11, 14–16, 28.

TAIWAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2008–2010, 2012, 2016–2020.

In October 2021, the Transitional Justice Commission (TJC) outlined the operations of the former state security apparatus and its role in the oppression of Taiwanese in an update on the commission's ongoing historical research. Its report said that Chiang Kai-shek (1887–1975), as the autocratic leader of the state, as well as military courts and the national security and espionage apparatus were the main agents of oppression during the White Terror era (1947–1987) [See NCH Annual Reports 2016–2017, 2019–2020].³¹⁵

See also China.

TAJIKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017–2018, 2020.

TANZANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2016–2017.

THAILAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2001–2002, 2005, 2007–2021.

In November 2021, in the defamation case of Rangsit versus Nattapol [See NCH Annual Report 2021], a group of twenty-three Chulalongkorn University (CU) political science lecturers published a statement calling on CU administrators to take a clear stance to protect academic freedom, in particular of thesis advisor Kullada Kesboonchu-Mead. On 11 March 2022, the court reviewed the witness lists from both sides.³¹⁶ ³¹⁵ Chen Yu-fu & Jonathan Chin, "State Repression Framework Outlined," Taipei Times (3 October 2021).

³¹⁶ Sulakshana Lamubol, "Bid to Hold Thesis Advisor Legally Liable for PhD 'Errors'," University World News (12 April 2022).

TIMOR-LESTE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003–2013, 2015–2018.

See Australia.

TOGO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2008–2013, 2017–2018, 2021.

TRINIDAD and TOBAGO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

TUNISIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2011–2021.

On 25 July 2022, President Kais Saied, a former law professor in office since 2019, asked voters to approve a new draft Constitution which would give him greater powers. The draft's historical paragraph was much criticized because it suggested that the Revolution that overthrew the long-serving ruler Zine al-Abidine Ben Ali in 2011 and initiated the Arab Spring, had been "corrected" on 25 July 2021, when Saied dismissed the government, suspended the parliament, and embarked on a mission to redesign Tunisia's political future. Speaking in the name of the Tunisian people (who were not consulted in any significant way in the drafting), the paragraph said: "Out of a sense of profound historic responsibility to correct the path of the [2011] revolution and the path of history itself, that is what happened on 25 July 2021." Critics said that Saied was taking Tunisia back to where it was before 2011 – outright autocracy. On the other hand, the draft was hailed for not stipulating anymore that Islam was the religion of the state.³¹⁷ ³¹⁷ "Tunisia Referendum: President Kais Saied Seeks Mandate to Extend Powers," BBC News (24 July 2022).

TURKEY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2000–2021.

In 2019, Mehmet Baki Deniz received a Ph.D. in sociology from the State University of New York, Binghamton, with a thesis entitled “Who Ruled Turkey between 1980 and 2008? Business Power and the Rise of Authoritarian Populism.” In May 2020, he submitted material for degree certification, including his thesis, to the Üniversitelerarası Kurul (ÜAK; interuniversity board), a higher education body certifying international education credentials. In June 2021, the ÜAK declined to certify Deniz’s Ph.D. because of the “content and subject” of the thesis. No further explanation was given. Due to the decision, he was excluded from finding academic employment in Turkey.³¹⁸

In April 2021, writer and journalist Ahmet Altan (1950–) was released after the Supreme Court overturned his prison sentence [See NCH Annual Reports 1997, 2020].³¹⁹

On 8 November 2021, prosecutors launched an investigation into writer and Nobel Prize in Literature laureate Orhan Pamuk (1952–) after the lawyer Tarcan Ülük filed a criminal complaint against his book Veba Geceleri (Nights of Plague), a historical novel set in 1901 during a plague in Istanbul, on the grounds that it insulted Turkey’s founder Mustafa Kemal Atatürk (1881–1938) and the national flag. “The Law Concerning Crimes Committed Against Atatürk” in the Penal Code protected “the memory of Atatürk” from insult, making it punishable by up to three years in prison. Pamuk had previously been accused of “anti-Turkish sentiments”: in 2005 charges were filed against him for statements made about the 1915 Armenian genocide [See NCH Annual Reports 2005–2006] and in 2010 his name was allegedly on an ultra-national and state-sponsored terrorist organization’s assassination list of “traitors to national security” [See NCH Annual Report 2011].³²⁰

On 7 February 2022, the Greek foreign ministry said that a band dancing to electronic music at the Sumela monastery in Eastern Turkey, a former Orthodox Christian monastery founded in the fourth century, constituted desecration of the historical monument. In 2010, authorities had allowed the monastery, which long ago had been stripped of its official religious status and operated as a museum, to hold its first Orthodox liturgy since ethnic Greeks had been expelled from the region in 1923 as part of a population exchange. The monastery was a candidate for UNESCO’s list of world heritage sites.³²¹

³¹⁸ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2021 (New York: SAR, 2021), 91.

³¹⁹ “Turkey Releases Writer Ahmet Altan After More Than Four Years in Prison,” Guardian (14 April 2022).

³²⁰ “Nobel Laureate Pamuk Investigated on Charges of Insulting Atatürk, Flag,” Stockholm Center for Freedom (8 November 2021).

³²¹ “Greece Protests to Turkey over Disco Band at Sumela Monastery,” Reuters (7 February 2022).

See also China, Cyprus, Greece, Iraq, Moldova.

TURKMENISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2004, 2009, 2011–2012, 2015–2019.

UGANDA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2017, 2019–2021.

UKRAINE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2009–2011, 2014–2021.

Russian forces left a trail of destruction during their invasion of Ukraine that started on 24 February 2022. Many historical sites were destroyed by Russian shelling or looted by Russian forces. On 1 March, a missile attack on a television tower in Kyiv damaged the adjacent memorial to the Babi Yar massacre. The memorial museum caught fire. (On 29 and 30 September 1941, Nazi German and some auxiliary forces had killed 33,771 Jews at the Babi Yar ravine in Kyiv; Jews, Roma, Ukrainian civilians and Soviet prisoners of war were also murdered there later [See below]) President Volodymyr Zelensky tweeted: “What is the point of saying ‘never again’ for 80 years, if the world stays silent when a bomb drops on the same site of Babyn Yar? At least 5 killed. History repeating ...”

Russian shelling further damaged the Dormition Cathedral in Kharkiv, originally built in the seventeenth century; severely damaged the dome on the Church of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin in Yasnohorodka; a nineteenth-century wooden church in Viazivka, Western Zhytomyr; a yeshiva (an institute for Jewish religious education) in Kharkiv, which also functioned as a synagogue; the St. Michael’s Cathedral, an Orthodox cathedral opened in 1997 in Mariupol; the Temple of the Orthodox Church of Ukraine in Volnovakha, which was built as a memorial for Ukrainian soldiers who died fighting pro-Russian militants in the Donbass region in 2014. On 4 June, Russian shelling destroyed the wooden Sviatohirsk Lavra Monastery that dated back at least to the seventeenth century, and on 23 June, Russian bombing destroyed the Stalin-era Diamant Palace of Culture in Lysychansk, Luhansk.

On 9 March 2022, head of the UNESCO World Heritage Center Lazara Eloundou, had expressed concern over “more and more reports of the destruction of cultural heritage in several cities.” In addition, UNESCO director-general Audrey Azoulay called for the “protection of Ukrainian cultural heritage ... its national archives ... and its sites commemorating the tragedy of the Holocaust” and underlined the obligations of international humanitarian law, notably the 1954 Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict and its Protocols. As of 30 March, a UNESCO spokesperson stated that fifty-three historical sites, religious buildings and museums had been damaged since the Russian invasion. In April, the Cultural Heritage Monitoring Lab, an international cooperation of archaeologists, historians and technicians, found that at least 191 cultural landmarks had been damaged by Russian forces since the invasion. Among them was the destruction of 111 memorial sites and nine public monuments, and one archaeological site. On 9 June, the Ministry of Culture and Information Policy claimed that 389 cultural heritage sites had been destroyed or damaged. A report by the New Lines Institute for Strategy and Policy and the Raoul Wallenberg Centre for Human Rights concluded that the “destruction of cultural and sacred sites” indicated a “very serious risk of genocide.”

In addition to the destruction of historical sites, Russian forces damaged and destroyed archives. On 25 March 2022, the head of the State Archival Service Anatoliy Khromov reported that the Russian military had burned the archives of the Security Service (SBU) in the Chernihiv region, where documents had been stored on the Soviet repression of Ukrainians, destroying some 12,000 folders of documents. Several other archives were damaged in Kharkiv, Mykolayiv, and Lysychansk, but they survived. Russian forces also reportedly looted archives in Mariupol.

Moreover, in multiple cities, Russian forces looted historical and cultural artifacts. In [late February] Russian forces looted and destroyed the Ivankiv museum, near Kyiv, that housed Ukrainian folk art, including by folk art painter Maria Oksentiyivna Prymachenko (1909–1997). In the Museum for Local History in Melitopol at least 198 objects, including coins and weapons dating back some 2,300 years, were stolen. In Mariupol more than 2,000 artworks were reportedly taken. And in Antonivka, Kherson, Russian forces destroyed a memorial to Vyacheslav Chornovil (1937–1999), a Soviet-era dissident and candidate for the 1991 presidential elections who played a prominent role in the movement for Ukrainian independence.³²²

³²² Harriet Sherwood, “‘Cultural Catastrophe’: Ukrainians Fear for Art and Monuments amid Onslaught,” Guardian (1 March 2022); Sam Sokol, “‘History Repeating,’ Zelenskyy Says After Russian Strike on Holocaust Massacre Site in Kyiv,” Haaretz (1 March 2022); Tiffany Wertheimer, “Babyn Yar: Anger as Kyiv’s Holocaust Memorial Is Damaged,” BBC News (2 March 2022); UNESCO, “Ukraine: UNESCO Statement Following the Adoption of the UN General Assembly Resolution” (statement; 3 March 2022); Luke Harding & Harriet Sherwood, “Ukrainians in Race to Save Cultural Heritage,” Guardian (9 March 2022); Anna Reid, “Ukrainian Heritage Is under Threat – and So Is the Truth about Soviet-era Russia,” Guardian (15 March 2022); “In Chernihiv Region, Russians Destroy Archived Documents on Soviet Repression against Ukrainians,” Ukrinform (25 March 2022); Jack Hunter, “In Pictures: The Ukrainian Religious Sites Ruined by Fighting,” BBC News (31 March 2022); “At Least Fifty-three Culturally Important Sites Damaged in Ukraine – UNESCO,” Guardian (1 April 2022); Eduard Andryushchenko, “In Russia’s War on Ukraine, Historians Find Themselves on the Front Lines, Figuratively and Literally,” RFL/RE (10 April 2022); Catherine Fiankan-Bokonga, “UNESCO: Deliberate Destruction of Ukraine’s Cultural Heritage Could Be Considered a War Crime,” Geneva Solutions (20 April 2022); Vanessa Thorpe, “Crimes Against History: Mapping the Destruction of Ukraine’s Culture,” Guardian (24 April 2022); Pjotr Sauer, “Ukraine Accuses Russian Forces of Seizing 2,000 Artworks in Mariupol,” Guardian (29 April 2022); Jeffrey Gettleman & Oleksandr Chubko, “Ukraine Says Russia Looted Ancient Gold Artifacts from a Museum,” New York Times (30 April 2022); New Lines Institute for Strategy and Policy & Raoul Wallenberg Centre for Human Rights, An Independent Legal Analysis of the Russian Federation’s Breaches of the Genocide Convention in Ukraine and the Duty to Prevent (May 2022); “Ukraine Round-up: Defiance in Mykolaiv and a Wooden Monastery Ablaze,” BBC News (4 June 2022); Tom Seymour & Sophia Kishkovsky, “Is Ukraine’s Cultural Heritage under Coordinated Attack?,” The Art Newspaper (10 June 2022); Orla Guerin, “Lysychansk: Russia Erasing History in Ukraine’s ‘Dead City’,” BBC News (13 June 2022); “Deadly Air Strike Hits Ukraine Frontline City As It Readies for Street Battle,” France24 (17 June 2022).

On 10 March 2022, Leyla Ibragimova, deputy of the Zaporizhzhia Regional Council and Director of the Melitopol History Museum, was kidnapped by seven Russian soldiers who raided her home in Melitopol. She was interrogated and her and her family's phones and computers were confiscated; then she was released. The next morning, she was picked up for another interrogation. Ibragimova, an ethnic Crimean Tatar, was an advocate for her local constituency, including around 12,000 Crimean Tatars. During the interrogation, she was asked about Azad, a local Crimean Tatar organization, and pressed to give the names and addresses of activists and opinion leaders in the area, which she refused.

The kidnapping was seen as an extension of Russian policies in Crimea. Since 2014, when Russian forces illegally annexed Crimea, a Russification policy discouraged schools from teaching Crimean Tatar and Ukrainian (two of the official languages next to Russian), almost all independent Crimean Tatar media outlets were closed, activists' homes were being searched, and at least twenty people "disappeared."³²³

On 24 March 2022, Russian forces reportedly confiscated books and other materials in occupied areas that the Russian government deemed "extremist." Primarily books about the 2014 Maidan Revolution, the ensuing war against Russia-backed separatists in Crimea and the Donbass region, and studies of Ukraine's struggle for independence were on a list that further included "names that cannot be mentioned," such as Cossack leader Ivan Mazepa (1687–1708) and the President of the Ukrainian People's Republic (1918–1921) and Ukrainian independence leader Symon Petliura (1879–1927). One of the books specifically mentioned was Ukrainian historian Vakhtang Kipiani's The Case of Vasyl Stus (2019) about Vasyl Stus (1938–1985), a dissident poet, historian, archivist, and human rights activist who died in Soviet labor camp Perm 36 after many years of imprisonment [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. The Russian forces further banned a history of the People's Movement of Ukraine for Reconstruction (also known as Rukh), a national independence movement set up in 1989, and threatened to block the website of the National Academy of Sciences of Ukraine if it refused to remove an electronic version of this history.³²⁴

On 30 March 2022, Aleksandr Bastrykin, head of Russia's Investigative Committee, opened an investigation into textbooks in occupied areas to determine if they "distort[ed] history," among others. In the lead-up to the new academic year, Russian occupation authorities were threatening parents to ³²³ Agnieszka Pikulicka-Wilczewska, "Russia's Crackdown on Crimean Tatars Foreshadows Wider Repression," AlJazeera (12 March 2022); "Andrei Kurkov on Russia's War against Ukrainian Culture," Index on Censorship (29 March 2022); Andrei Kurkov, "Culture in the Cross Hairs," Index on Censorship, 51 no. 2 (July 2022), 64.

³²⁴ Eduard Andryushchenko, "In Russia's War on Ukraine, Historians Find Themselves on the Front Lines, Figuratively and Literally," RFL/RE (10 April 2022).

send their children to pro-Russian schools and teachers to follow a new curriculum, that reportedly included a history lesson teaching that Ukraine had begun the war.³²⁵

On 26 April 2022, the People's Friendship monument in Kyiv, a bronze statue depicting a Russian and a Ukrainian worker holding up the Soviet Order of Friendship of Peoples and erected in 1982 to commemorate the sixtieth Anniversary of the USSR and the celebration of the 1,500th Anniversary of Kyiv, was dismantled on orders of mayor Vitali Klitschko. It was part of a plan to demolish around sixty monuments and to rename dozens of streets throughout Ukraine associated with the USSR, Russia, and Russian figures.³²⁶

On 6–7 May 2022, the museum of Ukrainian philosopher and writer Grigory Skovoroda (1722–1794) (“the Ukrainian Socrates”) near Kharkiv was destroyed by the Russian army. In Ukraine, 2022 had been declared the Year of Grigory Skovoroda and on his 300th anniversary on 3 December, national celebrations had been planned.³²⁷

As part of an apparent Russification campaign launched by Education Minister Sergei Kravtsov in late June 2022, teachers were hired in Russia to teach in the Russian-occupied territories and Russian-backed separatist regions of Ukraine (Luhansk and Donetsk, Zaporizhzhia and Kherson) from September 2022 in order to give students a “corrected” education — with Russia’s take on Ukraine’s history. Batches of Russian history textbooks were also imported.³²⁸

In July 2022, a campaign was started to give Ukrainian writer Anatoly Kuznetsov (1929–1979), buried in an unmarked grave in London, a memorial. In 1966, Kuznetsov’s novel Babi Yar had been published censored (it was cut down to a quarter of its original length), first in the magazine Iunost (Youth) with a press run of two million, later as a book by Molodaya Gvardia publishing house with a press run of 150,000. Kuznetsov protested against the cuts and the publications occurred against his will. The book was banned from libraries and not reprinted. Only after Kuznetsov defected to the United Kingdom in 1969, photographic films with the complete text of the novel wrapped around his body, did an uncensored and expanded version of the novel appear in English under the title Babi Yar: A Document

³²⁵ Eduard Andryushchenko, “In Russia’s War on Ukraine, Historians Find Themselves on the Front Lines, Figuratively and Literally,” RFL/RE (10 April 2022); Oleksandr Yankovskiy, “‘Teaching Children To Hate’: Russian Occupation Officials Preparing To ‘Russify’ Ukrainian Schools,” RFL/RE (9 July 2022).

³²⁶ “Ukraine War: Statue Symbolic of Ukraine-Russia Friendship Destroyed,” BBC News (27 April 2022); Lorenzo Tondo & Isobel Koshiw, “Friends No Longer, Ukraine Removes Russian Statues and Street Names,” Guardian (28 April 2022).

³²⁷ Andrey Kurkov, “Culture in the Cross Hairs,” Index on Censorship, 51 no. 2 (July 2022), 66.

³²⁸ Robyn Dixon, “Russia Sending Teachers to Ukraine to Control What Students Learn,” Washington Post (18 July 2022).

in the Form of a Novel (New York: Posiv, 1970). The September 1991 commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the massacre was the first official recognition of the event.

On 29 and 30 September 1941, more than 33,000 Jews were murdered by a German Einsatzkommando unit assisted by Ukrainian militiamen at the ravine Babi Yar, near Kyiv [See above]. A further 70,000 bodies were added between 1941 and 1943, including victims from other ethnic groups such as Russians, Ukrainians, and Romani. Successive Soviet governments sought to censor all references to Babi Yar. Official Soviet media attacked the epic poem Babi Yar (1961) by the Siberian poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko (1933–2017) and the Thirteenth Symphony (1962; opus 113), by composer Dmitry Shostakovich (1906–1975), partly based on it. The poem implied that some Ukrainians, Russians and other Soviet citizens had collaborated with the Germans in the genocide of Soviet Jews and that anti-Semitism was still prevalent in the USSR. Yevtushenko was accused of defiling the soldiers who had defended the nation and of “stirring up national hatred.” Although the poem was published, it was not included in collections of Yevtushenko’s work during the Soviet era. Public performances of the poem or the symphony were obstructed. At the occasion of the premiere of the symphony in December 1962, the most “offensive” lines of the poem were altered. Yevtushenko’s poetry collection, Nasledniki Stalina (1962; Stalin’s Heirs), was also attacked. Yevtushenko was nominated for the Nobel Literature Prize in 1963. In 1991, he moved to the United States, where he taught at the University of Tulsa, Oklahoma.³²⁹

See also Belarus, Canada, China, Germany, Iran, Lithuania, Russia.

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2016.

³²⁹ Tim Smith, Robert Perks, & Graham Smith, Ukraine’s Forbidden History (Stockport 1998), 21–22; Index on Censorship (1999 no. 1), 157, 162, (2001 no. 4), 153; Derek Jones, ed., Censorship: A World Encyclopedia (London/Chicago 2001), 162–164, 1303, 2233; Yury Shapoval, “The Defection of Anatoly Kuznetsov” (18 January 2005); “Soviet-era Poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko Dies Aged 84,” BBC News (1 April 2017); Martin Bright, “Anatoly Kuznetsov Is the Ukrainian Writer Who Documented the Horrors of Ukraine’s Worst Atrocity: He Deserves To Be Remembered,” Index on Censorship (13 July 2022).

UNITED KINGDOM

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998–2001, 2003–2004, 2006–2021.

In 2021, the Partition Education Group campaigned to include the 1947 withdrawal of colonial power and the Partition of British India in the national history curriculum. The campaign followed a petition in July 2020, signed by more than 260,000 people, to make the national curriculum more inclusive of BAME (Black, Asian, and minority ethnic) history. The petition was rejected by the Department of Education on the grounds that the national curriculum already had the flexibility to include BAME history: it served as a guiding map, with teachers and schools having the autonomy to include or exclude preferred content. However, some worried that this flexibility allowed schools to not teach BAME history at all.³³⁰

In [February] 2021, Culture Secretary Oliver Dowden vetoed the reappointment of Aminul Hoque, a trustee at the Royal Museums Greenwich board. Hoque, an academic at the Educational Studies Department at Goldsmiths College, London, had led the Royal Museum's response to the Black Lives Matter movement and repeatedly called for "decolonizing" the school curriculum. In 2020, amid the Black Lives Matter protests, Dowden had threatened to cut funding to museums and galleries that removed statues associated with British colonialism. Then in October, Dowden warned institutions not to take part in "actions motivated by activism or politics." In early 2021, the government warned heritage bodies against taking significant steps in reevaluating British history. The government did not give an explanation for the veto.³³¹

In March 2021, Russian businessman Roman Abramovich and Russian state energy company Rosneft filed separate defamation lawsuits against journalist Catherine Belton and her publisher HarperCollins for Belton's book Putin's People: How the KGB Took Back Russia and Then Took on the West (published in April 2020). The book described Putin's past as a KGB agent and his rise to power together with a small group of KGB men, culminating in his 2000 presidency. Abramovich and Rosneft filed separate suits for passages suggesting that Abramovich's purchase of Chelsea Football Club in 2003 was ordered by Putin and that Rosneft had participated in the expropriation of Yukos Oil Company from businessman Mikhail Khodorovsky. The lawsuits were condemned as SLAPPs (Strategic Lawsuits against Political Participation) by nineteen organizations including Index on Censorship and ³³⁰ Shaistha Khan, "UK South Asians Push for Partition History in School Curriculum," Al Jazeera (6 August 2021).

³³¹ Clea Skopeliti, "Academic Who Backed 'Decolonising' Curriculum Dropped from Museum Board," Guardian (1 May 2021); "Government Veto on Trustee's Reappointment Marks Aggressive Tactic in 'Cultural Cleansing' Campaign," Return Heritage (2 May 2021).

Article 19. On 24 November 2021, the judge ruled that all nine statements in the Abramovich case were defamatory. Rosneft's claim was partly rejected and the company discontinued its case. On 22 December 2021, HarperCollins issued an apology over the defamatory allegations and confirmed that it had reached a settlement with Abramovich.³³²

In April 2021, the Overseas Operations Act, creating a “presumption against prosecution” for members of the armed forces accused of crimes committed overseas more than five years ago, became law, after the government had removed provisions that would have created impunity for genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes [See NCH Annual Report 2021].³³³

On 31 May 2021, six United Nations Special Rapporteurs sent a letter to the government concerning the alleged lack of effective remedies for the Kipsigis and Talai indigenous peoples who were subjected to human rights violations during the precolonial and colonial period in Western Kenya (1895–1963), associated primarily with the expropriation of land on Kericho County. The violations affected an estimated half a million people and included unlawful killings and sexual violence. The letter also criticized the government for failing to “adopt measures to establish the facts and know the truth about the circumstances surrounding these violations.” Because the government did not react, the letter was published on 2 August 2021; the rapporteurs were disappointed that there was no apology and no move for compensation.³³⁴

In [October] 2021, publisher Hodder Education withdrew the A-level textbook USA 1865–1975: The Making of a Superpower, after a history teacher criticized an exercise asking students to what extent they believed “the treatment of Native Americans had been exaggerated” in the late nineteenth century (a period that saw some massacres of Native American tribes by the United States government). Hodder Education removed the book from sale until a review was conducted. In May, the publisher had been ³³² “Lawsuits Against the Author and Publisher of Putin’s People Are SLAPPs,” Index on Censorship (24 November 2021); “Law and Media Round Up,” Inform’s Blog (International Forum for Responsible Media Blog) (29 November 2021); High Court of Justice, Roman Abramovich versus HarperCollins and Catherine Belton (2021); High Court of Justice, Rosneft Oil Company versus HarperCollins and Catherine Belton (2021); Luke Harding, “Roman Abramovich Settles Libel Claim over Putin Biography,” Guardian (22 December 2021); “Chelsea FC Owner Roman Abramovich Gets Apology over Putin Claim,” BBC News (22 December 2021); “Putin’s People Author SLAPPed,” Index on Censorship, 50 no. 4 (2021), 7; “Catherine Belton: ‘Binnen twee jaar kan Poetin afeezet zijn’” (interview), NRC Handelsblad (3 June 2022).

³³³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 706.

³³⁴ Six United Nations Rapporteurs, Letter of Allegation (regarding human rights violations during the precolonial and colonial period in Western Kenya) (UN Doc. AL GBR 5/2021) (31 May 2021); “UK’s Failure to Apologise for Kenya Land Grabs Criticised,” BBC News (2 August 2021); “UK Regrets Colonial Abuses in Kenya,” BBC News (3 August 2021); Nazia Parveen, “UN Criticises UK for Failure to Redress Colonial-Era Landgrab in Kenya,” Guardian (3 August 2021).

criticized by a student for an exercise that entailed a question whether slavery in the southern states before 1961 could have been justified.³³⁵

On [9 or 10] October 2021, Priyamvada Gopal, a fellow at Churchill College, Cambridge University, and author on British colonial history, had an invitation to speak to Home Office officials on the links between the department's policies and recent colonial history withdrawn, just days before the meeting would take place. The reason for the withdrawal was ostensibly related to a February 2021 tweet in which Gopal had criticized Home Secretary Priti Patel and to which the right-wing politics blog Guido Fawkes had drawn attention.³³⁶

On 6 November 2021, Keir Bradwell, the president of the Cambridge Union, a Cambridge University debating society promoting free speech through discussion, would publish a "blacklist" of guest speakers who were banned from returning because they were deemed to have caused offence. The announcement followed a debate about "good taste" on 4 November in which art historian Andrew Graham-Dixon had impersonated a speech by Adolf Hitler on art with the aim of showing that "bad taste and a deficient moral compass often go hand in hand." According to Bradwell's letter, Graham-Dixon would be the first speaker on the blacklist. On 10 November, actor John Cleese tweeted that he was "blacklisting himself" for a debate on 12 November for which he was invited, because "after he heard that someone had been blacklisted for impersonating Hitler" he had to "acknowledge to have done something similar in a Monty Python-sketch." Following Cleese's announcement, Bradwell stated that Cambridge Union did not have a blacklist and that he had misspoken previously. He added that he still thought that Graham-Dixon should not be re-invited, but that speakers were allowed to say whatever they wanted during the debates.³³⁷

On 9 November 2021, lawyers requested the release of official documents by the Ministry of Defense (MoD) in relation to an allegedly covered-up series of extrajudicial killings of 33 Afghan men by the Special Air Service in Afghanistan in 2011. A MoD spokesperson said that 1800 pages had already been released and that "there is not a duty to provide any document that might look embarrassing."³³⁸

³³⁵ Aamna Mohdin, "A-Level Textbook Withdrawn Over 'Inappropriate' Native American Question," Guardian (24 October 2021); Harry Farley, "A-Level Textbook Withdrawn Over 'Shocking' Native American Question," BBC News (24 October 2021).

³³⁶ Richard Adams, "Academic Calls on Universities Minister to Defend Her Freedom of Speech," Guardian (14 October 2021).

³³⁷ Patrick van IJzendoorn, "John Cleese zet zichzelf op zwarte lijst vanwege vrijheid van meningsuiting," Volkscrant (11 November 2021); "Cambridge University Debating Society Drops Speaker Blacklist," BBC News (12 November 2021).

³³⁸ Dan Sabbagh, "Alleged Massacres of Afghans by SAS Not Properly Investigated, Court Told," Guardian (9 November 2021).

When submitting a Freedom of Information request to the Foreign Office in [2022], historian Grace Livingstone discovered that more than three hundred folders of Foreign Office papers relating to Britain's relations with Argentina in the six years before the 1982 Falklands war had been shredded, including a folder entitled "Military visits to and from Argentina, 1978," folders concerning British and Argentinian military visits in 1979–1981, and more than twenty folders relating to British arms sales to Argentina.³³⁹

On 5 January 2022, the four persons who took the lead in toppling the statue of slave trader Edward Colston (1636–1721) in Bristol and threw it into the harbor [See NCH Annual Report 2021] were found not guilty of criminal damage by a jury (11 to 1) at Bristol Crown Court. In closing statements following a nine-day trial, the defense had urged jurors to "be on the right side of history," saying that the statue, which had stood over the city from 1895 to 2020, was so offensive that it constituted a hate crime itself.³⁴⁰

In [early January 2022], critics accused Reading University of censoring "Types of Women," a poem by Semonides of Amorgos written in the seventh century BCE, because it contained a reference to domestic violence which could upset students. In earlier readers for first-year Classics students, the poem had been reproduced in its entirety and preceded by a trigger warning saying that the poem was an example of "extreme misogyny in archaic Greece." In response, Reading University argued that "This is not censorship, nor is it molycoddling over-sensitive students," saying that the full text was available in printed copies and online for students.³⁴¹

In March 2022, Wendy Williams, the independent inspector advising the Home Office on policy changes after the 2018 Windrush scandal (exposing how between 1950 and 1981 immigrants, particularly from Caribbean countries, had been wrongfully detained, denied legal rights and threatened with deportation), expressed disappointment that the Home Office had repeatedly refused to publish The Historical Roots of the Windrush Scandal, a Home Office commissioned report on the historical causes of the scandal. The 52-page analysis by an unnamed historian had found that the "deep-rooted racism of the Windrush scandal" originated in the fact that "during the period 1950–1981, every single piece of immigration or citizenship legislation was designed at least in part to reduce the number of people with black or brown skin who were permitted to live and work in the U[nited] K[ingdom]." A ³³⁹ Grace Livingstone, "Search and Destroy," London Review of Books (10 February 2022).

³⁴⁰ "BLM Protesters Cleared over Toppling of Edward Colston Statue," Guardian (5 January 2022).

³⁴¹ Nicola Woolcock, "Greek Poem 'Censored' to Avoid Upset for Students," The Times (3 January 2022).

freedom of information request to release the report had been refused on the grounds that it included “sensitive issues involving the development of policies.”³⁴²

On 14 April 2022, Rector Debora Kayembe of the University of Edinburgh sparked outrage after alleging in a tweet on 14 April 2022 that the 1994 genocide in Rwanda was orchestrated by Rwandan President Paul Kagame. Critics pointed to overwhelming evidence to the contrary and accused Kayembe of knowingly spreading genocide denial ideas against the Tutsi and promoting “double genocide.” The university distanced itself from her opinion. Kayembe later apologized. On 23 December 2003, the United Nations General Assembly had designated 7 April (the day the genocide perpetrated by radical Hutus had started in 1994) as the International Day of Reflection on the Genocide in Rwanda.³⁴³

In June 2022, a year after the Home Office was supposed to launch a mandatory course on British history for the department’s 36,000 employees, civil servants had reportedly attempted to “sanitize” a module on race, empire, and colonialism, because they worried it would be “too controversial.” After an independent review had concluded that the 2018 Windrush scandal was partly caused by “institutional ignorance and thoughtlessness” regarding race and history [See above], the Home Office had contracted staff researchers from Coventry University to create the teaching module.³⁴⁴

Northern Ireland

In April 2021, historians advising the government on how to mark the centenary of the creation of Northern Ireland in 1921 after Ireland’s partition, requested access to secret official files from the early 1920s, including documents relating to the so-called B Specials, an auxiliary police force known officially as the Ulster Special Constabulary (1920–1970).³⁴⁵

On 10 August 2021, United Nations (UN) experts expressed concern about the United Kingdom (UK) government’s proposal – entitled “Addressing the Legacy of Northern Ireland’s Past” and announced in a statement by the UK Secretary of State for Northern Ireland before parliament in July 2021 – to ³⁴² Amelia Gentleman, “Windrush Scandal Caused by ‘30 Years of Racist Immigration Laws’ – Report,” Guardian (29 May 2022).

³⁴³ Jean d’Amour Mbonyinshuti, “Edinburgh Distances Itself from Rector’s Genocide Views, Apologises,” University World News (28 April 2022); United Nations General Assembly, International Day of Reflection on the 1994 Genocide in Rwanda (UN Doc. A/RES/58/234) (23 December 2003).

³⁴⁴ Amelia Gentleman, “Home Office Tried to ‘Sanitise’ Staff Education Module on Colonialism,” Guardian (10 June 2022).

³⁴⁵ Mark Simpson, “NI 100: Centenary Historians Request Access to Secret Government Files,” BBC News (21 April 2021).

introduce a statute of limitations for all new conflict-related prosecutions, investigations, and victims' civil claims in connection with "The Troubles" in Northern Ireland (1969–1998), which would effectively institute a de facto amnesty and blanket impunity for the grave human rights violations committed during that period [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. The proposal also foresaw the establishment of a new independent body to enable individuals and family members to seek and receive information about Troubles-related deaths and injuries, and the adoption of an oral history initiative. The experts expressed concern, among others, at "the lack of clarity concerning the role that victims would play in the design, implementation and monitoring of the proposed transitional justice institutions and measures, including those relating to memorialization, archiving and truth recovery." In September 2021, Commissioner for Human Rights of the Council of Europe Dunja Mijatović similarly criticized the proposal. The Troubles in Northern Ireland lasted three decades until the adoption of the Good Friday Agreement in 1998 (also known as the "Belfast Agreement") and resulted in the death of more than 3,500 individuals and the injury of another 40,000.³⁴⁶

See also China, Grenada, Iraq, Kenya, Latvia, Morocco, Russia, Sudan, Ukraine.

UNITED NATIONS

Previous Annual Report entries: —.

On 13 January 2022, the United Nations General Assembly adopted a resolution about Holocaust denial, noting that it referred to discourse and propaganda that denied the historical reality and the extent of the extermination of the Jews by the Nazis and their accomplices during World War II, and that this included publicly denying or calling into doubt the use of principal mechanisms of destruction (such as gas chambers, mass shooting, starvation, and torture) or the intentionality of the genocide of the Jewish people. The resolution also noted with concern the growing prevalence of Holocaust denial or distortion through the use of information and communications technologies. It rejected and condemned without any reservation any denial of the Holocaust as a historical event, either in full or in part. Put forward by Israel and Germany, it was passed without a vote by the 193-member General Assembly, although Iran said it dissociated itself from the text.³⁴⁷

³⁴⁶ United Nations Experts, "UK: UN Experts Voice Concern at Proposed Blanket Impunity to Address Legacy of 'The Troubles' in Northern Ireland" (press release; 10 August 2021); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 706.

³⁴⁷ United Nations General Assembly, "Holocaust Remembrance" (UN Doc. A/RES/60/7) (21 November 2005); United Nations General Assembly, "Holocaust Denial" (UN Doc. A/RES/61/255) (22 March 2007); United Nations General Assembly, "Holocaust Denial," UN Doc. A/RES/76/250 (13 January 2022); "UN Defines Holocaust Denial in New Resolution," BBC News (20 January 2022).

On 3 May 2022, the International Mechanisms for Free Expression issued their 24th Joint Declaration on Freedom of Expression, dedicated to gender justice. They recommended, among others, that “States, the private sector and civil society should work together to address . . . interpretations of culture, religion and tradition that subordinate and disempower women”; that “States should not use the aim of protecting public morals to restrict gender, sexual, cultural or artistic expression of women and gender non-conforming people based on principles derived exclusively from a single tradition” and that “States, as well as public and private academic institutions, should respect academic freedom of expression and refrain from censoring, restricting or discriminating against gender studies and feminist scholarship or public debate on these issues.”³⁴⁸

UNITED STATES

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2021.

During the academic year 2020–2021, a number of Zoom meetings were disrupted (also known as Zoom-bombing). In November 2020, a panel discussion entitled “Cultural Genocide: An Overview of Uyghurs in Xinjiang, China” at Brandeis University, Waltham, Massachusetts, was disrupted by attendees playing the Chinese National Anthem and writing diminishing messages over the presenters’ slides. In February 2021, a virtual event celebrating Black History Month, entitled “Diversity Through Hair,” at the City University of New York was forced to shut down when as many as twenty people began playing racist music and writing and chanting racist slurs. Several other events celebrating Black History Month were similarly targeted.³⁴⁹

Throughout 2021 and 2022, PEN America published a number of reports on educational gag orders – state level bills introduced with the intent to restrict teaching and discussion of race, racism, gender and United States (US) history in K-12 schools (schools from Kindergarten to twelfth grade), higher education, and state agencies and institutions. PEN America stated that between January 2021 and April 2022 183 educational gag order bills (often referencing critical race theory) had been introduced in forty different states, with nineteen of them having become law in fifteen states. Other states enacted educational gag orders via policies or executive orders. Of the 183 orders, 88 educational gag orders were still under consideration as of April 2022 and 47 of them included an avenue for punishment for those found in violation.

³⁴⁸ “Joint Declaration on Freedom of Expression and Gender Justice” (3 May 2022).

³⁴⁹ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2021 (New York: SAR, 2021), 30, 93–94.

Many, like order S.2035 (also known as the Saving American History Act) that was introduced in Arkansas in June 2020 and quickly withdrawn, aimed at blocking federal funds to any elementary and secondary school using the New York Times 1619 Project – a project, founded in August 2019 by historian and journalist Nikole Hannah-Jones [See NCH Annual Report 2021], named after the year that slavery began in the colonies that would become the US, that explored the impact of slavery on US history and modern life and had ignited debate about the legacy of slavery [See NCH Annual Report 2020]. Of the 54 educational gag orders that were introduced between January and September 2021, 53 could be used to block the 1619 Project – the only exception being a Tennessee law, branded the “Don’t Say Gay” law, which forbade the teaching of LGBTQ+ history in K-12 schools [See NCH Annual Report 2021].

PEN America criticized three features of these state level bills: they were drafted sloppily (with vague terminology for forbidden conduct that could be arbitrarily interpreted and applied); they explicitly targeted teachers’ speech and required direct punishment of speech that was deemed a violation; and they came with a “private right of action,” allowing parents and citizens to seek to levy their own punishments against teachers, such as suing them in court. PEN America further concluded that the bills would have chilling effects on the teaching of the history of slavery, the emancipation of women, and the treatment of Native Americans, had led to the effective banning of a wide swath of historical and other educational materials and resulted in the effective self-censoring of educators and educational institutions on these topics, leading to the erosion of academic freedom.

On 19 October 2021, several non-governmental associations filed a lawsuit challenging Oklahoma’s controversial ban on critical race theory, arguing that HB 1775 bill (first approved in April 2021) prevented Black, female, LGBTQ+ and indigenous students from being taught their history as well as the history of white supremacy and that it infringed the academic freedom to teach topics like African American history and gender studies. The lawsuit asked the court for a permanent preliminary injunction to prevent the law from being enforced in public schools and universities. It was the first lawsuit of its kind to directly challenge a ban on critical race theory.³⁵⁰

³⁵⁰ Alexandra Kelley, “Texas Passes Law Banning Critical Race Theory in Schools,” The Hill (17 June 2021); ACLED, “Fact Sheet: Demonstrations over Critical Race Theory in the United States” (14 July 2021); District Court for the Western District of Oklahoma, Black Emergency Response Team, AAAP, NAACP, AIM and Others versus Oklahoma Attorney General and Others: Complaint (19 October 2021); Zoe Christen Jones, “Oklahoma ACLU Files Lawsuit against Ban on Critical Race Theory,” CBS News (19 October 2021); Cassidy Fallik, “ACLU, ACLU of Oklahoma, Lawyers Committee File Lawsuit Challenging Oklahoma Classroom Censorship Bill Banning Race and Gender Discourse” (press release; 19 October 2021); Jonathan Friedman & James Tager, “Educational Gag Orders,” PEN America (8 November 2021); Education Committee of the General Court of New Hampshire, “House Bill 1255,” (5 January 2022); Maya Yang, “Florida: Republican Panel Advances Bill to Ban LGBTQ+ Discussion in Schools,” Guardian (24 January 2022); Jeffrey Sachs, “Steep Rise in Gag Orders, Many Sloppily Drafted,” PEN America (24 January 2022); Greg Sargent, “Opinion: Behind the Latest GOP Restrictions on Race Teaching: A Hidden, Toxic Goal,” Washington Post (24 January 2022); Greg Sargent, “A GOP Proposal Targeting ‘Negative’ U.S. History Is Cause for Renewed Alarm,” Washington Post (31 January 2022); Terry Gross, “From Slavery to Socialism, New Legislation Restricts What Teachers Can Discuss,” NPR (3 February 2022); Laura Meckler & Hannah Natanson, “New

In June 2021, the Tulsa City Council passed an apology resolution, but failed to acknowledge the city's documented culpability in, or provide reparations for, the victims of the 1921 Tulsa Race Massacre. During the massacre, a white mob invaded the Black community of Greenwood in Tulsa, Oklahoma, killing as many as 300 people according to some historians' estimates [See NCH Annual Report 2021].³⁵¹

A summer 2021 report, entitled Failure to Protect, from the Center for Countering Digital Hate found that of the 714 posts on five of the big social media platforms (Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, YouTube, and TikTok) reportedly spreading anti-Jewish hatred and propaganda, the platforms failed to act on 84%, including on 80% of the posts on Holocaust denial [See NCH Annual Report 2021].³⁵²

On 29 July 2021, Garrett Felber, a tenure-track assistant professor in the ArchDalrymple III Department of History at the University of Mississippi (UM), reached a settlement and left UM [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. He accepted a faculty fellowship in American Studies at the Center for the Study of Race, Indigeneity, and Transnational Migration of Yale University.³⁵³

In August 2021, Anat Sultan-Dadon, the Israeli Consul General to the Southeastern United States, in a meeting with a dean at the University of North Carolina (UNC) at Chapel Hill, allegedly accused Ph.D.-student Kylie Broderick, who was teaching a class called "The Conflict over Israel and Palestine" at the UNC history department, of being unfit to teach the course in question, due to anti-Semitic comments she had made in her Twitter posts. It was also alleged that (Democrat) Representative Kathy Manning Critical Race Theory Laws Have Teachers Scared, Confused and Self-Censoring," Washington Post (14 February 2022); Kate McGee, "Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick Proposes Ending University Tenure to Combat Critical Race Theory Teachings," Texas Tribune (18 February 2022); Keisha Blain, "To Fight Attacks on 'Critical Race Theory,' Look to Black History," The Nation (18 February 2022); Nick Anderson & Susan Svrluga, "College Faculty Are Fighting Back Against State Bills on Critical Race Theory," Washington Post (19 February 2022); "'Don't Say Gay' Bill: Florida Senate Passes Law Marginalizing LGBTQ+ People," Guardian (8 March 2022); PEN America, "For Educational Gag Orders, The Vagueness Is The Point" (28 April 2022); Sarah Schwartz, "Map: Where Critical Race Theory Is Under Attack," Education Week (updated 18 May 2022); Wyatt Myskow, "Legislation to Limit Critical Race Theory at Colleges Has Reached Fever Pitch," Chronicle of Higher Education (8 June 2022); PEN America (Jeffrey Sachs, Jeremy Young, and Jonathan Friedman), "5 Myths about Educational Gag Orders," (10 June 2022); Sonia Rao, "Virginia Was Primed to Teach Black History - Then the Nation's First Anti-Critical Race Theory Governor Took Office," Scalawag Magazine (14 June 2022); PEN America, PEN America Index of Educational Gag Orders (ongoing database).

³⁵¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2022: Events of 2021 (New York: HRW, 2022), 711.

³⁵² Center for Countering Digital Hate, Failure to Protect: How Tech Giants Fail to Act on User Reports of Antisemitism (London/Washington: CCDH, 2021); Maya Wolfe-Robinson, "A 'Safe Space for Racists': Antisemitism Report Criticises Social Media Giants," Guardian (1 August 2021).

³⁵³ Ashton Pittman, "Emails Show UM Officials' Concern Over Fired Historian Criticizing Private Prison Ties," Mississippi Free Press (30 July 2021).

met with the dean of arts and sciences regarding Broderick's teachings. Broderick rejected the accusations of anti-Semitism.³⁵⁴

On 3 August 2021, a seven-foot bronze statue of an Osage woman was stolen in Kansas City, Missouri. The statue was part of the François Chouteau & Native American Heritage Fountain, depicting two Osage Indians trading with fur trader François Chouteau (1797–1838). The theft came ten days after the fountain had been fully finished, marking the bicentennial anniversary of Missouri.

On 14 September 2021, a Missouri cave, which was the burial ground for ancestors of the Osage Nation People and a site for sacred rituals, and which contained more 290 prehistoric hieroglyphic symbols, some over 1,000 years old, was sold at an auction. The sale was opposed by researchers and the Osage Nation people, who called the sale “heartbreaking.”³⁵⁵

On 6 August 2021, nearly 1,800 people signed a letter calling on President Joe Biden to release documents that they believed implicated Saudi Arabian officials in the 11 September 2001 (“9/11”) attacks. The signatories included families of the 9/11 victims, first responders, and survivors. The families had sued the government of Saudi Arabia, which denied any involvement. In June 2021, the lawsuit saw several former top Saudi officials questioned under oath, but the depositions remained sealed. The families said that since the conclusion of the 9/11 Commission in 2004 much evidence had been uncovered but that through multiple administrations the Department of Justice (DOJ) and the FBI had actively sought to keep relevant information secret, citing national security concerns. The September 11th Transparency Act required the DOJ, the CIA and the director of national intelligence to justify to Congress any decision not to declassify particular records. On 9 August, the FBI offered to release some documents from its investigation, saying that they would disclose appropriate information “on a rolling basis.” The offer was criticized for not doing enough. On 3 September 2021, Biden signed an executive order “directing the Department of Justice and other relevant agencies to oversee a declassification review” and to “release the declassified documents publicly over the next six months.”³⁵⁶

³⁵⁴ Jonah Kaplan, “‘Antisemitism Has Mutated’: Jewish Students, Leaders Worry Over UNC-CH Instructor’s Comments,” ABC11 (28 August 2021); Murtaza Hussain, “Israeli Diplomat Pressured UNC to Remove Teacher Who Criticized Israel,” The Intercept (28 September 2021); Colleen Flaherty, “Israeli Diplomat Accused Grad Instructor of Anti-Semitism,” Inside HigherEd (20 September 2021).

³⁵⁵ Laura Ziegler, “Organizers ‘Devastated’ after Statue of Native American Woman Stolen from Park in Kansas City North,” KCUR (5 August 2021); “‘Heartbroken’ Osage Nation Leaders Decry Sale of Sacred Missouri Cave with Ancient Artwork,” Guardian (15 September 2021); Cynthia Prescott, “The Monument Controversy Nobody Is Talking About,” Washington Post (26 May 2022).

³⁵⁶ “Executive Order on Declassification Review of Certain Documents Concerning the Terrorist Attacks of September 11, 2001” (3 September 2021); “Declassify Saudi Files or Stay Away From 9/11 Memorials, Families Tell Biden,” Guardian (6 August 2021); “Families of 9/11 Victims Tell Biden Not To Attend Memorial Events,” BBC News (7 August 2021); Julian Borger, “FBI Offer to Release Some Saudi Files Not

In August and September 2021, the organizers and speakers of the online conference “Dismantling Global Hindutva [a Hindu-supremacist ideology]” (10–12 September 2021), were massively harassed and intimidated by Hindu right-wing groups in the United States and India who called the event “Hinduphobic.” Those attacked included historians Audrey Truschke [See above and NCH Annual Report 2021], David Ludden, Gyanendra Pandey and Purnima Dhavan, and sociologist Nandini Sundar [See NCH Annual Report 2017].³⁵⁷

In September 2021, all records of historian Benjamin Park’s fellowship and involvement with the Brigham Young University (BYU), Utah, were erased from the BYU website. In 2018, Park had been a summer fellow at the BYU Neal A. Maxwell Institute, researching and authoring a book on the history of Mormons living in Illinois in the 1840s. In the weeks before BYU erased his records, Park had written critically about a speech by former BYU President and Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (LDS) Jeffrey R. Holland, which he said had been harmful to the LGBTQ+-community. In August, he had published an article in the Washington Post about the stance of LDS leaders on COVID-19. BYU did not give a reason for erasing his records.³⁵⁸

In October 2021, a Virginia community college announced that it would drop from its name John Tyler (1790–1862), the tenth president of the United States who backed the Confederate rebellion before he died. Another college would ditch Thomas Nelson Jr. (1738–1789), a signer of the Declaration of Independence and prominent military and political leader, who historians said had enslaved hundreds of people of African descent.³⁵⁹

In October 2021, Matt Krause, a Republican in the Texas House of Representatives, distributed a watch list of 850 books that might generate “discomfort, guilt, anguish, or any other form of psychological distress because of [a student’s] race or sex.” In response, a San Antonio school district took out 414 books from its libraries in December. Among the books pulled and/or on Krause’s list were Isabel Wilkerson’s Caste: The Origins of Our Discontents, which traced a variety of caste systems throughout history and across civilizations. It further included How To Be an Antiracist by former assistant Enough, 9/11 Families Say,” Guardian (10 August 2021); Oliver O’Connell, “Biden Signs Order to Declassify 9/11 Attack Investigation Documents,” Independent (3 September 2021).

³⁵⁷ “Dismantling Global Hindutva: Multidisciplinary Perspectives” (conference website); Kritika Sharma, “Hinduphobia or Battle against Bigotry? ‘Dismantling Global Hindutva’ Seminar Sparks Controversy,” ThePrint (30 August 2021); Raqib Hameed Naik, “US Academic Conference on ‘Hindutva’ Targeted by Hindu Groups,” Al Jazeera (7 September 2021); Ramesh Rao, “‘Dismantling Global Hindutva’: The Malefic Rakshasas and Their Demonic Agenda,” First Post (27 August 2021); American Historical Association, Statement on Threats to Academic Conferences (September 2021).

³⁵⁸ Jana Riess, “Blocklisting at Brigham Young University,” Washington Post (13 September 2021).

³⁵⁹ Nick Anderson, “Virginia Community Colleges Are Dropping President John Tyler and Others from Their Names amid Racial Reckoning,” Washington Post (10 October 2021).

professor of African-American history at the University of Florida Ibram X. Kendi, and We Were Eight Years in Power: An American Tragedy, containing essays on the presidency of Barack Obama (in office 2009–2017) by Ta-Nehisi Coates and his Between the World and Me, a recapitulation of racist violence in the United States written as a letter to his son.

In [November] 2021, four high schools in Canyons school district, Utah, removed at least nine books, including Out of Darkness by Ashley Hope Pérez about a love affair amid racial division in 1930s Texas. Between September and December 2021, records requests to nearly 100 school districts in Texas – a small sample of the state’s 1,250 public school systems – revealed 75 formal requests to ban books from libraries, including some picture books about Black historical figures.³⁶⁰

In early October 2021, historian Beverly Gage, resigned as director (2017–2021) of Yale University’s Brady-Johnson Program in Grand Strategy, effective in December 2021. Gage said that in November 2020 she had faced sudden demands from the program’s conservative funders – former treasury secretary Nicholas Brady and investment management billionaire Charles Johnson – for external oversight of its curriculum and faculty hiring. The demands reportedly stemmed from the donors’ displeasure over a New York Times op-ed in which a program instructor had called President Donald Trump a demagogue who threatened the Constitution. Gage sought support from Yale administrators, but instead they pressed her to grant the donors’ wish that she form a board of overseers that included former Secretary of State (and historian) Henry Kissinger.³⁶¹

On 3 October 2021, a sculpture honoring George Floyd (1973–2020) (an African-American man killed in 2020 by a police officer in Minneapolis, Minnesota) at Union Square in New York was defaced with grey paint. The sculpture had previously been on display in Brooklyn, where it similarly had been vandalized.³⁶²

On 26 October 2021, Lora Burnett, a dismissed history professor at Collin College, a community college in McKinney, Texas, sued Collin College, Texas [See NCH Annual Report 2021], arguing that the dismissal violated her First Amendment rights. The complaint came after Burnett won a legal battle obliging Collin College to release relevant text messages about her case. Burnett’s nonrenewal notification cited her “insubordination, making private personnel issues public that impair the college’s ³⁶⁰ Emma Sarappo, “This Is a Shakedown,” The Atlantic (8 December 2021); Adam Gabbatt, “US Conservatives Linked to Rich Donors Wage Campaign to Ban Books from Schools,” Guardian (24 January 2022); Mike Hixenbaugh, “Banned: Books on Race and Sexuality Are Disappearing from Texas Schools in Record Numbers,” NBC News (1 February 2022).

³⁶¹ Daniel Drezner, “A Pyrrhic Victory for Plutocrats at Yale: Nicholas Brady and Charles Johnson Display Some Poor Strategic Thinking,” Washington Post (5 October 2021); Aaron Jakes, “Never Mind Donor Influence: The Problem with “Grand Strategy” Was Always Warmongering,” Washington Post (11 October 2021).

³⁶² “George Floyd Sculpture in New York City Defaced For a Second Time,” BBC News (5 October 2021).

operations, and personal criticisms of co-workers, supervisors, and/or those who merely disagree with you.” On 25 January 2022, Collin College agreed to pay Burnett $70,000 plus legal fees to settle the case. College leaders did not admit fault.³⁶³

On 3 November 2021, historian Xiyue Wang (1980–) and his wife Hua Qu filed a lawsuit against Princeton University in the Superior Court of New Jersey in Mercer County, alleging that the university had caused them “severe personal injuries and other irreparable harm” through “grossly negligent acts” before and during his imprisonment in Iran on an espionage charge (2016–2019) [See NCH Annual Reports 2018–2020]. The lawsuit accused Princeton of “wanton” misconduct and blamed it for encouraging Wang to study for his Ph.D. in history in Iran, not taking his safety concerns seriously, and failing to adequately lobby for his release because it was more concerned with its reputation and that of the Princeton Iran Center.³⁶⁴

On 9 November 2021, judge Tanya Chutkan ruled that Congress had the right to see 700 pages of White House records of former President Donald Trump that could shed light on the events leading up to the attack on Congress on 6 January 2021. In August 2021, a congressional committee investigating the so-called Capitol Riot had demanded access to the documents in order to find out whether Trump had prior knowledge of the riot. The judge ruled that the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA), the federal agency that holds the records, should comply with the committee’s request. On 9 October 2021, President Joe Biden rejected Trump’s bid to keep the documents secret under executive privilege. However, on 11 November a federal appeals court granted Trump’s request to temporarily block the NARA from releasing the documents. On 19 January 2022, the Supreme Court rejected Trump’s request to stop the congressional committee from obtaining the records.

In mid-January 2022, the NARA retrieved fifteen boxes of documents and other items from Trump’s Florida resort, including letters from Barack Obama and Kim Jong-Un, because the material should have been turned over to the NARA when he left the White House. Two former Trump advisers described a frenzied packing process in the final days of the administration because Trump did not want to pack or accept defeat for much of the transition.

On [1 February] 2022, the NARA declared that some of the records that were turned over to them at the end of the Trump administration had been torn up, allegedly by Trump himself, confirming fears that were expressed in a December 2020 lawsuit by the National Security Archive and the American ³⁶³ District Court for the Eastern District of Texas, Lora Burnett versus Collin County Community College District \(complaint\) (26 October 2021); Colleen Flaherty, “Former Professors Sue Collin College over Free Speech,” Inside HigherEd (27 October 2021); Michael Vasquez, “Collin College Will Pay Ousted Professor \$70,000 Plus Fees in Free-Speech Case,” Chronicle of Higher Education (25 January 2022).

³⁶⁴ Superior Court of New Jersey in Mercer County, Xiyue Wang & Hua Qu versus Princeton University (2021); Sam Kagan & Andrew Somerville, “Graduate Student Xiyue Wang Sues Princeton over Actions during His Iranian Imprisonment,” The Daily Princetonian (28 January 2022).

Historical Association [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. On 10 February 2022, the NARA asked the Justice Department to investigate Trump for his handling of official papers [See NCH Annual Report 2021].³⁶⁵

On 15 December 2021, Ron DeSantis, governor of Florida, announced his “Stop the Wrongs to Our Kids and Employees (WOKE) Act,” which would give parents the power to sue local school districts that teach lessons, including history lessons, rooted in critical race theory (already banned in Florida public schools since June 2021 [See above]). Critics feared that this initiative would create a witch-hunt atmosphere complete with financial incentives for nuisance lawsuits. The act went into effect on 1 July 2022. A lawsuit against the act argued that it violated constitutional rights and would have a dangerous chilling effect on academic freedom. Associate professor and president of the United Faculty of Florida at the University of Central Florida Robert Cassanello requested a judge to block the law. Cassanello, who taught classes in Reconstruction (1865–1877), Jim Crow America (1865–1965), and civil rights movements, argued that the law “restrict[ed] his ability to accurately and fully teach these subjects.”³⁶⁶

Before 1965, the Edward Perry Warren collection of ancient erotica of the Museum of Fine Arts (MFA) in Boston, purchased between 1885 and 1910, was either stored away or neutered with paint. After 1965, the MFA fully displayed the collection. However, when on 18 December 2021, the museum reopened its galleries of ancient Greece and Rome, some critics opined that a certain censorship had again befallen the queer erotica from the collection because they were either not displayed or not well explained on the labels.³⁶⁷

Beginning in early January 2022 and spiking during Black History Month, dozens of anonymous bomb threats were made against Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs), disrupting campus life. Historically Black churches, synagogues and other institutions were also targeted. On 16 March, ³⁶⁵ District Court for the District of Columbia, Donald Trump versus Bennie Thompson: Judgment; “Trump Must Give Documents to Capitol Riot Probe – Biden,” BBC News (9 October 2021); “Capitol Riot: Judge Rejects Trump Bid to Withhold Records,” BBC News (10 November 2021); David Smith & Joan Greve, “Trump Wins Temporary Victory in Effort to Keep White House Records Secret,” Guardian (11 November 2021); “Capitol Riot: Court Temporarily Blocks Release of Trump Files,” BBC News (13 November 2021); Hugo Lowell, “Supreme Court Rejects Trump Bid to Shield Documents from January 6 Panel,” Guardian (20 January 2022); Martin Pengelly, “Trump Tore Up Records Turned Over to House Capitol Attack Committee,” Guardian (1 February 2022); Jacqueline Alemany, Josh Dawsey, Tom Hamburger & Ashley Parker, “National Archives Had To Retrieve Trump White House Records from Mar-a-Lago,” Washington Post (7 February 2022); “US National Archives Requests Legal Probe of Trump over Handling of Documents,” BBC News (10 February 2022); Hugo Lowell, “US House to Investigate whether Trump Broke Law in Handling of Documents,” Guardian (10 February 2022).

³⁶⁶ Ed Kilgore, “DeSantis Enlists Litigious Parents for Anti-Woke Crusade,” Intelligencer (15 December 2021); Susan Svrluga & Lori Rozsa, “In Florida, DeSantis’s Plans for Colleges Rattle Some Academics,” Washington Post (1 July 2022).

³⁶⁷ Erin Thompson, “The MFA’s Complicated History with Censoring Queer Desire Pervades New Exhibit,” GBH News (4 January 2022).

Vice President Kamala Harris announced that HBCUs could apply for grants under the Project School Emergency Response to Violence program (Project SERV) for needs such as improvements to campus security or targeted mental health counseling. Some HBCUs called the threats “domestic terrorism.” As of mid-April 2022, the Armed Conflict Location and Event Data Project recorded 72 bomb or shooting threats against HBCUs in at least sixteen states.³⁶⁸

On 5 January 2022, administrator Keith Veverka of the Pennridge School District in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, explicitly instructed social studies teachers and school principals not to “wade into” discussions with students about the Capitol Riot in Washington D.C on 6 January 2021 [See above] “due to the current polarization and strong emotions.” Teachers should “simply state that the investigation is ongoing and as historians we must wait until there is some distance from the event for us to accurately interpret it.” Faculty worried about the precedent set by the directive regarding the teaching of history and current events. On 6 January 2021, violent riots saw supporters of former President Donald Trump storm the U.S. Capitol in hopes of stopping a vote to certify the 2020 election.³⁶⁹

Between 18–20 January 2022, the statue of President Theodore Roosevelt (1858–1919) was removed and readied for transport to the Theodore Roosevelt Presidential Library in North Dakota [See NCH Annual Report 2020].³⁷⁰

On 22 January 2022, J. Michael Butler, a historian at Flagler College in St. Augustine, Florida, was scheduled to give a presentation to Osceola County School District teachers entitled “The Long Civil Rights Movement,” which postulated that the civil rights movement preceded and post-dated Martin Luther King (1929–1968) by decades. However, on 19 January 2022, the school district canceled Butler’s presentation, saying that it wanted to review it and citing concerns over “critical race theory” – even though the lecture had nothing to do with the topic. One day before, a state Senate committee had advanced legislation at the behest of Republican Governor Ron DeSantis to block public schools and private businesses from making people feel “discomfort” when they were taught about race. Butler accused DeSantis of creating “a climate of fear.”³⁷¹

³⁶⁸ Scholars at Risk, Factsheet 1 (1 February 2022); Factsheet 2 (14 March 2022); American Historical Association, “Bomb Threats against HBCUs: A History of Domestic Terrorism \(February 2022\)” (statement; 22 February 2022); Erin Logan, “Harris Announces Grants for HBCUs that Received Bomb Threats,” Los Angeles Times (16 March 2022); Sara Weissman, “Federal Funds Announced for HBCUs after Bomb Threats,” Inside HigherEd (17 March 2022); ACLED, “Fact Sheet: Threats Against HBCUs and Black-Majority Schools in the United States” (20 April 2022).

³⁶⁹ Emily Rizzo & Katie Meyer, “Don’t Discuss the Jan. 6 Insurrection with Students, a Bucks School District Tells Teachers,” Why? (5 January 2022).

³⁷⁰ Rachel Treisman, “New York City’s Natural History Museum Has Removed a Theodore Roosevelt Statue,” NPR (20 January 2022).

On 24 January 2022, the statue of Juan Ponce de León (1474–1521), a Spanish traveler who colonized the island of Puerto Rico in 1508 and became its first governor, was toppled in the capital San Juan hours before a visit of the Spanish King Felipe VI to mark the 500th anniversary of San Juan’s founding in 1521.³⁷²

On 25 January 2022, the McMinn County Board of Education, Tennessee, decided to ban Maus – a 1972 Pulitzer prize-winning graphic novel by Art Spiegelman narrating how his parents survived the Holocaust – which had been taught to grade eight students (13–14 years), from the curriculum, citing as reasons profanity (swear words) and nudity (a scene where the prisoners in Auschwitz are stripped naked and beaten). After the ban, the novel topped the bestseller list.³⁷³

On 31 January 2022, Michael Phillips, a history professor at Collin College, a community college in McKinney, Texas, announced that his contract would not be renewed, despite reportedly highly positive evaluations. The non-renewal was allegedly related to an assignment Phillips had given to his students in the fall of 2021, when they had to write a paper on the history of pandemics and epidemics in North America. As preparation for the assignment, he gave a lecture on the 1918 Spanish Flu and the negative impact of anti-mask sentiments in the United States at the time – implicitly referring to Republican politicians in Texas who had forbidden public colleges to require face masks during the COVID-19 pandemic. Already in 2017, Phillips had come into conflict with his supervisors, after he had led a campaign to pressure the city of Dallas to take down its Confederate monuments.

Following the news about Phillips’s dismissal, Benjamin Johnson, a history professor at Loyola University, Chicago, circulated a petition calling for an investigation into Collin College’s academic freedom standards [See NCH Annual Report 2021]. Then, in late May 2022, Johnson was called in a meeting at his university, following an email of Collin College’s President Neil Matkin in which he ³⁷¹ Marc Caputo & Teaganne Finn, “Florida School District Cancels Professor’s Civil Rights Lecture over Critical Race Theory Concerns,” NBC News (24 January 2022); Laura Meckler & Hannah Natanson, “New Critical Race Theory Laws Have Teachers Scared, Confused and Self-Censoring,” Washington Post (14 February 2022).

³⁷² “Puerto Rico: Statue of Spanish Explorer Toppled Before King Felipe’s Visit,” Guardian (24 January 2022).

³⁷³ Jeet Heer, “Maus in Tennessee: Censoring Spiegelman’s Masterpiece Is Fear of Honest History,” The Time of Monsters (27 January 2022); Ruth Smeeth, “You Cannot Tell the Story of the Holocaust without Challenging Imagery,” Index on Censorship (27 January 2022); “Tennessee School Board Defends Ban of Holocaust Novel Maus,” BBC News (28 January 2022); “Maus: Graphic Novel Tops Amazon Best-Sellers after School Ban,” BBC News (31 January 2022); “Whoopi Goldberg Slammed for Saying Holocaust Not about Race,” BBC News (1 February 2022).

pressed Loyola University's President on whether Johnson had been "speaking for the institution" when circulating the petition.³⁷⁴

On 18 February 2022, Lieutenant Governor Dan Patrick said that he would propose to end professor tenure for all new hires at Texas public universities and colleges in an effort to combat faculty members who allegedly "indoctrinated" students with teachings about critical race theory [See above]. His declaration came after the Faculty Council at the University of Texas at Austin on 14 February 2022 approved a measure reaffirming instructors' right to teach about racial justice and critical race theory in the classroom. The American Association of University Professors condemned Patrick's plan.³⁷⁵

In [late April] 2022, the statue of Marjorie Tallchief (1926–2021), the most famous Native American ballerina, was vandalized, stolen, and sold for scrap. The statue, erected in 2007, was part of the "Five Moons" installation honoring Native ballerinas from Oklahoma in front of the Tulsa Historical Society & Museum.³⁷⁶

On 7 May 2022, the Hindu American Foundation (HAF) filed a lawsuit in District Court for the District of Columbia against the leaders of Hindus for Human Rights, the Indian American Muslim Council, the Federation of Indian American Christian Organizations of North America, and Rutgers University historian Audrey Truschke, for defamation and conspiracy to defame HAF. In early April 2021, they were quoted in two Al Jazeera articles presenting claims that HAF misappropriated funds to support violence and "slow genocide" against Christians and Muslims in India. According to the complaint, Truschke republished the statements, while accusing HAF of organizing violent threats against her.³⁷⁷

On 11 May 2022, the Federal Indian Boarding Schools Initiative – an investigation unit set up in June 2021 by Interior Secretary Deb Haaland (following the news of mass graves found on the terrain of former residential schools in Canada [See NCH Annual Report 2021]) to investigate the amount of indigenous children that died at Native American boarding schools – published its first report. It outlined that the Native American boarding schools were part of a countrywide assimilation system that ³⁷⁴ Michael Vasquez, "Days After Settling a Lawsuit, a Texas College Ousts Another Outspoken Professor," Chronicle of Higher Education (31 January 2022); Simone Carter, "Chicago Professor Claims Collin College Attempted to Crack Down on His Free Speech, Too," Dallas Observer (31 May 2022).

³⁷⁵ Kate McGee, "Lt. Gov. Dan Patrick Proposes Ending University Tenure to Combat Critical Race Theory Teachings," Texas Tribune (18 February 2022); Colleen Flaherty, "Texas Lt. Governor Slams 'Looney Marxist' Professors, CRT," Inside HigherEd (18 February 2022).

³⁷⁶ Jonathan Edwards, "Statue of Famed Native American Ballerina Stolen and Sold for Scrap," Washington Post (3 May 2022); Cynthia Prescott, "The Monument Controversy Nobody Is Talking About," Washington Post (26 May 2022).

³⁷⁷ Hindu American Foundation, "Hindus for Human Rights & Indian American Muslim Council Leaders, Rutgers Professor Audrey Truschke Sued for Defamation and Conspiracy against HAF" (7 May 2022).

was part of a broader policy to take land from indigenous people. Additionally, it found at least 53 separate burial sites at federal Native American boarding schools, arguing that further investigation would likely see the total number of children having died climb to thousands or tens of thousands. Following the report, the National Native American Boarding School Healing Coalition called on Pope Francis to open the Catholic Church's records related to the boarding school system.³⁷⁸

See also China, Colombia, Cuba, Honduras, India, Italy, Netherlands, Russia, Turkey, Ukraine, United Kingdom, Vietnam.

URUGUAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2013, 2015–2018, 2021.

UZBEKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2014, 2016, 2020.

³⁷⁸ Hilary Beaumont, "US Gov't: At Least 53 Burial Sites at Indigenous Boarding Schools," Al Jazeera (11 May 2022).

VATICAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000, 2004, 2009, 2011, 2015, 2019–2020.

On [23] June 2022, Pope Francis ordered the online and openly accessible publication of 170 volumes of files from the archives of Pope Pius XII (1876–1958). The documents had already been available for consultation by scholars since March 2020, with the purpose to shed light on the role of Pope Pius XII in connection with the Holocaust, among others [See NCH Annual Reports 1998, 2000, 2004, 2011, 2015, 2020].³⁷⁹

See also Canada, United States.

VENEZUELA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2003–2004, 2006, 2009–2010, 2012, 2014, 2017–2021.

VIETNAM

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2006, 2009–2013, 2016–2017, 2019–2020.

Fifty years after the publication of the Pentagon Papers in 1971, outlining the secret political and military involvement of the United States in Vietnam, the ruling Communist Party of Vietnam remained steadfast in its refusal to declassify national historical records about the Vietnam War (1955–1975).³⁸⁰

In February 2022, Human Rights Watch reported that house arrests of human rights activists often coincided with key events or dates on the national calendar, such as national and religious holidays, or commemorative events. Particularly sensitive commemoration days included 30 April (commemoration of the end of the 1954–1975 war); 26 June (United Nations International Day in Support of Victims of Torture); 2 September (Vietnam National Independence Day); and 10 December (International Human Rights Day).

³⁷⁹ “Pope Francis Orders Online Release of Second World War-Era ‘Jewish’ Files,” Guardian (23 June 2022).

³⁸⁰ Lien-Hang Nguyen, “In Vietnam, the Pentagon Papers Are History Written by the Defeated,” New York Times (9 June 2021).

Due to the historical relationship between Vietnam and China, many Vietnamese activists were anti-China protesters. Hence, many of the “sensitive” days during the year when activists were put under house arrest were related to China, including: 19 January (commemoration of the 1974 Battle of Paracel Islands between naval forces of South Vietnam and China); 17 February (commemoration of the 1979 Sino-Vietnamese border war); 14 March (commemoration of the 1988 Gac Ma battle (also known as the Johnson South Reef Skirmish between Vietnam and China) [See NCH Annual Report 2016]; and 1 October (China Independence Day).

Hòa Hảo Buddhist practitioners who refused to join state-sanctioned churches were subject to house arrest at least four times a year: the founding day of the Hòa Hảo religion (4 July 1939) and the anniversaries of the birth (15 January 1920), the disappearance (18 March 1947), and the death (16 April 1947) of its founder Huỳnh Phú Sổ [See NCH Annual Report 2016].³⁸¹

See also Cambodia, Korea, South.

³⁸¹ Human Rights Watch, “Locked Inside Our Home”: Movement Restrictions on Rights Activists in Vietnam (New York: HRW, 2022), 3–4, 17–19, 25–26, 43–44, 46–47, 49, 52, 70–75.

WESTERN SAHARA

See Morocco / Western Sahara

YEMEN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2003, 2010, 2013–2016, 2018–2021.

On 7 October 2021, the United Nations Human Rights Council shut down its investigation into war crimes committed during the Civil War (2014–), after Saudi Arabia lobbied heavily against a Netherlands-led resolution to give the independent investigators another two years to monitor atrocities. More than 100,000 people were killed and 4 million had been displaced in the conflict.³⁸² ³⁸² “‘We Have Failed Yemen’: UN Human Rights Council Ends War Crime Probe,” Guardian (7 October 2021).

ZAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2015, 2021.

ZIMBABWE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2001, 2004, 2006, 2008–2015, 2018, 2021.

INTRODUCTION

This twenty-seventh *Annual Report of the Network of Concerned Historians (NCH) contains news about the domain where history and human rights intersect, in particular about the censorship of history and the persecution of historians, archivists, and archaeologists around the globe, as reported by various human rights organizations and other sources. It mainly covers events and developments of 2020 and 2021.

Disclaimer. The fact that the NCH presents this news does not imply that it shares the views and beliefs of the historians and others mentioned in it.

Download this report at:

<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/21.pdf>

Cite this report as:

Network of Concerned Historians, Annual Report 2021

(<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/21.pdf>).

For the complete set of NCH Annual Reports, see:

<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/content/ar.html>

Or click:

			2021	2020	2019	2018	2017	2016	2015
2014	2013	2012	2011	2010	2009	2008	2007	2006	2005
2004	2003	2002	2001	2000	1999	1998	1997	1996	1995

This year's report was compiled and edited by Antoon De Baets and Ruben Zeeman.

Previous Annual Reports (1995–2020) were compiled by Antoon De Baets.

Please send any comments to antoondebaets@concernedhistorians.org.

AFGHANISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2016, 2018.

In January 2021, Akal, a publisher in Madrid, issued the book Afganistán, Una república del silencio: Recuerdos de un estudiante afgano (Afghanistan, a republic of silence: memories of an Afghan student), written by A.K. (1994–). An autobiography of 208 pages, it told the history of the Hazara ethnic group, a Farsi-speaking minority, who are of Mongolian and Central Asian descent and are mainly Shia Muslims. It included an account of the 1890 genocide of Hazaras by Pashtuns and instances of contemporary violence and corruption by the Taliban, Al Qaeda, Islamic State, and Hizb ut-Tahrir. A.K. was a history teacher, educated at the University of Herat and the University of Santiago de Compostela. He completed the book manuscript in Afghanistan. A.K.'s life was possibly in danger after the book's publication.¹

See also United States.

ALBANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2012, 2015–2020.

On 2 March 2021, the International Commission on Missing Persons (ICMP) stated that Albanian prosecutors had still not issued orders to exhume suspected mass gravesites where people who went missing during the Communist dictatorship (1944–1991) could be buried. In 2018, after eight years of negotiations, the government had agreed with the ICMP to investigate and identify the remains of over 6,000 Albanians who were killed or disappeared during that era.

The ICMP was not the first international body to examine the issue. The United Nations Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances visited Albania in December 2016 and published a critical report in 2017, finding that “Albania had yet to deal adequately with the gross human rights violations committed between 1944 and 1991.” In May 2018, the UN Committee on Enforced Disappearances encouraged Albania to “redouble its efforts to effectively shed light on enforced disappearances that took place during the communist regime.” Albania should investigate these crimes, prosecute those responsible and provide reparations to the victims and their families, the committee said [See also NCH Annual Reports 2017, 2020].²

¹ “Afganistán, una república del silencio: Recuerdos de un estudiante afgano,” Akal book presentation (8 May 2021); “Un erasmus afgano de la USC podría ser asesinado en su país por escribir un libro,” El Correo Gallego (9 June 2021); A.K., personal communications (8–11 May 2021).

See also Kosovo.

ALGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001–2019.

In October 2020, forty-two peaceful demonstrators were arrested in Algiers while commemorating the 1988 youth protests. Thirty-three were provisionally released, and nine imprisoned in El Harrach prison, Algiers, before eventually being released. The 1988 protests, between 5 and 11 October, started in Algiers and spread to other cities, resulting in about 500 deaths and 1000 wounded.³

On 27 October 2020, presidential adviser Abdelmadjid al-Sheikh said that Algeria did not rule out international arbitration to resolve its dispute with France over the archives of the French colonial era. Algeria claimed that during the colonial period (1830–1962) French forces smuggled hundreds of thousands of maps and historical documents, including those dating back to the Ottoman era (1518–1830), into France. France claimed that colonial-era related archives were part of France’s sovereignty [See also NCH Annual Report 2017].⁴

See also France, Morocco.

ANGOLA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2009, 2017, 2020.

² Fjori Sinoruka, “Albania’s Search for Communist-Era Missing Persons Stalled,” Balkan Insight (2 March 2021); Fred Abrahams, “Communist-Era Disappearances Still Haunt Albania,” Human Rights Watch (17 March 2021).

³ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 63.

⁴ Abdurazzak Abdallah, “Algeria May Take France to Arbitration over ‘Stolen’ Archive,” Anadolu Agency (27 October 2020); “France Speeds Up Access to Secret Algeria War Archives,” RFI (10 March 2021); Hossam El Din Islam, “French Move to Declassify Archive Draws Mixed Reactions in Algeria,” Anadolu Agency (19 March 2021).

ARGENTINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2020.

Twenty-six years after the terrorist attack perpetrated against the headquarters of the Asociación Mutual Israelita Argentina (AMIA) in Buenos Aires on 18 July 1994, which resulted in the death of 85 people and serious injuries to at least 151 others, court battles continued and no one had been convicted. In September 2020, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) found Argentina responsible for violating the rights to life and physical integrity of the victims, as well as for cover-up operations that resulted in impunity. On 25 March 2021, the IACHR referred to the Inter-American Court of Human Rights a case on the state's responsibility. It was brought by the Asociación Civil Memoria Activa (Citizens' Association for Active Memory), victims and relatives of victims of the attack, who complained that much of the documentation was held secret by the intelligence agencies [See also NCH Annual Reports 2011, 2014, 2016–2020].⁵

Pardons and amnesty laws shielding officials implicated in crimes committed under the dictatorship (1976–1983) were annulled by the Supreme Court and federal judges in the early 2000s. As of September 2020, the Attorney General's Office reported 3,329 people charged, 997 convicted, and 162 acquitted. Of 597 investigations into crimes against humanity, judges had issued rulings in 246. As of August 2020, 130 people illegally taken from their parents as children during the dictatorship had been identified and many had been reunited with their families. The large number of victims, suspects, and cases of alleged crimes of the dictatorship made it difficult for prosecutors and judges with limited resources to bring those responsible to justice.⁶

See also Israel.

⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 43; Amnesty International, State of the World's Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 69; Archives and Human Rights: News from the Section on Archives and Human Rights, no. 136 (March 2021), 10; "IACHR Refers Case on Argentina to the Inter-American Court" (press release; 26 March 2021).

⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 39.

ARMENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2006, 2010, 2014–2016.

In January 2021, Facebook’s Oversight Board upheld a ban on a post that purported to show historical photos of churches in Baku, the capital of Azerbaijan, with a caption that the Oversight Board said indicated “disdain” for Azerbaijani people. The caption in Russian claimed that Armenians built Baku and that this heritage, including the churches, had been destroyed. It used the term “Taziks” to describe Azerbaijanis, who “were nomads” and “had no history compared with Armenians.” The post ended with a call to end “Azerbaijani aggression” and “vandalism.” The Oversight Board said that the problematic term “Taziks” could be understood as wordplay on the Russian word “aziks,” a derogatory term for Azerbaijanis, featuring on Facebook’s internal list of slur terms. The user appealed the decision, arguing that he intended to highlight the destruction of cultural and religious monuments.⁷

See also Azerbaijan, United States.

AUSTRALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2001, 2003, 2007–2009, 2014–2016, 2018–2020.

On 24 May 2020, mining firm Rio Tinto destroyed the 46,000-year-old Juukan Gorge caves (rock shelters) in the Pilbara region, Western Australia [See also NCH Annual Report 2020]. In August 2020, CEO Jean Sébastien Jacques was fined almost $5 million in bonuses and the head of Rio Tinto’s Australian iron ore group more than $1 million, after an internal review found “systemic failures in the cultural heritage management system.” On 11 September 2020, Jacques announced that he and two other senior executives would step down in March 2021, following criticism of the destruction. In early September 2020 it was revealed that in the days running up to the caves’ destruction in May, Rio Tinto had hired lawyers in case opponents tried to seek injunctions to stop them. On 9 December 2020, a parliamentary inquiry panel recommended that Rio Tinto should pay restitution to the affected Indigenous Australians and reconstruct the two destroyed rock shelters. On 3 March 2021, Rio Tinto’s chairman Simon Thompson announced that he would step down as a result of the affair. He had come under continued pressure in February after the region's elders had accused him of breaking a personal promise.⁸

⁷ Umberto Bacchi & Avi Asher-Schapiro, “Remove or Restore? Facebook Oversight Board Wades into South Caucasus Culture Dispute,” Reuters News (29 January 2021); Mark Frary, “A Debate with No End in Sight,” Index on Censorship, 2021 no. 1, 18–19.

After two years of deliberations, in July 2020, an administrative appeals tribunal in Dili, Timor-Leste's capital, ruled that documents relating to Australia's involvement in the December 1975 Indonesian invasion and occupation of Timor-Leste (which lasted until 1999) would remain secret, thus upholding the Australian government's refusal to release them. It found that they "could reasonably be expected to cause damage to the security or international relations of the commonwealth." Historian Kim McGrath, author of Crossing the Line, Australia's Secret History in the Timor Sea (2017) and PhD candidate at Monash University, Melbourne, had repeatedly sought access from the National Archives to diplomatic cables, intelligence official's testimony, and cabinet documents related to maritime border negotiations between Indonesia and Australia in the 1970s. McGrath's requests were denied under exemptions to the Australian Archives Act (AAT).

Since the partly secret AAT hearing began in 2018, the decades-long dispute between Australia and Timor-Leste over their maritime border ended, with Australia ratifying a bilateral treaty in 2019. The treaty revealed that Australia had profited for decades from oil- and gas fields which were later found to belong to Timor-Leste, and that the delay in ratification added to those profits. McGrath and her lawyers were prevented from hearing the reasons why successive governments had blocked her applications for the documents over a number of years. An AAT deputy president, Stephanie Forgie, delivered two sets of reasons – one public, and one available only to the National Archives and its legal team. Lawyer Bernard Collaery, while researching a book on Australian-Timor-Leste history, said he had been able to access Australian records through the United Kingdom's royal archives that he was not able to access in Australia. Collaery himself faced prosecution for his role in exposing a spy scandal involving Australia's treatment of Timor-Leste.⁹

On 26 October 2020, state authorities in Victoria cut down a centuries-old "birthing tree" – a sacred tree where local Djab Wurrung women traditionally went to give birth and bury their placentas

⁸ Calla Wahlquist, "Rio Tinto Chiefs Lose Millions in Bonuses over Destruction of Juukan Gorge," Guardian (24 August 2020); Ben Butler, Lorena Allam and Calla Wahlquist, "Rio Tinto CEO and Senior Executives Resign from Company after Juukan Gorge Debacle," Guardian (11 September 2020); "Rio Tinto Chief Jean-Sébastien Jacques to Quit over Aboriginal Cave Destruction," BBC News (11 September 2020); Nick Toscano & Hamish Hastie, "Rio Tinto CEO, Top Executives Resign amid Cave Blast Crisis," Sydney Morning Herald (11 September 2020); Melanie Burton, "Rio Tinto Should Pay Restitution for Sacred Aboriginal Caves Blast – Inquiry," Reuters (9 December 2020); "Rio Tinto Chief to Step Down over Cave Destruction," BBC News (3 March 2021); Ben Butler, Calla Wahlquist and Jillian Ambrose, "Rio Tinto Chairman to Stand Down amid Juukan Gorge Outcry," Guardian (3 March 2021).

⁹ Helen Davidson & Christopher Knaus, "Timor-Leste: Court Upholds Australian Government Refusal to Release Documents on Indonesia's Invasion," Guardian (3 July 2020).

afterward – near Buangor to clear land for a highway between Melbourne and Adelaide. On 27 October, Victoria police arrested 25 protesters who refused to leave the site as land clearing work continued.¹⁰

See also China.

AUSTRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2005–2007, 2009, 2018, 2020.

See Egypt, Serbia.

AZERBAIJAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–1998, 2008–2013, 2015–2020.

In June 2016 and July 2020, the European Court of Human Rights ruled in favor of Leyla Yunus (Yunosova) (1955–), director of the Institute for Peace and Democracy (IPD), and her husband Arif Yunus (Yunusov) (1955–), an expert adviser for the IPD, after they had filed a complaint about their arrest, pre-trial detention, and medical treatment while in detention in 2014 [See also NCH Annual Reports 2015–2018, 2020].¹¹

On 8 October 2020, amid an escalation of the conflict in Nagorno-Karabach, the interior and exterior of the Ghazanchetsots (Holy Savior) Cathedral in Shusha, an iconic site for the Armenian Apostolic Church, was seriously damaged. Armenia accused Azerbaijan of targeting the cathedral.

On 4 May 2021, Caucasus Heritage Watch (CHW), a Cornell University and Purdue University-based NGO that monitored and documented endangered and damaged cultural heritage, shared high-resolution satellite images showing the destruction of an early nineteenth century Armenian cemetery in the village of Böyük Tağlar (Azeri) or Mets Tagher (Armenian). The village was captured by Azerbaijani forces on 9 November 2020, during the 2020 Nagorno-Karabakh war. CHW further reported on possible threats to the Surb Amenaprkich (Holy Savior) church, founded in 1846, in the ¹⁰ “Djab Wurrung Tree: Anger over Sacred Aboriginal Tree Bulldozed for Highway,” BBC News (27 October 2020).

¹¹ European Court of Human Rights, Yunosova & Yunusov versus Azerbaijan (2016) and (2020).

same village, and to the seventh-century Vankasar church in the district of Agdam (Azeri) or Vankasar (Armenian).¹²

In January 2021, Azerbaijan applied to the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR), suing Armenia for its human rights violations during its thirty-year occupation of Nagorno-Karabakh (1988–2020), as well as the 44-day conflict over the region in 2020. A first complaint addressed the 3,890 missing Azerbaijanis in the occupied territories who had been subjected to life-threatening conditions since 1991. Another complaint referred to acts against Azerbaijani civilians, infrastructure (including culturally significant sites), and military personnel (including the mutilation of the bodies of Azerbaijani military personnel by members of the Armenian Army) between July and November 2020. On 1 February 2021, Armenia also applied to the ECHR with similar complaints.¹³

See also Armenia.

¹² “Nagorno-Karabakh: Armenia Accuses Azerbaijan of Targeting Cathedral,” BBC News (8 October 2020); Hugh Eakin, “When an Enemy’s Cultural Heritage Becomes One’s Own,” New York Times (30 November 2020); Amos Chapple, “Activity at Recaptured Church in Azerbaijan Raises Concern,” Al Jazeera (20 April 2021); “Caucasus Heritage Watch,” Twitter (4 May 2021).

¹³ “Azerbaijan Sues Armenia in ECtHR for Crimes against Humanity,” Daily Sabah (5 February 2021); “Armenia Submits Inter-State Application against Azerbaijan to European Court of Human Rights,” Armenpress (2 February 2021).

BAHRAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2008–2012, 2015–2017, 2020.

Peaceful protestors experienced excessive use of force during and after the 2011 protests, with Shia religious clergy being particularly targeted. Government violence led to the demolition or vandalism of dozens of Shia mosques and sites of religious and cultural significance and of other signs of Shia presence. The official historical narrative which systematically undermined the role of Baharna and Shia religious and cultural heritage in the country was promoted in the school curricula and media. Shia citizens also experienced discrimination in access to citizenship, public sector employment and government social policies, particularly housing and welfare programs, making them more vulnerable to poverty. Shia rituals during Ashura (the annual commemoration of the martyrdom of Imam Hussain, the Prophet Mohammed’s grandson) were restricted. In 2020–2021, the authorities invoked the Covid-19 pandemic as a reason to prevent gatherings. In the capital Manama, many preachers had their speeches censored in an attempt to prevent mass prayers on the night of Ashura. Some had their sermons contested and criminalized due to “lack of consensus” on Islamic history. Several funeral processions were also attacked with teargas and rubber bullets.¹⁴

BANGLADESH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2019.

On 9 September 2020, Morshed Hasan Khan, professor in medical science at Dhaka University, was dismissed by a university tribunal. On the same day, a Dhaka University student, affiliated with the student wing of the ruling party Awami League (AL), filed a section 124A case of sedition with the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate Court in Dhaka against Khan. The vaguely defined section 124A of the Bangladesh Penal Code stated that any critique of the government was punishable with up to life imprisonment.

On 26 March 2018, Khan had written an article, titled “Jyotirmoy Zia” (“shining Zia”) published in the daily Naya Diganta, in which he claimed that Ziaur Rahman (1936–1981), founder of the Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP), had declared independence from Pakistan in 1971, while most of the ruling AL leaders, including Sheikh Mujibur Rahman (1920–1975), who is considered the “Father of the Nation,” had fled to India with their family members. Unidentified persons issued multiple death threats over telephone and social media to Kahn for his article. On 2 April 2018, the Dhaka University Registrar’s office discharged Khan from all academic and administrative duties, accusing him of “distorting the liberation war history” and “disrespecting the father of the nation Sheikh Mujibur Rahman.” On 28 May 2018, the Dhaka University Syndicate formed a five-member inquiry committee led by the Pro-Vice Chancellor of the university to investigate the allegations. For nearly two years, the case was shelved for unknown reasons. On 12 February 2020, university authorities informed Khan that a tribunal had been formed to try the allegations. The tribunal gave him seven days to respond to the accusations, which he did. He was also denied access to his campus residence, where his wife, who was a cancer patient, resided.¹⁵

¹⁴ United Nations Special Rapporteurs Database 2010–2020; Salam for Democracy and Human Rights, Decade of Oppression: Authoritarianism in Bahrain 2011–2021 ([Stockholm]: Salam for Democracy and Human Rights, 2021), 99–110.

See also Pakistan.

BELARUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2000, 2005–2007, 2009–2011, 2014–2020.

During 2020, PEN Belarus documented at least 26 cases of discrimination and defamation of the Belarusian language, of the harming of buildings that were part of national historical heritage, and of the “defamation of symbols” that had historical significance and gained relevance in the post-election political situation.¹⁶

On 10 August 2020 – in a context of high tension in Minsk amid widespread anger over President Alexander Lukashenko’s landslide 9 August 2020 re-election, which the opposition and many governments denounced as fraudulent, Miron Vitushka, a Minsk history student was detained while crossing the street in Minsk. On 12 August 2020, Aliaksandr Bystryk, a PhD candidate in the History Department at Central European University, Budapest, and others, were illegally detained when driving on Peramozhtsau Avenue in Minsk. The riot police forced them to unlock their phones; they checked photos, videos and messenger applications. After the police found videos taken at earlier protests on the phones, the group was brought to a district police station. Two, including Bystryk, were beaten by the police. The group was forced to do physical exercises for two hours and meanwhile denigrated. After about two hours, they were released. They did not receive any legal document concerning their detention. On [1 September] 2020, a history teacher at an elite state school [name unknown] prevented a group of students, who carried the red and white Belarusian flag that had become a symbol of the opposition, from being detained, only to be detained in their place.¹⁷

¹⁵ “Professor Sacked and Threatened,” Amnesty International; “BCL Declares DU Professor Unwanted on Campus,” Prothomalo (2 April 2018); “DU Professor Terminated for Defaming Bangabandhu,” Daily Observer (9 September 2020).

¹⁶ Belarussian PEN Center, With No Right to the Culture: Belarus 2020 (Minsk: Belarusian PEN, 2021), 9–10.

On 18 August 2020, Konstantin Shishmakov (Kanstancin Šyškaŋ) (1991–2020), the director of the Bagration War History Museum in Volkovysk (Vaŋkavysk), Grodno region, and a local election committee member, were found dead. On 9 August, they had refused to sign the final voting protocol of the election commission. Someone else then signed the protocol for them. After the election, Shishmakov went on vacation and returned to the museum on 15 August. At 17.00 hours that day, he called his wife saying that he would not work in the museum anymore and was going home. It was unclear whether he had resigned or had been dismissed. Nothing was heard from Shishmakov thereafter. On 18 August, employees of the National Art Museum in Minsk took part in a search showing a poster reading: “Where is Konstantin Shishmakov?” A few hours later, a search and rescue team reported that Shishmakov was found dead near Mosty, close to Volkovysk. According to preliminary data by the search and rescue department there were no signs of a crime.¹⁸

On 24 August 2020, police in Belarus summoned 2015 Nobel Prize for Literature winner and oral historian Svetlana Alexievich (1948–) for questioning about coup plotting because she was a member of the new opposition Coordination Council, founded earlier in August 2020 by exiled opposition leader Svetlana Tikhanovskaya (Sviatlana Tsikhanouskaya). On 9 September 2020, Alexievich reported that she had been harassed with door knocks and phone calls and that masked men tried to break into her home. On 18 September 2020, she left Belarus for treatment in Germany and work in Sweden and Italy.¹⁹

¹⁷ Marci Shore, “Aliaksandr Bystryk: ‘Lukashenka Is the Abusive Husband Who Beats His Wife when She Wants to Leave...’,” Chronicle from Belarus (13 August 2020); Christopher Miller, “Belarus Is Detaining Thousands of Peaceful Protesters. Many Are Telling Gruesome Stories of Physical and Psychological Abuse by Police.,” BuzzFeed News (14 August 2020); Vladimir Petrovic, personal communication (15 & 17 August 2020); International Partnership for Human Rights, Truth Hounds and Civic Solidarity Platform, Belarus on Hold: Crackdown on Post-election Protests (Brussels: International Partnership for Human Rights, 2020), 15; Ben Aris, “Back to School: Belarusian Students and School Children Clash with Police.,” BNE Intellinews (2 September 2020).

¹⁸ “Пропал директор музея в Волковыске, отказавшийся подписать протокол на выборах.,” Volkovysk.by (16 August 2020); “Отказавшийся подписать протокол на выборах 29-летний директор музея из Волковыска найден мертвым.,” Nn.by (18 August 2020); В Беларуси нашли мертвым 29-летнего директора музея Константина Шишмакова.,” Meduza.io (19 August 2020); Belarussian PEN Center, With No Right to the Culture: Belarus 2020 (Minsk: Belarussian PEN, 2021), 12.

¹⁹ “Belarus Summons Nobel Prize Winner after Minsk Mass Rally.,” BBC News (24 August 2020); “Belarus: Nobel Laureate Alexievich Visited by Diplomats amid ‘Harassment’.,” BBC News (9 September 2020); PEN Belarus, “A Statement from Svetlana Alexievich, Nobel Laureate and Chair of Belarussian PEN.,” (9 September 2020); “Belarus: Svetlana Alexievich, Nobel Winner and Opposition Figure, Goes to Germany.,” BBC News (28 September 2020).

From 2016 to 2021, Larysa Shchyryakova ([1974]–), a historian by education and a freelance journalist working for Belsat TV channel (2008–) and the human rights website Gomel Spring, had reportedly been in court some 45 times since 2016 because she had no accreditation from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs (despite repeated applications). In 2017, during the mass protests against the unemployment tax, the police threatened to take away her teenage son on the basis of the “law against social parasites” because she had been on trial so many times. After mass protests broke out against the rigging of the presidential elections in August 2020, she was detained frequently during the protests in order to prevent her from covering them. On 16 February 2021, organized-crime officers searched her house for three hours for protest symbols, money, and bank cards. A computer, two cameras, a video camera, hard disks, SD cards and a voice recorder were confiscated.²⁰

On 8 December 2020, more than 500 scientists from the National Academy of Sciences of Belarus (NASB), the Belarussian State University (BSU), the Belarussian National Technical University (BNTU) and other Belarussian and foreign universities and scientific institutes, sent an open letter to the Academy of Sciences urging the leadership to “abandon the practice of politically motivated cuts and pressure on scientists.”

The letter came after seven employees of the NASB History Institute, of which six were historians, had received notification from 17 November onward that their contracts would not be renewed. Vadim Lazika, deputy director of the NASB Institute for Scientific Work, made the bogus claim that the dismissals were part of a reorganization of the History Institute. After the violent crackdown on electoral protests between 9 and 12 August 2020, 49 employees of the History Institute had signed a letter expressing their distrust of the election results and demanding the release of political prisoners and other detainees, an end to torture practices, and the disbanding of the riot police. From 14 August onward, historians had been standing in front of the NASB Presidium building with banners against violence, after Andrey Radoman (see below) had been arrested without reason.

The six historians were:

- Ekaterina Krivichanina (Kacjaryna Kryvičanina) (1981–), an associate professor in Contemporary Belarussian History and deputy head of the Center for World History and International Relations. She had further been the head of the History Institute’s trade union, which had created a fund to support employees who were illegally detained or suffered from the actions of the authorities after the August crackdown. Krivichanina, together with Shalanda (see below), had been the first to sign the letter. After the protest actions she received numerous emails from the management of the Institute, asking her why she had signed the letter and participated in protest actions, and recommending her to “go to a forest” if she wanted to express her opinions. With the non-renewal of her contract, she also lost her apartment as of 31 December 2020.

²⁰ Larysa Shchyryakova & Yauhen Merkis, “Fear and Loathing in Belarus,” Index on Censorship, 50 no. 1 (2021), 24–25.

- Alexey Shalanda (1969–), the head of the Department of Genealogy, Heraldry and Numismatics and deputy chairman of the History Institute’s trade union. Together with the non-renewal of his contract, his department was also abolished. Shalanda had been asked to write about the (officially banned) white-red-white flag. He concluded that as the flag was not a symbol of any political force, it did not deserve a ban, pointing to the fact that President Aliaksandr Lukashenka himself had taken the presidential oath under the white-red-white flag in 1994.
- Nikolay Volkov (1985–), a historical sciences PhD candidate at the History Institute specialized in Belarussian fortifications. On 13 September 2020, he was detained for several days, after which he was fined for participating in the protest actions.
- Vladimir Shipillo (1988–), a junior researcher at the Anthropology Department of the History Institute. On 8 November 2020, he had been arrested, together with Zhlutko (see below), for participating in the protest actions.
- Andrey (Alexey) Radaman (Radoman) (1971–), a researcher at the Department of Genealogy, Heraldry and Numismatics, specialized in legal and political history. Radoman was detained in the night of 12–13 August 2020 and beaten in the police department in Minsk. He refused to sign the protocols of detention and administrative offense, because he considered them falsified. He was released the next night. On 20 October, he was forced to pay an administrative penalty for “participating in an unauthorized rally.”
- Alexander Zhlutko (1954–), a philological science candidate at the History Institute and the main specialist of Latin manuscripts at the Institute. On 8 November 2020, he was detained for participating in a protest march and sentenced to ten days of detention.
- Tatyana Popovskaya, a researcher at the History Institute. She had participated in the protest actions. She had not planned to renew her contract.

In solidarity with their dismissed colleagues, five more scholars from the History Institute resigned. Upon receiving their application, the History Institute leadership had attempted to bribe them by offering them contracts for one up to three years. The five historians who resigned were:

- Vladimir Tugai (1951–), a history professor at the History Institute and the head of the Center for World History and International Relations.
- Andrey Matsuk (1978–), a senior researcher at the Department of Medieval and Early-Modern History of Belarus specialized in eighteenth century political history of the Grand Duchy of Lithuania. He had first been detained on 24 September 2020 by riot police at his house and sentenced to thirteen days of administrative arrest. He was one of the initiators of an open letter in defense of the non-renewal of the contracts of his six colleagues in November. On 11 December, Matsuk was again arrested and sentenced to fifteen days in prison for participating in an “unauthorized mass event” (he had celebrated his birthday in the courtyard of his house). He was released on 26 December 2020.

- Vadim Aniperkov (Vadzim Anipiarkau) (1977–), a historical sciences candidate at the Institute of History.
- Andrey Unuchek (1978–), the head of the Department of Modern Belarussian History specialized in the Belarussian national movement of the early twentieth century and the politics of the Russian empire in Belarussian lands in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, a lecturer at BSU and BNTU, and a playwright.
- Vasily Voronin.²¹

BELGIUM

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2008, 2010–2012, 2020.

In 2020, the city council of Antwerp debated how to commemorate and mark the lives of an unknown number of Congolese buried in the city’s Kiel district. On 12 May 1894, a total of 144 people had been transported from Congo, at that time a personal possession of King Leopold II, to Belgium to act in a specially constructed “village” at that year’s world fair in Antwerp, in what is recognized today as Belgium’s first “human zoo.” An unknown number of the men had been buried in the cemetery. When it was cleared in the late 1930 their remains were dumped in a mass grave on which a single sculpture stood without any reference to those buried.²²

On 9 March 2020, nine out of eighteen members of the Scientific Council of Kazerne Dossin – Memorial, Museum and Documentation Center on the Holocaust and Human Rights in Mechelen (Malines) resigned after a conflict with the Executive Board over the mission of the center. While the Board appeared to prioritize the Holocaust over human rights, the Council argued that both aims deserved full attention. Similar tensions over the mission had led to the resignation of director Christoph Busch in November 2019 and to a row about a human rights prize awarded in the Center to a Middle East scholar critical of Israel. Some feared that the Board would instrumentalize the Center on behalf of Israel's policies. The nine scholars included historians Herman Van Goethem, Bruno De Wever, Nico Wouters, Frank van Vree, and archivist Karel Velle.²³

²¹ Tatjana Nevedomskaia, “Лукашенко мстит? За что в Беларуси увольняют историков,” Der Welt (22 November 2021); “Семь историков уволены из Института истории, пятеро ушли из солидарности,” Euroradio (27 November 2020); “500+ учёных подписали открытое письмо против репрессий,” dev.by (8 December 2020); Felix Ackermann, “Unterdrückung und neuer Aufbruch,” Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung (23 January 2021); “Волков, Николай Александрович \(историк\),” Wikipedia (27 May 2021); “Мацук, Андрей Владимирович,” Wikipedia (28 May 2021); “Унучек, Андрей Владимирович,” Wikipedia (28 May 2021); “Радоман, Андрей Александрович,” Wikipedia (28 May 2021); “Шаланда, Алексей Иванович,” Wikipedia (28 May 2021).

²² Daniel Boffey, “New Find Reveals Grim Truth of Colonial Belgium’s ‘Human Zoos’,” Guardian (5 October 2020).

On 19 October 2020, state archivists asked the parliamentary commission investigating Belgium's colonial past to declassify relevant archives, particularly those of the Sûreté coloniale (Colonial Security Service). It was unclear who – the Sûreté de l'État (State Security Service) or the State Archives – was the legal successor to the Sûreté coloniale.²⁴

On 23 October 2020, a court in Ghent ruled in a defamation case initiated in 2018 by Baron Benoît de Bonvoison against the University of Ghent and Lander Van De Sompel. A master history student at that university, Van De Sompel had written a thesis in 2017 about the extreme-right network Westland New Post and the role of de Bonvoison (aka "the black baron") in it. According to its thesis policy, the university had put the approved version online. De Bonvoison had first asked the university to take down the online version. Upon refusal, he initiated the legal case, arguing that his reputation was vilified in the thesis and that it had used press sources selectively and carelessly, and asking for a disclaimer on the title page of the online version and damages from university and author. The court dismissed the claim, saying that the author's methodology and use of sources (including the re-use of press content) as well as the online publication were protected by academic freedom and that the thesis's subject was part of an important historical debate.²⁵

See also Rwanda.

²³ "Negen wetenschappers van Kazerne Dossin nemen ontslag. Freilich: 'Beter dat ze opstappen'," Radio 1 (10 March 2020); Bart Eeckhout, "Michaël Freilich \(N-VA\) haalt fors uit naar wetenschappelijke Raad Dossin," De Morgen (10 March 2020); Bruno Struys, Pieter Gordts & Yannick Verberckmoes, "Wetenschappers nemen ontslag uit raad Dossin-kazerne," De Morgen (10 March 2020).

²⁴ "La commission sur le passé colonial confrontée à l'urgence de déclassifier les archives," La Libre (Belgique) (19 October 2020).

²⁵ Dirk Voorhoof, "Rechtbank vrijwaart academische vrijheid," De Juristenkrant, no. 417 (4 November 2020); Marc Boone, "UGent/faculteit wint rechtszaak rond academische vrijheid" (Internal news from the University of Ghent Faculty of Arts and Philosophy) (9 November 2020); Lander Van De Sompel, De Westland New Post: Pop-up van een veranderende samenleving? De WNP herbekeken (master's thesis; University of Ghent, 2017, 126 pages).

BELIZE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

BOLIVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2020.

Bolivia only prosecuted a few of the officials responsible for human rights violations committed under authoritarian governments (1964–1982), partly because the armed forces had at times refused to share information about abuses. A Truth Commission established in 2017 transferred 6,000 case files of victims of the dictatorships to the Plurinational Assembly in December 2019 and presented its final report in March 2020.²⁶

BOSNIA and HERZEGOVINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2020.

In May 2020, the Catholic Church held a mass in Sarajevo commemorating the killings of Croatian Ustaša troops and civilians by Yugoslav partisans at the end of World War II. The event sparked protests in Sarajevo accusing the organizers of attempting to rehabilitate the Ustaša regime.²⁷

In July 2020, the state tourism board, with the support of the municipality of Visegrad, launched a promotional campaign under the slogan “We are waiting for you in Visegrad.” One of the hotels participating in the campaign was Vilina Vlas; it had been one of the infamous rape camps of the War of Yugoslav Succession (1991–1995). At least 200 Bosniak girls and women were held there, and they were sexually assaulted and murdered. The hotel’s past was not mentioned in the campaign.²⁸

In July 2020, the country marked the 25th anniversary of the 1995 Srebrenica genocide when approximately 8,000 Bosnian Muslim men and boys were killed; survivors continued to face

²⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 97.

²⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 101.

²⁸ Ehlimana Memisevic, “Promoting a Bosnian War ‘Rape Hotel’ Means Erasing History,” Balkan Insight (17 August 2020).

insurmountable obstacles to obtaining truth, justice, and remedy. Many of the 94 known sites where victims of the 1995 Srebrenica genocide were buried remained unmarked, with some of the land around the gravesites being ploughed for agricultural use or used for the construction of houses and business premises or the dumping of rubbish. Efforts to memorialize the graves were hampered due to the fact that most sites were located in the Bosnian-Serb dominated Republika Srpska, whose leaders continued to deny the genocide.

Political pressure and lack of resources continued to impede the work of the Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) Missing Persons Institute. Over 7,200 people remained missing as a result of the armed conflict (1991–1995). In August 2020, the United Nations Committee for Elimination of Discrimination against Women called on BiH to provide immediate and comprehensive support to survivors of wartime sexual violence. In September 2020, the BiH Council of Ministers adopted the long-delayed revised War Crimes Strategy, which set new deadlines for completion of backlog cases. By the end of 2020, over 600 cases were pending before the courts. Prosecution of war crimes continued to be delayed due to systemic deficiencies in the Prosecutor’s Office.²⁹

Most of the case files and evidence from war crime trials held after the wars that broke up Yugoslavia (1991–1999) were not immediately accessible to journalists, researchers and the general public. A total of seventeen courts handled war crimes cases, but the cantonal courts in Novi Travnik and Zenica were among the few that published their judgments. The only way to get access to the other verdicts was by filing access to information requests, a time-consuming task, further complicated by bureaucracy and non-responsiveness to requests. There was a similar issue with evidence used in these trials. Researchers faced problems when trying to get documents from court archives, due to the anonymization of verdicts, which began in 2013, when the courts started to use initials instead of full names and anonymized crime locations, a practice ending only after a “Stop Censorship About War Crimes” campaign. Researchers were told that they could not consult the entire file, but had to demand access to individual documents that interested them, and had to know exactly which documents these were. In cases regarding the area that was under the control of Herzeg-Bosnia, the unrecognized proto-state that was controlled by Bosnian Croats during the War of Yugoslav Succession (1991–1995), much of the documentation was missing entirely.³⁰

²⁹ “Bosnia and Herzegovina: 25th Anniversary of Srebrenica Massacre Is a Sombre Warning from History.” Amnesty International (9 July 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 101, 103; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 92–93; “Scores of Srebrenica Gravesites Remain Abandoned and Unmarked,” Balkan Insight (9 July 2021).

³⁰ ““Stop Censorship About War Crimes’ Campaign Launched,” BIRN (28 June 2013); Emina Dizdarevic, Serbeze Haxhijaj, Anja Vladislavljevic, and Milica Stojanovic, “Access Denied: Most Balkan War Crimes Case Files Not Public,” Balkan Insight (28 September 2020).

According to research by Balkan Insight in October 2020, a history textbook for 14–15-year-olds in the Republika Srpska approached the War of Yugoslav Succession (1991–1995) with a strong focus on ethnically Serb victims, while downplaying crimes committed by Serbian and Bosnian-Serb perpetrators. Written by Dragiša Vasić, the textbook made no mention of the 1995 genocide in Srebrenica other than stating that “in July 1995 the Bosnian Serb Army conquered Srebrenica and Zepa.” It described Bosnian Serb political leader Radovan Karadžić, who was imprisoned for life by the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia for genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, as “a psychiatrist, poet and politician,” who “as founder and leader of the Serb Democratic Party, had an extremely important role in the creation of Republika Srpska, whose first president he was.”³¹

On 8 April 2021, Serb and Croat lawmakers in the House of Peoples (the Bosnian parliament) voted seven against six with one abstention against changes to the criminal code to prohibit the denial of facts about the July 1995 Srebrenica genocide. It was the latest in a series of failed attempts over more than a decade to adopt a new law to outlaw denial of the 1995 genocide. Despite repeated calls for a ban from High Representative Valentin Inzko, the international official monitoring the implementation of the 1995 Dayton peace accords that ended the Bosnian war (1992–1995), the proposals had never received enough votes to pass. In its 2020 progress report on Bosnia and Herzegovina, the European Commission had raised concern that political leaders in the country continued to deny the facts about war crimes established by the courts and to glorify their perpetrators. On 25 March 2021, a draft European Parliament report on Bosnia and Herzegovina condemned “any kind of historical revisionism, secessionist rhetoric and related acts, denial or glorification of war crimes committed during the 1990s war.”³²

See also Croatia, Montenegro, Serbia.

BOTSWANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

³¹ Mladen Obrenovic, “Bosnian, Serbian Schoolbooks Teach Rival Versions of History,” Balkan Insight (30 October 2020).

³² Milica Stojanovic, “European MPs Urge Serbia, Kosovo to Intensify War Grave Search,” Balkan Insight (26 March 2021); Nejra Dzaferagic, “Bosnia Under Pressure to Adopt Srebrenica Genocide Denial Law,” Balkan Insight (16 April 2021).

BRAZIL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2020.

Despite families' struggle for justice, impunity for enforced disappearances persisted and there was no significant progress in clarifying past cases. Domestic law was not brought into line with international treaties and did not include a specific crime of enforced disappearance, which continued to be dealt with under other provisions, such as kidnapping. This gap in the law continued to pose a barrier to the prosecution of those responsible, as well as to the implementation of reparation policies for victims. The justice system also lacked effective and independent systems for the investigations into these crimes.³³

In October 2019, President Jair Bolsonaro appointed Letícia Dornelles, a journalist, actress, and soap opera screenwriter, as the new director of the Casa de Rui Barbosa (a federal public research institution in Rio de Janeiro focused on history, law, philology, and literature) rather than an experienced academic. Many academics, including the Associação Nacional de História (ANPUH; National Historical Association) protested this appointment. In early January 2020, researchers on the board of the foundation were dismissed, which, again, led to protests from scholars. Political scientist Christian Lynch, who had been selected to coordinate one of the Casa's research departments, had his appointment reversed by then-Special Secretary of Culture Roberto Alvim, for critical comments he had made about the government. In May 2020, the newspaper O Globo revealed a confidential attempt to turn the research institution into a museum.³⁴

On 31 March 2020, a group of people gathered in front of the army's headquarters in the capital Brasília to commemorate the 1964 coup, which led to a military dictatorship (1964–1985). The demonstration was attended by President Jair Bolsonaro, who referred to the date as “the day of liberty.” According to the National Truth Commission, hundreds of people had systematically been tortured, disappeared and extrajudicially executed at the time. Mainly due to the interpretation given to the 1979 Amnesty Law, impunity continued to prevail for the crimes in that era.³⁵

³³ Amnesty International, State of the World's Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 98, 99.

³⁴ Conrado Hübner Mendes and Others, Academic Freedom in Brazil: A Case Study on Recent Developments (Berlin: Global Public Policy Institute (GPPi) & Center for the Analysis of Liberty and Authoritarianism (Laut), September 2020), 21–22; “Nota da ANPUH-Brasil sobre a direção da fundação Casa de Rui Barbosa” (no place, no date [2020]); Katrin Kinzelbach, ed., Researching Academic Freedom: Guidelines and Sample Case Studies (Erlangen: FAU University Press, 2020), 93–94.

³⁵ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 94.

In September 2020, German company Volkswagen admitted that its representatives had cooperated with the dictatorship (1964–1985). The National Truth Commission had found in 2014 that company representatives had provided information about its workers to authorities, which might have resulted in illegal arrests, torture, and other abuses. As part of a settlement agreement with the Brazilian prosecutors, Volkswagen agreed to pay 36 million reais (approximately US$6.5 million) in compensation to victims and to fund efforts to identify the remains of victims and to educate the public about past abuses.³⁶

BULGARIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2002, 2006, 2009, 2012, 2015–2017, 2019–2020.

See North Macedonia.

BURKINA FASO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2004, 2005, 2013, 2015–2018.

On 13 April 2021, a military tribunal announced that former President Blaise Compaoré (1951–) and thirteen others were to face charges over the 1987 murder of former President Thomas Sankara (1949–1987), indicting them for “attack on state security, complicity in murder and concealment of corpse.” The trial was seen as a landmark moment in a 34-year quest for justice, led by the Sankara family and supported by many in the country [See also NCH Annual Reports 2001, 2016–2018].³⁷

³⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 115.

³⁷ “Burkina Faso: la France n’a pas encore livré toutes ses archives pour le procès Sankara,” RFI (20 October 2020); Emmanuel Akinwotu, “Burkina Faso ex-President Compaoré to Face Trial over Thomas Sankara Murder,” Guardian (13 April 2021); Noel Ebrin Brou, “Compaoré to Be Charged over Sankara Murder,” BBC News (14 April 2021).

BURUNDI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2015, 2017–2020.

Throughout 2020, the Commission vérité et réconciliation (CVR; Truth and Reconciliation Commission) – provided for in the 2000 Arusha peace accords and tasked with investigating ethnic violence in Burundi’s recent past – conducted highly publicized exhumations of mass graves connected to past atrocities. Exhumations were focused on graves linked to the 1972 massacres that primarily targeted Hutu. This focus combined with comments made by public officials was considered polarizing and seen as an attempt to impose a single narrative. The exhumations were carried out in a manner which jeopardized the preservation of valuable evidence and failed to ensure respectful storage of human remains. On 7 January 2021, the CVR presented to parliament an intermediary report focusing on the 1972 massacres. On 15 January 2021, the civil society platform Forum pour le renforcement de la société civile (FORSC; Forum for the Strengthening of Civil Society) criticized it as biased, saying that the CVR relied on selected testimonies, did not investigate archives of local administrations, and solely focused on the violence against Hutu population, failing to address violence against Tutsis and crises preceding the 1972 massacres in 1961, 1962, 1965, 1969, and 1971.”³⁸

The appointments of Prime Minister Alain Guillaume Bunyoni (1972–) and Minister for the Interior, Community Development and Public Security Gervais Ndirakobuca, both under international sanctions for their alleged role in the 2015 election violence, casted doubt over the new administration’s commitment to accountability and raised concerns about the possible interference with criminal investigations into past abuses.³⁹

³⁸ International Crisis Group, “Burundi: January 2021,” Crisis Watch (January 2021); Ephrem Rugiririza, “Commission vérité au Burundi: le rapport de la discorde,” Justiceinfo.net (4 March 2021); Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 106.

³⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 127.

CAMBODIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2018. 2020.

On 10 April 2021, the Culture Ministry criticized Irish artist Matt Loughrey after he altered photos of victims of the Khmer Rouge genocide (1975–1979) in a profile piece in Vice. Loughrey had colorized images of photos taken in the notorious Tuol Sleng prison; smiles were reportedly added to some faces. In the piece, Loughrey had said he had wanted to humanize the victims. The Culture Ministry retorted that altering the images manipulated historical sources and affected the dignity of the victims. Later, Vice removed the images for not meeting its editorial standards.⁴⁰

CAMEROON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2012–2014, 2016, 2020.

On 21 May 2019, the dismembered and beheaded body of history and geography teacher Wontai Vondou Olivier ([1987 or 1988]–2019) was found in a bag, his head dumped on the street in Mobile Nkwen, Bamenda (the capital of the Northwest Region). Olivier taught at three Government Bilingual High Schools (GBHS Nitop, GBHS Ntamulung, GBHS Bamendankwe) in Bamenda. A video filmed by the perpetrators, allegedly separatist Ambazonian fighters, and uploaded on social media showed how Olivier had been begging for his life and how he had been tortured. The perpetrators also told the Ambazonian interim-government that they had caught “the spy” and would cut off his head and dump it in Nkwen. Oliver was mistaken for a soldier with the Cameroonian military. In another post, however, suspected separatist fighters alleged that Cameroon troops killed Olivier to frame the rebels, a claim denied by commander General Robinson Agha. Schools – seen as organs of Francophone dominance by rebels – were among the worst hit in the uprising by English-speaking separatists. Hundreds of teachers had been killed, wounded, abducted for ransom, or had their houses torched. According to the United Nations, 81 percent of children were out of school across the North-West and South-West regions in 2019–2020.⁴¹

⁴⁰ “Cambodia Criticises Edited Photos of Khmer Rouge Victims,” BBC News (11 April 2021).

⁴¹ “Cameroon: History Teacher Killed, Dismembered in Bamenda by Ambazonian Fighters,” Journal du Cameroun (22 May 2019); Kiven Nsodzefe, “Cameroon: Anglophone Crisis: Government Opens Investigation To Trace Other Body Parts Of Beheaded Teacher In Bamenda,” Cameroon-Info.Net (22 May 2019); Moki Edwin Kindzeka, “Cameroon Teachers Protest Escalating Violence in Separatist Areas,” VOA News (27 May 2019); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 138.

CANADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000, 2002–2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2009, 2012–2020.

On 29 August 2020, activists in Montréal pulled down and decapitated a statue of Canada's first Prime Minister Sir John A. Macdonald (1815–1891; prime minister 1860–1890). Remembered for his nation-building policies, Macdonald also created the residential school system (see below) and sponsored a highly racist Indian Act in 1876. He was also accused of allowing famine and disease to kill many indigenous people and his government forced some First Nation communities to leave their traditional territories, withholding food until they did so.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau called the toppling of the statue an act of vandalism. In 2016, the Canadian Elementary School Teachers Association had voted in favor of taking the name Macdonald from schools. In June 2018, the Canadian Historical Association had taken Macdonald's name off its prize for most influential Canadian history book of the year. Macdonald's statue in Montréal had also been decapitated in 1992. In early August 2018, the city of Victoria, British Columbia, had decided to remove a statue of Macdonald, which had been frequently vandalized [See also NCH Annual Report 2019].⁴²

On 23 September 2020, the University of Ottawa suspended part-time art historian Verushka Lieutenant-Duval after a student complained that she had used the N-word in a class. Lieutenant-Duval apologized, explaining that she had used it during a discussion about groups who “re-appropriate” or reclaim words and phrases previously used to disparage or oppress. She also said that she was worried that the controversy had been blown out of proportion by people taking extreme positions. Lieutenant-Duval's name, phone number, and home address had been posted on social media, endangering her personal safety. On 20 October 2020, Quebec Premier François Legault suggested that the issue was about academic freedom and censorship.⁴³

On 20 November 2020, four historians and archivists – Robert Bothwell, John English, Paul Marsden, and Timothy Sayle – published an article in The Globe and Mail, criticizing the lack of access to the full records about the “1970 October Crisis,” when Quebec's independence movement, the Front de ⁴² Jennifer Ackerman, “The Statue Dilemma: Indigenous Research Week Tackles Commemoration of Historic Figures,” Regina Leader-Post (28 September 2018); Mark Wolfram, “The Past and Future of the Iconoclast,” Historical Dialogues (4 September 2018); “Canada Statue of John A. Macdonald Toppled by Activists in Montreal,” BBC News (30 August 2020); “Statue of Canada's First Prime Minister Toppled by Protesters,” Al Jazeera (30 August 2020); “Trudeau Condemns Toppling of Canada's First PM as 'Vandalism',” BBC News (31 August 2020).

⁴³ Amanda Pfeffer, “Ottawa Professor Apologizes for Using N-word, Regrets Growing Controversy,” CBC (21 October 2020).

libération du Québec, kidnappé un diplomate britannique et un ministre du Québec, tuant l'un d'eux. Suite aux kidnappements, le gouvernement canadien a utilisé la Loi sur les mesures de guerre et a déployé des troupes à Québec, arrêtant des centaines de personnes. Les auteurs ont écrit que les minutes du cabinet étaient devenues disponibles en 2000 mais que de nombreuses parties avaient été noyées en vertu de la Loi sur l'accès à l'information. L'organisme Canada Déclassifié a mis en ligne des documents déclassifiés liés à la force de tâche fédérale sur les kidnappements. Le principal organe de prise de décision pendant la crise était le comité du cabinet sur la sécurité et l'intelligence, qui recevait tous les briefings de la Gendarmerie royale du Canada (GRC), des Forces armées canadiennes, et du procureur général, ainsi que les briefs et les mémorandums officiels fournis aux ministres clés. Seulement quelques documents du comité ont été rendus publics. Dans le cas des dossiers de la GRC, transférés au Service de renseignement de la sécurité (SRS) en 1984, un nombre disproportionné de pages a été noyé. L'emplacement de nombreux dossiers sur la crise était inconnu après que la Commission McDonald les ait collectés en 1981 pour rendre compte des activités du Service de sécurité de la GRC. À l'occasion du 50^e anniversaire de la crise d'octobre 1970, en octobre 2020, le Bloc québécois a présenté une résolution exigeant des excuses en parlement, mais elle a été déclinée.⁴⁴

En décembre 2020, l'Institut Yellowhead, un centre de recherche dirigé par une Première Nation, a découvert que le gouvernement et l'Église catholique n'ont mis en œuvre que huit des 94 recommandations de la Commission de vérité et de réconciliation (CVR). La CVR a été créée en 2008 pour enquêter sur la façon dont, entre les années 1870 et 1996, le gouvernement a enlevé environ 150 000 enfants autochtones de leurs foyers et les a envoyés dans des écoles d'église, ce que la CVR a décrit comme une « culture de génocide » visant les Autochtones. Ces écoles faisaient partie d'un réseau transnational créé pour assimiler de force les enfants autochtones en les éloignant de leurs foyers et communautés, et en leur interdisant de parler leur langue maternelle ou de pratiquer leurs coutumes. Les abus physiques, émotionnels et sexuels étaient répandus dans ces institutions, ainsi que le travail forcé. La CVR a calculé qu'au moins 3 201 enfants des écoles résidentielles étaient morts, bien que le total réel puisse être inconnu en raison de décès non enregistrés et de dossiers détruits.

Le 27 mai 2021, une tombe collective contenant les restes de 215 enfants autochtones a été découverte sur les terres d'une ancienne école résidentielle près de la ville de Kamloops, en Colombie-Britannique. L'école résidentielle indienne de Kamloops a été établie en 1890 sous la direction de l'Église catholique romaine et a fermé ses portes en 1978. Des découvertes similaires ont été faites dans d'autres écoles résidentielles (l'école indienne de Marieval, province du Saskatchewan; la mission de St. Eugene, Cranbrook, Colombie-Britannique; l'école industrielle de Kuper Island, Île de Penelakut, Colombie-Britannique) en juin et juillet 2021. Le 15 juillet 2021, la Première Nation Tk'emlups te Secwepemc a publié son premier rapport complet sur la découverte des 215

⁴⁴ Robert Bothwell, John English, Paul Marsden, Timothy Sayle, « October Surprise: Lack of Access to Historic Documents Leaves Canadians in the Dark about the FLQ Crisis, » Globe and Mail (20 novembre 2020).

unmarked graves at Kamloops. Stewart Phillip, president of the Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs, and Kúkpi7 (chief) Rosanne Casimir called on the government to release attendance records to begin the process of identifying potential victims and on the Catholic church to release all its records.⁴⁵

On 6 June 2021, a group of people protesting at Ryerson University in Toronto over the discovery of the Kamloops mass graves (see above), toppled the statue of Egerton Ryerson (1803–1882), who was deemed one of the architects of the country’s residential school system. Leading up to the protest, calls to change the university’s name and remove the statue had grown, and the statue had been vandalized.⁴⁶

On 1 July 2021, Canada Day (the anniversary of the founding of the Canadian Confederation in 1867), a group of people, wearing orange shirt to honor the Indigenous children who were sent to residential schools, left a sign that read “we were children once. Bring them home” at a statue of Queen Victoria (1819–1901) in Winnipeg. The group then toppled the statue, as well as a smaller statue of Queen Elizabeth II (1926–). Both royals were seen as representatives of the country’s colonial history. The British Crown had negotiated treaties with indigenous First Nations in Canada and the government had enacted its residential schools policy during Queen Victoria’s reign.⁴⁷

See also Myanmar, Poland, United Kingdom.

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2009, 2011–2012, 2014–2020.

In September 2020, the Special Criminal Court, a United Nations-backed hybrid court mandated to investigate and prosecute crimes under international law and other serious human rights violations committed since 2003, confirmed that ten cases were under investigation. At least 21 people were arrested as a result of investigations in 2019 and 2020 and were in pre-trial detention at the end of 2020.

⁴⁵ Tracey Lindeman, “Canada: Remains of 215 Children Found at Indigenous Residential School Site,” Guardian (28 May 2021); “Canada Mourns as Remains of 215 Children Found at Indigenous School,” BBC News (30 May 2021); “Canada: Hundreds More Unmarked Graves Found at Former Indigenous School,” Guardian (24 June 2021); Leyland Cecco, “Canada Discovers 751 Unmarked Graves at Former Residential School,” Guardian (24 June 2021); Hillary Beaumont and Jillian Kestler-D’Amours, “The Path to Accountability for Canada’s Residential School Graves,” Al Jazeera (27 June 2021); Leyland Cecco, “Canada: At Least 160 More Unmarked Graves Found in British Columbia,” Guardian (13 July 2021); Leyland Cecco, “First Nation Calls for Release of School Records to Identify Residential Victims,” Guardian (15 July 2021).

⁴⁶ “Egerton Ryerson Statue Toppled at Canada Indigenous School Protest,” BBC (7 June 2021).

⁴⁷ Leyland Cecco, “Queen Victoria Statue Toppled in Canada amid Anger at Deaths of Indigenous Children,” Guardian (2 July 2021); “Statues of Queen Victoria and Queen Elizabeth II Torn Down in Canada,” BBC News (2 July 2021).

However, proceedings lacked transparency and the identities of those arrested were not publicly disclosed. There were also delays in the recruitment of international judges and the establishment of the Court's legal aid system.

The trial of Alfred Yekatom (1975–) and Patrice-Edouard Ngaïssona, Anti-Balaka leaders, began at the International Criminal Court (ICC) in February 2021. They were arrested for war crimes and crimes against humanity and transferred to The Hague in 2018 and 2019 respectively. On 24 January 2021, Mahamat Said Abdel Kani, accused of war crimes and crimes against humanity committed as a Seleka commander in Bangui in 2013, was flown to the ICC.

In February 2020, the criminal court of Bangui convicted five Anti-Balaka leaders for war crimes and crimes against humanity in relation to the 2017 attack in Bangassou, in which at least 62 civilians and ten UN peacekeepers were killed. It was the first conviction for crimes under international law since the conflict started in 2003. However, serious concerns arose during the trial over the rights of the defendants and protection of victims and witnesses.⁴⁸

CHAD

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2015–2016.

See France.

CHILE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2020.

During 2020, Chilean courts continued to prosecute former police and military officers responsible for human rights abuses during Augusto Pinochet's dictatorship (1973–1990). On 6 March 2020, a Chilean court convicted 31 former agents for their roles in the 1974 disappearances of moviemakers Carmen Bueno Cifuentes and Jorge Muller Silva during the security forces' Operación Colombo, in which they forcibly disappeared 119 political prisoners. In September 2020, the House of Representatives passed a bill that would criminalize protected speech of people who "justify," "approve of," or "deny" the human rights violations committed during the dictatorship, punishing them with up to three years in prison.⁴⁹

⁴⁸ "Yekatom and Ngaïssona Case," International Criminal Court; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 114; "Central African Republic: First Seleka Suspect in ICC Custody," Eurasia Review (28 January 2021).

Chile maintained a 50-year secrecy order that sealed from the public testimony provided by victims before the National Commission on Political Imprisonment and Torture from November 2003 to May 2004. The testimony revealed places of detention and torture methods. Former President Michelle Bachelet's administration (2014–2018) submitted a bill to lift the secrecy order in 2017. In late 2020, the order had been set aside in approximately 15 cases, allowing access to files with testimonies, photographs, and press releases.⁵⁰

In January 2020, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights held a public hearing on Judge Daniel Urrutia Laubreaux's case. The judge had brought his case to the Inter-American Commission of Human Rights in 2005, arguing that the Supreme Court had violated his right to freedom of speech when it sanctioned him for criticizing in an academic paper the Court's actions during the Chilean military regime (1973–1990).⁵¹

On [1 October] 2020, the appeals court confirmed the indictment against retired military officers Eduardo Jara Hallad (director of Department II of Counterintelligence of the Military Intelligence Section DINE), Mercedes del Carmen Rojas Kuschevich (its former chief archivist), and General Carlos Patricio Chacón Guerrero for destruction in the Intelligence School of the Chilean army in 2000–2001 of microfilmed archives of the Central Nacional de Informaciones (CNI; National Information Center) covering the period 1980–1982 [See also NCH Annual Report 2020].⁵²

On 24 November 2020, the criminal complaint against Alejandra Araya, history professor, director of the Archivo Central Andrés Bello (Andrés Bello Central Archive) at the University of Chile and full professor of human rights at the University of Chile, was dismissed due to lack of evidence [See also NCH Annual Report 2020].⁵³

See also Israel.

⁴⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 155, 156, 159.

⁵⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 155, 156.

⁵¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 160.

⁵² Nicolás Díaz, "Justicia confirma procesamiento de oficiales \(r\) del Ejército por destrucción de archivos de la CNI." Biobio Chile (1 October 2020).

⁵³ Archives and Human Rights: News from the Section on Archives and Human Rights (February 2021), 1.

CHINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2020.

Censorship and surveillance extended beyond national borders during 2020. Complying with strict domestic censorship standards, Chinese tech firms operating outside of the country blocked and censored content deemed to be “politically sensitive,” including topics relating to ethnic minorities, political unrest, and criticism of the government. TikTok, a video-sharing app, deleted numerous videos shared by Uyghurs living abroad to draw attention to their missing relatives. Leaked internal documents showed that the platform had instructed moderators to censor videos featuring “politically sensitive” topics, such as Falun Gong or the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre. LinkedIn also blocked profiles from being viewed inside the country if they mentioned “politically sensitive topics” such as the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre, including references to academic study.

On 11 June 2020, the online meeting platform Zoom confirmed that it ended at least four Zoom video meetings commemorating the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre or dealing with religious and/or political activities, and terminated the host accounts associated with those meetings – in Hong Kong and the United States – after the Chinese government had informed it that the gatherings were illegal in China. The victims included Wang Dan and Zhou Fengsuo, two of the student leaders in 1989 [See for Wang Dan also NCH Annual Reports 1995–1998, 2000, 2009, 2014]. Zoom said the accounts had been reinstated. In December 2020, United States Justice Department prosecutors reported that the China-based executive, Jin Xinjiang (aka Julien Jin) ([1981]–), worked as Zoom’s primary liaison with Chinese law enforcement and intelligence services, sharing user information and terminating video calls at the Chinese government’s request. Zoom dismissed Jin for violating its policies. He was charged with “conspiracy to commit interstate harassment and unlawful conspiracy to transfer a means of identification.” Living in China, Jin faced up to ten years in prison [See also NCH Annual Report 2020].⁵⁴

In March 2017, Shen Zhihua ([1950–]), reputedly China’s foremost historian of the Cold War and specialist of the Korean War (1950–1953), criticized China’s official policy toward North Korea at a university lecture in Dalian. He declared, inter alia: “Judging by the current situation, North Korea is ⁵⁴ Elizabeth Redden, “Scholars Raise Concerns about Using Zoom to Teach about China,” Inside HigherEd (12 June 2020); Ellen Nakashima & Drew Harwell, “Federal Prosecutors Accuse Zoom Executive of Working with Chinese Government to Surveil Users and Suppress Video Calls,” Seattle Times / Washington Post (18 December 2020); “US Charges Ex-Zoom Employee with Shutting Down Tiananmen Square Events,” BBC News (19 December 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 174; Amnesty International, State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 122-123; Helen Davidson, “LinkedIn Blocks Profiles from View in China if Sensitive Topics Mentioned,” Guardian (18 June 2021).

China's latent enemy and South Korea could be China's friend." His views and the debate about them were not reported in the state news media. But his speech remained on the website of the Center for Cold War International History Studies at East China Normal University in Shanghai, where Shen worked. He restated his views in lectures in Shanghai and, in mid-April 2017, in Xian. The son of Chinese Communist Party (CCP) officials, Shen previously used his earnings from gold trafficking business to pay for dredging archives in Russia, after serving a prison term (1983–May 1984) on a (reportedly groundless) charge of leaking state secrets.

In November 2020, Shen delivered a live-streamed speech on the rise and fall of the USSR at an academic seminar at Capital Normal University in Beijing, but an hour into the lecture, the feed was suddenly cut off. In a statement, the university blamed a malicious tip-off from students who acted as classroom informants to report "inappropriate speech" of teachers when they make statements allegedly challenging the CCP's or President Xi Jinping's official narratives. Ironically, Shen's lecture was the seventh in a "Four Histories" series at the Capital Normal University History Institute intended to carry out the spirit of Xi's speech on the study of the "Four Histories" (the history of the party, the history of the People's Republic of China, the history of reform and opening up, and the history of the development of socialism).⁵⁵

In late May 2019, Yuan Keqin, a Chinese professor of East Asian political history at Hokkaido University of Education (HUE), Japan, traveled to China to attend his mother's funeral. Days later, authorities arrested him and his wife under unknown circumstances. Authorities released her on the condition that she travel to Japan, retrieve Yuan's laptop and academic materials, and return to China with them. In March 2020, the Foreign Ministry stated that Yuan was "suspected of espionage and had been investigated by the national security authority in accordance with law," reported that he had "made a full confession," and that his case was transferred to the prosecutor. The espionage charge was widely regarded as spurious.⁵⁶

On 19 April 2020, Beijing police detained Chen Mei and Cai Wei for archiving censored news articles, interviews, and personal accounts related to the outbreak of the Covid-19 epidemic in Wuhan. They remained out of contact with their families. Chen and Cai were involved with Terminus2049, an online project working to archive articles that had been removed from mainstream media outlets and social media by state censorship. After the outbreak of the Covid-19 epidemic, numerous articles relating to the virus were censored.⁵⁷

⁵⁵ Chris Buckley, "Criticism of Beijing's North Korea Policy Comes From Unlikely Place: China," New York Times (18 April 2017); "Shen Zhihua," The China Story (retrieved 19 April 2017); Dahai Han, "Malicious Tip-Offs Stifle Academic Freedom in China, Analysts Say," VOA News (20 November 2020).

⁵⁶ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2020 (New York: SAR, 2020), 84.

In September 2020, the film The Eight Hundred premiered. The movie had been withdrawn from the Shanghai International Film Festival in June 2019, because it had used “historical debris to cover up the actual truth of history,” according to a published conference report. The cancellation came amid a broadening political crackdown on cultural works that were not sufficiently in tune with Xi Jinping’s ideology [See also NCH Annual Report 2020]. It remained unclear what was changed for the September premier.⁵⁸

On 16 December 2020, writer and photographer Du Bin was detained for “picking quarrels and provoking trouble,” ahead of the launch on 1 January 2021 of his book analyzing early Soviet Communism – indicating that historical inquiry that touches indirectly on the Chinese Communist Party’s governance may be subject to a governmental “veto” in the form of criminal charges. Authorities also questioned Du about his previous books, before eventually releasing him conditionally after 37 days. Du had been detained in 2013 after releasing a documentary on forced labor.⁵⁹

On 9 April 2021, the Cyberspace Administration of China launched a hotline to report online comments that defamed the ruling Chinese Communist Party (CCP) and its history, vowing to crack down on “historical nihilists” ahead of the Party’s 100th anniversary in July 2021. The tip line allowed people to report fellow netizens who “distorted” CCP history, attacked its leadership and policies, defamed national heroes and “denied the excellence of advanced socialist culture” online. “Historical nihilism” was a phrase used in China to describe public doubt and skepticism over the CCP’s description of past events. The 2018 law [See NCH Annual Report 2018] stipulated that people who “insulted, slandered, or infringed upon” the memory of China’s national heroes and martyrs faced prison time of up to three years. In early April, authorities in Jiangsu province detained a 19-year-old man after making “insulting” comments online about Japan’s 1937 occupation of Nanjing.⁶⁰

⁵⁷ “COVID-19 Activist Faces Five Years in Prison,” Amnesty International (18 September 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 167; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 122.

⁵⁸ Steven Lee Meyers, “Patriotic Movie Apparently Falls Afoul of China’s Censors,” New York Times (26 June 2019); Steve Rose, “The Eight Hundred: How China’s Blockbusters Became a New Political Battleground,” Guardian (18 September 2020).

⁵⁹ PEN America, Freedom to Write Index 2020 (Washington: PEN, 2021).

⁶⁰ Cate Cadell, “China Launches Hotline for Netizens to Report ‘Illegal’ History Comments,” Reuters (11 April 2021).

In early May 2021, shares in food delivery giant Meituan fell sharply after its chief executive, Wang Xing, shared a 1,000-year-old poem, The Book Burning Pit by Zhang Jie (fl. 877), on the Fanfou social media platform. This Tang dynasty poem was a sarcastic criticism of the Emperor Qin Shi Huang (259 BCE–210 BCE), infamous for killing dissenting Confucian scholars and burning their books. It was interpreted as veiled criticism of President Xi Jinping’s government, comparing the current suppression of dissent with the emperor’s tyrannical rule. On 9 May 2021, Wang deleted the post, saying that the poem was a reference to his company’s competitors.⁶¹

On 4 June 2021, the social media account for the popular Chinese e-commerce app Xiaohongshu was blocked after it had issued a post on the anniversary of the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre. It had posted “Tell me loudly: what’s the date today?” on microblogging platform Weibo. The post to its fourteen million followers was swiftly deleted and the Weibo page was replaced by a message saying that it was investigated for violations of laws and regulations. It was unclear whether the post was intended to reference the massacre. Xiaohongshu means Little Red Book, the same name as Mao Zedong’s book of quotations.⁶²

On 28 June 2021, an art performance titled The Great Journey was staged at the Bird’s Nest stadium in Beijing, where performers put on set-pieces detailing the history of the Chinese Communist Party. However, significant events such as the Cultural Revolution purges (1966–1976), the Tiananmen Square protests (1989), and the pro-democracy protests in Hong Kong (2014–) were reportedly missing.⁶³

Hong-Kong

Following the introduction of the national security law on 30 June 2020, the book project Hong Kong on the Frontline 1997–2020, written by Kent Ewing, columnist at the newspaper Hong Kong Free Press was annulled on 19 September 2020 by its publisher FormAsia Books despite the fact that lawyers had gone over the proofs to ensure compliance with the law. Not able to find a designer willing to be associated with the project, a printer willing to print it, and bookstores willing to sell it, the publisher dropped the project.⁶⁴

⁶¹ “Meituan: China Tech Giant’s Shares Slide over Ancient Poem,” BBC News (11 May 2021).

⁶² “Xiaohongshu Social Media Account Blocked after Tiananmen Post,” BBC News (7 June 2021).

⁶³ “CCP 100: Xi Warns China Will not Be ‘Oppressed’ in Anniversary Speech,” BBC News (1 July 2021).

⁶⁴ Kent Ewing, “My Ill-Fated Book Deal Reveals Hong Kong Self-Censorship under the Security Law,” Hong Kong Free Press (15 December 2020).

In early November 2020, a teacher at Ho Lap primary school was deregistered for giving a factually incorrect account of the Sino-British Opium War (1839–1842). He had told students in an online class that Britain waged the war in an attempt to destroy opium in China’s territories, while the British instead tried to sell massive amounts of opium in China whereas Qing dynasty officials tried to ban it. The teacher apologized for the mistake and recorded a correction on the video. On 6 October, Chief Executive Carrie Lam said that a small fraction of teachers was using their teaching responsibilities to “convey wrong messages to promote misunderstanding about the nation.”⁶⁵

On 19 November 2020, students who organized an unauthorized demonstration and procession in commemoration of the November 2019 student protests and campus sieges at the Chinese University of Hong Kong (CUHK) and Hong Kong Polytechnic University (PolyU), were threatened with prosecution under the new national security law. CUHK objected to a poster posted online by student groups advertising an exhibition of the 2019 events, saying that the “exhibition’s host has presented a biased portrayal of the [2019] incident.” The student union of CUHK New Asia College, one of the event’s organizers responded that the poster’s protest scenes were taken from major news media and merely depicted the “historical truth.” PolyU banned the screening on campus of two documentary films about the 2019 siege. PolyU student union member Joe Choi reacted saying that the films were “documentaries or histories of the siege of PolyU a year ago. We cannot let the government or the schools try to wipe out our history.” PolyU also objected to union plans for a front-page ad in the anti-government newspaper Apple Daily to commemorate the anniversary of the 2019 two-week campus siege.⁶⁶

On 25 January 2021, the University of Science and Technology (HKUST) suspended student union leaders Donald Mak Ka-chun and Lo Kai-ho for a semester for organizing a memorial event on campus amid the Covid-19 pandemic and refusing to remove protest-related materials from notice boards. They were also warned that they could be expelled if any further violations occurred. HKUST said that the union’s May 2020 memorial event – marking the six-month anniversary of computer science student Alex Chow Tsz-lok falling to his death in a car park near the site of a protest – posed public health concerns and violated management’s instruction to not hold the event.⁶⁷

⁶⁵ Rachel Wong, “Hong Kong Teacher Struck Off for Allegedly Promoting Independence as Lam Vows More Action against ‘Bad Apples’,” Hong Kong Free Press (6 October 2020); Rachel Wong, “Second Hong Kong Teacher Sacked, This Time for Opium War Blunder as Lawmaker Says Punishment too Harsh,” Hong Kong Free Press (13 November 2020).

⁶⁶ Mimi Leung & Yojana Sharma, “Police Start ‘National Security’ Probe of Campus Protest,” University World News (19 November 2020).

⁶⁷ Chan Ho-him, “Hong Kong University Suspends Student Leaders over Banned Memorial for Undergraduate Who Fell to His Death near Site of Protest,” South China Morning Post (25 January 2021); Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project, Factsheet (25 January 2021).

In 2021, authorities for the second year banned a 4 June vigil in Victoria Park commemorating the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre. Police again objected to the event because of social distancing restrictions, prohibiting large gatherings. They also warned that the new national security law could be wielded against Tiananmen mourners. On 6 May 2021, pro-democracy activist and student Joshua Wong [See also NCH Annual Reports 2017, 2020] was sentenced to ten months' imprisonment for participating in the 4 June 2020 vigil. On 30 April 2021, Wong had pleaded guilty for participating in the vigil. Three others were also sentenced. Already in August 2020, 25 Hong Kong democracy activists, including Wong, media tycoon Jimmy Lai and leaders of the Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements of China, had been charged with "knowingly taking part in an unauthorized assembly." One of the organizers of the 2020 vigil was Mak Hoi-wah ([1951]–), chairman of the managing committee of a museum dedicated to the 4 June 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre (see below). Lee Cheuk-yan, chairman of the Alliance, was also charged with organizing the assembly.

On 31 May 2021, police arrested Alexandra Wong on suspicion of taking part in an unlawful assembly, after she staged a lone demonstration over the prohibition of the vigil. She had chanted slogans in a park holding a sign that read "32, June 4, Tiananmen lament" (32 meaning the thirty-second anniversary of the massacre) and a yellow umbrella, a symbol of Hong Kong's 2014 democracy movement, after which she walked toward Beijing's liaison office in Hong Kong.

On 2 June 2021, the operators of the 4 June Museum closed its doors, hours after officials from the Food and Environmental Hygiene department accused it of operating as a place of public entertainment without the required licenses. Three days before, the museum had started a public exhibition commemorating the 1989 Tiananmen Massacre. Since the promulgation on 30 June 2020 of the national security law criminalizing a broad spectrum of critical speech in Hong Kong, the only museum in the world dedicated to the 4 June 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre had embarked on a multi-lingual digitization and online archive program in order to preserve the museum's knowledge in case of confiscation and shutdown. These efforts were part of a wider movement in Hong Kong, reportedly initiated by journalism professor at the University of Hong Kong Fu King-wa to chronicle events and preserve history that the Chinese Communist Party would rather see expunged, including so-called Lennon Walls (public spaces where protesters wrote or pasted political messages). Established in 2012 by the Hong Kong Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements of China, the museum had been vandalized on a number of occasions. It had to move out of its last long-term home, in Tsim Sha Tsui, after the building's managers sued it for violating land-use regulations (ostensibly because the property was supposed to be an office space). Just days before it was scheduled to re-open in the Mong Kok area of Kowloon, in April 2020, a group of vandals broke into the venue and poured salt water into the electrical sockets and switch boxes.

On 4 June 2021, Hong Kong police arrested barrister and human rights activist Chow Hang Tung ([1984]–) for promoting unauthorized assembly. Chow was the vice chairwoman of the Hong Kong

Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movement in China which organized annual vigils for victims of the massacre. She continued to call on residents to commemorate the anniversary in their own ways. Chow had posted on Facebook the message “Turn on the lights wherever you are – whether on your phone, candles or electronic candles.” Pro-Beijing political figures and media put more pressure on the government to ban the Alliance on the grounds that the call for an end to one-party dictatorship in its manifesto was subversive.⁶⁸

Inner Mongolia

On 1 September 2020, authorities in Inner Mongolia issued a directive to reduce teaching in the Mongolian language in favor of Mandarin Chinese. Three core subjects in Inner Mongolian primary and secondary schools would be gradually taught in Mandarin: politics, history, and language and literature. If fully implemented, it would amount to eliminating the core of the Mongolian language teaching curriculum within the education system by 2022. The changes mirrored those already made in Xinjiang in 2017 and Tibet in 2018.

In the weekend before 1 September and until mid-September, crowds of students and parents across several cities in Inner Mongolia were seen protesting the change. Eight Mongols committed suicide, including a government official, a primary school principal, teachers, parents and a student. The protests were heavily repressed. Temtsiltu Shobtsood, chairman of the Inner Mongolian People’s Party and exile in Germany, said that the imposition of Mandarin and the majority Han Chinese culture on minorities in Inner Mongolia was a form of “cultural genocide.”⁶⁹

⁶⁸ “Hong Kong Activists Charged Over Traditional Tiananmen Vigil,” The Guardian (7 August 2020); Eric Cheung, “Control, Alter, Delete: Hong Kong Activists and Academics Are Hurrying to Digitize Historical Records and Artifacts under Threat from Creeping Censorship,” Rest of World (26 October 2020); Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 124; Helen Davidson, “Hong Kong Court Jails Three on Riot Charges despite No Evidence of Rioting,” Guardian (6 May 2021); “Hong Kong: Joshua Wong Jailed over Banned Tiananmen Vigil,” BBC News (6 May 2021); “Hong Kong’s ‘Grandma Wong’ Arrested for Solo Tiananmen Protest,” Guardian (31 May 2021); Kenji Kawase, “Hong Kong’s Tiananmen Museum Forced to Close ahead of Anniversary,” Nikkei Asia (2 June 2021); “Hong Kong’s Tiananmen Museum Shuts Down amid Investigation,” Independent (2 June 2021); Chris Yeung, “Hong Kong Will Be Dark on the Anniversary of the Massacre this 4 June as the National Security Law Bites,” Index on Censorship (3 June 2021); Helen Davidson, “Hong Kong Vigil Leader Arrested as 7,000 Police Enforce Ban on Tiananmen Anniversary Protests,” Guardian (4 June 2021); “Tiananmen: Hong Kong Vigil Organiser Arrested on 32nd Anniversary,” BBC News (4 June 2021).

⁶⁹ Helen Davidson, “Inner Mongolia Protests at China’s Plans to Bring in Mandarin-only Lessons,” Guardian (1 September 2020); “Rare Rallies in China over Mongolian Language Curb,” BBC News (1 September 2020); Leen Vervaeke, “Uitzonderlijk groot protest in Binnen-Mongolië tegen ‘verchinezing’ onderwijs, overheid reageert keihard,” De Volkskrant (2 September 2020); Uradyn Bulag, “Dying for the Mother Tongue,” Index on Censorship, 49 no. 4 (2020), 49–51; Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 161.

Xinjiang

Among the historians and related professionals imprisoned since 2015 were the following:

- On 1 August 2015, teacher Aminan Momixi ([1964]–) was detained along with 37 students with whom she was studying the Koran in her home. She was charged with “illegally possessing religious materials and subversive historical information.”⁷⁰
- In 2016, Ayshem Ehmet, a Uyghur writer, former editor of Qumul Gazette and chief editor of the magazine Qumul Literature, was sentenced to 18 years in prison. This occurred after his historical novel Immortal Traces (1987), depicting Uyghur peasant resistance to their harsh treatment under the Qing dynasty (1644–1911), was banned in 2016.⁷¹
- In 2016, Ablajan Memet (male), a history teacher at Peyzawat No.1 High School in Kashgar, was arrested. He had graduated from the history department of Xinjiang University.⁷²
- In April 2016, Uyghur writer, journalist, webmaster, and government official Omerjan Hasan (Hesen) (pen name: Omerjan Hasan Bozqir) (1965–) was arrested. Aksu prefecture’s Commission for Discipline Inspection announced on its website that Hasan had been expelled from the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) and was under investigation for writing essays attacking the CCP and government’s ethnic or religious policies in Xinjiang, distorting the history of Xinjiang, instigating ethnic hatred, and opposing China’s unity or territorial integrity. His whereabouts were unknown. Hasan, along with fellow web editor Tursun Memet Marshal, was reportedly sentenced to 15 years’ imprisonment the same year. He had published books and articles aimed at the promotion of equal civil and political rights for Uyghurs in China. He also owned and edited a Uyghur-language website and discussion forum “Bozqir” which was blocked shortly after his arrest.⁷³
- In October 2016, writer, educator, and historical researcher Yalqun [Yolqan] Rozi ([1965]–) was arrested without charge and held in an undisclosed location until he was formally arrested on sedition charges (“inciting splittism” or “incitement subversion of state power”) on 30 December 2016. On 3 January 2018, he was reportedly convicted of “inciting subversion of state power” and sentenced to 15 years’ imprisonment. Rozi had published several books, articles of literary criticism, and research papers. Between 2001 and 2015, while cultivating ties with state officials, ⁷⁰ Human Rights in China, “Ethnic Minorities in Custody” (no date); “Hu Jintao: Let Your People Go,” USCIRF (20 January 2011); “Xinjiang Authorities Detain More Than 40 for Possessing ‘Illegal Religious Materials’,” CECC (18 January 2006).

⁷¹ Uyghur Yardem, “Detained & Imprisoned Literary Artists”; Uyghur Human Rights Project, Submission to the UN Universal Periodic Review People’s Republic of China (Washington: Uyghur Human Rights Project, 2018), 3.

⁷² “List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present” (Last up-dated by Abduweli Ayup on 13 November 2020).

⁷³ PEN International, Case List 2018 (London: PEN, 2019), 62–63; International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 63.

he had served on the state-endorsed textbook compiling committee of Xinjiang Education Press. It is thought that the charges stemmed from concerns around the ideology presented in the literature textbooks (covering classic poems and folk tales) produced by him.⁷⁴

- In 2017, Reyhan Hamut (female), a history teacher at middle school no. 1 in Qizilsu prefecture with a master's degree in journalism from Xinjiang University, was reportedly detained in a concentration camp.⁷⁵
- On 10 March 2017, historian Omerjan (Ömerjan) Nuri (1968–) was arrested. In 1986, he embarked on a four-year history course at the Northeastern Pedagogical University, Changchun, and in 1992 became a history teacher at the Hotan [Khotan, Hetian] Pedagogical Institute. In the 2000s, he received a master's degree in history in Beijing. He went to Turkey in 2006 to obtain a PhD from the Faculty of Language, History and Geography of Ankara University, after which he returned.⁷⁶
- In April 2017, musician Abdurehim Heyit (1964–), a specialist of the dutar (traditional lute) and member of the Xinjiang Song and Dance Troupe who wrote many songs reflecting on Uyghur history and culture, was arrested and held without formal charge in Urumchi. The poet who wrote the lyrics, Abdurehim Abdulla, was arrested at the same time. Their arrest was most likely linked to the song “Atilar” (Forefathers). The song, which had previously been cleared by government censors, recalled past sacrifices made by the forefathers and appealed to younger generations to respect them. Due to the phrase “jenglerde shehit” (martyrs of war), however, it was interpreted as encouraging jihad and radicalism. Under the crackdown in Xinjiang, expressions of ethnic pride – even those previously approved by state censors – were conflated with ethnic separatism and criminalized as Islamic extremism. Heyit was reportedly sentenced to eight years' imprisonment.⁷⁷
- In May 2017, Uyghur historian Iminjan Seydin [Eminjan Saidin] ([1965]–) was arrested by the Public Security Bureau and imprisoned. Seydin had begun teaching courses on Chinese history at the Xinjiang Islamic Institute in Urumqi in 1988 upon graduating from Xinjiang University, and in 2012 formed the Imin Publishing House. He taught secular courses on revolutionary history, joined several government-sponsored hajj pilgrimages to Mecca, and in early 2017 was sent to Kokterek village, Guma (Pishan) county, Hotan prefecture, to join a work group with the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region (XUAR) Bureau of Religious Affairs. He was called back and then arrested. In May 2019, a closed trial was held at which a book entitled The Science of Rhetoric (aka Arabic

⁷⁴ PEN International, Case List 2018 (London: PEN, 2019), 63; Dake Kang, “Correction: China-Xinjiang-Banished Textbooks Story,” AP (4 September 2019); Christina Shepherd, “Fear and Oppression in Xinjiang: China's War on Uighur Culture,” Financial Times (12 September 2019); International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 63–64.

⁷⁵ Uyghur Yardem, “Detained & Imprisoned \(Education\).”

⁷⁶ Uyghur Yardem, “Detained & Imprisoned \(Education\)”; “Enqere uniwersitetining oqughuchisi ömerjan nuri tutqun qilini ghan,” Radio Free Asia (14 December 2018).

⁷⁷ Rachel Harris & Aziz Isa Elkun, “‘Uyghur Dutar King’ Detained in China,” Freemuse (1 November 2017); Kurban Niyaz, “Prominent Uyghur Musician Arrested amid Ideological Purge in Xinjiang,” Radio Free Asia (2 November 2017).

Grammar) (2014) – published by the Imin Publishing House and containing some references to Islam – was reportedly given as evidence. A document, entitled “Notice on the Censuring of Iminjan Seydin” and issued by the Xinjiang Islamic Institute in November 2019, reportedly mentioned that in February 2019 Urumqi’s Tengritagh (Tianshan) District Court found Seydin guilty of “inciting extremism” and sentenced him to fifteen years in prison, five years’ deprivation of political rights, and a fine of 500,000 yuan (U.S. $71,000), although it cited no evidence of his crimes. In its notice, the institute also announced that it ended Seydin’s employment contract after he was detained and placed in a camp. In early May 2020, Seydin suddenly reappeared and praised the government in a video published by a state-run English language newspaper. His comments in the video appeared to have been scripted in an attempt to discredit his daughter’s public testimony about his arbitrary detention.⁷⁸

- At the end of 2017, Erkin Tursun, a history teacher by education, was detained. Tursun had graduated from the history faculty at Xinjiang University, hosted a show on Ili Television, and opened a school of music, arts, dance, and language for Uyghur children. Later, he directed a movie about the social problems facing Uyghurs, such as drug use and high divorce rates. In 2002 or 2003, he had gone to Japan on a cultural exchange program, traveling on a diplomatic passport. His wife, mathematics teacher Gulnar Telet, was also detained. In August 2018, their son Alfred, living in the United States, learned that Erkin Tursun received a prison sentence of between 9 and 11 years on an unknown charge and might be held in Xinyuan prison near Kanas.⁷⁹
- On or around 12 December 2017, Rahile Dawut ([1966]–), an anthropologist and ethnographer who studied Uyghur traditions and folklore, associate professor in the Human Science Institute and founder of the Minorities Folklore Research Center of Xinjiang University, Urumqi, and Gheyretjan Osman ([1958]–), a history and literature professor at the same university, disappeared together with three other academics after they had been called “the leading figures in Uyghur ideology” at Xinjiang University. Uyghur academics with foreign links and specializing in Uyghur Muslim culture, language, or religion were particularly targeted in the crackdown on the Uyghur Muslim population of Xinjiang, which began in April 2017 as a campaign to clamp down on religious extremism, separatism, and terrorism, but had since broadened in scope to include anyone who was critical. The government purged so-called “two-faced” Uyghur teachers, in particular those who paid lip service to the Chinese Communist Party line but were suspected of secretly resisting the hardline policies. Before 2017, Dawut's work was welcomed by Chinese officials: she had received grants and support from the Ministry of Culture. She had earned an international reputation as an expert on Uyghur shrines, folklore, music, and crafts neglected by previous generations of scholars. Osman was the author of a Critique of Uyghur Historical Culture. On 2 July 2021 it was confirmed that Dawut was imprisoned.⁸⁰

⁷⁸ Jilil Kashgary (with Elise Anderson and Joshua Lipos), “Prominent Uyghur Historian Confirmed Jailed in Xinjiang Over Published Book,” Radio Free Asia (11 December 2019; updated 6 January 2020); Aysha Khan, “A Daughter’s Duty: From Boston, a Uighur Woman Champions Her Father’s Release in China,” Religion News Service (13 February 2020); International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 62; PEN America, Freedom to Write Index 2019 (Washington: PEN America, 2020), 14; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 120.

⁷⁹ Uyghur Human Rights Project, Detained and Disappeared: Intellectuals Under Assault in the Uyghur Homeland (Washington: UHRP, October 2019), 13–14.

- In January 2018, Abdukerim Rahman (1941–2020), known as the father of folklore studies and a professor at Xinjiang University (1964–2011) in Urumqi, was arrested and taken to a “re-education camp,” apparently after charges of being a “two-faced” person. During the Cultural Revolution (1966–1976), he spent terms in prison and many of his collections were lost. In 1979, he was rehabilitated. In 1983, he started the first graduate program in Xinjiang Minority Literature at the university. In 2000 he became a founder of the Folklore Museum at Xinjiang University. He published more than twenty books, including History of Uyghur Culture. His book Uyghur Folk Literature was reprinted more than ten times. He published a 12-volume Encyclopedia of Uyghur Folk Literature, containing thousands of legends, folk tales, epic poems, ballads, and proverbs. In early 2019, Rahman was reportedly released. On or around 17 August 2020, Rahman died. His cause of death was not made public.⁸¹
- In February 2018, Abliz Orhun (male), the former editor in chief of Xinjiang Difang Zhi (a Xinjiang regional historiography) and editor of Minzu publishing House, was arrested.⁸²

⁸⁰ Yojana Sharma, “Scholars Targeted as Uighur Purge Engulfs Universities,” World University News (28 September 2018); Chris Buckley & Austin Ramzy, “Star Scholar Disappears as Crackdown Engulfs Western China,” New York Times (10 August 2018); Uyghur Human Rights Project, The Persecution of the Intellectuals in the Uyghur Region: Disappeared Forever? (Washington: UHRP, October 2018), 5–6; Uyghur Human Rights Project, Detained and Disappeared: Intellectuals Under Assault in the Uyghur Homeland (Washington: UHRP, October 2019), 5; PEN International, Case List 2018 (London: PEN, 2019), 64; Scholars at Risk, Free to Think: Report of the Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (New York: Scholars at Risk, 2019), 17; Darren Byler, “‘Heaviness in the Stomach’: A Uyghur Daughter Alone in America on Her Birthday during a Pandemic,” Supchina (1 April 2020); “Free Rahile Dawut”; Abduweli Ayup, “List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present,” (15 June 2019); “Petition for the Immediate Release of Professor Rahile Dawut and other Uyghur scholars” (no date); International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 65; “Jailed Uyghur Scholar Rahile Dawut to Receive ‘Courage to Think’ Award,” Radio Free Asia (11 November 2020); Joshua Freeman, “China Disappeared My Professor; It Can’t Silence His Poetry,” New York Times (23 November 2020); NCH Campaign (2020).

⁸¹ Amy Anderson, “How Is Abdukerim Rahman Surviving without his Books?” Art of Life in Chinese Central Asia (2 October 2018); Uyghur Human Rights Project, The Persecution of the Intellectuals in the Uyghur Region: Disappeared Forever? (Washington: UHRP, October 2018), 6; PEN International, Case List 2018 (London: PEN, 2019), 64; International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 65; Yojana Sharma, “Alarm over Choice of New Leader for Xinjiang University,” University World News (15 October 2020); “Abdikerim Rahman Death,” The Arts of Entertainment (18 August 2020).

⁸² Abduweli Ayup, “List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present” (13 March 2021).

- In February 2018, Abduqeyum Hoja ([1941–]), an archaeology professor, stayed in a hospital in Urumqi when he was arrested, probably because his daughter, Gulchehra, worked for Radio Free Asia. He was released in the same month.⁸³
- In July 2018, police arrested and detained Uyghur publisher, editor, and writer Abdurahman Abey ([1953–]) at an undisclosed location on suspicion of “separatism and religious extremism activities.” Abey served as director of the official Xinhua Bookstore, and from 2005 to 2015 as director and Chinese Communist Party deputy secretary of the Xinjiang People’s Publishing House. In January 2015, he was appointed as the manager of the History Research Office of the Xinjiang Autonomous Political Expansion Committee, a post he “left” in January 2017.⁸⁴
- On 2 September 2018, Gulnar [Gülнар] Obul [Ubul] (female) [(1966)–], a professor at Kashgar University, was dismissed and reportedly charged with “two-faced activities.” Her name was deleted from the university’s website. Obul had been detained for publishing a 2016 article about Uyghur culture and history (entitled “Dialogue on Cultural Formation in Xinjiang”) that included her opinions on religious extremism in 2016. An official source said that Obul had been released from detention two to three weeks after the initial report and transferred to work in Urumqi at the XUAR Bureau of Farm Machinery.⁸⁵
- On 30 November 2018, Askar Yunus [Zhunus] ([1969]–), a leading Kyrgyz historian at the history department of the Academy of Social Sciences of Xinjiang, was arrested on undisclosed charges, probably at his home in Urumqi, and reportedly brought to a “training center.” A member of the Kyrgyz ethnic community and a member of the Chinese Intellectual Foreign Affiliation Society and the Xinjiang History Association, Yunus focused on the ethnic history of the region, the Kyrgyz “golden era” and Kyrgyz-Chinese relations. He published over forty articles and several books. His university confirmed his arrest but did not provide further details. In September 2020, it was reported that he was sentenced to eleven years’ imprisonment.⁸⁶

⁸³ Amnesty International, “Separated Souls: Uighur Journalist’s Unbreakable Resolve to Help Her Detained Family” (16 March 2018); Uyghur Yardem, “Detained & Imprisoned \(Scholar\).”

⁸⁴ Uyghur Yardem, “Detained & Imprisoned \(Publishing\)”; “Abdurahman Abey,” CPJ (no date); Shohret Hoshur, “Prominent Uyghur Publisher Arrested, under Investigation,” Radio Free Asia (15 October 2018).

⁸⁵ “Xinjiang’s Kashgar University Sacks Four ‘Two-Faced’ Uyghur Professors,” Radio Free Asia (19 September 2018); Uyghur Human Rights Project, The Persecution of the Intellectuals in the Uyghur Region: Disappeared Forever? (Washington: UHRP, October 2018), 7; Profile of Askar Zhunus at Xinjiang Victims Database (11 November 2020); Uyghur Yardem, “Detained & Imprisoned \(Scholar\)”; “China: Uyghur Group Defends Detainee Database after Xinjiang Officials Allege ‘Fake Archive’,” HRWF (13 February 2021).

⁸⁶ Scholars at Risk (Academic Freedom Monitoring Project), Obstacles to Excellence: Academic Freedom & China’s Quest for World-Class Universities (New York: SAR, 2019), 49; Scholars at Risk, Free to Think: Report of the Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (New York: Scholars at Risk, 2019), 46; “Xinjiang Authorities Arrest Leading Kyrgyz Historian for ‘Undecided’ Crime,” Radio Free Asia (30 November 2018); Committee of Concerned Scientists, “Prominent Historian at the History Research Department of the Academy of Social Sciences of Xinjiang Arrested, Cause Unknown, Whereabouts Unknown” (10 April 2019).

- In 2019, (Haji) Mirzahid Kerim [Kerimi] ([1937]–), a writer and a retired editor at Kashgar Uyghur Press, was detained and sentenced to eleven years in prison, reportedly for writing about Uyghur history and historians and for a speech on an event which was dedicated to his life. In 1959, he had been sentenced to thirteen years in prison for the poem “The baby in the chest” (“Sanduq ichidiki bowaq”), and then kept for another seven years under house arrest. The Chinese government saw the poem as a separatist metaphor. He was released in the 1980s.⁸⁷
- Abdukerem Paltu, a historian working at the Department of History, Kashgar University, was mentioned on a 15 June 2019 List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present.⁸⁸
- In 2020, Oblez Irehun, a historian working in a publishing house in Beijing was arrested.⁸⁹
- In April 2020, it was announced that Sattar Sawut (1948–) and his deputy at the Xinjiang education department, Shirzat Bawudun (1966–), had been given death sentences with a two-year reprieve, while five other Uyghur men, including editors of the same department, were given lengthy prison terms. In 2016, Sattar had been accused of building a team and planning with his deputy to incorporate content in primary and secondary school textbooks dating back as far as 2003 that was deemed by Xinjiang authorities to be “separatist” in nature and inciting ethnic hatred. The court did not publish its ruling or other documents, and state media did not detail what problems it saw in the texts. The son of one of the editors declared that the passages were about historical tales that had nothing to do with terrorism, and the prosecutions were aimed at cultural destruction and assimilation. The People’s Daily – an official newspaper of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party providing direct information on the policies and viewpoints of the party – reported: “By changing and distorting history, [Sattar and his co-accused] tried to instill separatist ideas into students, increase national hatred and achieve the purpose of splitting the motherland.” The South China Morning Post described some sections and images in the textbook that referred to a 1940s chapter of Xinjiang history and the short-lived East Turkestan Republic government, or that depicted clashes between Uyghur fighters and Han-looking soldiers during the same period.⁹⁰

⁸⁷ Simina Mistreanu, “The Capital of Xinjiang Is Now in Turkey,” Foreign Policy (30 September 2019); Uyghur Yardem, “Detained & Imprisoned Literary Artists.”

⁸⁸ Abduweli Ayup, “List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present,” (15 June 2019).

⁸⁹ Yojana Sharma, “Alarm over Choice of New Leader for Xinjiang University,” University World News (15 October 2020).

⁹⁰ Javier C. Hernández, “A Hong Kong Newspaper on a Mission to Promote China’s Soft Power,” New York Times (31 March 2018); Helen Davidson, “China Hands Death Sentences to Uyghur Former Officials,” Guardian (9 April 2021).

Other news from Xinjiang:

According to scholar of Uyghur history Rian Thum, a major sacred site in Khotan was bulldozed and turned into a parking lot in [April] 2020. The gravesite of the Uyghur national literary hero Lutpulla Mutellip (1922–1945) was destroyed and turned into a “Happiness Park,” while the grave was moved to an industrial zone in the desert.⁹¹

A September 2020 report of the Australian Strategic Policy Institute provided proof that since at least 2017 the Chinese government had embarked on a Sinicization campaign to rewrite the cultural heritage of the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region (XUAR) and to strip away any Islamic, transnational, or autonomous elements. Using satellite imagery, it estimated that approximately 16,000 mosques in Xinjiang (65% of the total) had been destroyed (8,450) or damaged (7,550) as a result of government policies, mostly since 2017. A further 30% of important Islamic sacred sites (shrines, burial grounds, and pilgrimage routes, including many protected under Chinese law) had been demolished across Xinjiang, mostly since 2017, and an additional 27.8% have been damaged or altered in some way. In total, 17.4% of sites protected under Chinese law have been destroyed, and 61.8% of unprotected sites were damaged or destroyed.

The authorities provided little justification for the demolition of burial grounds besides making way for urban reconstruction, ensuring “standardization,” or “sav[ing] space and protect[ing] the ecosystem.” Furthermore, authorities also set up crematoria, or “burial management centers,” to conduct the cremation of Xinjiang residents, in contravention of Muslim burial traditions.⁹²

See also France, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand, United States.

⁹¹ Magnus Fiskesjö, “China Ravages Xinjiang Cultural Heritage,” (29 April 2020); Human Rights Watch, “Break Their Lineage, Break Their Roots” – China’s Crimes against Humanity Targeting Uyghurs and Other Turkic Muslims (Washington: HRW, 2021), 29.

⁹² Nathan Ruser (with James Leibold, Kelsey Munro & Tilla Hoja), Cultural Erasure: Tracing the Destruction of Uyghur and Islamic Spaces in Xinjiang (Policy Brief, Report No. 38/2020) (Barton Australian Capital Territory: Australian Strategic Policy Institute, September 2020), 3–5; Helen Davidson, “Thousands of Xinjiang Mosques Destroyed or Damaged, Report Finds,” Guardian (25 September 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 165; Human Rights Watch, “Break Their Lineage, Break Their Roots” – China’s Crimes against Humanity Targeting Uyghurs and Other Turkic Muslims (Washington: HRW, 2021), 29–30.

COLOMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2004, 2006–2020.

Impunity for past abuses remained an important human rights concern during 2020. From 2002 through 2008, army brigades across Colombia routinely executed civilians in what were known as “false positives” killings. Under pressure from superiors to show “positive” results and boost body counts in their war against guerrillas, soldiers and officers abducted victims or lured them to remote locations under false pretenses – such as promises of work – shot them dead, placed weapons on their bodies, and reported them as enemy combatants killed in action. The number of allegations of unlawful killings by security forces fell sharply since 2009, though credible reports of some new cases continued to emerge. As of September 2020, the Attorney General’s Office had opened over 2,000 investigations into alleged unlawful killings by army personnel from 2002 through 2008, and had achieved over 900 convictions in cases against more than 1,600 mid- and low-level soldiers, including convictions of the same individual in various cases. Over 250 members of the Armed Forces had testified about their roles in “false positives” killings before the Jurisdicción Especial de Paz (JEP; Special Jurisdiction of Peace), a transitional justice mechanism through which members of the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia – Ejército del Pueblo (FARC–EP; Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces), members of the Public Force and third parties who participated in the armed conflict (1964–2016) were investigated and put to trial. Authorities largely failed, however, to prosecute senior army officers involved in the killings and instead had promoted many of them through the military ranks. As of September 2020, cases against at least 29 army generals under investigation for false-positive killings had made scant progress. On 18 February 2021, the JEP made public that at least 6,402 people fell victim to “false positives” killings, nearly three times as much as the figure previously admitted by the attorney general’s office [See also NCH Annual Report 2013]. The findings came after two years of exhumation of mass graves across the country. Investigations by the JEP were to continue, focusing on provinces in the country not yet prioritized in its probe. On 6 July 2021, the JEP tribunal accused ten members of the military and one civilian of forcibly disappearing 24 people and murdering at least 120 civilians, representing the first charges announced by the JEP in relation to “false positives” killings.⁹³

In mid-September 2020, protesters from the indigenous Nasa and Pijao communities toppled the statue of Spanish conquistador Sebastián de Belalcázar (1479/1480–1551) in the south-western city of ⁹³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 175, 178-179; Joe Parkin Daniels, “Colombia Tribunal Reveals at Least 6,402 People Were Killed by Army to Boost Body Count,” Guardian (19 February 2021); “Colombian Court Accuses Soldiers of Murdering at least 120 Civilians,” Guardian (6 July 2021).

Popayán which he had founded in 1537. The protestors “put Belalcázar on trial,” finding him guilty of genocide, enslavement, torture, rape, and stealing their ancestral lands. The mayor retorted that it was an act of violence against a symbol of a multicultural city. In April 2021, a statue of Belalcázar was pulled down in Cali. In Bogotá, members of the Misak indigenous group demolished statues of Gonzalo Jiménez de Quesada (1509–1579), the Spanish conquistador who founded the city in 1638; in June 2021, they daubed a statue of Queen Isabella of Castile (1451–1504), who sponsored Columbus’s 1492 voyage of exploration during which he first set foot in America, in red paint in Bogotá. The ministry of culture has since removed the statue of Queen Isabella and another one of Christopher Columbus nearby “for safety reasons.” On 30 June 2021, anti-government protesters toppled a statue of Christopher Columbus in Barranquilla and vandalized it.⁹⁴

Somewhere between 27 September and 30 September 2020, Campo Elías Galindo Álvarez ([1951]–2020), a retired historian and urban planning expert from the Universidad Nacional de Colombia, sede Medellín (National University of Colombia, Medellín location), was assassinated in his home with a knife. The murderer also burned a book and left it on Galindo’s chest. Galindo’s computer was stolen. Galindo had also been a left-wing political leader of the Colombia Humana movement in Medellín and a member of the Frente Amplio por la Paz y la Democracia (Broad Front for Peace and Democracy). It was widely believed that the murder was not a mere computer theft but rather a political assassination due to Galindo’s political activities.⁹⁵

On 3 October 2020, the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia – Ejército del Pueblo (FARC-EP; Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces) admitted having killed historian Jesús Antonio Bejarano Ávila in 1999. In September 1999, Jesús Antonio Bejarano Ávila (1946–1999), an economist and economic historian from the Universidad Nacional de Colombia and member of the Academia colombiana de ciencias económicas (Colombian Academy of Economic Sciences), was shot dead while he was on his way to teach a class at the Faculty of Economics of the Universidad Nacional de Colombia (National University of Colombia) in Bogotá. He was an expert in conflict resolution and had been a key government adviser in the peace negotiations with guerrilla groups during the terms of Presidents Virgilio Barco (1986–1990) and César Gaviria (1990–1994) and a founding member of the Centro de Estudios de la Realidad Colombiana (Center of Studies of Colombian Reality) and an active participant in the negotiations with the guerrilla groups. During the Barco government, Bejarano played an important role in the development of the National Plan of Rehabilitation, a foundational strategy for peacemaking in the country. During the early 1990s, Bejarano was a key player in the peace negotiations with the Coordinadora Guerrillera Simón Bolívar, the then guerrilla coalition of the FARC, the Ejército de Liberación Nacional (ELN; National Liberation Army), and the Ejército Popular de Liberación (EPL; Ejército Popular de Liberación). He was specialized in agricultural history (especially the history of tobacco).⁹⁶

⁹⁴ “Colombia: Indigenous Protesters Topple Conquistador’s Statue,” BBC News (17 September 2020); “Colombian Anti-government Protesters Topple Columbus Statue,” BBC News (30 June 2021).

⁹⁵ César Augusto Duque Sánchez, personal communication (2 October 2020); “Asesinan en Medellín a historiador y miembro de la Colombia Humana,” El Tiempo (1 October 2020); “Asesinan a Campo Elías Galindo, reconocido historiador de Medellín, cercano a Gustavo Petro,” Blu Radio (1 October 2020); “‘Creemos que fue por su actividad política’: familia de Campo Elías Galindo tras asesinato,” Blu Radio (1 October 2020).

CONGO (Democratic Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2000, 2003–2020.

After his election as President in 2019, Félix Tshisekedi tasked his administration with delivering a proposal for transitional justice mechanisms, but he had yet to fully commit to ending impunity for past and current serious crimes. Some of the military courts and other tribunals adjudicating cases of war crimes and crimes against humanity faced serious shortcomings.⁹⁷

On 1 October 2020 protesters in Kisangani, the capital of Tshopo province, were beaten by police forces as they demanded justice for historic murders and rapes committed in the east of the country. The protest was part of a nation-wide protest calling for a 2010-United Nations (UN) report to be the basis for ensuring justice. This 2010 UN “mapping” report, commissioned after the discovery of mass graves in 2005, documented violent incidents between 1993 and 2003, that could amount to war crimes, crimes against humanity, and genocide. The investigation covered the first (1996–1997) and second Congo war (1998–2003), which killed millions and left a legacy of conflict.⁹⁸

See also Belgium, Rwanda.

⁹⁶ “Asesinado Jesús Antonio Bejarano,” El Espectador (16 September 1999); “Jesús Antonio Bejarano Ávila \(1946-1999\),” Eumed.net. Enciclopedia virtual (30 November 2011); Jurisdicción especial para la paz, “Farc asume responsabilidad en homicidio de Álvaro Gómez Hurtado y en otros cinco casos” (Comunicado 132) (3 October 2020); Memoria Histórica FCE [Facultad de Ciencias Económicas] 60 años (2012). “Homenaje a Jesús Antonio Bejarano,” YouTube (2012); “Jesús Antonio Bejarano”; <http://faculty-staff.ou.edu/R/Clemencia.Rodriguez-1/altar/bejar.html>; “Jesús Antonio Bejarano Ávila,” Vidas silenciadas.

⁹⁷ Ida Sawyer, “DR Congo Rights Abusers Rewarded with Army Promotions,” Human Rights Watch (18 July 2018); Stanis Bujakera Tshiamala, “DRC: Under Pressure from the US, Tshisekedi Reshuffles Army,” The Africa Report (20 July 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 196.

⁹⁸ Kaamil Ahmed, “DRC Protesters Demand Justice over Unprosecuted Rapes and Murders,” Guardian (2 October 2020); Amnesty International, The State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 141.

CONGO (Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004–2006, 2008, 2010–2012, 2019.

COSTA RICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

CÔTE D’IVOIRE

See Ivory Coast.

CROATIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2001, 2003–2013, 2015–2020.

In 2020 war crimes were handled by county courts in Zagreb, Rijeka, Split, and Osijek, while state attorney’s offices were responsible for the investigation process. None of these institutions allowed access to war crimes case archives for journalists, researchers, or the general public. Due to the absence of a statute of limitations on war crimes, all public prosecutor’s office cases were permanently kept at its office, with all the evidence and relevant documents. On 22 February 2021, the Zagreb-based Documenta – Centar za suočavanje s prošlošću (Documenta – Center for dealing with the past) and the Osijek-based Centar za mir, nenasilje i ljudska prava (Center for peace, non-violence, and human rights) criticized the government for the “slow processing of war crimes.” They pointed out that in a number of ongoing war crimes trials, no hearings had been scheduled over 2020 and that hearings in war crimes trials at Osijek County Court were not being scheduled as often as prescribed by Croatia’s criminal code.⁹⁹

⁹⁹ Emina Dizdarevic, Serbeze Haxhijaj, Anja Vladislavjevic and Milica Stojanovic, “Access Denied: Most Balkan War Crimes Case Files Not Public,” Balkan Insight (28 September 2020); Anja Vladislavjevic, “Croatia Criticised for ‘Slow Justice’ in War Crime Trials,” Balkan Insight (22 February 2021).

In July 2020, Council of Europe Human Rights Commissioner Dunja Mijatović warned that many politicians continued to deny the truth about the Srebrenica genocide, deepening the suffering of the survivors and endangering peace.¹⁰⁰

In August 2020, in the lead-up to the 25th anniversary of Operation Storm (1995), President Zoran Milanovic called the prosecution of Croats at the International Criminal Tribunal of Yugoslavia (ICTY) a “stupid fabrication” to present the Croatian defense war as a “joint criminal enterprise,” adding that “not everyone who was sentenced in The Hague is a war criminal.”¹⁰¹

On 19 May 2021, Hrvoje Klasić, a professor of contemporary history at Zagreb University’s history department, received a letter entitled “Call to the Croatian People: Kill Klasić.” It called for the murder not only of Klasić “but also [of] other well-known traitors who openly and secretly act against the Croatian people” in parliament, the media, some university faculties, and anti-fascist and other non-governmental associations. The letter concluded with the World War II Ustaša movement’s slogan, “Za dom spremni” (“Ready for the Homeland”). In addition, Klasić received many signed letters varying from people recommending him to move out of Croatia to letters with vulgar and obscene wording [See also NCH Annual Report 2020].¹⁰²

See also Bosnia and Herzegovina, Montenegro.

CUBA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2002, 2006, 2010–2012, 2015–2016, 2018.

Between September 2019 and March 2020, the artist Luis Manuel Otero Alcantará was detained at least ten times, often without charge, for performance art pieces in which he wore the Cuban flag while going about daily activities. In March 2020, Law 128/2019 (aka the National Symbols Law) took effect, restricting use of the Cuban flag, seal, and national anthem. These symbols could be used “as a means of publicity only when the messages that are transferred contribute to fostering and developing in people

¹⁰⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 103.

¹⁰¹ “Milanovic: A Stupid Fabrication about a Joint Criminal Enterprise,” HINA (4 August 2020); “Milanović: Nije svako ko je dobio kaznu u Hagu ratni zločinac,” Nezavisne (4 August 2020).

¹⁰² Anja Vladislavjevic, “Croatian Historian: Threats Won’t Stop Me Criticising Nationalism,” Balkan Insight (21 May 2021).

patriotic values and to form a patriotic awareness of respect and veneration for them and the historical tradition of the nation.”¹⁰³

CYPRUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2005, 2008–2011, 2013, 2015–2018.

Between 2006 and 30 November 2020, the remains of 993 missing individuals (711 Greek Cypriots and 282 Turkish Cypriots) were identified by the Committee on Missing Persons in Cyprus in its mission to establish the fate and whereabouts of individuals who were forcibly disappeared during the inter-communal fighting of 1963–1964 and the Turkish invasion of 1974 [See also NCH Annual Reports 2005, 2010–2011, 2013, 2016–2018].¹⁰⁴

See also Turkey.

CZECH REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2010, 2013–2020.

In September 2020, Dunja Mijatović, the Council of Europe Human Rights Commissioner, urged the adoption of a bill to bring justice and help women who had been affected by a government-led eugenics agenda from the early 1970s until it was officially abolished in 1993. It is unclear how many women were affected: the European Roma Rights Center said hundreds of women were systematically sterilized throughout the 1990s with the last-known case as recently as 2007. Sterilization was part of a wider social narrative to “discriminate, seclude and eradicate” the Roma population. A draft bill from 2019 proposing a £10,200 payment to victims never reached the statute books.¹⁰⁵

¹⁰³ “Nueva ley de símbolos nacionales incluye prohibiciones de uso ‘en sayas, pañuelos y ropa interior’.” ADNCuba (10 July 2019); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 188.

¹⁰⁴ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 137.

¹⁰⁵ Anna Koslerova, “‘I Always Wanted a Girl’: Scandal of Czech Roma Forcibly Sterilised.” Guardian (8 March 2021).

DENMARK

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2007, 2013, 2016–2020.

DJIBOUTI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013.

ECUADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2007, 2009–2020.

In 2010, a truth commission created by the Rafael Correa administration (2007–2017) to investigate government abuses from 1984 to 2008 documented gross human rights violations against 456 victims. As of 2020, final rulings had been rendered in only two cases. Others appeared to be stalled.¹⁰⁶

On 16 March 2021, a broad coalition for the defense of Ecuador’s cultural heritage protested against the neglect and understaffing of the Archivo Metropolitano de Historia de Quito (AMH-Q; Metropolitan Archive of History-Quito), making access to it for historical research nearly impossible.¹⁰⁷

EGYPT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2001, 2003, 2006–2007, 2010–2020.

On 23 January 2021, seven masked and armed policemen raided the home of the family of Ahmed Samir Santawy ([1992–]), a postgraduate anthropology and sociology student at Central European University in Vienna, Austria, when he was not there, and instructed him to present himself to the National Security Agency (NSA). When Santawy did so on 1 February 2021, security forces arrested him and subjected him to enforced disappearance and beatings until 6 February 2021. He was then brought for questioning before the Supreme State Security Prosecution (SSSP). The SSSP accused Santawy of “membership in a terrorist group,” “funding a terrorist organization,” “spreading false news,” and “using social media to spread disinformation.” The bogus charges were reportedly related to his academic work focusing on women’s rights, including the history of reproductive rights in Egypt and the comparison of Egyptian and Islamic abortion laws. In March 2021, Santawy’s lawyer received information that he had been moved out of solitary confinement to pre-trial detention at a maximum-security prison in Cairo. On 22 May, the SSSP opened a new criminal investigation into Santawy over social media posts for a charge of “publishing false news to undermine the state, its national interests and public order and spread panic among the people.” On 22 June 2021, the State Security Emergency Misdemeanor Court sentenced Santawy to four years in prison and a fine of 500 pounds on charges of ¹⁰⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 205.

¹⁰⁷ Carta abierta al alcalde del Distrito Metropolitano de Quito, Doctor Jorge Yunda Machado, sobre situación del Archivo Metropolitano de Historia (AMH-Q) (16 March 2021); “Atiendan urgentemente la situación del Archivo Metropolitano de Historia de Quito,” (petition; March 2021).

spreading false news and statements abroad about the domestic situation of Egypt. The conviction was reportedly based on social media posts critical of Egypt's violations of human rights, which Santawy denied writing. Verdicts given by State Security Emergency Courts cannot be appealed. On 23 June, Santawy began a hunger strike.¹⁰⁸

In May 2021, Waleed Salem, a political science doctoral candidate at the University of Washington, Seattle, USA, was stopped at the border. Salem was doing PhD fieldwork on how courts had tried to resolve political disputes in Egypt and Pakistan since the 1950s.

In May 2018, he had been arrested, blindfolded and handcuffed for five days and later accused of "joining a terror group," among other charges. He was then interrogated about the intricacies of the thesis (supervisor, chapter titles, field work) and told that his thesis was about the politicized nature of the Egyptian judiciary. After six months in prison, he was released in December 2018, having to report to a police station twice a week. In May 2020, his first attempt to leave Egypt ended in the confiscation of his passport.¹⁰⁹

EL SALVADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2020.

The government failed to make public information related to military operations during the internal armed conflict (1980–1992) and denied judicial access to military operation files related to the 1981 El Mozote massacre. In November 2019, President Nayib Bukele had declared that the government would open the military archives related to the December 1981 El Mozote massacre (1725 victims of which almost 1000 dead; labeled "the largest single massacre in modern Latin American history") as requested by Jorge Guzmán, the magistrate in San Francisco Gotera, Morazán, who had been investigating the case since 2016. On 28 August 2020, Guzmán ordered an inspection of military archives at several barracks in his search for documents relating to "Operation Rescue," the army's sweep of the country's northeast in the final months of 1981 under the guise of countering subversion. The army had for years affirmed that no such documents existed, that they were all destroyed, or, alternatively, that they could not be divulged for reasons of national security. On 18 September 2020, the Ministry of Defense appealed to the Constitutional Court in an attempt to stop this court-ordered review of the military archives. On 20 September 2020, the night before the inspections, Bukele unexpectedly ordered a public-health lockdown in San Francisco Gotera. The next day, the Ministry of Defense blocked the judge and inspectors from entering the armed forces headquarters and searching the archives. Guzmán tried again at different army and air force barracks over the next several weeks, always with the same result. On 9 October 2020, the Constitutional Court supported Guzmán but to no avail. Finally, the judge went to the national archives, which were open to researchers, to search for documents. Massacre survivors asked the Prosecutor General to charge Bukele and Defense Minister René Merino Monroy with arbitrary acts, dereliction of duty, and failure to comply with a judicial order for refusing access to the judge. On 9 November 2020, the court in San Francisco Gotera asked the prosecutor's office to investigate the possible theft, destruction, concealment, or displacement of documents and whether Bukele and Merino had blocked the judicial inspection of the archives.

¹⁰⁸ Scholars at Risk, "Egypt: 74 NGOs Urge Egyptian Authorities to Release Ahmed Samir Santawy," (14 April 2021); Anna Koslerova, "A Student Researching Abortion Laws Is Now in One of the World's Strictest Prisons," Vice (29 April 2021); "Four Years' Imprisonment and a Fine of 500 EGP for Ahmed Samir Santawy," Afte (22 June 2021); Scholars at Risk, "Ahmed Samir Santawy, Egypt" ([July] 2021).

¹⁰⁹ Farid Farid, "Egypt Academics, Researchers Caught In State Crosshairs," Barron's (5 June 2021).

In the absence of military documentation, the survivors had sought to use declassified U.S. documents from the era obtained by the National Security Archive at George Washington University to prove that the military high command had ultimate responsibility for the massacre. While U.S. President Bill Clinton had declassified a tranche of those documents, others remained inaccessible. The El Mozote massacre case had been reopened in 2016 after an amnesty law was annulled by the Constitutional Court.

In mid-January 2021, Archbishop José Escobar Alas refused to open the church archives on the El Mozote archives for judge Guzmán. Tutela Legal, the human rights office that housed the archives under the auspices of the Archdiocese of San Salvador, was active between 1977 and 2013, when it was abruptly closed. It was later reopened. A few days after a public outcry, the archbishop reversed his decision, citing a misunderstanding.¹¹⁰

In February 2020, the Legislative Assembly approved a decree containing the Special Law on Transitional Justice, Reparation, and Reconciliation. This law contained provisions that hindered the investigation and effective punishment of those responsible for crimes under international law. President Nayib Bukele vetoed the decree later that month.¹¹¹

¹¹⁰ Gabriel Campos Madrid, "Gobierno dice que abrirá archivos militares," La prensa gráfica (3 November 2019); Nelson Rauda, "El Gobierno Bukele, como los anteriores, niega a las víctimas los archivos de El Mozote," El Faro (21 September 2020); Washington Office on Latin America, "El Salvador Ministry of Defense Should Comply With Court Orders in El Mozote Case," (press release; 22 September 2020); Naomi Roht-Arriaza, "On El Salvador's 1981 El Mozote Massacre, President Bukele Sides with Impunity," Just Security (28 October 2020); Nelson Renteria, "El Salvador President Faces Probe over Search for Wartime Massacre Files," Reuters (10 November); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 219–220; Amnesty International, State of the World's Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 153; Rhina Guidos, "Salvadoran Archbishop Refuses to Open Records on El Mozote Massacre," National Catholic Reporter (19 January 2021); Rhina Guidos, "After Outcry, Salvadoran Archbishop Will Grant Access to Archive on Massacre," National Catholic Reporter (22 January 2021).

¹¹¹ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 152–153.

On 11 September 2020, judges at Spain’s highest criminal court, the Audiencia Nacional, convicted Inocente Orlando Montano Morales (1943–), a former Salvadoran army colonel who served as a government security minister, to 133 years in prison after being found guilty of taking part in “the decision, design and execution” of the murder of six Jesuit priests, their housekeeper and her daughter in 1989, in one of the infamous atrocities of El Salvador’s 12-year civil war (1979–1992) [See also NCH Annual Reports 2009, 2012, 2017–2018].¹¹²

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2019.

ERITREA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008, 2016, 2018.

ESTONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2010, 2015, 2017.

ETHIOPIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2011, 2015–2020.

The government took some steps toward ensuring accountability for atrocities and grave human rights violations carried out since 1991, including extrajudicial executions, torture, and mass and arbitrary arrests. These measures offered little hope that victims would see justice for crimes, including killings, torture and other ill-treatment, and excessive use of force, carried out by security forces, including the Ethiopian National Defense Force, the Federal Police and regional police special force units.¹¹³

¹¹² Sam Jones, “Ex-Salvadoran Colonel Jailed for 1989 Murder of Spanish Jesuits,” Guardian (11 September 2020).

¹¹³ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 160–161.

In early May 2021, Patriarch Abune Mathias, head of Ethiopia's Orthodox Church, accused the government of committing genocide in Tigray since the conflict there began in November 2020. He also lamented the desecration of ancient Orthodox monasteries and said that massacres had been carried out on church grounds. His comments were made in a video reportedly recorded in April 2021 before being smuggled out of Ethiopia. Mathias also said that his earlier attempts to speak out had been censored. Breaking with the traditional hierarchy of the Ethiopian church, the Orthodox Synod distanced itself from the patriarch's statement.¹¹⁴

See also Zambia.

¹¹⁴ Mary Harper, "Church Leader Accuses Ethiopia of 'Tigray Genocide'," BBC News (9 May 2021); Alex de Waal, "Ethiopia Tigray Crisis: Warnings of Genocide and Famine," BBC News (29 May 2021).

FIJI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006, 2010.

FINLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2017, 2020.

See Liberia.

FRANCE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1999, 2001–2009, 2011–2014, 2016–2018, 2020.

On [22] August 2020, images of an inscription at a memorial at the site in the village of Oradour-sur-Glane showed the word “martyr” in the text “martyr village” replaced with “liar.” The village had been destroyed by SS troops in 1944, with 642 inhabitants killed, and the ruin preserved in its entirety. President Emmanuel Macron condemned the defacing as “unspeakable.”¹¹⁵

On 9 March 2021, President Emmanuel Macron announced that the declassification of secret archives more than 50 years old would be accelerated, a decision that would facilitate access to documents related to the Algerian War (1954–1962). Under the new rules, authorities would be allowed to declassify archive boxes all at once, speeding up a declassification process for secret documents that had been carried out page by page [See also NCH Annual Report 2020]. Some historians, however, said that the new rules barely addressed their complaints. Central to the complaints by historians was the 2011 government instruction that all records between 1940 and 1971 labeled “secret” or “top secret” had to be reviewed for declassification prior to release to the public, contradicting a 2008 law that called for the immediate release of secret documents 50 years after they were produced. The 2011 instruction had been loosely enforced, or even ignored, by archivists in recent years, but the General Secretariat for Defense and National Security, a powerful unit inside the prime minister’s office, had started enforcing the rules in 2020. Tens of thousands of once-public documents were subsequently resealed, impeding historical research and reimposing secrecy on information that had been previously revealed. Already on 24 September 2020, the French Association of Archivists, the Association of Higher-Education Contemporary Historians and other associations and individuals, supported by the International Council on Archives, asked the Conseil d'état (Council of State) to repeal the inter-ministerial regulation.

¹¹⁵ “Oradour-sur-Glane: Uproar after France Nazi Massacre Site Vandalised,” BBC News (22 August 2020).

Macron's decision came after Benjamin Stora (1950–), a professor of Maghreb history at the Institute of Oriental Civilizations and Languages (INALCO) and the Sorbonne, had advised to put an end to the page-by-page declassification process and to return “as soon as possible” to declassifying any secret document more than 50 years old, as required by the 2008 law, in the report Les Questions mémorielles portant sur la colonisation et la guerre d'Algérie (Questions related to the memory about the colonization of and war in Algeria), submitted on 21 January.

In 2020, ahead of Algeria's sixtieth anniversary of independence in 2022, Macron had commissioned Stora to write a report on “the progress made in France regarding the memory of the colonization (1830–1962) of, and war (1954–1962) in Algeria.” This project was the outcome of a dialogue between the heads of state of both countries, with Algerian President Abdelmadjid Tebboune appointing Abdelmadjid Chikhi (1945–), director-general of the National Center for Algerian Archives, as Stora's counterpart tasked with conducting research from an Algerian perspective. Stora's report focused on “the scars, lingering legacy and after-effects on French society of the memory of colonization and the Algerian War.” Additionally, it put forward a series of new initiatives that the government could implement to pave the way for a “reconciliation of memories.”

Stora's report, in turn, was criticized by a number of historians, including Algerian historians Afaf Zekkour and Nouredine Amara who attributed a certain “revisionism” to Stora for juxtaposing the 132 years of oppression on a population crushed by the military and political, economic, and cultural cycles of exploitation on the one hand and the outbursts of resistance or counter-violence mounted by this colonized society to alleviate its suffering or to try to end it on the other hand. Professor of political sciences Olivier Le Court Grandmaison (1960–) further criticized Stora's report for omitting significant factual data, particularly about the war of conquest (1830–1903) and the actions of the “infernal columns” of Marshal Thomas Bugeaud (1784–1849) (see below) committed as part of a scorched earth policy.¹¹⁶

¹¹⁶ Association des archivistes français, “Accès aux archives classifiées ‘secret-défense’: Un collectif d’associations et de personnalités saisissent le Conseil d’état,” (Press release; 24 septembre 2020); International Council on Archives, “Communiqué de presse du Conseil International des Archives relatif à la re-fermeture de l’accès aux archives 1940-1970 tamponnées ‘secret’,” (13 October 2020); Benjamin Stora, Les Questions mémorielles portant sur la colonisation et la guerre d’Algérie (157 pages; January 2021); Renaud de Rochebrune, “Algeria – France: ‘Apologising Will Not Get to the Heart of the Issue,’ Says Historian Benjamin Stora,” The Africa Report (26 January 2021); Nabila Ramdani, “Macron’s Algeria Report Isn’t Progress, It’s a Whitewash,” Foreign Policy (1 February 2021); Francois Burgat, “Analysis – Stora Report: France Denies Algerian History Once Again,” Anadolu Agency (17 February 2021); Constant Méhuet, “France Eases Access, a Little, to Its Secrets,” New York Times (9 March 2021); “France Speeds Up Access to Secret Algeria War Archives,” RFI (10 March 2021); Hossam El Din Islam, “French Move to Declassify Archive Draws Mixed Reactions in Algeria,” Andalou Agency (19 March 2021).

On 29 September 2020, Congolese activist Emery Mwazulu Diyabanza ([1979–]) and four others from the group Unité, dignité, courage (Unity, Dignity, Courage) went on trial charged with attempted theft of a registered artwork for trying to steal a nineteenth-century funeral staff from Chad at the Quai Branly-Jacques Chirac indigenous art museum in Paris on 12 June 2020. Diyabanza said on social media he had come to claim back Africa's stolen property, calling the Quai Branly Museum a museum of "stolen objects." His protest was live-streamed and published on YouTube. Diyabanza carried out similar actions at museums in Marseille and Berg en Dal in the Netherlands and he would be sued for them also (in November 2020 and January 2021 respectively). After his arrest in June, Diyabanza sued the French state accusing it of "theft and receiving state goods." He criticized the French government's speed in returning artefacts to African nations. On 14 October 2020, he was fined 1,000 euros for aggravated robbery; three others who joined him received suspended fines and a fourth was cleared of the charges. Diyabanza appealed the ruling.¹¹⁷

On 14 October 2020, the Château des ducs de Bretagne history museum in Nantes put an exhibition about the Mongol Emperor Genghis Khan (1155/1162–1227), planned in collaboration with the Inner Mongolia Museum in Hohhot, China (which would send some 225 pieces), on hold for over three years. It said that the Chinese Bureau of Cultural Heritage demanded that words such as "Genghis Khan," "Empire" and "Mongol" be taken out of the exhibition, that its emphasis would be on the Ming (1368–1644) rather than Mongolian period (1644–1911; also Manchu or Qing dynasty), and that it asked for power over exhibition brochures, legends, and maps. The museum called this censorship accusing the Bureau of wanting to include "elements of biased rewriting of Mongol culture in favor of a new national narrative."¹¹⁸

On 16 October 2020, Samuel Paty (1973–2020), a history and geography teacher, was attacked with a knife and beheaded near his school in Conflans-Sainte-Honorine, near Paris. Witnesses heard attacker Abdullakh Anzorov, an 18-year-old man of Chechen origin, shout "Allahu Akbar" ("God is the Greatest.") Anzorov then posted a picture of the beheaded Paty to a Twitter account, along with insults to President Emmanuel Macron and French "infidels" and "dogs." He later fired at police with an airgun before being shot dead in Éragny-sur-Oise, being hit nine times in all. On 5 and 6 October 2020, Paty had taught one or two classes of Enseignement morale et civique (EMS; moral and civic education) about freedom of expression to the fourth year (13- and 14-year-olds) and shown controversial cartoons of the Prophet Muhammad while talking about Charlie Hebdo (the satirical magazine that had republished the cartoons in 2015) and the trial taking place relating to the deadly attack it had suffered for it. He had advised Muslim students to look away or leave the room if they thought they might be offended. The class caused an uproar among some Muslim parents with a few posting videos on social media asking for Paty's resignation and one lodging a formal complaint. Paty had also received a number of unspecified threats in the days following the class.

¹¹⁷ "Activists on Trial over Attempt to Steal African Staff," BBC News (30 September 2020); "France Fines Congo Activist for Seizing Museum Artefact," BBC News (14 October 2020); Gert van Langendonck, "Elke Afrikaan is rechtmatig erfgenaam van roofkunst," NRC Handelsblad (14 October 2020).

¹¹⁸ Agence France-Presse, "China Insists Genghis Khan Exhibit Not Use Words 'Genghis Khan'," Guardian (14 October 2020).

Sixteen people were arrested for interrogation, including four school students (who may have helped identify Paty to Anzorov in exchange for payment), relatives of the attacker, the father of a pupil at Paty's school, and the radical Islamist preacher Abdelhakim Sefrioui (who was accused of having issued a fatwa against Paty). Seven of them would appear before an anti-terrorism judge. Three of them, two minors (who took money in exchange for information on Paty) and the pupil's father, reportedly exchanged text messages with Anzorov prior to the attack. The 13-year-old pupil whose complaints induced her father to lodge a legal complaint and start a social media campaign over the incident in which he identified Paty and the school, later admitted that she did not attend the class in which Paty showed the cartoons and that she had lied about her presence.

President Emmanuel Macron called the beheading an "Islamist terrorist attack." In the National Assembly, deputies stood up to honor the teacher and condemn the "atrocious terror attack." On 18 October 2020, rallies with tens of thousands of people were held in Paris and several other cities in support of Paty. On 20 October 2020, Paty was posthumously awarded the Legion d'honneur, France's highest honor.

In the wake of the murder, police raided the homes of dozens of suspected Islamic radicals and Muslim associations, including the Collectif contre l'Islamophobie en France (CCIF; Collective against Islamophobia) and the Sheikh Yassin Collective (an Islamist group named after the founder of the Palestinian militant group Hamas). Some of those questioned had reportedly posted messages of support to Anzorov. The Pantin mosque near Paris was closed for sharing videos on Facebook calling for action against Paty and sharing his school's address in the days before his murder.

On 3 November 2020, two 18-year-old men (one French and one of Chechen origin) and a 17-year-old girl, suspected of having been in contact with Anzorov, were arrested and on 6 November charged with "criminal terrorist conspiracy." On 6 November 2020, prosecutors in Cambrai said three teenagers between the ages of 15 and 17 were charged with "supporting terrorism" for threats made during a national tribute to Paty on 3 November. About 400 such incidents were reported during the minute of silence observed for Paty at schools countrywide. An Algerian man was convicted by a court in Pontoise to six months' imprisonment for "glorifying" Paty's murder on social media and describing Anzorov as a "martyr."¹¹⁹

¹¹⁹ Jean-Michel Décugis, Jérémie Pham-Lê & Ronan Folgoas, "Yvelines-Val-d'Oise: un professeur retrouvé décapité, un suspect abattu," Le Parisien (16 October 2020); Elise Vincent & Nicolas Chapuis, "Attentat de Conflans: neuf personnes en garde à vue, dont des parents d'élèves et des proches du meurtrier," Le Monde

During the night from 31 October to 1 November 2020, the far-right Turkish group Grey Wolves, seen as allied to President Recep Tayyip Erdogan, daubed a memorial to the 1915 Armenian genocide near Lyon with yellow graffiti featuring the Grey Wolves' name alongside the letters "RTE" – for Recep Tayyip Erdogan. This action came amid growing tensions between France and Turkey over a territorial dispute in Nagorno-Karabakh since September 2020. France would ban the Grey Wolves.¹²⁰

In the aftermath of the murder of Samuel Paty (see above), Education Minister Jean-Michel Blanquer claimed that "left-wing Islamism" was "wreaking havoc" in French universities. In addition, he later said that it was necessary to "fight" intellectual currents coming from United States universities that viewed society through the lens of ethnic origin, religion, or gender – rather than the republican ideal of equality – because they risked the "fragmentation" of society and created a "vision of the world which converges with the interests of the Islamists." Researchers who focused on areas such as racism, Islamophobia, and French colonialism in particular felt targeted. One hundred academics publicly backed Blanquer's comments, accusing "racialist" and postcolonial scholars of "feeding an anti-white racism and a hatred of France." The Conference of University Presidents (CPU) denied that universities were complicit in terrorism. In early November 2020, an academic colloquium on feminism was canceled after online harassment by far-right trolls. One of the organizers, Sylvie Chaperon, a history professor at the University of Toulouse-Jean Jaurès, said that while it was hard to link the harassment directly to the minister's comments, universities had been weakened by them. In some ways, the debate mirrored developments in the United States and Britain. Both President Donald Trump and a minister

(17 October 2020); "Macron Calls Paris Beheading 'Islamist Terrorist Attack'," BBC News (17 October 2020); "France Teacher Attack: Suspect 'Asked Pupils to Point Samuel Paty Out'," BBC News (17 October 2020); Kim Willsher, "Macron Speaks of 'Existential' Fight against Terrorism after Teacher Killed in France," Guardian (17 October 2020); Kim Willsher, "Teacher Decapitated in Paris Named as Samuel Paty, 47," Guardian (17 October 2020); Gert van Langendonck, "'Er is een Frankrijk voor en een na de onthoofding'," NRC Handelsblad (18 October 2020); "France Teacher Attack: Police Raid Homes of Suspected Islamic Radicals," BBC News (19 October 2020); "France Teacher Attack: Four Pupils Held over Beheading," BBC News (20 October 2020); Lucy Williamson, "Samuel Paty: Beheading of Teacher Deepens Divisions over France's Secular Identity," BBC News (20 October 2020); "France Teacher Attack: Pupil's Father 'Exchanged Texts with Killer'," BBC News (20 October 2020); "France Teacher Attack: Seven People to Attend Court over Samuel Paty's Death," BBC News (21 October 2020); "France Teacher Attack: Macron Hails Murdered 'Quiet Hero'," BBC News (22 October 2020); Article 19, "France: Teacher's Murder a Shocking Attack on Freedom of Expression," (press release; 20 October 2020); EuroClio, "Statement on the Murder of Our French Colleague Samuel Paty," (21 October 2020); Network of Concerned Historians, "EuroClio Statement on the Murder of History Teacher Samuel Paty," (21 October 2020); Ruth Smeeth, "Samuel Paty: An Educator, a Father and a Free Speech Martyr," Index on Censorship (blog) (23 October 2020); Norimitsu Onishi & Constant Méheut, "A Teacher, His Killer and the Failure of French Integration," New York Times (26 October 2020); Sarah Elzas, "Paty Murder Puts Focus on Role of Teachers in Passing on French Values," RFI (Radio France Internationale) (2 November 2020); "Three Teens Charged in French Teacher's Beheading," BBC News (6 November 2020); Ruth Smeeth, "Hey, Big Brother – We're Watching You," Index on Censorship, 49 no. 4, 52–53; Benjamin Lynch, "World Loses Titans of Free Speech," Index on Censorship, 49 no. 4, 97; Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 258; "Samuel Paty: French Schoolgirl Admits Lying about Murdered Teacher," BBC News (8 March 2021).

¹²⁰ "Grey Wolves: Far-right Group To Be Banned in France," BBC News (3 November 2020).

in Britain's Conservative government had attacked critical race theory, a framework in the social sciences that examined racism embedded in the law and legal institutions.¹²¹

On 19 March 2021, members of the group SOS Racisme defaced a street sign in Paris named after Marshal Thomas Bugeaud (1784–1849), a former military commander and the first colonial governor of Algeria (see above). They put up a sign in its place reading: “Avenue of the Butcher Bugeaud,” explaining below that he was a “war criminal” and “the executioner of Algeria’s conquest” who applied a scorched-earth policy and suffocated those who had taken refuge in caves with smoke.¹²²

In [April] 2021, Audrey Kichelewski, an associate professor of contemporary history at the University of Strasbourg who was writing a book about post-war trials of Poles, said she would be “very cautious with the vocabulary” she used and would not cite defendants’ names for fear of being sued by living relatives in Poland.¹²³

On 7 April 2021, President Emmanuel Macron made about 8.000 document linked to France’s role in the 1994 genocide in Rwanda publicly available. The decision followed a government-ordered report released in March, which found that French authorities remained blind to the preparations for genocide.¹²⁴

See also Algeria, Cameroon, Niger, Poland, Rwanda, Syria, Thailand.

¹²¹ David Matthews, “French Academics Fear Being Scapegoated for Terrorism,” Inside HigherEd (4 December 2020); Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 164.

¹²² Ahmed Rouaba, “Colonial Governor of Algeria’s Sign Defaced in Paris,” BBC News (19 March 2021).

¹²³ David Matthews, “Polish Pressure Forces Holocaust Historian to Self-censor,” The Times Higher Education Supplement (15 April 2021).

¹²⁴ “France Opens Archives on Rwanda Genocide,” Deutsche Welle (7 April 2021).

GABON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016, 2018.

GAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016–2018.

In November 2019, Fabián Salvioli, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence, published his preliminary observations on Gambia, stating that “numerous reports ... indicate that the government has made insufficient efforts to secure and archive documentary and on-site evidence of past violations, which could be used in criminal proceedings. An alarming example [was] that the headquarters of the National Security Agency (NIA [Agence nationale de renseignement]), now informally called State Security Service (SIS), was refurbished in 2017, which could have led to the destruction of possible evidence. The TRRC [Truth, Reconciliation and Reparations Commission] visited the SIS headquarters in 2018 and ordered it to stop the renovations ...” On 6 January 2021, NIA director Ousman Sowe (employed by the agency since its creation in 1995) testified on the destruction of evidence after the fall of the Yahya Jammeh dictatorship (1994–2017) before the TRRC. He was accused of burning NIA documents, a charge he denied.¹²⁵

See also Myanmar.

GEORGIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2003, 2010–2012, 2014, 2016, 2019.

¹²⁵ Preliminary Observations from the Official Visit to The Gambia by the Special Rapporteur on the Promotion of Truth, Justice, Reparation and Guarantees of Non-recurrence, Fabián Salvioli from 20 to 27 November 2019 (27 November 2019); Mustapha K. Darboe, “Gambie: L’Espion qui en savait trop ou pas assez.” JusticeInfo.Net (11 January 2021).

GERMANY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–2000, 2003, 2006–2013, 2015–2017, 2019–2020.

In April 2021, Culture Minister Monika Grütters announced that Germany would start returning a “substantial” part of the Benin bronzes held in its museums to Nigeria from 2022 onward. The bronzes, which were looted by British soldiers and sailors on a punitive expedition to Benin City in 1897, were subsequently sold to museums in Europe and North America. About 1,100 artefacts ended up in Germany. The Benin bronzes could in the future be held at the Edo Museum of West African Art, a new museum in Benin City designed by the Ghanaian-British architect David Adjaye. The government said it would help fund a pavilion to hold some restituted artefacts until the museum was completed in 2025.

Jürgen Zimmerer, a historian of colonialism at Hamburg University, was critical, saying the government’s announcement amounted to a face-saving exercise rather than an emphatic gesture appropriate to the historic context. “Instead of unconditionally committing itself to returning all looted art, there is only vague talk of a substantial part,” said Zimmerer. “How this part is determined, and by whom, is left unsaid.”¹²⁶

See also Brazil, China, France, Poland, Russia, Syria.

GHANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2004–2008, 2017, 2019.

GREECE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2004–2011, 2013–2019.

GRENADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007.

¹²⁶ Philip Oltermann, “Germany First to Hand Back Benin Bronzes Looted by British,” Guardian (30 April 2021).

GUATEMALA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2020.

In March 2019, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights ordered Guatemala, in a binding ruling, to shelve the proposed legislation that would provide amnesty for genocide and other atrocities. In late 2020, this had not happened [See also NCH Annual Report 2020].¹²⁷

On 15 October 2020, the Minister of Culture and Sports issued decree 934–2020 declaring the Archivo Histórico de la Policía Nacional (AHPN; Historical Archive of the National Police) part of the cultural patrimony of the nation. On 27 February 2021, the Constitutional Court confirmed the amparo (a request for the protection of legal rights), thereby rejecting the appeal of the Interior Ministry [See also NCH Annual Reports 2019–2020].¹²⁸

See also Israel.

GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2020.

Eleven years after security forces on 28 September 2009 massacred over 150 peaceful opposition supporters and raped dozens of women at the Stade du 28 September – named after the day Guinea voted “no” in the French referendum in 1958, which ultimately led to the political independence on 2 October – those responsible had not been tried [See also NCH Annual Reports 2010–2012, 2015, 2019–2020]. In November 2019, then-Justice Minister Mohammed Lamine Fofana had stated that the trial would take place no later than June 2020. The International Criminal Court, which had an ongoing preliminary examination of the 2009 massacre, urged the government to meet the June deadline. Fofana was, however, replaced in June by a new minister, Mory Doumbouya, and the trial had yet to begin in late 2020. Five people charged in the case were detained beyond the legal limit while they waited for the trial to start.¹²⁹

¹²⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 283.

¹²⁸ Acuerdo ministerial 934–2020 (15 October 2020); Lourdes Arana, “CC confirma amparo que garantiza protección del Archivo Histórico de la PN,” La Hora (27 February 2021); United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, Situation of Human Rights in Guatemala (UN Doc. A/HRC/46/74) (11 February 2021), paragraph 72.

¹²⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 293.

GUINEA-BISSAU

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2012, 2015.

GUYANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997.

HAITI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2000–2003, 2006, 2008–2009, 2013–2020.

Re-opened investigations into arbitrary detentions, torture, disappearances, summary executions, and forced exile during the presidency of Jean-Claude Duvalier (1971–1986) remained pending. In 2014, a Court of Appeal had ruled that statutes of limitations were inapplicable to crimes against humanity, ordering investigations to continue for crimes committed during Duvalier’s presidency [See also NCH Annual Reports 2000–2001, 2003, 2012–2020].¹³⁰

On 23 June 2020, former Haitian death squad leader Emmanuel “Toto” Constant (1956–), was deported from the United States and detained. While on the payroll of the US Central Intelligence Agency, Constant founded a paramilitary organization that was complicit in murdering at least 3,000 Haitians in 1991–1994. In 2000, he was convicted in absentia for involvement in a 1994 massacre in the Raboteau neighborhood of Gonaïves [See also NCH Annual Report 2009]. Under Haitian law, Constant had the right to a new trial. The United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights Michelle Bachelet urged Haiti to hold him accountable. Given the climate of impunity that characterized the regime of President Jovenel Moïse (1968–2021), lawyers and human rights groups voiced concerns that Constant would go free. In 2018, Jean-Robert Gabriel, who was also convicted in 2000 of involvement in the Raboteau massacre through command responsibility, had been named assistant chief of staff of the reinstated Haitian armed forces by Moïse.¹³¹

See also Israel.

HONDURAS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998, 2001–2002, 2009–2015.

HONG KONG

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996. From 1997: See China.

¹³⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 299, 300.

¹³¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 300.

HUNGARY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997, 2004, 2007–2020.

In 2020, defamation and slander remained criminal offenses, along with desecrating the memory of deceased persons. The Criminal Code also prohibited dishonoring or degrading national symbols, while the prohibition on incitement to hatred problematically included incitement to hatred of the nation. Prohibitions on totalitarian symbols and open denial of Nazi or Communist crimes also raised free speech concerns, since they were not limited to contexts where this speech constituted hate speech and they did not include intent requirements.¹³²

In September 2020, the National Core Curriculum was rolled out in elementary and secondary schools. One of the curriculum's goals was for students to learn to be "proud of their people's past." The nation's historical wartime defeats were deleted from textbooks and replaced by portrayals of victorious battles; legends and myths were presented as historical facts. The authoritarian rule of Miklós Horthy (1868–1957) in 1920–1944 was to be portrayed in a positive light, despite the fact that he had passed anti-Jewish laws in 1920 and later became one of Adolf Hitler's close allies. The literature program further removed Nobel Laureate Imre Kertész (1929–2016), who wrote extensively about the Shoah, and German Peace Prize winning author Péter Esterházy (1950–2016) from the curriculum. It made works by József Nyíró (1889–1953), a member of the fascist Arrow Cross Party and an admirer of Nazi propaganda minister Joseph Goebbels, and Albert Wass (1908–1998), who was an avowed anti-Semite and convicted war criminal, mandatory readings. The government of Viktor Orbán's Fidesz party had been pushing the rehabilitation of these authors for years, erecting new monuments and naming streets after them [See also NCH Annual Report 2020].¹³³

Charles Kecskemeti (1933–2021) was a historian who went into exile during the 1956 Revolution. He went to France, where he began working at the National Archives in 1957. He joined the International Council on Archives in 1962 as Secretary and then as Executive Secretary (1969–1988), Executive Director (1988–1992), and Secretary-General (1992–1999). He passed away on 2 April 2021. He wrote extensively on archives and archival theory.¹³⁴

¹³² Centre for Law and Democracy, Restrictions on Civic Space Globally: Law and Policy Mapping Series, vol. 2, Europe and Central Asia Region (Halifax: CLD, July 2020), 28.

¹³³ Felix Schlagwein, "New School Curriculum Raises Eyebrows in Orbán's Hungary," Deutsche Welle (31 March 2021); Amnesty International, State of the World's Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 181.

¹³⁴ "Remembering Dr Charles Kecskemeti," Website International Council on Archives (Paris: ICA, s.d. [2021]).

INDIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1997, 2000–2020.

Throughout 2020, Romila Thapar (1931–), a preeminent historian of ancient India, was the subject of verbal attacks, accusing her of ignorance about ancient Indian history and quickly devolving into “pornographic and sexist” remarks, by supporters of the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP; Indian People’s Party) who viewed her as an opponent to be discredited. Her research and writings were seen by BJP supporters as an attempt to undermine BJP efforts to project a unified Hindu tradition stretching back thousands of years, and to paint Muslim rulers of India as nothing more than invaders or tyrants. In 2019, Delhi’s Jawaharlal Nehru University, where Thapar spent decades teaching, had sent her a letter asking her to submit her curriculum vitae so officials could “review” her status as an emeritus professor, an honorary title normally given for life [See also NCH Annual Report 2015].¹³⁵

In February 2020, the Modern College in Pune, Maharashtra, canceled the scheduled program for the Commemoration of the 150th anniversary of Mahatma Gandhi, including a lecture by Tushar Gandhi, after a letter with threats from the extremist Hindutva organization Patitpavan.¹³⁶

In [July] 2020, a PhD candidate (name unknown) at Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU) claimed that faculty at his university labeled him as “separatist” for a research proposal on the political economy of Jammu and Kashmir (an Indian-controlled, Muslim-majority region that the governments of India and Pakistan have disputed for decades). They allegedly pressured him to retitle his research proposal and make it more benign, including by omitting decades from his proposed historical analysis.¹³⁷

On 11 July 2020, Mumbai-based stand-up comedian Agrima Joshua was forced to apologize for a joke made in a video in April 2019 in which she spoofed the naivety of commenters on the site Quora making outlandish claims about a statue for Marathi King Chhatrapati Shivaji (1627–1680) proposed by the government and being planned off the coast of Mumbai. Two men who issued death and rape threats were arrested days later and charged with criminal intimidation and obscenity. However, Maharashtra Home Minister Anil Deshmukh announced that further action would be taken against Joshua because ¹³⁵ Niha Masih, “In the Battle over India’s History, Hindu Nationalists Square Off against a Respected Historian.” Washington Post (3 January 2021).

¹³⁶ “Six Tables that Tell the Story of Academic Unfreedom in India.” The Wire (18 April 2021).

¹³⁷ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2020 (New York: SAR, 2020), 51, 56.

she had supposedly made “offensive comments” on Shivaji [See also NCH Annual Reports 2004, 2009–2011, 2014, 2020].¹³⁸

On 26 July 2020, the Uttar Pradesh education board’s decision to drop portions related to Congress’s history, former Prime Ministers Jawaharlal Nehru (1889–1964) and Lal Bahadur Shastri (1904–1966) from the Class 12 civics syllabus angered Congress, which wrote a letter to Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath and Governor Anandi Ben Patel urging them to ensure that the relevant portions were reintroduced in the syllabus. Calling it a “conspiracy,” Congress leader Anil Shastri, son of Lal Bahadur Shastri, told the press that the central and state governments wanted to eliminate Congress’s contribution to the freedom struggle and to the post-independence nation building from the school curriculum. The portions dropped from the syllabus included the phase of single party (Congress) dominance, the first three general elections, the nature of Congress’s dominance at the national level, the general election of 1967, the division and re-organization of the Congress, and the party’s victory in the 1971 elections. Topics on “The Rise of Nazism,” Hitler and the Harappan civilization were also dropped from Class 12 history syllabus. Divya Kant Shukla, secretary of the Board of High School and Intermediate Education in Uttar Pradesh, said that all these topics had been removed from the syllabi and not from textbooks.¹³⁹

On 13 September 2020, historian and human rights activist Umar Khalid (1987–) was arrested for his alleged role in deadly riots in New Delhi in February 2020 [See also NCH Annual Report 2020], in what was condemned as a politically motivated investigation into anti-government figures. He was accused of masterminding the riots and making incendiary speeches under the counterterrorism Unlawful Activities Prevention Act and would be held in police custody for ten days. The riots, in which at least 53 people were killed and hundreds injured, triggered some of the worst religious violence in New Delhi in decades. Both Hindus and Muslims committed acts of violence, but Muslims were disproportionately affected. A report by Amnesty International alleged that Delhi police had “committed serious human rights violations” during the communal riots, including beating Muslim protesters and taking part in the violence alongside Hindu mobs. On 1 September 2020, Khalid had written to the Delhi police commissioner alleging that the investigators were putting pressure on his acquaintances to implicate him in the violence [See also NCH Annual Report 2017].¹⁴⁰

¹³⁸ “Agrima Joshua: One More Arrested for Issuing Threat, but Minister Insists Comedian Will Face Action,” The Wire (13 July 2020).

¹³⁹ Prashant Srivastava, “UP Congress Threatens to Protest after Topics on Nehru-Shastri Dropped from Class 12 Syllabus,” The Print (27 July 2020).

¹⁴⁰ Hannah Ellis-Petersen, “Indian Student Activist Umar Khalid Arrested over Delhi Riots,” Guardian (14 September 2020); Human Rights Watch, “India: Arrests of Activists Politically Motivated: Sedition, Counterterrorism Laws Used to Silence Dissent” (press release) (16 September 2020); Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 183.

On 17 September 2020, Jawaharlal Nehru University students Devangana Kalita ([1990]–), studying at the Center for Women’s Studies, and Natasha Narwal ([1988]–), a PhD student at the Center for Historical Studies, were freed on bail but immediately re-arrested by the Crime Branch of the Delhi police on new charges ranging from Criminal Code sections 147 (rioting), and 307 (attempt to murder), to 302 (murder), among others, related to the north-east Delhi riots in February 2020 [See also NCH Annual Report 2020]. Their lawyers said that they had been maliciously implicated in the case. On 17 June 2021, they were granted bail two days after their release was ordered. The judges criticized the government for confusing the right to protest with terrorist activity. On 18 June 2021, the Supreme Court would hear the Delhi police appeal against their bail.¹⁴¹

On 25 September 2020, a petition by Lucknow resident Ranjana Agnihotri ([1969]–) and five other Hindus demanded a civil court in Mathura, Uttar Pradesh, to remove the Idgah Mosque (built in 1669–1670 during the rule of Mughal emperor Aurangzeb) from what they claimed was “Krishna’s birthplace” and to annul a 1968 court ruling, ratifying a land deal between the (Hindu) Shree Krishna Janmasthan Seva Sansthan and the (Muslim) Management Committee of the Shahi Masjid Idgah, perpetuating the existence of the mosque within the temple premises. The petition asked to excavate the deity’s birthplace. Agnihotri also moved the court as the “next friend of deities” Sri Krishna Virajman and the Asthan Shrikrishna Janam Bhoomi, claiming legal status on their behalf. The respondents of the petition included the Uttar Pradesh Sunni Central Waqf Board and the mosque’s Management Committee for the Muslim side and the two temple bodies Shree Krishna Janambhoomi Trust and Shree Krishna Janmasthan Seva Sansthan (arguing that they failed to protect the interests of the deities). The petition also stated that the provision in the Places of Worship Act (1991) that the religious character of a place of worship as it existed on 15 August 1947 would continue to be the same, was “not applicable in this case.”¹⁴²

On 30 September 2020, a court acquitted former Deputy Prime Minister L.K. Advani and Manohar Joshi and Uma Bharti, all top leaders of the governing Bharatiya Janata Party, of any wrongdoing in the destruction by Hindu mobs of the sixteenth-century Babri mosque in Ayodhya, Uttar Pradesh, in 1992 [See also NCH Annual Reports 2002–2004, 2006–2007, 2010–2011, 2015, 2017, 2020]. They were not found guilty of charges of “giving provocative speeches leading to demolition of the mosque, creating enmity between Hindus and Muslims and inciting people for riots and public mischief.” The verdict acquitted 32 of the 49 people charged – 17 had died while the case was under way. The court said that ¹⁴¹ “Pinjra Tod Member Natasha Narwal Gets Bail in Delhi Riots Case,” National Herald (17 September 2020); “Delhi Riots: Activists Held over Citizenship Law Protests Leave Jail,” BBC News (17 June 2021).

¹⁴² “Petition Asks for Removal of Idgah Mosque From ‘Krishna’s Birthplace’ in Mathura,” The Wire (27 September 2020).

the destruction of the mosque in 1992 had been the work of unidentified “anti-socials” and had not been planned. The influential All India Muslim Personal Law Board, which represented Muslim social and political groups in India, said it would appeal the ruling in the high court. Many others criticized the ruling as well. Federal investigators had interviewed nearly 850 witnesses and examined 7,000 documents and television footage and photos of what happened on 6 December 2020 to help them frame charges against 49 people, including the BJP leaders. Among these sources, there were numerous credible eyewitness accounts that the tearing down of the mosque had been planned, rehearsed, and carried out with impunity and the connivance of a section of the local police in front of thousands of people. In 2019, the Supreme Court said the demolition had been a “calculated act” and an “egregious violation of law.” The Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI), which also investigated the case, had always maintained that the destruction was a planned event.¹⁴³

On 6 December 2020, Twitter suspended the account of prominent Indian journalist Salil Tripathi. Twitter’s decision, seen as censorship by a number of India’s most well-known writers, lawyers and journalists, came after Tripathi had tweeted on subjects including the 28-year commemoration of the demolition of the Babri Masjid (see above).¹⁴⁴

In early 2021, it became known that the annexe portions of the National Archives of India (NAI; established 1891, in Delhi since 1911) were scheduled to be demolished as part of the Central Vista project (a controversial rearrangement of Central Delhi), without it being clear where the hundreds of thousands of records in these annexe portions would be housed instead. The main heritage building would be retained or refurbished. A petition signed by numerous archivists, historians, and other academics aimed at preventing demolition until there was more transparency about a clear plan with proper oversight to regulate the possible relocation of and access to records. On 20 May 2021, Union Culture Minister Prahlad Singh assured researchers that records would be safely preserved while the annexe was being rebuilt. In June 2021, the Delhi High Court dismissed a public interest litigation against the project, saying that the land-use status of the existing building had been changed from “public and semi-public land” to “government land” as per March 2020.¹⁴⁵

¹⁴³ “Babri Mosque: India Court Acquits BJP Leaders in Demolition Case,” BBC News (30 September 2020); Soutik Biswas, “Babri Mosque: India’s Muslims Feel More Abandoned than Ever,” BBC News (1 October 2020).

¹⁴⁴ Hannah Ellis-Peterson, “Twitter Accused of Censoring Indian Critic of Hindu Nationalism,” Guardian (7 December 2020).

¹⁴⁵ “Transparency on Demolition of National Archives of India and Transfer of Its Holdings” (petition; 17 May 2021); Letter about the petition (17 May 2021); “Transparency Urged in Proposed Demolition of National Archives of India Buildings,” The Wire (19 May 2021); Sana Aziz, “Demolition Squad: India’s Archives and the Central Vista Project,” Telegraph (30 May 2021); Arnab Ganguly, “100 Historians of the World Express Concern over Fate of National Archives,” Telegraph (16 June 2021).

On 10 January 2021, the Godse Gyan Shala, a memorial library and “knowledge center” dedicated to Nathuram Godse (1910–1949), the man who shot Mahatma Gandhi (1869–1948) on 30 January 1948, was inaugurated in Gwalior, a city in the south of India. In recent years, as Hindu nationalism moved from an extremist fringe to mainstream politics, Godse’s public reputation steadily shifted from being condemned as traitor to being venerated as a misunderstood patriot. The library is just one of many recent efforts to memorialize and revere Godse. Hindu Mahasabha, a Hindu nationalist organization, erected several Godse statues, attempted to set up temples in his name, and celebrated Godse’s birthday as a holy day.¹⁴⁶

On 17 May 2021, the Masjid Gareeb Nawaz Al Maroof Mosque, was bulldozed in the district of Baranski in the Bharatiya Janata party (BJP)-led state of Uttar Pradesh. The demolition was in violation of an Allahabad high court order issued on 24 April, which stated that buildings in the state should be protected from any eviction or demolition until 31 May “in the wake of the upsurge of the pandemic.” The building of the mosque dated back to the time of British occupation.¹⁴⁷

See also Malawi, United Kingdom, United States.

INDONESIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2001–2002, 2004–2013, 2015–2019.

In April 2020, police arrested 23 activists in Ambon. They had participated in flag-raising ceremonies commemorating the 70th anniversary of the declaration of independence of the Republik Maluku Selatan (RMS; Republic of South Moluccas). The Ambon court found three of them guilty, sentencing two to two years and a third to three years in prison. On 23 March 2020, the military had instructed every household in Maluku to raise Indonesia’s national flag [See also NCH Annual Reports 2008–2011, 2014–2015].¹⁴⁸

See also Australia, Netherlands.

¹⁴⁶ Hannah Ellis-Petersen, “Mahatma Gandhi’s Killer Venerated as Hindu Nationalism Resurges in India,” Guardian (17 January 2021).

¹⁴⁷ Hannah Ellis-Petersen, “Indian Mosque Bulldozed in Defiance of High Court Order,” Guardian (18 May 2021).

¹⁴⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 333; Amnesty International, State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 188.

IRAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2020.

The authorities continued to systematically conceal the fate and whereabouts of several thousand political dissidents who were forcibly disappeared and extrajudicially executed in secret in 1988. On 3 September 2020, the United Nations (UN) Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances and six UN Special Rapporteurs wrote to the government warning that past and ongoing violations related to prison massacres in 1988 may amount to crimes against humanity and that they would call for an international investigation if these violations persisted. They also wrote that they were “further alarmed by the authorities’ refusal to provide families with accurate and complete death certificates, the destruction of mass graves, the ongoing threats and harassment of the families, the lack of investigation and prosecution for the killings, and the statements from the government denying or trivializing the cases and equating criticizing the killings with support for terrorism.” The privately sent letter was published in December 2020.

Between late July and early September 1988, about 30,000 of imprisoned political dissidents across Iran had forcibly been disappeared and then extrajudicially executed in secret after Ayatollah Khomeini had issued a fatwa (religious edict) in the summer of 1988 to execute “those who waged war on God.” Death Commissions sent victims to the gallows after mock trials. In 2018 Amnesty International had compiled evidence of the involvement of several individuals who held high positions of power in the enforced disappearances and extrajudicial executions.

In late April 2021, the authorities ordered members of the minority Bahai religious community to bury their dead in a mass grave for political prisoners executed in 1988. Many felt outraged and feared that by burying people at the site, the regime was trying to destroy mass gravesites of victims of the 1988 prison massacres in a bid to eliminate crucial evidence of crimes against humanity. The site had been bulldozed multiple times in recent decades.

On 19 June 2021, Ebrahim Raisi (1960–) was elected President. As a member of the 1988 Tehran Death Commission, Raisi allegedly sent as many as 3,000 people, mostly members of the Mujahedin-e Khalq (MEK) opposition movement, to be killed.¹⁴⁹

¹⁴⁹ Amnesty International, Blood-Soaked Secrets: Why Iran’s 1988 Prison Massacres Are Ongoing Crimes against Humanity (London: AI, 2018); Hassan Mahmoudi, “Call For Justice By Survivors Of Iran’s 1988 Massacre,” Eurasia Review (17 July 2019); United Nations Experts, Letter (Reference: AL IRN 20/2020) (3 September 2020); Amnesty International, “Iran: UN Calls for Accountability on 1988 Prison Massacres Marks Turning Point in Three-Decade Struggle” (9 December 2020); Amnesty International, State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 53, 190-193, 195; “Iran ‘Orders Bahais to Bury Dead at Mass Grave for Executed Prisoners’,” BBC News (29 April 2021); Patrick Wintour, “Iran’s President-Elect, Ebrahim Raisi, Is Hardliner Linked with Mass Executions,” Guardian (19 June 2021).

On 26 September 2020, three Iranian writers, Baktash Abtin, Reza Khandan-Mahabadi, and Keyvan Bazhan entered Evin prison to serve sentences related to their critical writings about successive Iranian governments. Members of the unauthorized Iranian Writers' Association (IWA), each of them had published numerous books of Iranian history, sociology and literary criticism. They had been convicted on charges of "spreading propaganda against the system" and "assembly and collusion against national security" on 15 May 2019. The charges related to their joint authorship of a book about the history of the IWA which for decades had been critical of successive Iranian governments. They were also accused of visiting the graves of dissident poets and writers. Khandan-Mahabadi and Abtin were each sentenced to six years' imprisonment, while Bazhan was sentenced to three and a half years in prison.¹⁵⁰

On 3 October 2020, Franco-Iranian Fariba Adelkhah (1959–), social and political anthropologist, specialist in Shia Islam, and director of research at Sciences Po's Center for International Studies (CERI) in Paris, was temporarily released from prison with an electronic ankle bracelet [See also NCH Annual Report 2020].¹⁵¹

See also Lebanon.

IRAQ

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2020.

In August 2020, Iraqi police arrested a suspected member of Islamic State (IS) and were led to a stockpile of 32 hidden Syriac books and manuscripts looted from Assyrian churches across Mosul during IS occupation (2014–2017). The texts were crucial to understanding and preserving ancient communities such as the Assyrians, an ethnic group indigenous to parts of Iraq, Turkey, Syria, and Iran.¹⁵²

See also Kuwait.

¹⁵⁰ PEN International, "Iran: Three Writers Face Lengthy Prison Sentences" (3 May 2019; with an update 17 May 2019); PEN International, "Iran: Writers Baktash Abtin, Reza Khandan-Mahabadi and Keyvan Bazhan Imprisoned" (Rapid Action Network, update 2: no. 02/2020) (30 October 2020).

¹⁵¹ "Fariba Adelkhah: French-Iranian Academic Temporarily Released in Iran," BBC News (3 October 2020); Scholars at Risk, Free to Think 2020 (New York: SAR, 2020), 41.

¹⁵² Joe Snell, "Syriac Manuscripts Recovered from Suspected Islamic State Fighter in Mosul," Al-Monitor (30 September 2020).

IRELAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000, 2002, 2004, 2006, 2013, 2015–2016.

In the autumn of 2020, the new Minister for Education, Norma Foley (appointed in June 2020), proposed a controversial Retention of Records Bill that would seal the records with testimonies of abuse survivors submitted in the 2000s to state investigations into abuse in (Catholic) residential institutions, all administrative records, and evidence relating to all operations in general until at least 2095. The bill did not provide for survivors to be given a copy of their own testimonies or asked whether they wished their testimonies to form part of the national historical record during their lifetimes. In April 2019, Foley’s predecessor, Joe McHugh, had controversially claimed that the bill was needed in order to overturn current legislation which would see the destruction of the records. A joint parliamentary committee had deferred consideration of the bill in November 2019. Maeve O’Rourke, a lecturer at the Irish Centre for Human Rights, who had been working with and on behalf of survivors since 2009, said: “Denying survivors the opportunity to place their testimonies – if they wish, voluntarily – in a national archive creates a risk that future generations will not learn of this history.”¹⁵³

ISRAEL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000–2003, 2008–2014, 2016–2020.

In 1953, Hungarian-Jewish journalist Malchiel Greenwald (Malkiel Grünwald) distributed a self-published pamphlet in which he accused Rezsó Kasztner (aka Rudolf or Yisrael Kastner) (1906–1957), one of the leaders of Hungarian Jewry and head of the Zionist Rescue Committee in wartime Budapest, of having made a deal with SS leader Adolf Eichmann in 1944 to allow the emigration of 1,684 Jews while the rest, hundreds of thousands of Jews, were led to the extermination camps. He declared that Kasztner was guilty of collaboration with the Nazis; of “preparing the ground for the murder” of Hungarian Jewry; of profiteering with Nazi war criminal S.S. Commander Kurt Becher; and of helping the latter to evade punishment after the war. Greenwald was charged with defaming Kasztner. In the June 1955 ruling of the District Court of Jerusalem, Kasztner was acquitted of the first, second, and fourth counts. The verdict triggered the fall of the cabinet of Prime Minister Moshe Sharett. Kasztner, who had moved to Israel after the war resigned his position as a spokesman for the Ministry of Trade and Industry (1952–1955). The Attorney-General appealed the district court’s judgment. On 3 March ¹⁵³ Jessica Ní Mhainín, “What Has the Government Got to Hide?” Index on Censorship (19 no. 3, 2020), 20–21.

1957, Kasztner was shot by right-wing extremist, former Irgun member and former Shin Bet informant Ze'ev Eckstein, immediately after the appeal hearings were concluded. He died of his injuries twelve days later. In January 1958, the Supreme Court reversed the verdict, accepting the main part of the appeal, stating that the lower court had “erred seriously”: Kasztner was convicted of the first two charges, his acquittal on the fourth charge remaining intact. In March 2021, historian Nadav Kaplan ([1945]–) who investigated the assassination and security agency Shin Bet’s involvement in it, filed a petition in the High Court to force the release of Shin Bet’s file on the case. One month after Kasztner’s assassination, Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion had placed a restriction order on the identity of the Shin Bet security agents to testify in a court case on the issue.¹⁵⁴

A State Comptroller report revealed that about 1,300,000 historical files in the Israel State Archives were hidden from the public eye, despite the fact that the confidentiality assigned to them by Israeli law had expired. The need to file an application, the complexity and duration of the document’s reclassification process, and the limited disclosure by various archives were serious barriers for researchers. In a series of freedom-of-information petitions filed in recent years, regarding Israeli defense exports to dictatorships (e.g. ties with the dictatorship in Haiti, with the government in Sri Lanka during the civil war, with the juntas in Argentina and Chile and with the Hutu regime during the civil war and 1994 genocide in Rwanda), courts accepted the official position that the documents should not be disclosed for fear of harming national security and foreign relations.

In late 2019, Italy Mack, a Jerusalem-based human rights defender, had demanded an inquiry from the chief prosecutor over Israel’s role in the Guatemalan civil war (1960–1996), which killed more than 200,000 people, but the prosecutor’s investigation progressed slowly due to the defense ministry’s stalling of the disclosure of sensitive documents.¹⁵⁵

On 18 January 2021, the Lod District Court in Israel banned the screening and distribution of the 2002 documentary Jenin, Jenin directed by Mohammed Bakri (1953–), a Palestinian citizen of Israel, in a defamation case filed in 2017 by Nissim Magnagi, an Israeli army officer who appeared in the film. The court also found that some of the representations in the film were untrue. In addition to prohibiting all screenings of the film in Israel, the court issued an order to confiscate 24 copies of the film and ordered Bakri to pay NIS (shekels) 175,000 ($55,000) in damages as well as NIS 50,000 ($15,500) in legal expenses. The film showed a set of interviews with Palestinians who lived in the Jenin refugee ¹⁵⁴ Guardian (23 April & 14 June 1999); Jenni Frazer, “On Quest to Clear Kasztner, Historian ‘Shocked’ to Prove Nazi Collaboration,” Times of Israel (15 November 2016); Hannah Arendt, Eichmann in Jerusalem: A Report on the Banality of Evil (originally 1963; Harmondsworth: Penguin, 2006), xv, 143; Ofer Aderet, “An Israeli Suspected of Nazi Collaboration Was Murdered: What Is Israel Hiding?,” Haaretz (21 March 2021).

¹⁵⁵ Eldad Ben Aharon & Eitay Mack, “Israeli Archives Censorship Regulations and Oral History,” Jerusalem Post (22 August 2020); “Israel’s Role in War Crimes Committed during the Guatemalan Civil War,” TRT World (18 February 2021).

camp, north of the occupied West Bank, at the height of the Second Intifada in April 2002 when it was invaded by the Israeli military for eleven days. The 54-minute film depicted without commentary the events which led to a massacre through stories of survivors. The film had already been banned by the Israel Film Council shortly after its release in 2002 after a complaint by five Israeli soldiers, but a Supreme Court ruling on 11 November 2003 had overturned that ban as an unlawful infringement on Bakri's freedom of expression. Bakri intended to appeal the 2021 District Court's decision and file a petition in the Israeli High Court. In 2002, Human Rights Watch had reported that at least 52 Palestinians, including women, children and elderly, and 23 Israeli soldiers were killed in the assault, accusing Israel of war crimes.¹⁵⁶

See also Belgium, Palestinian Territories, Poland, United Kingdom.

ITALY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2003, 2008, 2010, 2012, 2016–2019.

Impunity remained for many of the crimes committed by mafia organizations. On 21 March 2021, a report by the anti-mafia association Libera – an organization that fights for mafia victims' right to be remembered – concluded that almost 80% of the approximately 600 cases of innocent victims of organized crime had remained unsolved or had been only partially solved. Most investigations were closed for lack of evidence, while many others were trapped in endless trials and dozens were awaiting judicial action.¹⁵⁷

See also Poland.

¹⁵⁶ “Israeli Court Bans Screening of ‘Jenin, Jenin’ Documentary,” Court House News (12 January 2021); “Israel Bans Screening of ‘Jenin, Jenin’ after Soldier’s Lawsuit,” Al Jazeera (12 January 2021); Mustafa Abu Sneineh, “Filmmakers Denounce Israel Ban on Palestinian Documentary ‘Jenin, Jenin’,” Middle East Eye (20 January 2021); “Lift the Ban on Mohammed Bakri’s ‘Jenin, Jenin’” [Petition] (no date [January 2021]); NCH Campaign (2021); Documentary “Jenin, Jenin” on Vimeo (53’55 minutes); Human Rights Watch, Israel, The Occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip, and the Palestinian Authority Territories: Jenin, IDF Military Operations (New York: HRW, May 2002); Daphne Barak-Erez, “The Law of Historical Films: In the Aftermath of Jenin, Jenin,” Southern California Interdisciplinary Law Journal (Spring 2007), 495–522; Supreme Court of Israel sitting as High Court of Justice, Bakri and Others versus Israel Film Council. Ministry of Science, Culture and Sport, Petition for an Order Nisi (11 November 2003).

¹⁵⁷ Libera, Dirriti Viv! (Rome: Libera, 2021); Lorenzo Tondo, “‘No Peace Without Justice’: Families of Italy’s Mafia Victims Wait for Closure,” Guardian (12 July 2021).

IVORY COAST (Côte d'Ivoire)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006–2020.

The Supreme Court was yet to rule on a 2019 petition from human rights organizations to cancel a 2018 law granting an amnesty to hundreds of people accused or convicted of crimes committed in 2010 and 2011.¹⁵⁸

The appeal against the 2019 acquittal of former President and historian Laurent Gbagbo and former Minister Charles Blé Goudé by the International Criminal Court remained pending.¹⁵⁹

¹⁵⁸ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 132–133.

¹⁵⁹ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 132–133.

JAMAICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017–2018.

JAPAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2020.

In mid-September 2020, former prime minister Shinzo Abe visited the controversial Yasukuni war memorial (established in 1869) just days after stepping down. The shrine honored Japan's war dead, but also convicted war criminals. Abe declared that he had gone there to inform the spirits of the shrine of his resignation. His 2013 visit to the shrine had angered China and South Korea. Visits by Japan's leaders to the shrine had previously been seen as a lack of remorse for its militaristic past [See also NCH Annual Reports 2002, 2010].¹⁶⁰

On 1 October 2020, in an unprecedented move, the new Prime Minister Yoshihide Suga refused to appoint six scholars as new members to the Science Council of Japan (a representative organization of the Japanese scientist community founded in 1949 and consisting of 210 scholars that makes policy recommendations independent from the government). It was the first time that such a rejection was made public since the nomination system was introduced in 2004. No explanation was given. Some of the six scholars had voiced opposition to the controversial national security legislation (2015; permitting Japan to deploy military forces to respond to foreign attacks under certain conditions) and the anti-conspiracy legislation (2017). Critics saw the action as a political intervention in academic freedom. The six rejected academics included Sadamichi Ashina at Kyoto University and Shigeki Uno at the University of Tokyo, who were members of the Association of Scholars Opposed to the Security-related Laws, and Yoko Kato, a professor of Japanese modern history at the University of Tokyo. On 3 October 2020, the Japanese Historical Council issued a statement calling on Suga to rescind the decision. On 6 November 2020, 226 academic societies of liberal arts (including philosophy, literature, and historical science) jointly demanded that the government explain why it refused to appoint the six scholars. In the November 2020 extraordinary session of the Diet (Japanese parliament), Suga reiterated that he would not reappoint the rejected scholars. He insisted that his actions were "relevant and legal."¹⁶¹

¹⁶⁰ "Yasukuni Shrine: Japan's Ex-PM Abe Visits Controversial Memorial," BBC News (19 September 2020).

¹⁶¹ "PM Suga Refuses to Appoint 6 Scholars to Science Council of Japan in Unprecedented Move," The Mainichi (2 October 2020); "Academic Societies in Japan Issue Joint Statement," NHK (6 November 2020); Suvendrini Kakuchi, "Pressure Piling Up against PM's Science Council Decision," University World News (8 December 2020).

See also China; Korea, South; Netherlands, Russia, Singapore, United States.

JORDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003–2004, 2015, 2018.

2020); Edward Vickers, "Undermining Social Sciences and Humanities," University World News (29 January 2016); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 374.

KAZAKHSTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999–2001, 2007, 2012.

KENYA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2000, 2002–2005, 2007, 2009–2018, 2020.

Extrajudicial killings, abusive evictions, and lack of accountability for serious abuses remained significant challenges throughout 2020. Arrest warrants remained pending before the International Criminal Court against three persons on allegations of witness tampering in cases relating to the 2007/2008 election violence [See also NCH Annual Report 2020]. Killings by police remained largely unaddressed, with the Independent Policing Oversight Authority (IPOA), a civilian police accountability institution, unable to investigate and prosecute most of the over 2,000 incidents of police killings currently on its files. IPOA managed only six successful prosecutions since its establishment in 2011.¹⁶²

KOREA, NORTH

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2006–2007, 2009–2011, 2013–2015, 2017, 2019.

KOREA, SOUTH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998–2001, 2003, 2006, 2008–2010, 2012–2013, 2016–2020.

On 1 January 2021, the Seoul Central District Court ordered the Japanese government to pay 100 million won ($91,800) each to twelve Korean women forced into sexual slavery for Japan’s troops during World War II, saying the Japanese government committed “intentional, systematic and wide-ranging criminal acts against humanity.” It also granted a provisional execution of the compensation order, making it possible to immediately seize Japanese government assets. The Japanese government said the same day that “under the principle of exemption from sovereignty under international law” the court had no jurisdiction over Japan and that it would “never accept” the order. The court replied that the immunity claim was not valid because the case involved “anti-humanity acts systematically planned and perpetrated by the accused.” The case had been filed in 2013 by the Korean Council for Justice and Remembrance for the Issues of Military Sexual Slavery by Japan. It was the first time that a South Korean court held the Japanese government responsible for the sexual slavery system.

¹⁶² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 390.

A decision on another case, in which eleven former “comfort women” were seeking similar compensation, was scheduled for March 2021. Japan accused South Korea of undermining the 1965 treaty that established diplomatic ties between the two nations, under which Japan provided South Korea with $500 million in aid and cheap loans. It insisted that all claims arising from its colonial rule (1910–1945), including those involving forced laborers and sexually enslaved women, had been settled by the treaty. The South Korean government reacted to the court order by vowing to seek an “amicable solution.” On 21 April 2021, the same Seoul Central District Court (but with a different panel of judges and plaintiffs) ruled that Japan had sovereign immunity in the case, and as a foreign state, was not liable to pay compensation in the civil suit.¹⁶³

See also Japan, United States.

KOSOVO

Previous Annual Report entries: See Serbia.

Neither the Serbian government nor the Kosovan government was doing enough to ensure that the remaining 1,600 people who went missing as a result of the Kosovo War (1998–1999) were found. Between 2016 and 2020, the remains of 18 people who disappeared during the Kosovo War were identified in Serbia, while another 32 missing persons were identified in Kosovo. Both governments had asked each other to open up wartime military archives, but no concrete steps had yet been taken.

On 27 August 2020, associations of Serb and Kosovo Albanian missing persons’ families (the Association of Kosmet Victims and the Missing Persons Resource Center in Pristina) told a press conference that both countries must open up wartime archives and reveal information about people who were still listed as missing from the Kosovo War. They demanded the opening of all the archives and evidence related to potential graves, comprehensive and professional investigations, and witness protection. They said that at the moment there were 1,643 people still listed as missing from the Kosovo War. On 30 August 2020, International Day of the Disappeared, families of missing Kosovo Serbs and Kosovo Albanians in both Belgrade (the Serbian capital) and Pristina (the Kosovan capital) together called on their governments to open military archives to help identify burial sites.

¹⁶³ Choe Sang-Hun, “South Korean Court Orders Japan to Pay Compensation for Wartime Sexual Slavery,” New York Times (7 January 2021); “South Korea Seeks “Amicable Solution” to Comfort Women Issue with Japan,” Kyodo News (23 January 2021); Nicolas Rocca, “Seoul Court Decision Reignites Japan-Korea War of Memory,” JusticeInfo (15 February 2021); “South Korea Court Sides With Japan in ‘Comfort Women’ Case,” Newsmax (21 April 2021).

On 25 March 2021, the European Parliament (EP) adopted a report calling on Kosovo to do more to investigate suspected wartime gravesites and resolve the remaining missing persons cases from the Kosovo War. The report also called on the authorities in Pristina to open all wartime archives.¹⁶⁴

In 2020, the Kosovo Judicial Council, the country's highest judicial body, did not yet have a specific archive of evidence of war crimes committed during the Kosovo War (1998–1999). As late as 2018, the European Union's rule-of-law mission EULEX handed over around 900 war crimes files and around 2,000 files on missing persons to the Kosovo Prosecutorial Council, but these were spread around in court archives and only a few of the war crimes cases had been registered at the Criminal Records Center, a database of completed criminal cases in Kosovo. These files were not accessible to journalists, researchers, or the general public. The situation was made more complicated because Kosovo and Serbia did not cooperate; the evidence that EULEX and UNMIK (the United Nations mission in Kosovo responsible for investigating serious crimes cases before EULEX) had been able to obtain from Serbia had often been insufficient to prove criminal responsibility, which resulted in a considerable number of investigations being dropped or suspects being acquitted.¹⁶⁵

Impunity persisted for those responsible for the transfer of bodies of over 900 Kosovo-Albanians from Kosovo to Serbia in 1999. In November 2020, human remains, believed to be Kosovo Albanians, were discovered in a quarry in Kizevak.¹⁶⁶

Proceedings began at the Kosovo Specialist Chambers (KSC) established in The Hague in 2016. On 24 June 2020, the Hague-based Specialist Prosecutor's Office (SPO) filed a ten-count indictment with the KSC, charging President Hashim Thaçi along with former Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) General Staff Kadri Veseli, Rexhep Selimi, and Jakup Krasniqi with war crimes and crimes against humanity, including the murder of around hundred civilians, including Serbs, Roma and ethnic Albanian ¹⁶⁴ Milica Stojanovic, "Serbs, Kosovo Albanians Make Joint Appeal for Missing Persons," Balkan Insight (27 August 2020); European Parliament, 2019-2020 Reports on Kosovo (2019/2172(INI), 25 March 2021), § 70; Milica Stojanovic, "European MPs Urge Serbia, Kosovo to Intensify War Grave Search," Balkan Insight (26 March 2021); Milica Stojanovic, "Serbia, Kosovo Must Make Missing Persons a Priority: Report," Balkan Insight (27 April 2021); Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 217–218, 315.

¹⁶⁵ Emina Dizdarevic, Serbeze Haxhijaj, Anja Vladisavljevic, and Milica Stojanovic, "Access Denied: Most Balkan War Crimes Case Files Not Public," Balkan Insight (28 September 2020).

¹⁶⁶ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 315.

opponents. Following the indictment, Thaçi travelled to The Hague on 13 July, where he was questioned for four days over his role as a KLA-leader during the Kosovo War (1998–1999). On 5 November Thaçi announced that he stepped down as president, after war crimes charges against him were confirmed by a pre-trial judge at the KSC.

In September 2020, the SPO summoned Agim Çeku, former Prime Minister and KLA commander, for questioning. In the same month, proceedings opened against former KLA commander Salih Mustafa, indicted for the arbitrary detention, cruel treatment, torture, and murder of civilians at Zllash detention camp in April 1999. Confidential SPO files naming protected witnesses were anonymously leaked to the KLA War Veterans' Organization; subsequently two officials were transferred to the court, and publicly indicted in December 2020 for the obstruction of justice, witness intimidation, and secrecy violations.¹⁶⁷

See also Montenegro, Serbia.

KUWAIT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2000, 2004–2005, 2018.

On 28 March 2021, eight tons of documents and other items taken during the 1990 invasion by Iraq, were returned by the Iraqi government, in the third shipment that the country received since 2019. The shipment contained archives from Kuwait University, the information ministry, and other institutions [See also NCH Annual Report 2003].¹⁶⁸

¹⁶⁷ Marija Ristic, "Kosovo Specialist Prosecutor Charges Thaci with War Crimes," Balkan Insight (24 June 2020); Xhorxhina Bami and Xheneta Murtezaj, "Hague War Crime Prosecutors Quiz Kosovo President Thaci," Balkan Insight (13 July 2020); Xhorxhina Bami, "Kosovo President 'Pleased' after Four-Day War Crimes Questioning," Balkan Insight (17 July 2020); "Kosovo War Crimes Court Arrests First Suspect," Al Jazeera (24 September 2020); Xhorxhina Bami, "Hague Prosecutors Publish Kosovo Guerrilla's War Crimes Indictment," Balkan Insight (25 September 2020); Xhorxhina Bami, "Kosovo President Thaci Resigns to Face War Crimes Charges," Balkan Insight (5 November 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 396; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 217–218.

¹⁶⁸ "Kuwait Receives Tonnes of National Archives from Iraq," France24 (28 March 2021).

KYRGYZSTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010–2013, 2016–2017.

Ten June 2020 marked ten years since the outbreak of the 2010 South Kyrgyzstan riots, a period of ethnic violence between ethnic Kyrgyz and ethnic Uzbeks following the ousting of former President Kurmanbek Bakiyev, in which 400 people were killed and nearly 2,000 homes destroyed. Authorities failed to ensure accountability for crimes committed during the violence, or justice for the people arbitrarily arrested and convicted in trials marred by widespread allegations of ill-treatment and torture in the aftermath [See also NCH Annual Report 2011].¹⁶⁹

See also China.

¹⁶⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 406, 407.

LATVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2006, 2008, 2015–2016, 2019.

LEBANON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2003, 2006–2020.

On 18 August 2020, the Special Tribunal for Lebanon (STL) found guilty Salim Jamil Ayyash, a senior member of Hezbollah, of the bombing of former Prime Minister Rafik Hariri on 14 February 2005 [See also NCH Annual Reports 2010–2011, 2013–2015]. Another Hezbollah figure, the group's former military commander Mustafa Badreddine, who was killed in Syria in May 2016, was initially accused of being the link to Ayyash [See also NCH Annual Report 2019]. However, the STL could not verify Badreddine's involvement.¹⁷⁰

On 4 February 2021, Lokman Mohsen Slim (1962–2021), a Shiite publisher and archivist who criticized Iran-backed Hezbollah, was found shot dead in a car near Sidon in southern Lebanon, an area reportedly controlled by Hezbollah. Slim had accused the Shia Islamist militant group of intimidation tactics and intolerance of other political views. Slim had made documentaries with his wife and led efforts to build an archive on Lebanon's sectarian civil war (1975–1990). In an interview on Saudi's al-Hadath television shortly before his death, Slim had said he believed Hezbollah had a role in the port blast that ripped through Beirut in August 2020, killing 205 people and wounding more than 6,500. In December 2019, he had declared that his family home and offices were targeted by people gathering in the garden, chanting slurs and threats, holding Hezbollah's leader Hassan Nasrallah and Amal's leader Nabih Berri responsible. At the time, Slim had also said he had received death threats after speaking in a debate at an anti-government Beirut camp. On 22 March 2021, three United Nations experts called on the government to ensure a credible and effective investigation into Slim's death.

In 1990, Slim had founded the independent publishing house Dar al-Jadeed which published Arabic literature and articles that stirred controversy. Some were censored and banned by the Lebanese General Security, including the first Arabic translations of former Iranian reformist president Muhammad Khatami's writings. In 2001, he established UMAM Productions, a film company which produced films such as Massaker, about the crimes of six perpetrators in the 1982 Sabra and Shatila massacre. In 2004, he co-founded the UMAM Documentation and Research center, an open archive about Lebanese history, including the missing from the civil war (1975–1990). He published several historical documents and acquired the film footage of a major producer of Lebanese motion pictures and advertising. In 2005, he launched Hayya Bina (Let's Go), a project to promote citizen involvement throughout the political process and to criticize the sectarian system; it gave rise to several public advocacy projects within Shia areas. Slim was also an outspoken critic of Lebanon's political class, of the repression of the 2011 uprising in Syria, and of Iran's regional involvement. In recent years, he also helped many Syrian groups collect important materials on the war in Syria [See also NCH Annual Report 2020].¹⁷¹

¹⁷⁰ Special Tribunal for Lebanon, The Prosecutor v. Ayyash et al.: Amended Indictment (Leidschendam: STL, 2013), 2; Special Tribunal for Lebanon, The Prosecutor v. Ayyash et al.: Summary of Judgement (Leidschendam: STL, 2020), 148-149; Martin Chulov, "Hezbollah Member Found Guilty over Killing of Rafik Hariri," Guardian (18 August 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 419.

LIBERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2004–2015, 2018.

Despite the Final Report of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) issued in June 2009, which recommended criminal prosecutions and the establishment of a Specialized Tribunal for war crimes committed in Liberia, no one had yet been prosecuted or tried for crimes committed during the First and Second Liberian civil wars (1989–1997 and 1999–2003) that left more than 250,000 dead and hundreds of thousands of refugees. In 2012, former President Charles Taylor (1948–) had been sentenced to fifty years' imprisonment for carrying responsibility for crimes committed by rebel forces during Sierra Leone's civil war (1991–2002) by the Special Court for Sierra Leone (SCSL). He was, however, not charged with crimes committed in Liberia, as the competence of the SCSL was limited to crimes committed in Sierra Leone [See also NCH Annual Reports 2008–2012, 2015].

On 3 December 2020, the trial against Alien Kosiiah started in Switzerland. Kosiiah, a teenager when the conflict began, became one of the “big men” in the United Liberation Movement of Liberia for Democracy (ULIMO), which fought against the troops of Charles Taylor in the First Liberian civil war ¹⁷¹ “Lokman Slim, Prominent Hezbollah Critic, Shot Dead in South Lebanon,” France 24 (4 February 2021); Tala Michel Issa, “Who Is Lokman Slim: A Profile on Lebanese Activist, Hezbollah Critic Shot to Death,” Al Arabiya English (4 February 2021); “Lokman Slim: Prominent Hezbollah Critic Shot Dead in Lebanon,” BBC News (4 February 2021); Archives and Human Rights: News from the Section on Archives and Human Rights (no. 134, January 2021), 1; Benjamin Lynch, “The Murder of Publisher and Activist Lokman Slim Is a Stark Warning to Media in the Country,” Index on Censorship (24 February 2021); Website UMAM Documentation & Research; United Nations Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights, “Lebanon: Intellectual's Murder Needs In-depth Inquiry to Dispel Doubts over Justice System, Say UN Experts” (press release; 22 March 2021); Maha Yahya, “The Assassination of Lokman Slim – Silencing No Lamb,” Qantara (5 February 2021); Sune Haugballe & Henrik Andersen, “Political Assassinations and the Revolutionary Impasse in Lebanon and Iraq,” Middle East Report Online (11 May 2021).

(1989–1997) [See also NCH Annual Report 2018]. Kosiiah was sentenced to twenty years. On 1 February 2021, the trial of Gibril Massaquoi began in Tampere, Finland. Massaquoi, a Sierra Leonian national who held leading positions as Lieutenant-Colonel and spokesman within the Revolutionary United Front (RUF) during the Sierra Leonian Civil War (1991–2002) and worked closely with Charles Taylor, was charged with war crimes and crimes against humanity, including murder and aggravated rape, committed during the Second Liberian Civil War (1999–2003).¹⁷²

LIBYA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2005–2020.

Officials and members of militias and armed groups responsible for crimes under international law and other serious human rights violations enjoyed near total impunity, while judges and prosecutors were targeted by militias and armed groups. Saif al-Islam Gaddafi, a son of Muammar Gaddafi who was sentenced to death in absentia by a Libyan court in 2015, was wanted by the International Criminal Court (ICC) for his alleged role in attacks on civilians, including peaceful demonstrators, during the 2011 uprising. Gaddafi's whereabouts remained unknown. Two others continued to be subject to ICC arrest warrants: Al-Tuhamy Khaled, former head of the Internal Security Agency under Muammar Gaddafi, for war crimes and crimes against humanity committed between February and August 2011, and Libyan Arab Armed Forces commander, Mahmoud El-Werfalli, for the war crime of murder related to several incidents in and around Benghazi between June 2016 and January 2018. Al-Werfalli remained a senior leader in the Saiqa Force of the Libyan Arab Armed Forces [See also NCH Annual Reports 2014, 2018–2020].¹⁷³

See also United Kingdom.

¹⁷² “Liberian Rebel Commander Accused of Cannibalism Goes on Trial in Switzerland,” Guardian (3 December 2020); “Liberia: Trial of former RUF Commander Set to Begin before Finnish Court,” Front Page Africa (26 January 2021); Saira Huusko and New Narratives, “Frustration Shows on Final Day of Massaquoi Trial in Finland,” Premium Times (13 February 2021); “Swiss Court Convicts Liberian Rebel of Rape, Killings and Cannibalism,” Guardian (18 June 2021).

¹⁷³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 423; Amnesty International, State of the World's Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 231.

LITHUANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005, 2009, 2015, 2018.

On 1 February 2021, four historians (Alvydas Nikžentaitis, director of the Institute of History; Loreta Skurvydaitė, dean of the Faculty of History of Vilnius University; Vasilijus Safronovas, director of the Institute of Baltic Region History and Archaeology at Klaipėda University in Klaipėda and Vytautas Magnus University in Kaunas; and Marius Sirutavičius, Department of History of Vytautas Magnus University) expressed concern to the Seimas (national parliament) over the appointment in June 2020 of a new director of the Genocide and Resistance Research Center of Lithuania (LGGRTC). They stated that the choice for Adas Jakubauskas (1964–) “was not driven by the scholarly opinion of scientists, but by a politicized approach to sensitive, socially disruptive past events, ignoring basic criticism of historical sources,” and proposed setting up a scientific council at the LGGRTC, to which Lithuania’s academic institutions carrying out historical research would delegate their representatives.

Upon his installment, Jakubauskas had appointed new members to the LGGRTC, who openly started to push historians into the “right way”: the latter were told how to work with sources, how to present the “right history” and how to “fight in the propaganda war.” One of the new members, for whom a special post was created, was Vidmantas Valiušaitis (1956–), a long-time journalist, publicist, and author of books with an ultra-nationalist view of Lithuanian history. Valiušaitis’s views on history had been criticized by historians from Lithuania and around the world who study the period of the Nazi-occupation (June 1941–January 1945), and by the Lithuanian Jewish Community, that released a statement “to point out that in several recent publications Vidmantas Valiušaitis intentionally distorted the facts and publicized falsehoods concerning the anti-Semitic activities of the Lithuanian Activist Front and the Lithuanian Provisional Government of 1941.”

On 12 March 2021, Mingailė Jurkutė, a historian working at the Faculty of History of Vilnius University and specializing in the Lithuanian guerilla war against the Soviet occupation during its early years (1944–1953), was dismissed from the LGGRTC after accusations of disclosing “secret information.” The dismissal followed an online opinion piece in which she had criticized Jakubauskas and others, for attempting “to spread propaganda.” Jurkutė is the author of, among others, CIA Intelligence in the Baltics (1947–1953) (2020) and co-editor of Democracy in Lithuania: Civil Spirit versus Totalitarianism at the Defining Moments of the Twentieth Century (2011).

On 19 March 2021, a Seimas working group that examined the situation at the LGGRTC expressed doubts about whether Jakubauskas could continue to lead it and proposed that the Seimas resolve the issue. On 1 April 2021, the Seimas voted to dismiss Jakubauskas.¹⁷⁴

¹⁷⁴ Modesta Gaučaitė, “Valiušaitis’s Appointment Worries Historians and Jewish Community,” Lithuanian Jewish Community (28 July 2020); “Representatives of the Institute of History and Three Universities Refuse to

Valdas Rakutis, a history professor affiliated to the Genocide and Resistance Research Center of Lithuania (LGGRTC) and a former adviser to the armed forces who was elected to the Seimas in 2020, resigned as chairman of the Seimas commission on the state's historical memory and apologized to "all the people who felt offended" after he had declared in a statement published on the public broadcaster's website on 27 January 2021 (Holocaust Memorial Day) that there had been "no shortage of Holocaust perpetrators among the Jews themselves."¹⁷⁵

Cooperate with the LGGRTC,” Penkiolika minučių (1 February 2021); “Lithuanian Media Respond to Changes at Genocide Center,” Lithuanian Jewish Community (9 February 2021); Mingailė Jurkutė, “Two Noreikas: Laser Sight against Flintlock Musket in Information Wars,” Lithuanian Jewish Community (12 February 2021); Loreta Skurvydaitė, personal communication (15 March 2021); “It Is Proposed to the Seimas to Decide whether Jakubauskas Can Continue to Lead the Genocide Center, the Working Leader Welcomes such a Step,” Baltic News (19 March 2021).

¹⁷⁵ Gil Skorwid & Patrick Smith, “How a Chicago Teacher Sparked a ‘Memory war,’ Forcing Lithuania to Confront Its Nazi Past,” NBC News (4 April 2021).

MACEDONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2006–2008, 2010–2015, 2017–2018.

See North Macedonia.

MADAGASCAR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

MALAWI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2019.

In October 2018, the High Court in Blantyre granted an injunction temporarily suspending work on a statue for the Indian non-violent resistance leader Mahatma Gandhi (1869–1948). The case had been initiated by the Gandhi Must Fall group, which accused Gandhi of using racial slurs against black Africans. It cited quotes from his writings, in which he described Africans as “savages” or “the Natives of Africa” and “kaffirs” (an racial slur for a black African). On 1 October 2020, the Indian High Commission unveiled a bust of Gandhi in the capital Lilongwe [See also NCH Annual Report 2019].¹⁷⁶

MALAYSIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2002, 2007–2008, 2010–2011, 2016–2017, 2019–2020.

In July 2020, the home minister banned Rebirth: Reformasi, Resistance and Hope in New Malaysia under the Printing Presses and Publications Act after claims that the book’s cover resembled the country’s coat of arms. The book, compiled by editor Kean Wong, contained a collection of writings about the 2018 general election and subsequent events. Police raided the publishing company and ¹⁷⁶ “Malawi Court Halts Work on Gandhi Statue after Critics Brand Him Racist,” BBC News (31 October 2018); Peter Jegwa, “Gandhi Bust Put Up in Malawi Despite Previous Protests,” BBC News (2 October 2020).

questioned journalist Tashny Sukumaran and seven Malaysiakini journalists who had authored chapters.¹⁷⁷

MALDIVES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2009–2010, 2013, 2020.

On 23 October 2019, a transitional justice bill was submitted to parliament, but no justice mechanism for investigating past incidence of torture and other abuses had been set in place. Shortly after President Ibrahim Mohamed Solih (1962–) assumed power, in November 2018, the United Nations (UN) Committee against Torture applauded the new government’s plans to include transitional justice in its legislative agenda [See also NCH Annual Report 2020]. However, the government was also said to turn a blind eye to repeated calls by the UN’s human-rights mechanisms.¹⁷⁸

A government-appointed commission investigating deaths and enforced disappearances found that groups affiliated with Al-Qaeda were responsible for the murder of several prominent activists and politicians, including journalist Ahmed Rilwan in 2014 and blogger Yameen Rasheed in 2017. The commission also recommended that the police charge former Vice President Ahmed Adeb for intervening to release two suspects. After accusing the justice system of shielding suspects from prosecution, the commission announced in June 2020 that it was unable to proceed further with its investigations. No convictions were made.¹⁷⁹

MALI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011, 2013–2020.

The International Commission of Inquiry, established under the 2015 peace accord to investigate serious violations between 2012 and January 2018, submitted its report to the United Nations Secretary-General on 16 June 2020. By early 2021, the report has remained confidential. Public hearings scheduled for 2020 by the Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission, established in 2014 to investigate crimes and root causes of violence since 1960, were delayed because of the Covid-19 pandemic. The National Commission for Human Rights investigated some abuses and issued numerous communiqués but appeared reluctant to investigate abuses by the security forces.¹⁸⁰

¹⁷⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 429.

¹⁷⁸ Mushfiq Mohamed, “Maldives’ Rocky Road to Transitional Justice,” Himal Southasian (28 October 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 436.

¹⁷⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 436.

In July 2020, the trial of Al Hasan ag Abdoul Aziz ag Mohamed before the International Criminal Court started. He was accused of crimes against humanity and war crimes committed in Timbuktu while he was a member of the Ansar Eddine, an armed group which controlled the city during the Islamist occupation of northern Mali between 2012 and 2013 [See also NCH Annual Reports 2016–2018].¹⁸¹

MALTA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2012.

A memorial to Daphne Caruana Galizia (1964–2017) in Valletta – a journalist, writer, and anti-corruption activist murdered on 16 October 2017 – was torn down every night by authorities and put back every day by her supporters.¹⁸²

In January 2021, Kevin Cassar, a former candidate for the Partit Nazzjonalista (PN; Nationalist Party), criticized the deficient record-keeping by the former government led by Prime Minister Joseph Muscat (2013–2020), reportedly enabling impunity for lies, corruption, and crimes. According to Cassar, the missing records were non-existent, private, secret, lost, concealed, destroyed, or “in the process of being collated,” including some cabinet minutes.¹⁸³

MARSHALL ISLANDS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2015.

¹⁸⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 445.

¹⁸¹ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 20, 241.

¹⁸² Ifex, Annual Report 2019 (Toronto: Ifex, 2020), 11.

¹⁸³ Matthew Mirabelli, “Absent Records Hide Culpability – Kevin Cassar,” Times of Malta (24 January 2021).

MAURITANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2002, 2009, 2011, 2017, 2019–2020.

MAURITIUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2012.

See United Kingdom.

MEXICO

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999, 2001–2020.

The administration of President Andrés Manuel López Obrador took steps to determine and publish the true number of people disappeared. In 2019, human rights defender Karla Quintana was appointed to head the Comisión Nacional de Búsqueda (CNB; National Search Commission). She created a national forensic assessment to address obstacles to identifying and storing bodies. In March 2020, the Extraordinary Mechanism for Forensic Identification – an autonomous, interdisciplinary task force – was created by decree to identify the more than 38,000 unidentified bodies awaiting forensic analysis. In August 2020, the government recognized the supervision of the United Nations Committee on Enforced Disappearances to consider cases in Mexico. Families of victims would be able to submit cases to the committee once they had exhausted their legal options domestically. Federal authorities declared that 6,957 people had been registered missing during 2020. The total number of people reported disappeared since 1964 was 82,647, with 63,939 disappearances recorded in the past decade.¹⁸⁴

On 26 September 2020, the Attorney General’s Office for the first time issued arrest warrants for members of the military and federal police force in relation to the abduction and disappearance of 43 students in 2014. That day marked the six-year commemoration of the students’ disappearance from the Raul Isidro Burgos Teachers’ College in Ayotzinapa, Guerrero state, prompting a massive outcry and demonstrations demanding justice and accountability [See also NCH Annual Report 2015].¹⁸⁵

¹⁸⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 454–455; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 244.

¹⁸⁵ “Mexico Issues New Warrants in 2014 Students’ Disappearance Case,” Al Jazeera (26 September 2020).

On 10 October 2020, the government removed a prominent bronze statue of Christopher Columbus and surrounded another with high metal fencing ahead of an annual protest that marks the explorer's arrival in the Americas in 1492. Authorities said the statue was taken away for restoration work, but added that it was also time for reflection on Columbus's legacy.¹⁸⁶

On 7 January 2021, President Andrés Manuel López Obrador (1953–) announced a proposal to eliminate several autonomous government agencies, including the independent Instituto Nacional de Acceso a la Información Pública y Datos Personales (INAI; National Institute of Access to Public Information and Personal Data). The INAI played an important role in ensuring that journalists and human rights defenders could obtain the necessary information to document and expose human rights violations and corruption scandals. Prior to the 2002 creation of the Federal Institute for Access to Information (IFAI, which later became the INAI) and the 2013 reform that granted it autonomy and made its resolutions legally binding, official secrecy was the norm, posing a major obstacle to the defense of human rights. Journalists, activists, and citizens had no recourse when denied access to basic public information needed to reveal abusive practices. The INAI played a significant role in documenting the accountability for past crimes: in 2015, an INAI ruling forced the Attorney General to release the records of its investigation into the 2014 disappearance of 43 students in Iguala, Guerrero (see above), revealing major inconsistencies, including that key suspects had been tortured. Moreover, hundreds of freedom of information requests made through the INAI enabled activists to determine the location of more than 2,000 mass graves across the country.¹⁸⁷

In May 2021, writer Julián Herbert was unable to organize an event in Torreón, state of Coahuila de Zaragoza, to promote his book The House of the Pain of Others: Chronicle of a Small Genocide, because his conclusions proved too controversial. The book described how during the Mexican Revolution (1910–1917), upon conquering the railway town Torreón on 13–15 May 1911, revolutionaries led by their commander Benjamín Argumedo massacred 300 Chinese in an anti-Chinese pogrom executed with the help of local mobs. It also disputed the local narrative that the pogrom was a spontaneous uprising by poor Mexicans, arguing instead that anti-Chinese racism was rife in Torreón and across Mexico. The victims of the massacre were buried in common graves, nobody was tried for the crime, no monument was erected, and the genocide remained largely unmentioned for 110 years. Commemoration attempts met resistance: a commemorative plaque was stolen and a statue erected in a public park in 2007 was vandalized and later removed. On 17 May 2021, President Andrés Manuel López Obrador commemorated the event in Torreón.¹⁸⁸

¹⁸⁶ “Mexico Removes Christopher Columbus Statue before Annual Protest,” Al Jazeera (12 October 2020).

¹⁸⁷ “Mexico: Public Accountability, Privacy under Threat,” Human Rights Watch (28 January 2021); Arturo Ángel, “AMLO ataca la transparencia... y la democracia,” New York Times (18 January 2021).

See also United States.

MOLDOVA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2003, 2010.

MONGOLIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2013.

MONTENEGRO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2017.

On 5 September 2020, the parliament-backed Documentation Center, which would archive statements, indictments, judgments, and other source material related to the country's role in the 1990s wars (1991–1995), opened in the capital Podgorica. Since the country became independent in 2006, it had held just eight trials for war crimes committed in Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Kosovo during the War of Yugoslav Succession (1991–1995) and the Kosovo War (1998–1999). No new war crimes cases were initiated in 2020, while senior wartime officers suspected of offenses were not prosecuted.¹⁸⁹

In December 2020, the Bošnjačka stranka (BS; Bosniak Party) proposed a parliamentary resolution to recognize the 1995 Srebrenica genocide, but the ruling majority voted against it. In 2009, the parliament had issued a declaration accepting a European Parliament resolution on Srebrenica, which declared 11 July a day of remembrance for the victims of the genocide, but although the declaration condemned the crimes, as well as other crimes committed during the conflicts in the former Yugoslavia (1991–1995, 1998–1999), the word genocide was not mentioned. On 17 June 2021, parliament adopted an amended resolution that recognized the 1995 Srebrenica genocide. The amendment called for condemnation of all war crimes committed in the former Yugoslavia and disapproved singling out parties in the attribution of responsibility for such crimes.¹⁹⁰

¹⁸⁸ David Agren, "Mexico Faces Up to Uneasy Anniversary of Chinese Massacre," Guardian (16 May 2021); Sergio Mendoza, "Sobre la matanza de chinos, hay diversas versiones: Jorge Zermeño Infante," El Sol de la Laguna (10 February 2021).

¹⁸⁹ Samir Kajosevic, "Montenegro Parliament Opens War Crimes Documentation Centre," Balkan Insight (5 October 2020); Samir Kajosevic, "Montenegro 'Failing to Deal with Wartime Crimes': Survey," Balkan Insight (6 May 2021).

MOROCCO / WESTERN SAHARA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2013, 2015–2018, 2020.

On 7 October 2020, the Public Prosecutor at the Court of First Instance in Rabat announced that historian, journalist, and human rights activist Maâti Monjib ([1961]–) was charged with money laundering and embezzlement [See also NCH Annual Reports 2016 and 2020]. The national brigade of the judicial police (BNPJ) summoned him for interrogation in Casablanca on 19 and 26 October and on 2 November 2020. Four of his female family members were subjected to questioning and harassment as well. Monjib said that the purpose of these lawsuits was to punish him because of a recent radio interview in which he criticized the General Directorate of Territorial Surveillance (DGST; internal intelligence) for its repression of political opponents. In October 2020, he launched a three-week hunger strike in protest of a travel ban imposed by Moroccan authorities when he attempted to board a flight to Norway to hold a seminar.

On 29 December 2020, eight plainclothes security forces arrested Monjib at a restaurant in Rabat and placed him in pre-trial detention in El Arjat prison to be investigated for embezzlement and money laundering. The charges apparently stemmed from the receipt of foreign funds to conduct training workshops for citizen journalists in the Ibn Rochd Center. Reporters without Borders said that Monjib was subjected to “an all-out campaign of judicial, police, and media harassment.” On 27 January 2021, Monjib was sentenced to one year in prison and a penalty of 15,000 dirhams (1,380 euros) on charges of “fraud” and “undermining state security.” Monjib and his lawyer were absent during the trial and only informed about the judgment through its publication on the ministry of justice website. On 4 March 2021, Monjib went on hunger strike. After nearly three weeks, he was temporarily released on 23 March 2021. His passport was confiscated. His appeal was due to be heard in April 2021.¹⁹¹

¹⁹⁰ Samir Kajosevic, “Montenegrin Minister Criticised for Srebrenica Genocide Denial,” Balkan Insight (29 March 2021); Samir Kajosevic, “Montenegro Minister Sacked for Querying Srebrenica Genocide Rulings,” Balkan Insight (17 June 2021).

¹⁹¹ Website: <https://maatimonjib.net/>; Middle East Studies Association of North America, Letter to King Mohamed VI and Prime Minister Saadeddine Othmani (3 November 2020); Intissar Fakir, “Interview with Moroccan Human Rights Activist Maâti Monjib,” Carnegie Endowment for International Peace (29 October 2020); Committee to Protect Journalists, “Moroccan Authorities Arrest Journalist Maati Monjib” (29

Western Sahara

The Polisario Front (Frente Popular de Liberación de Saguía el Hamra y Río de Oro; Popular Front for the Liberation of Saguia el-Hamra and Río de Oro – a Sahrawi (Saharawi) movement aiming to take control over the Western Sahara), considered by the United Nations to be the legitimate representative of the Sahrawi people and their right to self-determination, failed to ensure that those responsible for committing human rights abuses in previous decades in refugee camps it administered in Tindouf, Algeria, were brought to account.¹⁹²

See also Spain.

MOZAMBIQUE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018, 2020.

December 2020); Thomas Borst, “Kritische journalist en activist gearresteerd in Marokko,” NRC Handelsblad (30 December 2020); Reporters without Borders, “Leading Moroccan Journalist Held on Money-Laundering Charge” (5 January 2021); “Prominent Moroccan Historian and Human Rights Activist Arrested in Rabat,” Middle East Eye (30 December 2020); Amnesty International, Morocco: Human Rights Defenders Targeted with NSO Group’s Spyware (London: AI, 2019); Amnesty International, “Urgent Action: Academic Arbitrarily Detained: Maati Monjib” (UA: 001/21) (Index: MDE 29/3481/2021); Abdellah Hammoudi & Richard Falk, “Freedom for Professor Maati Monjib” [petition] ([7] January 2021); Koen Greven, “‘Sacharov van Marokko’ als crimineel voor de rechter,” NRC Handelsblad (19 January 2021), C3–4; Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Database, Monjib (17 September 2015) and Monjib (29 December 2020); “Amnesty International exhorte le Maroc à libérer l’historien Maati Monjib,” Le Monde (28 January 2021); “Au Maroc, l’historien Maati Monjib condamné à un an de prison pour ‘fraude’ et ‘atteinte à la sécurité de l’Etat’,” Le Monde (28 January 2021); Comité de soutien à Maâti Monjib, Communiqué de presse (1 February 2021); Présentation synthétique de l’affaire Maâti MONJIB (Maroc), www.maatimonjib.net (no date); Movement for Solidarity with Maati Monjib in America, “Update about Dr. Maati Monjib’s Imprisonment” (4 February 2021); La Détention politique au Maroc: Dossier préparé par le Comité de soutien à l’historien Maâti Monjib et à tous les détenus politiques et d’opinion au Maroc (Paris, February 2021); Maâti Monjib, Communiqué : Maâti Monjib en grève de la faim (Prison Al Arjat 2, Salé, 4 March 2021); Amnesty International, Urgent Action: Academic Arbitrarily Detained (UA: 001/21; Index: MDE 29/3481/2021) (5 January 2021); Adel Abdel Ghafar, “The Arrest of Maati Monjib and the Continued Retreat of Human Rights in Morocco” Brookings Institution (9 March 2021); Comité de soutien à Maâti Monjib, “Communiqué de presse” (10 March 2021); “Statement from U.S. Committee for the Defense of Maâti Monjib” (14 March 2021), Jadaliyya Reports (17 March 2021); Comité France de soutien à Maâti Monjib, Communiqué (22 March 2021); Koen Greven, “Marokko laat vooraanstaand journalist Monjib alsnog vrij,” NRC Handelsblad (24 March 2021), 13; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 50, 253; Reporters without Borders, “Moroccan Journalist Freed after 20 Days on Hunger Strike” (24 March 2021); Reporters without Borders, “European Union Urged to Take Action to Secure Release of Moroccan and French Journalist Maâti Monjib” (24 March 2021 – Updated on 26 March 2021); NCH Campaign (2021).

¹⁹² Amnesty International, State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021).

MYANMAR (BURMA)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2001, 2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2020.

In April 2019, authorities charged seven members of poetry troupe the Peacock Generation with “online defamation” under Section 66(d) of the 2013 Telecommunications Law and Sections 505(a) and 505(b) of the Penal Code for posting online videos of their peaceful Thangyat street performances criticizing the military. Thangyat is a traditional art form fusing poetry, comedy, and music for satirical ends often with a political twist, performed during the New Year water festival in April; it was banned between 1989 and 2013. One member was acquitted, but six members of the group were sentenced in October and November 2019 to between two and six years’ imprisonment. On 17 April 2021, the last three members were pardoned and released from prison.¹⁹³

On 2 September 2020, Canada and the Netherlands joined Gambia’s legal bid to hold Myanmar accountable over allegations of genocide against its mostly Muslim Rohingya minority. They urged other states to support Gambia’s legal fight, which was launched in November 2019 [See also NCH Annual Report 2020].¹⁹⁴

On 13 March 2021, Ko Phone Maw, a 23-year-old chemistry student shot dead by riot police on the campus of the Rangoon Institute of Technology during the March 1988 uprising, was commemorated. When students protested by sitting down near Pyay University, Bago region, soldiers used tear gas and live ammunition against them. One 19-year-old first-year student at Maritime University was shot dead and other students were seriously injured.¹⁹⁵

Among those detained after the military coup of 1 February 2021 were:

- (Daw) Nan Sandar Cho (female), assistant archivist at Hpan-An University, detained in Hpan-an Township, Karen State, on 9 February 2021 for her involvement in the Civil Disobedience Movement (CDM). On 28 May 2021, she was sentenced to two years with hard labor.
- (Ma) Chue Chit Chit Kyaw (female), history student (distance education), detained in Insein Prison on 27 February 2021 for protesting against the military coup, later released.

¹⁹³ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 258; Wordt Vervolgd (June/July 2021), 47.

¹⁹⁴ “Canada, Netherlands Join Gambia’s Genocide Case against Myanmar,” Al Jazeera (4 September 2020).

¹⁹⁵ Naw Say Phaw Waa, “Military Invades Campuses, Student Leaders Tortured,” University World News (18 March 2021); Kyaw Phyoo Tha, “Remembering Two Deaths that Changed the Course of Myanmar’s History,” The Irrawaddy (13 March 2018).

-
- (Mg) Zwe Htet (male) history student (distance education), detained in Yangon Region on 27 February 2021 for protesting against the military coup, later released.
 - (Ko) Sai Win Htut (male), history student, detained in Monywa Township, Sagaing Region, on 27 February 2021, released on 28 February 2021.
 - (Mg) Phyo Pyae Soe (male), first-year history student at Mawlamyine University, detained in Yangon region on 3 March 2021 for protesting against the military coup.
 - (Mg) Thar Linn Oo (male), third-year history student, detained on 3 March 2021.
 - (Mg) Htoo Eaint Sithu (male), third-year archaeology student, detained in Yangon Region on 3 March 2021 for protesting against the military coup.
 - (Ko) Myo Htet Naing Linn (male), second-year history student at Myitkyina University, detained on 20 April 2021.
 - Saw Min Naing (male), history student, detained in Insein Prison on 12 April 2021.¹⁹⁶

¹⁹⁶ Assistance Association for Political Prisoners, Under Detention List \(Last Updated on 31 March 2021\), and updates 17 May and 27 June 2021.

NAMIBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 2006–2009, 2011, 2016–2018.

NEPAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007–2020.

More than 14 years since the November 2006 Comprehensive Peace Agreement promised justice to victims, hardly any perpetrator had been held accountable for crimes committed during the Nepalese Civil War (1996–2006). Since their establishment in 2014, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) had received 63,718 complaints, and the Commission of Investigation on Enforced Disappeared Persons (CIEDP) had received 3,223 complaints from family members saying their loved ones had disappeared during the war, but neither had completed any case. The government failed to address concerns that the TRC and the CIEDP lacked independence. In January 2020, new commissioners were appointed to both bodies following a process that was rejected by victims' groups after authorities failed to hold meaningful consultations. The government further failed to amend the Enforced Disappearances Enquiry, Truth and Reconciliation Commission Act 2014 to bring it in line with international human rights law and standards, as repeatedly ordered by the Supreme Court. On 27 April 2020, the Supreme Court rejected a government petition seeking to overturn a landmark 2015 ruling, which required the government to remove amnesty provisions from the 2014 Transitional Justice Act. The ruling party also continued to appoint people implicated in conflict-era crimes to positions of power without thorough and independent investigations. In October 2020, the National Human Rights Commission named 286 alleged individual perpetrators and highlighted the government's failure to implement the Commission's recommendations and hold perpetrators to account.¹⁹⁷

¹⁹⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 485, 487; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 261; Binod Ghimire, "Tenure of Two Transitional Justice Bodies To Be Extended but This Is Not Enough, Stakeholders Say," The Kathmandu Post (4 February 2021).

NETHERLANDS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 2004–2005, 2007–2020.

On 14 August 2020, Aliansi Mera Putih (AMP), an Indonesian activist group, protested against the commemoration of the victims of the Japanese occupation (1942–1945) of the Dutch East Indies (now Indonesia), by painting Kami belum lupa (“We have not forgotten”) and 4 juta korban (“4 million victims”) on the Indies Monument in The Hague. According to AMP, no attention was paid to the four million Indonesian victims of violence and oppression and the event neglected the Indonesian war of Independence (1945–1949) that follow the Japanese capitulation.¹⁹⁸

On the night of 3 December 2020, a mural called “The Wall of Surinamese and Black Heroes” was besmirched and vandalized by unknown perpetrators. The mural was part of the building that housed The Black Archives (established in 2016 to document the history of black emancipation in the Netherlands) and the Ketj Koti festival organizers in Amsterdam, among others. Some of its archivists, such as cultural anthropologists Jessica de Abreu (1989–) and Mitchell Esajas (1988–), had been victims of real-time and online intimidation, including an extreme-right attack that took place in November 2019 during a work meeting of Kick Out Zwarte Piet (Kick Out Black Pete; established 2014) in The Hague. Nobody was arrested for the attack. The mural had been created by artists Hedy Tjin and Dewi “Butterfingas” Elsinga in the summer of 2020 as an extension of the exhibition “Surinamers in Nederland: 100 jaar emancipatie en strijd” (“Surinamese People in the Netherlands: 100 Years of Emancipation and Struggle”).¹⁹⁹

In January 2021, former Minister for Development Cooperation Jan Pronk and Member of Parliament Sadet Karabulut criticized in a radio interview the fact that the Dutch archives about the military coup that brought Desi Bouterse to power in Suriname in 1980 (five years after independence from the Netherlands) were closed until 2060. The question whether Dutch Colonel Hans Valk (1928–2012), military assistant of the Dutch embassy at the time, assisted in the coup, and if so, alone or on Dutch instructions and in what capacity, had been investigated by parliament [in the 1980s] but two crucial supplements were never made public for privacy reasons, and on expiry of the term, for national security reasons. Answering Karabulut’s questions in the matter, Minister of External Relations Stef Blok said that the two supplements had been accessible for strictly confidential scrutiny by Members of Parliament and historians. On 2 February 2021, the House of Representatives demanded more archival openness and less secrecy in a vote. In late February 2021, researcher Ellen de Vries published Hans Valk: Over een Nederlandse kolonel en een coup in Suriname (Hans Valk: Regarding a Dutch Colonel and a Coup in Suriname), a book that contained the eight secret documents as annexes. Her analysis questioned Valk's alleged central role in the 1980 coup.²⁰⁰

¹⁹⁸ Bastiaan Nagtegaal, “Indisch Monument in Den Haag daags voor herdenking beklad,” NRC Handelsblad (14 August 2020).

¹⁹⁹ The Black Archives, “Vandalizing the Building of Vereniging Ons Suriname and The Black Archives Is an Attempt to Racist Intimidation” (press release; [3] December 2020); Koninklijk Nederlands Historisch Genootschap (Royal Netherlands Historical Society), Verklaring KNHG t.a.v. aantasting pand van The Black Archives (press release; 4 December 2020); Thijs Niemantsverdriet, “Interview Mitchell Esajas en Jessica de Abreu – Black Archives,” NRC Handelsblad (29 December 2020), 12–13.

On 21 March 2021, Nadia Bouras (1981–), a historian of immigration at the University of Leiden and a member of the Netherlands Institute in Morocco (NIMAR) who actively participated in the public debate about migration, found a sticker from the radical right-wing platform Vizier op Links (Watch the Left; established June 2020) on her door. The sticker contained the following text: “Location Watched. This location is being watched by followers of Watch the Left. Go to vizieroplins.org to pass on tips and map left-wing activism.” Vizier op Links also shared her address data online (“doxing”). Bouras filed a report about this intimidation with the police. Around a week before Vizier op Links targeted Bouras's home, it published online photos of the home of historian Geert Mak (1946–), who had given a televised lecture warning about the dangers of modern-day fascism and later allegedly received messages from “angry people” threatening to go to his home. Among the politicians, writers, and academics targeted were also politician Huub Bellemakers and artist Yuri Veerman who were harassed after they had compared radical right-wing political leader Thierry Baudet to a Dutch national-socialist and Hitler respectively.²⁰¹

On 11 May 2021, a court in Amsterdam ruled in summary proceedings that the film “De Oost” (The East) – a film about atrocities committed by the Dutch during Indonesia's independence war (1945–1949; in the film 1946–1947 in particular) made by Jim Taihuttu – did not need a new disclaimer as demanded by the Federatie Indische Nederlanders (FIN; Federation of Dutch-Indonesians) and that the film makers, New Ams Film Company, did not act unlawfully by refusing to incorporate such a new disclaimer in their film. The actual disclaimer stated at the end: “This film is inspired by true events. Certain events, characters, and dialogues were fictionalized for dramatic purposes.” FIN had demanded that a new disclaimer precede the film, saying that Dutch military intervention followed the Bersiap (a period of extreme anti-Dutch violence in 1945–1946, that the film did not intend to give a complete or truthful version of history, and that the film mixed facts and fiction.²⁰²

²⁰⁰ “Archieven over Surinaamse coup 1980 nog steeds gesloten,” BNN Vara: Redactie De Nieuws BV (28 January 2021); “Tweede Kamer wil dat documenten over staatsgreep van Bouterse openbaar worden,” NRC Handelsblad (4 February 2021), 11; Hans Buddingh’, “‘Het plan voor de coup van Desi Bouterse kwam niet van Nederland’,” NRC Handelsblad (1 April 2021), 11.

²⁰¹ “Vizier Op Links plakt stickers op voordeuren ‘ter observatie’,” NRC Handelsblad (22 March 2021), 3; “Zeker vier aangiftes in twee maanden tegen Vizier op Links vanwege intimidatie,” Nu.nl (22 March 2021); Steven Derix & Kees Versteegh, “Dreigende sticker op de voordeur,” NRC Handelsblad (23 March 2021), 3; Scholars at Risk, Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (21 March 2021).

Curaçao

In June 2020, the Plataforma Sklabitut i Herensha di Sklabitut (PSHS; Platform for Slavery and the Heritage of Slavery) based in Curaçao (an Antilles island in the Caribbean that is part of The Netherlands), sent a letter to Prime-Minister Mark Rutte, asking to rehabilitate Curaçao's freedom fighter Tula (aka Tula Rigaud) (?–1795). On 17 August 1795, Tula led a rebellion against the Dutch colonial regime, a day that is still remembered on Curaçao as the Dia di Lucha pa Libertad ("Day of struggle for freedom"). For a long time, Tula was described as a villain, an image that slowly changed from the 1970s onward, resulting in Tula being mentioned in 2020 in the revised Dutch canon – a set of historical topics officially recommended for secondary school education. It was unknown whether the Dutch government had plans for Tula's official rehabilitation.²⁰³

See also France, Myanmar.

NEW ZEALAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2003, 2005, 2007, 2017, 2019–2020.

In June 2021, three university lecturers in Chinese politics and history spoke out about their classes being observed and sometimes photographed by unenrolled individuals. They suspected that the information was channeled to the Chinese Communist Party. The Chinese embassy called claims that spies were infiltrating New Zealand universities groundless.²⁰⁴

²⁰² Rechtbank Amsterdam, Stichting Federatie Indische Nederlanders versus New Ams Films Company: Summary Proceedings (2011); Frank Vermeulen, "Analyse: Westerling en de Celebes-Affaire," NRC Handelsblad (12 May 2021), 6.

²⁰³ Frank Quirindongo, "Rappelbrief aan de Regering van het Koninkrijk der Nederlanden m.b.t. de Rehabilitatie van onze Nationale Held Tula," (Curaçao 17 June 2020).

²⁰⁴ Craig McCulloh, "Chinese Embassy Dismisses Claims Spies Infiltrating NZ Universities," RNZ (Radio New Zealand) (29 June 2021).

NICARAGUA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2020.

In April 2020, police arrested at least five and injured two demonstrators commemorating the 2018 protests in Esquipulas, Moyogalpa.²⁰⁵

On 31 July 2020, an unidentified hooded man threw a petrol bomb into the chapel of the Blood of Christ of the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception in Managua, severely damaging the chapel and destroying a 382-year-old crucifix. Cardinal Leopoldo José Brenes called it an act of terrorism. The attack came after tensions between some Catholics and supporters of President Daniel Ortega. Ortega's government had accused many bishops and priests of siding with his opposition. Supporters of Ortega had led actions against some churches, including Managua's cathedral, when critics of Ortega took refuge there in November 2019. The protests had been part of a crisis which began in April 2018 after Ortega had announced social security and pension reforms. The Archdiocese said the attack was the most recent "in a series of sacrilegious acts, violations of Church property, and attacks on churches." On 29 July 2020, unidentified people had vandalized the chapel of Our Lady of Perpetual Help in Nindiri, Masaya. On 25 July 2020, there had been an attack on the chapel of Our Lord of Veracruz parish in Masaya district.²⁰⁶

NIGER

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2013.

In 2020, the sultan of Birnin Konni told a BBC film crew directed by writer Femi Nylander and documentary film-maker Rob Lemkin that the crimes against humanity committed during the 1899 French invasion of the country, had been covered up by the French authorities for decades. The French commander, Paul Voulet (1866–1899), had captured the sultan's town, killing between 7,000 and 15,000 of its Hausa inhabitants. The invasion, which lasted for six months until Voulet was shot, was the subject of the BBC film African Apocalypse (2020).²⁰⁷

²⁰⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 493.

²⁰⁶ "Nicaragua Catholic Cathedral Attacked with Firebomb," Catholic News Agency (31 July 2020); "Crucifix in Managua Cathedral Torched in 'Hatred of the Church'," Vatican News (1 August 2020).

²⁰⁷ Femi Nylander & Rob Lemkin, "Will Macron's New Commission Face Up to All of France's Colonial Atrocities?," Guardian (16 February 2021).

NIGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2006, 2008, 2010–2013, 2016–2020.

There was little progress on accountability for security force abuses within the context of the conflict with Boko Haram in the northeast. The report of the Presidential Judicial Panel set up in August 2017 to investigate the military's compliance with human rights obligations, allegations of war crimes, and other abuses had still not been made public despite repeated calls from civil society and international actors.²⁰⁸

In September 2020, followers of Osun, the Yoruba goddess of fertility, accused filmmaker Tobiloba Jolaosho of desecrating the Osun Osogbo sacred grove in western Nigeria. Jolaosho was arrested on charges of breach of peace for allegedly recording a pornographic movie at the site, a United Nations-designated World Heritage Site since 2003. Every year, thousands of people attend the Osun Osogbo festival, a traditional celebration that is thought to be 600 years old.²⁰⁹

On 1 June 2021, President Muhammadu Buhari tweeted “Many of those misbehaving today are too young to be aware of the destruction and loss of lives that occurred during the Nigerian Civil War. Those of us in the fields for 30 months, who went through the war, will treat them in the language they understand.” The tweet followed a spate of attacks on offices, mainly in the south-east, blamed on regional secessionists. It referred to the Biafran secession war (1967–1970) which took place in the south-east and ended in 1970 with the defeat of the secessionist forces with more than a million people, mostly civilians, killed through starvation. Some users saw the post as a veiled threat toward the secessionist movement. Twitter removed the post. On 4 June 2021, the government suspended Twitter's operations in the country and said it would prosecute anyone found to have breached the ban. Twitter had played a crucial role in the #EndSars anti-police brutality protests which shook Nigeria in 2020.²¹⁰

See also Germany.

²⁰⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 503.

²⁰⁹ “Nigerian Porn Star Arrested ‘for Filming’ at Sacred Osun Osogbo Ground,” BBC News (14 September 2020).

²¹⁰ “Muhammadu Buhari: Twitter Deletes Nigerian Leader’s ‘Civil War’ Post,” BBC News (2 June 2021); “Nigeria’s Twitter Ban: Government Orders Prosecution of Violators,” BBC News (5 June 2021).

NORTH MACEDONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: See Macedonia.

On 25 December 2020, Prime-Minister Zoltan Zaev said in an interview that “Bulgaria is not a fascist country; Bulgaria is our friend,” adding that his government had removed some plaques on historical wartime monuments that contained the words “Bulgarian fascist occupation.” The comments were part of an interview in which Zaev talked about North Macedonia’s efforts to persuade Bulgaria to lift its blockade on the start of North Macedonia’s European Union membership talks. A number of historians objected to Zaev’s words. Ljubica Spaskovska, a member of the North Macedonian team in the joint North Macedonia-Bulgaria history commission, distanced herself from the remarks. She was soon joined by her colleague on the same commission, Ognen Vangelov. In 1941, the then Kingdom of Bulgaria had joined the Axis powers, and as such was given much of today’s North Macedonia, which it had long claimed as Bulgarian territory.²¹¹

NORWAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2012, 2016–2017.

See also Morocco.

²¹¹ Sinisa Jakov Marusic, “North Macedonia PM’s Remarks About History Hit a Nerve,” Balkan Insight (26 November 2020).

OMAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2017, 2019.

In 2020, authorities censored 51 literary works from the 25th annual Muscat International Book Fair, either due to the authors' political activities or the content of their works. Among the books was Said bin Sultan Al-Hashimi's Al-Rabee' al-Omani (the Omani Spring), in which he documented the Omani Protests of 2011. Al-Rabee' al-Omani had already been banned for the annual Muscat International Book Fair in 2018 and 2019, together with a number of other works by al-Hashimi. The list further included Hara'ir al-Rabee' (Heroines of the Spring), written by Habiba al-Hinaiya, a women's rights activist and founder and executive director of the Omani Association for Human Rights (OCHR) [See also NCH Annual Report 2010].²¹²

In 2013, writer and activist Musallam Al-Ma'ashani ([1960]–) was sued after publishing a book entitled "Dhofar: The Diary of February 25" (after the 25 February 2011 protests in the Dhofar governorate that initiated the Omani Spring). Although not printed or distributed in Oman, it included three chapters documenting with pictures the protests in Salalah, the capital of the Dhofar governorate. Al-Ma'ashani was sentenced to five months' imprisonment and a fine of 500 Omani Rials (US$1,300) for distributing a book without a license and to six months' imprisonment, later reduced to two months, and a fine of 500 Rials for writing publications that incited hatred and spread discord in society. The book was confiscated. In November 2019, Al-Ma'ashani was again arrested on unclear charges, after having crossed the border from Yemen. Due to Covid-19 his trial was postponed indefinitely. He was released on 25 April 2020 with a bail of 3,000 Rials ($7,800).²¹³

²¹² "Omani Human Rights Activist Silenced and Pushed into Exile," CIVICUS (25 April 2017); "Radio Programme Banned from Hosting Omani Writer Said Sultan Al Hashimi," Omani Association for Human Rights (15 April 2019); "Censorship Continues under Oman's New Sultan at Muscat International Book Fair 2020," Omani Association for Human Rights (2 March 2020); "Habiba – Oman," Equality Now; Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 515.

²¹³ "Writer and Civil Activist Musallam Al-Ma'ashani Must Be Freed," Gulf Center for Human Rights (18 November 2019); "Trial of Writer and Civil Society Activist Musallam Al-Ma'ashani Postponed Indefinitely," Gulf Center for Human Rights (2 June 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (Washington: HRW, 2021), 515.

PAKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2004, 2006, 2009–2012, 2014, 2016, 2018–2019.

In the week of 15 March 2021, the Lahore University of Management Sciences (LUMS) canceled without explanation an online conference to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Bangladesh War of Liberation, planned from 23 to 27 March in collaboration with the National Institute of Pakistan Studies (NIPS) of Quaid-i-Azam University in Islamabad. The conference, spearheaded by the LUMS School of Humanities and Social Sciences, was to be titled, “War, Violence & Memory: Commemorating 50 Years of the 1971 War.” According to LUMS politics professor Hassan Javid concerns had been raised over scheduling the conference on 23 March, which was also the day when Pakistan officially adopted its first constitution and became a republic in 1956.²¹⁴

See also Egypt.

PALESTINIAN TERRITORIES

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998–2002, 2008–2010, 2013–2015, 2018.

Between 11 and 25 June 2020, authorities in Gaza arbitrarily arrested more than fifty Fatah-affiliated activists in relation to their plans to organize demonstrations to mark the fourteenth anniversary of the in-fighting between Fatah and Hamas. The Palestinian Center for Human Rights reported that most of the activists said they were tortured and otherwise ill-treated in detention. None of the detained was charged and all were subsequently released.²¹⁵

On 21 May 2021, the Palestinian Ministry of Culture in Ramallah said that during the recent violence between Israel and Gaza Palestinians 44 cultural institutions (including cultural centers, bookstores, and publishing houses) were affected in the Gaza Strip, with many buildings associated to them demolished or damaged by Israeli airstrikes. Gaza-based author Mahmoud Joudeh said that “Destroying cultural institutions in Palestine is ... an attempt to obliterate Palestinian culture.” Tahseen Alyan, a researcher

²¹⁴ “Lahore University Stokes Outrage for Cancelling Event on Bangladesh’s Liberation from Pakistan,” The Print (21 March 2021).

²¹⁵ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 283.

at the Al-Haq human rights organization in the West Bank said that the attack on cultural institutions violated article 53 of the First Protocol Additional to the Geneva Conventions.²¹⁶

See also France, Israel, United Kingdom.

PANAMA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2008, 2013, 2015–2017.

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

PARAGUAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2005, 2007, 2009–2010, 2012, 2015, 2020.

PERU

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2020.

Efforts to prosecute grave abuses committed during the armed conflict (1980–2000) have had mixed results. Almost 70,000 people were killed or subject to enforced disappearance by the Shining Path, other armed groups, or state agents during the armed conflict, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission estimated. The vast majority of those killed were low-income peasants; most spoke indigenous languages. Authorities had made slow progress in prosecuting abuses committed by government forces during the conflict. As of September 2019, courts had issued 46 convictions in 88 cases. In 2018, then-President Martin Vizcarra established a genetic profile bank to help search for those disappeared during the armed conflict.

²¹⁶ Hanady Salah, "Israeli War Adds Scars to Palestinian Psyche," Al-Monitor (26 May 2021).

An investigation into former President Alberto Fujimori's role in forced sterilizations of mostly poor and indigenous women during his presidency was ongoing. As of November 2019, 5,247 people had registered as victims of forced sterilizations committed between 1995 and 2001, the Ministry of Justice reported. In February 2021, Congress passed a law that would allow the compensation of victims of forced sterilizations that occurred during his administration (1990–2000). Over 350,000 women and 25,000 men were sterilized against their will as part of a plan to reduce the birth rate in the rural and Indigenous communities. At least 18 people died during the surgery. The law was part of the Programa de Inversión Responsable (PIR; Integral Reparation Plan) created in 2006 to compensate victims of human rights violations.

Courts had made little progress in addressing abuses, including extrajudicial killings, enforced disappearances, and torture committed by security forces during the earlier administrations of Fernando Belaunde (1980–1985) and Alan Garcia (1985–1990). Criminal investigations continued into the role of former President Ollanta Humala (2011–2016) in killings and other atrocities committed in 1992 at the Madre Mia military base, in the Alto Huallaga region, and in their cover-up.²¹⁷

Throughout 2020, the archeological site of Caral, the oldest city in the Americas dating back to ca. 2600 BCE and a UNESCO world heritage site since 2009, was invaded at least nine times by illegal squatters reportedly belonging to one family. They claimed that the site of the ruins was given to them during the agrarian land reform legislated by President Juan Francisco Velasco Alvarado's government (1968–1975). In addition to the invasions, Ruth Martha Shady Solís (1946–) – professor at the Faculty of Social Sciences of the Universidad Nacional Mayor de San Marcos (National University of San Marcos) and the archaeologist who discovered the Caral-Supe civilization in 1994 – and her lawyer received multiple death threats mostly via telephone calls and messages to various workers at the archeological site. She accused the police and local prosecutor of insufficiently protecting her and the site, especially during the last three years. She was not threatened for the first time: in 2003, when she started her work as director of the site, she was shot in the chest during an assault on the site, for which she had surgery. From 2006 to 2012, she had been president of ICOMOS–Perú (International Council on Monuments and Sites–Peru).²¹⁸

²¹⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 532–533; “Peru to Compensate Victims of Forced Sterilizations,” TeleSUR (25 February 2021).

²¹⁸ “Ruth Shady denuncia indiferencia policial frente a invasiones en Caral,” La República (7 December 2020); “Ruth Shady denuncia inacción de la PNP ante invasiones en Caral,” El Popular (7 December 2020); Dan Collins, “Squatters Issue Death Threats to Archaeologist Who Discovered Oldest City in the Americas,” Guardian (3 January 2021); “Ruth Shady: conoce a una de las 100 mujeres más influyentes del mundo,” La República (24 November 2020).

PHILIPPINES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2015, 2019–2020.

On 18 March 2021, Potenciano Malvar, physician, local historian, and chairman of the Butuan Calagan Historical and Cultural Foundation, filed a criminal complaint for defamation against the members of the Mojares-panel – tasked with conducting queries and recommendations to determine the site of the first Catholic Mass in the country in 1521. Malvar alleged that the panel had produced a falsified report with libelous claims and with conclusions that caused dishonor and discredit to his person, reputation, and years of research. He demanded 20 million Philippine pesos in moral damages.

In May 2018, President Rodrigo Duterte had issued Executive Order No. 55 that created the National Quincentennial Commission (NQC) to organize commemorative activities for the quincentenary anniversary of the first celebration of Easter Sunday Mass on the country’s shores in 1521. The location of the first Easter Sunday Mass had been a topic of debate for a long time, some believing that it was celebrated in Butuan (Mindanao), as the Spanish tradition held, other in Limasawa (Southern Leyte), as historical research asserted. To solve the issue, the NQC had formed an investigating panel led by Resil Mojares, the National Artist for Literature, and consisting of five well-known historians. This Mojares-panel was the fourth official panel to solve the issue following the 1980 Workshop Panel, the 1995 Gancayco Committee; and the 2008 panel led by historian Benito Legarda Jr. All three panels had found that the site of the First Easter Sunday Mass was Limasawa Island.

After a year-long research process, the Mojares-panel concluded that, despite arguments presented by proponents of the Butuan thesis, there was no evidence to reverse previous conclusions. It also concluded that Malvar’s position paper, arguing for the Butuan-thesis, was “based on conjectures from ideas derived from secondary sources including a fictional account of the Magellan Expedition.” In July 2020, the National Historical Commission of the Philippines (NHCP) adopted the Mojares-panel recommendations and decided that the commemoration of the first Catholic mass was to be held in Limasawa. In June 2021, the panel members were acquitted.²¹⁹

²¹⁹ Alexander Lopez, “Quest to Name Butuan Site of First Catholic Mass Takes Legal Turn,” Philippine News Agency (19 March 2021); Ben Serrano, “Raps Filed vs Panel over 1st Philippine Mass Claim,” Philippine Star (21 March 2021); Jenny Ortuoste, “The ‘Limasawa 6’ Case: Criminalizing Research?,” Manila Standard (14 June 2021); John Nery, “Weaponizing the Law... against History,” Inquirer.net (15 June 2021); Bob Couttie, personal communications (18–21 June 2021).

POLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2000–2001, 2004–2005, 2007–2011, 2014–2020.

Over 2019 and 2020, historian Dariusz Stola, the first director of the Polin Museum of the History of Polish Jews (2014–2019), was still awaiting the confirmation of his renewed contract, despite having been chosen in a selection process. In 2021, he was a history professor at the Institute of Political Studies of the Polish Academy of Sciences [See also NCH Annual Reports 2019–2020].²²⁰

In [October] 2019, Filomena Leszczyńska ([1940/1941]–) sued Jan Grabowski (1962–), a Polish-Canadian history professor at the University of Ottawa, and Barbara Engelking (1962–), a historian with the Polish Center for Holocaust Research in Warsaw, for defamation of her late uncle Edward Malinowski in the District Court of Warsaw. In their 2018 co-edited, 1,700-page, two-volume book Dalej Jest Noc: Losy Żydów w Wybranych Powiatach Okupowanej Polski (Night Without End: The Fate of Jews in Selected Counties of Occupied Poland), the historians had written as a side note that Malinowski had contributed to the death of 22 Jews hiding in a forest near the village of Malinowo, north-east Poland, of which he was an elder (sołtys). However, Malinowski had been acquitted from a charge of collaboration with the Nazis in a Communist court trial in 1950. At the center of the case was testimony given by Maria Wiltgren (née Estera Siemiatycka) to the USC Shoah Foundation in 1996. A Jewish woman, she had described how Malinowski had helped her to survive under an assumed “Aryan” identity by putting her in a group of Poles sent to work in Germany, adding, however, that he had cheated her out of money and possessions. In Dalej jest noc Wiltgren was quoted as saying that she “realized that he was an accomplice in the deaths of several dozen Jews who had been hiding in the woods and had been turned over to the Germans, yet she gave false testimony in his defense at his trial after the war.” Ahead of Malinowski’s trial in 1950, an anti-Communist gang intimidated and beat up witnesses, some of whom then changed their testimony.

Supported by the Polish League against Defamation (Reduta Dobrego Imienia, RDI), Leszczyńska argued that the book provided “inaccurate information” and harmed her good name and that of her family. Leszczyńska demanded 100,000 zlotys ($27,000) in damages and an apology in the newspapers. On 9 February 2021, the District Court ruled that Grabowski and Engelking had to issue a written apology to Leszczyńska for “providing inaccurate information” in suggesting that Malinowski had helped killing Jews in World War II, and had to publish an apology on the website of the Polish Center for Holocaust Research, conceding that the claimant's right to "respect for the memory of a relative" had been infringed. The court, however, did not award damages and also rejected that the apology describe Malinowski as a "Jew-saving hero." Engelking and Grabowski appealed the ruling.

²²⁰ United Nations Special Rapporteur in the Field of Cultural Rights, Visit to Poland: Report to the Human Rights Council (21 February 2020), paragraph 26; Madeline Roache & Olivia Waxman, “World War II in Europe Ended 75 Years Ago—But the World Is Still Fighting Over Who Gets to Say What Happened,” Time (8 May 2020).

International organizations and academics condemned the judgment. Sascha Feuchert, director of the Arbeitsstelle Holocaustliteratur at the University of Giessen, Germany, summarized a more general opinion: "For many incidents in the Holocaust, we only have the testimonies from survivors. Of course they need to be checked and discussed in academic debates as far as possible. But this court ruling and its conclusions not only threaten the foundations of research based on survivor testimony, it could also be a gift for Holocaust deniers" [See also NCH Annual Reports 2017–2020].²²¹

On 4 February 2021, Katarzyna Markusz, a journalist and PhD candidate at the Polish Academy of Sciences, was questioned by police in Warsaw on suspicion of "slandering the good name of the Polish nation." A researcher of Polish-Jewish history, anti-Semitism, and World War II, and an organizer of commemorations for Polish Jews who died in the Holocaust, Markusz had written an article on the left-wing news website Krytyka Polityczna, in which she asked: "Will the day come when the Polish authorities admit there was widespread hostility to the Jews among Poles, and that Polish participation in the Holocaust is a historical fact?" The case was dropped.²²²

In March 2021, an ultra-conservative Polish Catholic group threatened to sue a French radio station for "infringing the reputation of the republic of Poland" by supposedly implicating Poland in Nazi war crimes during a program. The Polish League Against Defamation launched lawsuits against newspapers

²²¹ "The Trial against Barbara Engelking and Jan Grabowski," Polonia Institute (1 November 2019); United Nations Special Rapporteur in the Field of Cultural Rights, Visit to Poland: Report to the Human Rights Council (21 February 2020), paragraphs 37, 76; Madeline Roache & Olivia Waxman, "World War II in Europe Ended 75 Years Ago—But the World Is Still Fighting Over Who Gets to Say What Happened," Time (8 May 2020); Wojciech Czuchnowski, "The Plan to Destroy Holocaust Scholars: Polish Anti-Defamation League Goes after the Authors of the Book 'Night Without End'," Gazeta Wyborcza (23 January 2021); "Fears Rise that Polish Libel Trial Could Threaten Future Holocaust Research," Guardian (3 February 2021); Vanessa Gera, "Future of Holocaust Research in Poland Hinges on Libel Case," AP News (4 February 2021); Vanessa Gera & Monika Scislowka, "Holocaust Scholars Ordered to Apologize in Polish Libel Case," (9 February 2021); "Polish Court Tells Two Holocaust Historians to Apologise," BBC (9 February 2021); Andrew Higgins, "Polish Court Orders Scholars to Apologize Over Holocaust Study," New York Times (9 February 2021); "U of O Holocaust Scholar Ordered to Apologize in Polish Libel Case," CBC News (9 February 2021); "Statement by Prof. Barbara Engelking and Prof. Jan Grabowski," Polish Center for Holocaust Research (10 February 2021); Jo Glanville, "A Gift for Holocaust Deniers': How Polish Libel Ruling Will Hit Historians," Guardian (12 February 2021); Daniele Boschi, "La storia in tribunale," Historia ludens (19 February 2021); Masha Gessen, "The Historians Under Attack for Exploring Poland's Role in the Holocaust," The New Yorker (26 March 2021); Anna Wójcik, "Historians on Trial," Verfassungsblog (11 March 2021).

²²² Ofer Aderet, "Polish Journalist Quizzed by Police for Writing that Poles Were Involved in the Holocaust," Haaretz (7 February 2021); David Matthews, "Polish Pressure Forces Holocaust Historian to Self-censor," The Times Higher Education Supplement (15 April 2021).

and broadcasters in Spain, Italy, and Germany, invoking concepts such as a right to “national pride” for Poles.²²³

On 13 April 2021, philosopher Stanisław Krajewski (1950–) resigned from the Auschwitz-Birkenau Museum advisory council after Culture Minister Piotr Gliński had appointed Beata Szydło (1963–), a former prime minister and member of the ruling Prawo i Sprawiedliwość (PiS; Law and Justice) party, to serve on the council. His resignation was followed by those of historians Marek Lasota (1960–) and Krystyna Oleksy, the latter a former deputy director of the museum.

Krajewski, who was to begin his third four-year term on the advisory council, feared that the appointment of Szydło was another move in the direction of making “the Auschwitz-Birkenau museum part of their historical policy.” After PiS took power in 2015, its leaders launched what they described as a “historical policy offensive” aimed at building pride in the nation’s past, by using museums, state media and other tools to promote a patriotic view of history.²²⁴

Despite having adopted the Terezin Declaration in 2009 to ensure “assistance, redress, and remembrance for victims of Nazi persecution,” Poland remained the only in the European Union that had not legislated on Jewish property restitution. Experts, commissioned by the Israeli government in 2006, estimated that about 170,000 private properties had been wrongfully seized from Jewish victims of the Shoah and nationalized by the communist government.

In 1997, the government had passed legislation to enable restitution claims for certain types of properties. However, a majority of claims still had not been resolved, and most of the resolved claims had not led to restitution or compensation. Additionally, the regulatory commission had applied a narrow interpretation of the law to exclude many Jewish properties. In October 2017, the government published draft legislation, which would have enabled claims to be made by some original owners and their families, but not by Shoah survivors and their families. On 24 June 2021, the lower house of parliament passed a draft legislation that would set a statute of limitations of ten to thirty years, depending on the case. The move was widely criticized as it could bar owners and their descendants from receiving compensation after a certain date.²²⁵

See also France, Russia.

²²³ David Matthews, “Polish Pressure Forces Holocaust Historian to Self-censor,” The Times Higher Education Supplement (15 April 2021).

²²⁴ Vanessa Gera, “Three Resign from Auschwitz Council after Politician Appointed,” Associated Press (16 April 2021).

²²⁵ “Around the Bloc – 9 December,” Transitions (9 December 2019); Jo Harper, “Nationalized Jewish Property: Warsaw’s Restitution Problem,” Der Welt (27 January 2020); “Poland Defends Law That Could Block Jewish Restitution Claims,” Der Welt (25 June 2021).

PORTUGAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017.

In February 2021, prominent anti-racism activist Mamadou Ba was the target of a petition asking for his deportation for stating that the death of a colonial officer should not be commemorated. André Ventura, a lawmaker for and president of the far-right Chega political party made public derogatory remarks against him and against ethnic minorities.²²⁶ ²²⁶ Victoria Waldersee & Catarina Demony, "Council of Europe Urges Portugal to Confront Its Colonial Past." Business Day (24 March 2021).

QATAR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

ROMANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000, 2003, 2005, 2007–2008, 2010, 2019.

Despite a 2001 law for the protection of the national heritage, the country remained an important source for black market antiquities in the European Union, with the authorities recovering 3,423 heritage items in 2020, according to police statistics.²²⁷

RUSSIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1998, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2020.

In 2020, the authorities opened a criminal case under Article 354.1 of the Criminal Code against Nikolay Gorelov, a Kaliningrad blogger, for a satirical piece from 2014–2015 about World War II. The piece explored various controversial themes, including crimes committed by the Soviet Red Army against the civilian population. It contained fictional monologues by contemporary and historical figures, including Adolf Hitler, who said that the Soviet Union’s victory in World War II “strengthened Stalin’s regime,” that “Russians ha[d] nothing to be proud of,” and that therefore “the victory [...] would ... remain the only thing that would give Russians at least some sense of their own significance.” In June 2020, the case was closed due to the expiry of the statute of limitations.²²⁸

In 2020, authorities arrested at least four people for supposed affiliation with Nurdzhular, a group of followers of the late Turkish theologian Said Nursi (1877–1960), banned as extremist in 2008, even though it had no history of incitement or violence. Experts repeatedly questioned the existence of such an organization in Russia and stated that the works of Said Nursi did not contain any extremist views. At least seven Nursi followers remained on Russia’s “List of Terrorists and Extremists,” their assets frozen, and travel restricted [See also NCH Annual Report 2012 under Turkey; NCH Annual Report 2014 under Russia; NCH Annual Report 2019 under Turkmenistan].²²⁹

In 2020, Memorial – an international historical educational charitable and human rights society – requested that the Prosecutor General’s Office provide information about eleven prosecutors who had ²²⁷ Marcel Gascón Barberá, “From Icons to Gold Detectors: How Romania’s Heritage Crime Went Underground,” Balkan Insight (23 April 2021).

²²⁸ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 23.

²²⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 566.

sat on the extrajudicial “troikas” of the Great Terror (1936–1938). Memorial needed their biographies for a historical reference book about all “troika” members, a joint project of Memorial, the Russian State Archive of Social and Political History, the State Archive, and the Federal Security Service (FSB) Central Archive. The Prosecutor General’s Office refused, relying on the Federal Law “On the Protection of Personal Data” that required the consent of any individual for the disclosure of his or her personal data. Memorial challenged that decision in court, arguing that personal data laws were inapplicable to archival materials. Ian Rachinsky, head of Memorial, told the media that the new policy of the authorities “would make the creation of any encyclopedias and biographical reference books impossible.” According to Memorial lawyer Marina Agaltsova, the representative of the Prosecutor General’s Office justified shielding Stalin-era prosecutors based on the fact that they “had served the Homeland.” Memorial lost at trial in July 2020 and on appeal in March 2021, but the case was still ongoing. Separate requests to copy materials in FSB archives, addressed by Memorial to the FSB Central Archive and to the FSB of the Karelia region, were denied with the explanation that the FSB internal rules did not permit the copying of materials in the FSB archives. Memorial challenged the refusals in courts but so far lost every appeal in both of these cases. It planned to take the matter to the Supreme Court.²³⁰

In 2020, the Moscow directorate of the Federal Security Service (FSB) denied Sergey Prudovsky, a historian doing research on the 1937–1938 operation by the NKVD (the FSB’s predecessor) against former personnel of the Chinese Eastern Railway, access to the minutes of “troika” meetings from that case in order to compile the list of victims. The officials said that the document contained “confidential information,” specifically the names of “troika” members. The FSB representative said that disclosure of their names “could harm both the living relatives of those officials and the objective assessment of the 1937–1938 historical period.” Prudovsky commented that the names of “troika” members were in the public domain already, and that the FSB argument was a pretext to frustrate identifying the victims. He challenged the FSB decision in court and lost at trial, but his case was still ongoing.²³¹

In May 2020, Alexander Zhuravlev, a Duma deputy, proposed to add a new Article 354.2 to the Criminal Code. The proposed provision would make it a crime to “declare the USSR responsible for starting World War II,” “deny the leading role of the USSR in the victory over the Axis countries in World War II,” or equate Communism and Nazism. The bill largely duplicated the already existing provisions of Article 354.1, and it was doubtful whether it would become law. Yet its ideas kept ²³⁰ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 54.

²³¹ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 56.

circulating in official circles, ostensibly as a potential response to the European Union's September 2019 Resolution, which effectively equated the Nazi and Soviet totalitarian regimes.²³²

In June 2020, the government's effort to cement the official historical narrative culminated in a series of amendments to the Constitution of Russia. It declared the Russian Federation the "successor" of the Soviet Union (Article 67.1 §1); proclaimed that the Russian Federation "honors the memory of defenders of the Homeland" and "protects historical truth" (Article 67.1 §3); warned that "diminishing the significance of the people's heroism in defending the Homeland is not permitted" (Article 67.1 §3); and directed the government to "inculcate patriotism" in children (Article 67.1 §4). Russian historians voiced serious concerns about the impact of the amendments.²³³

In July 2020, the Duma (parliament) adopted presidential amendments to the law "On Education in the Russian Federation" which defined the concept of vospitaniye (moral education) and prescribed that education at schools and universities should include not only knowledge and skills, but also spiritual and moral values. The new version of the Federal Law mandated that educational institutions inculcate in their students, "the sense of patriotism and civil consciousness, respect toward the memory of the Homeland's defenders and courageous acts of the Homeland's heroes."²³⁴

In July 2020, Svetlana Prokopyeva from Pskov became the first journalist in Russia convicted under Article 205.2 of the Criminal Code for condoning terrorism. The prosecution asked that she be imprisoned for six years, but following an outcry, she was instead fined 500,000 rubles (about EUR 5,600). Prokopyeva had expressed her opinion on the radio about the underlying causes of a suicide bombing attack by a 17-year-old anarchist against a local Federal Security Service (FSB) office in Arkhangelsk. She had argued that a "ruthless state" had raised someone who saw violence as the only path, and she compared the young man to the Narodnaya Volya revolutionaries of 19th-century Russia. One of the witnesses against Prokopyeva lambasted her for using that historical analogy. He drew a parallel between 19th-century press coverage of Narodnaya Volya and Prokopyeva's reporting: "I see such condoning terrorism by the 19th-century press as one of the steps in the destruction of Russia's statehood, its weakening, and the pursuit of geopolitical interests by other States-competitors."²³⁵

²³² International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: "Crimes against History" (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 29.

²³³ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: "Crimes against History" (Paris: FIDH, 2021), §§ 3, 99.

²³⁴ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: "Crimes against History" (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 103; Katrin Kinzelbach, ed., Researching Academic Freedom: Guidelines and Sample Case Studies (Erlangen: FAU University Press, 2020), 120–121.

²³⁵ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: "Crimes against History" (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 39.

In September 2020, during an incident at the Moscow International Book Fair, prosecutors charged Memorial for failing to mark all its books with a “Foreign Agent” stamp, even those that had been printed before the passing of the “Foreign Agent” law in 2012. Memorial argued that the law could not be applied retroactively, yet courts sided with the prosecutors. Following the incident, the organizers of the book fair marked the Memorial stand with four signs announcing that Memorial was a “Foreign Agent.” The combined amount of fines under the “foreign agents” law against Memorial by mid-2020 was 5.3 million rubles (approximately US$69,000).²³⁶

In a joint September 2020 communication, the United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation, and guarantees of non-recurrence, and the UN Special Rapporteur on adequate housing, said that the Russian authorities should ensure the return of Soviet-era deportees within two years. Russia’s parliament had yet to implement the judgment of the Constitutional Court.²³⁷

On 29 September 2020, after an appeal by the prosecutors, the Karelian Supreme Court increased the prison term for Karelian historian Yuri Dmitriev (1956–) to thirteen years. On 16 February 2021, the court rejected Dmitriev’s appeal. Dmitriev would take his appeal to the Supreme Court [See also NCH Annual Reports 2018–2020]. On 29 September 2020, historian Anatoly Razumov, head of the Restored Names Center at the Russian National Library in Saint Petersburg, was detained outside the Petrozavodsk court building during the Dmitriev hearings as he was giving an interview to a journalist holding a sign in support of Dmitriev that read: “Let’s not allow a second Sandormokh to happen.”²³⁸

In November 2020, Duma deputy Alexey Chepa proposed revoking the 2010 statement by the Duma that had officially recognized Soviet responsibility for the 1940 Katyń massacre, although that statement had been accompanied by the disclosure of key original Soviet-era documents, and had built on the 1990 admission of responsibility by the Soviet government. In the same month, the government-funded Russian Military Historical Society (RMHS) held a conference to deny the responsibility of the USSR for the 1940 Katyń massacre. According to the conference’s final document, the historical consensus around Katyń “should be considered as one element of a more general propaganda campaign to declare the USSR responsible for starting the Second World War.” Reacting to the announcement of the conference, Alexander Guryanov, a historian and the head of the Polish Program at International Memorial, wrote a letter to conference organizers expressing his view about the responsibility of the USSR for the war crimes at Katyń, and identifying the underlying political nature of RMHS’s conclusions. In response, conference delegates threatened him with prosecution under Article 354.1 of the Criminal Code.

²³⁶ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 73; Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 563.

²³⁷ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 129.

²³⁸ Website about Yuri Dmitriev: <https://dmitrievaffair.com>. “Yuri Dmitriyev: Russian Historian’s Sex Abuse Sentence Increased,” BBC News (29 September 2020); Olivier Rolin, “Yuri Dmitriev: Historian of Stalin’s Gulag, Victim of Putin’s Repression,” New York Review of Books (7 October 2020); American Historical Association, Letter to Anatoly Vladimirovich Nakvas, Chairman of the Supreme Court of Karelia (20 October 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 563, 571; “Russian Court Rejects Jailed Gulag Historian’s Appeal against Long Sentence,” Reuters (16 February 2021); International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), §§ 53, 80–82, 105; United Nations Mandates, Allegations Letter Regarding Yuri Dmitriev (2021); NCH Campaign.

In Tver, the 2020 removal of the plaques in memory of Polish prisoners of war executed there in 1940 [See NCH Annual Report 2020] was accompanied by statements from the local prosecutor and the regional government denying that historical fact. Meanwhile, the federal authorities had neither rebutted those claims nor rebuked the revisionists.²³⁹

On 12 November 2020, Defense Minister Sergei Shoigu issued an order (published 23 March 2021) canceling earlier orders from 2007 and 2009 that declassified archival documents about World War II (1939–1945). The order effectively blocked almost all access to Russian military archives from the World War II period. On the same day, another order (published 1 January 2021) required “expert opinions” on all World War II documents before they were released for access. The opinions would be given by “expert commissions” that would work on them until late 2024. Critics feared that anything which gave a negative impression regarding the Red Army and Soviet authorities would be blocked, including information about the real losses of the Soviet armed forces and about the greatest military failures of the Red Army.²⁴⁰

In January 2021, President Vladimir Putin formally urged the Duma to adopt a law that would “prohibit making public statements that equate the role of the USSR and Fascist Germany during the Second World War (1939–1945),” and a bill to that effect was formally introduced in the Duma on 5 May 2021. On 9 June 2021, the Duma adopted the bill banning the identification of the goals and actions of the USSR with those of Nazi Germany in World War II, and prohibiting the denial of “the decisive role of the Soviet people in the defeat of Nazi Germany and the humanitarian mission of the USSR in the liberation of European countries.” The authors of the initiative emphasized the inadmissibility of mixing and equating the actions of “defenders of the Fatherland” with “the actions of soldiers aimed at the destruction of peoples, and persons found guilty of committing crimes in accordance with the verdict of the Nuremberg Tribunal.”²⁴¹

²³⁹ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), §§ 96, 119.

²⁴⁰ Halya Conash, “Russia Blocks Military Archives in Further Effort to Distort the Truth about World War II.” Kharkiv Human Rights Protection Group (31 March 2021).

In their January 2021 communication to the Russian authorities, nine independent experts of the United Nations Human Rights Council juxtaposed the welcome creation of the government-sponsored Wall of Grief in Moscow in 2017, with the 2018–2019 government-sanctioned desecration of the Sandarmokh mass graves, and concluded that “symbolic measures lack[ed] merit if their purpose [was] to create a one-sided interpretation of events, or worse still, to give birth to a false memory of the nature and circumstances of past crimes, whatever their scale.”²⁴²

In February 2021, the Russian Military Historical Society (RMHS) requested that the authorities prosecute Alexander Nevzorov, a journalist and publicist, under Article 354.1 of the Criminal Code, for his remarks about Zoya Kosmodemyanskaya (1923–1941), an iconic Soviet partisan executed by the Nazis for acts of sabotage. In 1941, Kosmodemyanskaya had burned Russian villages in which the occupying German army was garrisoned. Nevzorov said on the radio that Kosmodemyanskaya was not a hero, but rather a “fanatic who followed an unlawful order.” The RMHS claimed that Nevzorov’s statement “amount[ed] to slander against the Soviet State and falsification of historical truth.”²⁴³

In February 2021, Duma member Irina Yarovaya proposed an amendment to Article 354.1 of the Criminal Code that would criminalize defamatory or denigrating statements about World War II veterans, punishable by up to five years’ imprisonment. The amendment built upon two earlier proposals to criminalize speech “insulting the sentiments of the Great Patriotic War veterans,” brought by the Communist Party and the Parliament of the Chechen Republic in 2016 and 2017, respectively. Yarovaya emphasized that the law would apply to statements not only about living but also deceased veterans. This would practically outlaw any discussion of crimes committed by Soviet soldiers during World War II. In March 2021, the Duma adopted the amendment. All amendments became law on 5 April 2021.²⁴⁴

In [February] 2021, World War II veteran Ignat Artemenko ([1927]–) sued opposition leader Aleksey Navalny for defamation. Navalny had made a public comment over a video clip advertising the 2020 constitutional amendments which allowed President Vladimir Putin to stand for election for two further ²⁴¹ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 29; “Госдума запретила «отождествлять цели и действия» СССР и Германии во Второй мировой войне,” Novaya Gazeta (9 June 2021); “Дума приняла закон о запрете отождествлять роль СССР и нацистской Германии,” Tass (9 June 2021).

²⁴² International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 179.

²⁴³ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 25.

²⁴⁴ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: “Crimes against History” (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 28.

terms. In his comment, Navalny had been dismissive of Artemenko's part in this video, without directly mentioning the veteran or the latter's role in World War II. However, the comment, accusing Artemenko and others appearing in the video of being traitors, was widely used on state propaganda channels as supposed proof of Navalny's disrespect for veterans. On 20 February 2021, a court found Navalny guilty. He received a huge fine (the equivalent of $11,500 or £8,200). On 29 April 2021, the court rejected Navalny's appeal against the fine. In appearing before the court via a video-link from prison, Navalny accused President Vladimir Putin of attempting to rule Russia "forever" and caring only about "clinging to power."²⁴⁵

On [3 February] 2021, Alexander Ryabchuk, a history and social science teacher from Rostov-on-Don, was arrested for five days under Art. 20.2 of the Administrative Code ("participation in an unauthorized rally, resulting in interference with the functioning of life support facilities"). During the arrest, his house was searched. On 23 January 2021, Ryabchuk had stated on his Instagram account that he was broadcasting live from an unauthorized rally in support of opposition leader Alexei Navalny in Rostov-on-Don. The same day, he had recorded a half-hour video in which he had shared his view of the political situation in Russia and told how the rally went. On 25 January, the director of Lyceum N11, where Ryabchuk had been teaching for seven years, asked him to remove all videos about the action from his Instagram page, and warned about the possible consequences of public coverage of the protest. On 26 January, the director of a private school, where he had only worked for two days, told him about a call from "influential people from law enforcement agencies or the Ministry of Education" and terminated his contract. On 29 January, Ryabchuk was forced to resign from Lyceum N11.²⁴⁶

In March 2021, a group of Russian senators and other top government officials held a roundtable discussion at the Federation Council (the upper house of Russia's parliament). Its participants said that Russian history must become a key weapon in a "mental war" or "memory war" against the West. They called for enhanced "censorship, [State] ideology, and propaganda." Vladimir Medinsky proposed the adoption of an official State History Policy.²⁴⁷

²⁴⁵ "Alexei Navalny: Putin Critic Loses Appeal against Jailing," BBC News (20 February 2021); Halya Coynash, "Russia Exploits War Veterans for Offensive against Opposition Activists and Historical Truth," Kharkiv Human Rights Protection Group (1 March 2021); Sarah Rainsford, "Gaunt Navalny Attacks Putin as Network Is Disbanded," BBC News (29 April 2021).

²⁴⁶ "«Учитель года» из Ростова-на-Дону арестован за участие в митинге," Kommersant (4 February 2021); "Teacher of the Year in Rostov-on-Don, Fired from School and Arrested for 5 Days after Participating in the Action on January 23," Chernaya Kobra (7 February 2021); "Russians Risk Jobs for Supporting Navalny," Borneo Bulletin (21 February 2021).

²⁴⁷ International Federation for Human Rights, Russia: "Crimes against History" (Paris: FIDH, 2021), § 100.

On 3 March 2021, Denis Karagodin ([1983–]) was sued by Sergei Mityushov for defamation of his deceased father. Mityushov demanded to shut down Karagodin’s website, the online museum karagodin.org. Denis Karagodin was the great-grandson of Stepan Karagodin (1881–1938), a prosperous peasant farmer and village leader who had resisted the Bolsheviks after the 1917 Russian Revolution. During his research into his great-grandfather’s fate, Denis Karagodin discovered that his great-grandfather had secretly been shot by the secret police in Tomsk in January 1938 on fabricated charges of espionage for Japan – to be posthumously exonerated in 1955 only. On his website, Denis Karagodin documented how local authorities had obstructed his research, which had started in 2012, at every step. He also mentioned that Alexei Mityushov (?–1967), an inspector of the NKVD (secret service) in Novosibirsk, had signed a document stating that Stepan Karagodin’s execution had taken place. Sergei Mityushov, Alexei Mityushov’s son, declared that karagodin.org discredited his father and “crossed a political line,” saying that the NKVD’s job was to “fight criminals and their relatives,” working in “a hard, harsh time.” A few weeks later, a separate complaint by an unknown veteran from Ryazan was filed with police against Denis Karagodin for allegedly violating the privacy of NKVD employees and committing libel.²⁴⁸

On 14 April 2021, four students from the Higher School of Economics and Moscow State University of Civil Engineering – Armen Aramyan, Alla Gutnikova, Vladimir Metelkin, and Natalia Tyshkevich – were arrested. They were journalists at online magazine Doxa – an independent student magazine about the realities of modern university life, founded in 2017 – and their arrest came after reporting on protests in support of opposition leader Alexei Navalny and publishing a video on 22 January 2021 in which they argued that the expulsion of students from the university for participating in actions in support of Navalny was illegal. The video prompted media watchdog Roskomnadzor to order its removal, a decision which Doxa subsequently challenged. They were charged with “involving a minor in committing acts that pose a danger to the life of a minor.” Natalia Tyshkevich ([1994]–) was a history graduate and she worked in a museum for architecture. Doxa’s offices were searched along with the homes of each of the four on trial, with their equipment seized. The journalists were put under heavy pre-trial restrictions, which prevented them from leaving their homes or using the internet.²⁴⁹

See also China, France, Ukraine.

²⁴⁸ Robyn Dixon, “He Spent Years Uncovering the Stalin-era Execution of His Great-Grandfather – Lawsuits Seek to Bury the Evidence,” Washington Post (9 May 2021); Benoît Vitkine, “Denis Karagodin: enquêteur-citoyen,” Le Monde (11 June 2021), 4.

²⁴⁹ Benjamin Lynch, “Russia: Index Expresses Concern over the Arrest of Doxa Journalists,” Index on Censorship (16 April 2021); “Doxa Solidarity Statement” ([14] April 2021); Eva Cukier, “Russische autoriteiten zitten niet te wachten op doxa,” NRC Handelsblad (11 May 2021), 14–15.

RWANDA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2017, 2019–2020.

On 17 February 2020, gospel musician Kizito Mihigo (1981–2020) was found dead in a police cell in Kigali. On 13 February 2020, he had been charged with attempting to illegally cross the border with Burundi, joining terrorist groups, and corruption after he was arrested during an attempt to flee Rwanda. Police accused him of trying to join rebel groups fighting against Rwanda, but government critics said Mihigo had no such intention and in fact wanted to get to Belgium where he had lived before. They also dismissed the police version of his death as suicide by hanging, believing instead that he was murdered.

An ethnic Tutsi, Mihigo had fled the country after his father and some relatives were killed in the 1994 genocide. He returned home once the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF), the mainly Tutsi rebel movement led by Paul Kagame, had taken power. As a Catholic, he became well-known for his reconciliation work and religious songs and he was initially embraced by the government. His concerts drew tens of thousands of fans. In his 2014 song Igisobanuro Cy'urupfu (The Meaning of Death), released to coincide with the twentieth anniversary of the genocide, Mihigo suggested that everyone killed during the 1994 genocide should be remembered whether they were ethnic Hutus or Tutsis. The authorities saw this as openly challenging the official narrative that the 1994 genocide was a genocide of the Tutsis and viewed it as a reference to the post-genocide revenge killing of ethnic Hutus by the RPF in and outside the country. Although the RPF said that the revenge killings took place on a small scale and those who committed them had been punished, the government viewed comparing these killings with the mass slaughter of Tutsis as a form of genocide denial.

On 7 April 2014, the twentieth anniversary of the genocide, Mihigo was reported missing and days later the police paraded him in front of the media, accusing him of plotting terrorist attacks and working with opposition movements with the aim of toppling the government. His music was then banned on all local radio and television stations. In February 2015 he was sentenced to ten years in prison for planning to kill the president and conspiring against the government. Although Mihigo pleaded guilty to all charges, his lawyer later told the court his client had been speaking emotionally and that there was no evidence to convict him. Mihigo said later that he was coerced into pleading guilty. He was convinced that his song got him into trouble. "I was told that I had to plead guilty. They said if I didn't plead guilty, they would kill me," he told an activist on the phone from prison in 2018. In September 2018, Mihigo was pardoned by Kagame but his movements were restricted and he had to report regularly to the police. Shortly before his death, he told Human Rights Watch that "he was being threatened to provide false testimony against political opponents” and that he wanted to flee the country.²⁵⁰

The government continued with extradition requests for suspects of the 1994 genocide [See also NCH Annual Report 2020]. On 25 August 2020 the authorities issued an international arrest warrant for former Rwandan spy chief Aloys Ntiwiragabo who had been identified by the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda (ICTR) as one of the architects of the genocide. France had opened a probe into alleged crimes against humanity by the ex-military official on 25 July. In May 2020, the International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals had announced that the remains of another high profile genocide suspect – Augustin Bizimana, the minister of defense in 1994 – were identified in a grave in Pointe-Noire, Republic of Congo. In 1998, the ICTR had indicted Bizimana on 13 counts of genocide and other related crimes.²⁵¹

The Penal Code criminalized direct and indirect incitement to genocide. The latter could be problematic, particularly when considered in light of a 2018 law targeting genocide ideology [See also NCH Annual Reports 2009–2011, 2013–2014]. Some crimes under the 2018 law were either ambiguous or risked silencing legitimate discussions about national history, such as prohibitions on minimizing the gravity of genocide, distorting the facts of genocide, or claiming that there was a double genocide in Rwanda. While Rwanda’s history made genocide denial particularly serious, watchdog groups alleged that such laws had been applied in a politicized manner and that the current legal framework facilitated such misuse. Numerous critics, defectors, and journalists, as well as international human rights organizations, alleged that the Rwandan Patriotic Front (RPF) had facilitated, allowed, or conducted war crimes and crimes against humanity of its own during the civil war. These allegations personally implicated President Paul Kagame as RPF leader during the conflict, and called into question his personal mythology as a peace bringer and hero. A 2021 report by Freedom House concluded that the government systematically targeted individuals who questioned its version of Rwandan history.²⁵²

²⁵⁰ Amnesty International, “Rwanda: Shocking Death of Gospel Singer in Custody Must Be Effectively Investigated” (17 February 2020); “Kizito Mihigo: Singer Found Dead in Rwandan Police Cell,” BBC News (17 February 2020); Abu-Bakarr Jalloh, “Rwanda Gospel Singer Kizito Mihigo’s Death Likely a ‘Political Assassination’,” Deutsche Welle (21 February 2020); “Kizito Mihigo: The Rwandan Gospel Singer Who Died in a Police Cell,” BBC News (29 February 2020); “Rwanda Singer Kizito Mihigo Planned to Kill Paul Kagame,” BBC News (27 February 2015); Amnesty International, State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 307; “Igisobanuro Cy’urupfu” (song), YouTube.

²⁵¹ “Rwanda Issues Warrant for 1994 Genocide Suspect in France,” Al Jazeera (26 August 2020); “Le Rwanda a émis un mandat d’arrêt international contre Aloys Ntiwiragabo, accusé de genocide,” Le Monde (26 August 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 577; “Deceased - Bizimana, Augustin \(MICT-13-39\),” International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals; Amnesty International, State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 308.

²⁵² Centre for Law and Democracy, Restrictions on Civic Space Globally: Law and Policy Mapping Series, vol. 5, Sub-Saharan Africa (Halifax: CLD, July 2020), 73; Nate Schenckan & Isabel Linzer, Out of Sight, Not Out

SAINT VINCENT

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

SÃO TOMÉ

Previous Annual Report entries: —.

SAUDI ARABIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001, 2006, 2010–2011, 2013, 2017–2020.

On 11 November 2020, several people were wounded after a bomb attack at a Remembrance Day ceremony on a cemetery for non-Muslims in Jeddah. The ceremony commemorated the end of World War I.²⁵³

See also Lebanon.

SENEGAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2009, 2013, 2017–2018, 2020.

SERBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: See Serbia / Kosovo; Serbia / Montenegro.

In 2020, cases of war crimes committed in Serbia during the wars of 1991–1999 were only dealt with by the War Crimes Prosecutor’s Office and the Special Department for War Crimes of the Belgrade Higher Court. The latter refused to make first-instance verdicts public, although the Commissioner for of Reach: The Global Scale and Scope of Transnational Repression (Washington: Freedom House, 2021), 22, 23.

²⁵³ “Several Wounded in Remembrance Day Bomb Attack at Saudi Cemetery,” BBC News (11 November 2020).

Information of Public Importance and Personal Data Protection had recommended this. Journalists and members of the public were able to submit Freedom of Access to Information requests for case documents, but there were limitations and sometimes the information provided by the court depended on the wording of the request.²⁵⁴

No progress was made toward implementing the national war crimes strategy, opening investigations into the backlog of more than 2,500 war crimes cases, or indicting senior police or military officials for command responsibility. Prosecutions of low-level perpetrators in cases transferred from Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH) were extremely slow. New legislation providing reparation to victims of war (1991–1995) discriminated against civilian victims. A series of cumulative conditions required a higher percentage of bodily injury, only applied to those injured in Serbia and discriminated between physical and psychological damage. An estimated 15,000 people, including relatives of the missing and survivors of sexual violence, still had no right to reparation.

The first trial in Serbia for war crimes in Srebrenica was marred by further delays, because the defendants, who were not being held in custody during the proceedings, failed to show up in court. Eight Bosnian Serb former police officers resident in Serbia were charged with the killing of more than 1,300 Bosniak civilians in July 1995. The trial had been postponed 18 times since it began in December 2016 because the accused claimed to have poor health. Since 2019, 30 percent of all hearings in war crimes cases had been postponed at Belgrade Higher Court – the only court that dealt with such trials.²⁵⁵

Students in Serbia were reportedly given a one-sided view of the War of Yugoslav Succession (1991–1995) in history textbooks. The topic was taught in the eighth grade of primary schools (age 14) and the third or fourth grade in secondary schools (ages 17 or 18). A September 2020 policy paper by the Belgrade-based NGO Fond za humanitarno pravo (FHP; Humanitarian Law Center) outlined how war crimes committed during the 1990s were presented “with a selective choice of information used to portray the Serbian nation as the main victim of the armed conflicts.” It also suggested that “[w]hen the lesson deals with human losses, human rights violations and war crimes, it either does not specify who the victims were or only discusses crimes against ethnic Serbs.” Teachers were specifically recommended to “condemn the still ongoing murders and executions of Serbs in Kosovo and Metohija, who are allegedly protected by agreements which are not applied in practice.” Additional research by Balkan Insight in October 2020 found that a history textbook for 14–15 year olds, written by Momcilo Pavlovic and Djordje Djuric, did not acknowledge the 1995 genocide in Srebrenica, instead describing ²⁵⁴ Emina Dizdarevic, Serbeze Haxhiaj, Anja Vladislavljevic & Milica Stojanovic, “Access Denied: Most Balkan War Crimes Case Files Not Public,” Balkan Insight (28 September 2020).

²⁵⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 586; Milica Stojanovic, “Justice on Hold: War Trial Delays Jeopardise Serbia’s Progress to EU,” Balkan Insight (1 February 2021); Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 315.

it as “a war crime and crime against humanity” of which “[t]he information about the total number of victims is disputable.”²⁵⁶

On 25 March 2021, the European Parliament adopted a report urging the government to increase efforts against hate speech and the glorification of war criminals, expand support for domestic prosecutors in bringing perpetrators to justice, and tackle “falsification of the facts established by the ICTY [International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia].” The report further appealed to the government to step up efforts in recognition and implementation of court verdicts on war crimes, and in investigations of gravesites. The government continued to deny that the 1995 Srebrenica genocide had been a genocide, rejecting international court verdicts and accusing them of anti-Serb biases.²⁵⁷

On 9 May 2021, the Austrian writer and 2019 Nobel Literature Prize Peter Handke (1942–) was given the Order of Karadjordje’s Star of the First Degree, one of the state’s highest honors, by President Aleksandar Vučić for his “special merits and successes in representing the state (Serbia) and its citizens.” Many in the Balkans saw Handke as an apologist for Serb war crimes committed during the Yugoslav War of Succession (1991–1995) [See also NCH Annual Report 2020].²⁵⁸

On 9 May 2021, a picture of Četnik movement leader Dragoljub “Draža” Mihailović (1893–1946) was displayed alongside that of Partisan leader Josip Broz Tito (1892–1980) at a state-sponsored event at the National Theater in Belgrade to commemorate Victory Day in World War II. Milovan Pisarri, a historian from the Belgrade-based Center for Public History, said that “unfortunately, this is not strange” because the Serbian authorities have sought to repaint the nationalist Četnik as anti-Fascists, despite the fact that they had collaborated with Axis occupation forces. Mihailović’ Četnik forces were accused of committing war crimes against Bosnian Muslims and Croats as well as against Communists during World War II. The Četniks were banned during the Communist era, but gained more popularity in Serbia in the 1990s. In 2004, Serbia adopted a law that gave World War II veterans from the Partisan and Četnik movements equal rights. Mihailović was rehabilitated by Belgrade High Court in 2015.²⁵⁹

²⁵⁶ Milica Stojanovic, “Serbian History Textbooks ‘Give One-Sided View’ of 1990s Wars,” Balkan Insight (8 September 2020); Mladen Obrenovic, “Bosnian, Serbian Schoolbooks Teach Rival Versions of History,” Balkan Insight (30 October 2020).

²⁵⁷ European Parliament, 2019–2020 Reports on Serbia (2019/2175(INI), 25 March 2021), §71; Milica Stojanovic, “European MPs Urge Serbia, Kosovo to Intensify War Grave Search,” Balkan Insight (26 March 2021); Milica Stojanovic and Samir Kajosevic, “In Serbia and Montenegro, Srebrenica is Still Politically Toxic,” Balkan Insight (8 July 2021).

²⁵⁸ “Serbia Honors 2019 Nobel Prize-Winner For Literature, Who Denies Srebrenica Genocide,” Radio Free Europe / Radio Liberty (10 May 2021).

²⁵⁹ Milica Stojanovic, “Serbia Displays Chetnik’s Image at World War II Victory Event,” Balkan Insight (11 May 2021).

SERBIA / KOSOVO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008–2020. See Serbia.

SERBIA / MONTENEGRO

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2007. See Montenegro and Serbia. See Montenegro.

SEYCHELLES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2019.

SIERRA LEONE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2016.

On 9 September 2020, the Residual Special Court for Sierra Leone, based in The Hague, said in a statement that Augustine Gbao was granted conditional early release. Gbao, a former leader of the Revolutionary United Front (RUF), had been given a 25-year sentence in 2009 for crimes against humanity, including terrorism, extermination, murder, rape and sexual slavery [See also NCH Annual Reports 2008–2011]. During the civil war (1991–2002), the RUF carried out a series of atrocities in an attempt to gain control over the lucrative mining districts. The conflict, financed largely by so-called “blood diamonds,” left 120,000 people dead and tens of thousands mutilated.²⁶⁰

See also Liberia.

²⁶⁰ “Sierra Leone ex-Rebel Leader Augustine Gbao Granted Early Release,” Al Jazeera (9 September 2020).

SINGAPORE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2009–2011, 2015–2016, 2018–2020.

On 20 March 2020, the National University of Singapore (NUS) canceled the contract to publish Coup, King, Crisis: A Critical Interregnum in Thailand, edited by Pavin Chachavalpongpun (1971–), probably due to political pressure, although the book, submitted as a manuscript in October 2018, had already been peer-reviewed, revised, designed and available for pre-order online. The collection of essays dealt critically with the Thai monarchy in the transitional period between the 2014 military coup and the 2019 elections. It was subsequently published by Yale University’s Council on Southeast Asia Studies in December 2020. The self-exiled dissident political scientist Pavin has been an associate professor in Kyoto University’s Center for Southeast Asian Studies since 2012. He was also the administrator of the million-member Royalist Marketplace Facebook group (blocked in Thailand on 24 August 2020) [See also NCH Annual Report 2017].²⁶¹

See also Thailand.

SLOVAKIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2002, 2007, 2009, 2011, 2013–2015, 2017.

SLOVENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2018.

An open letter circulating among artists and academics, published on 17 November 2021 and bearing more than 1,000 signatures at the beginning of December, took aim at a project to build a Museum of Slovenian Independence, for which the government had allocated funds in its draft budget for 2022. The museum, the letter stated, would be a “propaganda institution, promoting a nationalist narrative about the past aimed mainly at buttressing the ideological agenda of the ruling Slovene democratic party.” In a press release published on 13 December the government said that these characterizations were incorrect, claiming that the museum would be “subject to international standards and curated by professional historians with no political affiliations.”²⁶²

²⁶¹ Joyce Lau, “Academic Calls for Press Boycott Over Cancellation of Book on Thailand,” Inside HigherEd (28 January 2021); Concerned Scholars of Southeast Asian Studies, Petition to Peter Schoppert, Director, NUS Press ([2020]); “Facebook Blocks Thai Access to Group Critical of Monarchy,” BBC News (25 August 2020); Joyce Lau, “Thai Protests Raise Academic Freedom Issues,” Inside HigherEd (28 August 2020); Ang Hwee Min, “NUS Press Says It Chose Not to Publish Essays on Thai Politics after Consulting with ‘Stakeholders Inside and Outside the University’,” CNA (Channel News Asia) (25 January 2021).

SOMALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2003, 2006, 2012–2014, 2019.

SOUTH AFRICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2004, 2006–2010, 2012–2020.

On the eight anniversary of what had become known as the Marikana massacre, the government still failed to release a report on recommendations on policing that a commission of inquiry published in July 2018. On 16 August 2012 police shot dead 34 striking miners outside the Marikana mine, owned by Lonmin Mine Plc, near Rustenburg, North West province. Overall, some 47 people were killed in Marikana on 12–16 August 2012, including miners, four security guards, and two police officers. There had been no convictions and the families were still waiting for reparations, including adequate compensation for their loss.²⁶³

See also Zambia.

SOUTH SUDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2015–2020.

In February 2020, the parties to the 2018 peace deal formed a transitional government of national unity led by President Salva Kiir, with Riek Machar as first vice president, and four other vice presidents from opposition groups. However, the parties did not implement most of the major provisions of the peace deal including security arrangements or establishing accountability mechanisms. In September 2018, rival factions had re-committed to a 2015 peace deal that called for the establishment of a Commission for Truth, Healing and Reconciliation, the Hybrid Court for South Sudan, and the Compensation and Reparations Authority, each with a distinct function but with the joint purpose of addressing past abuses.

²⁶² Dorian Batycka, “Concerns Rise about Cultural Freedom in Slovenia,” Apollo (23 December 2020).

²⁶³ Mia Swart, “South African Gov’t Urged to Release Marikana Recommendations,” Al Jazeera (16 August 2020); Amnesty International, State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 327.

In June 2020, the United Nations Human Rights Council renewed the Commission on Human Rights in South Sudan, which reported human rights abuses and impunity for widespread atrocities committed in South Sudan's conflict (2013–2020), despite the 2018 peace agreement and formation of a unity government. In July, local missions of the European Union, France, Germany, Netherlands, Sweden, Canada, and the United Kingdom deplored the high levels of sexual and gender-based violence affecting children and women and highlighted the ongoing impunity for past abuses.

On 29 January 2021, the government approved the establishment of the Hybrid Court for South Sudan. The court, to be staffed with South Sudanese judges as well as judges assigned by the African Union, was envisioned in the peace agreement of 2018 to try perpetrators of war crimes and possible crimes against humanity committed during the South Sudanese Civil War (2013–2020), which killed nearly 400,000 people and forced four million South Sudanese to flee their homes. Since the 2018 peace deal, leaders had repeatedly sought to block the establishment of the court: a memorandum of understanding to be signed with the African Union was still pending and communications on next steps between the African Union and South Sudan were lacking.²⁶⁴

SPAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999, 2002–2020.

On 23 February 2021, the last statue of General Francisco Franco on Spanish soil was removed, after the enclave of Melilla had voted to take down the monument, which had stood at the gates of the city on the north-west coast of Africa. Members of the far-right Vox party had voted against its removal, saying that the statue, erected in 1978, commemorated Franco's role as commander of the Spanish Legion in the Rif War (1920–1927; a conflict Spain fought against Berber tribes in Morocco).²⁶⁵

See also Afghanistan, Philippines, Poland.

²⁶⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 611, 616, 617; Jale Richard, "Cabinet Approves Establishment of Hybrid Court," EYE Radio (30 January 2021); Nyagoah Tut Pur, "A Glimmer of Hope for South Sudan's Victims," Human Rights Watch (31 January 2021).

²⁶⁵ "Franco: Melilla Enclave Removes Last Statue of Fascist Dictator on Spanish Soil," BBC News (24 February 2021); "Last Public Statue of Spanish Dictator Franco Is Removed," Guardian (23 February 2021).

SRI LANKA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2004, 2008–2020.

On 26 February 2020, Sri Lanka announced at the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Council in Geneva that it was withdrawing from its commitments to provide justice and accountability for war crimes and other grave violations committed during and since the civil war between the government and the separatist Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) (1983–2009). President Gotabaya Rajapaksa (1949–), who ran on a platform of protecting “war heroes” from prosecution, was defense secretary during the administration of his brother, then-President (now Prime Minister) Mahinda Rajapaksa (1945–), when the alleged abuses took place. Several senior members of his government, including the defense secretary, Kamal Gunaratne, and army chief General Shavendra Silva, were also implicated.

Since 2020, Rajapaksa had appointed at least 28 serving or former military and intelligence personnel to key administrative posts, among which senior military officials who were implicated in UN reports in alleged war crimes and crimes against humanity during the final years of the conflict. Families of the disappeared and human rights defenders reported heightened surveillance and threats from the intelligence services. The core group on Sri Lanka at the Human Rights Council (Canada, Germany, North Macedonia, Montenegro, and the United Kingdom) called for “an end to impunity for the violations and abuses of the past,” but did not show leadership in presenting a new resolution to advance international accountability. On 27 January 2021, the UN Office of the High Commissioner on Human Rights (OHCHR) released a report, stating that nearly twelve years after the armed conflict ended, impunity for grave human rights violations and abuses by all sides was more entrenched than ever, with the current government proactively obstructing investigations and trials, and reversing the limited progress that had been previously made. On 23 March, the UN Human Rights Council passed a resolution mandating the OHCHR to gather and preserve evidence for future prosecutions and make recommendations to the international community on steps they can take to deliver on justice and accountability.²⁶⁶

On 2 June 2020, President Mahinda Rajapaksa established a Presidential Task Force for Archaeological Heritage Management in the Eastern Province, consisting almost entirely of Sinhalese members, including security officials and Buddhist monks, raising fears that it would disadvantage the predominant Tamil and Muslim communities. Rajapaksa said the purpose of the task force was to “preserve our Buddhist heritage.” The government declined to include the national anthem in the Tamil language on national occasions, such as the Independence Day celebrations on 4 February 2020, despite the preceding years’ practice of singing it in two languages as a significant gesture toward reconciliation.²⁶⁷

²⁶⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 625, 626, 629; “Sri Lanka on Alarming Path towards Recurrence of Grave Human Rights Violations – UN Report,” OHCHR (27 January 2021); “Sri Lanka: UN Rights Chief Decries Mounting Abuses,” Human Rights Watch (29 January 2021); Karen McVeigh, “UN Resolution Hailed as ‘Crucial Turning Point’ for Victims of Sri Lanka Civil War,” Guardian (24 March 2021).

On 1 December 2020 the Supreme Court of Sri Lanka refused to hear the appeal and dismissed the case of eleven families, both Muslim and Christian, that had taken up a legal battle against a mandatory cremation policy for all bodies suspected to be infected with Covid-19, accusing the government of violating their freedom of religion and fundamental rights under the constitution. The policy was seen by several human rights activists as part of an ongoing attack on the Muslim community, led by President Gotabaya Rajapaksa, who was elected in 2019 on a wave of anti-Muslim sentiments, following the Easter suicide bombings by Islamist militants in April 2019, which left 267 dead. Political, religious, and community leaders representing the Muslim community repeatedly requested the government to change its “cremate only” policy, pointing to the more than 190 countries allowing burials and World Health Organization advice. The government argued that burials could contaminate ground water, based on the authority of an expert committee, the composition and qualifications of which were unknown. On 1 January 2021, the Sri Lanka Medical Association, a Sri Lankan expert committee, accepted that burial was permissible. United Nations special rapporteurs wrote twice to the government, in April 2020 and January 2021, urging it to respect the wishes of those who seek burial, and to recognize that the disregard of Muslims’ feelings may lead them not to present bodies for cremation. On 24 February 2021, the government reversed its mandatory cremation policy. It was alleged that as many as 200 Muslims had been cremated.²⁶⁸

See also Israel.

²⁶⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 628; Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, Promotion Reconciliation, Accountability and Human Rights in Sri Lanka: Report (27 January 2021), paragraphs 22, 30; Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, “Sri Lanka on Alarming Path towards Recurrence of Grave Human Rights Violations – UN Report” (press release) (27 January 2021).

²⁶⁸ “Another Nail in the Coffin for Religious Tolerance in Sri Lanka,” Daily FT (18 April 2020); Meera Srinivasan, “Sri Lanka SC Rejects Petitions against Covid-19 Cremation,” The Hindu (2 December 2020); Hannah Ellis-Petersen, “Muslims in Sri Lanka ‘Denied Justice’ over Forced Cremations of Covid Victims,” Guardian (4 December 2020); “Covid-19: Sri Lanka Forcibly Cremates Muslim Baby Sparking Anger,” BBC (26 December 2020); Patrick Wintour, “Muslim Families Complain to UN over Sri Lankan Covid Cremations,” Guardian (9 February 2021); “Covid-19: Sri Lanka Reverses ‘anti-Muslim’ Cremation Order,” BBC (25 February 2021).

SUDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2003, 2006–2020.

The Attorney General’s Office formed several committees to investigate past crimes and rights abuses, including in Darfur, but no investigation had yet led to prosecutions. Authorities announced the discovery of two mass graves during 2020 they said contained the remains of military personnel killed during former President Omar al-Bashir’s rule (1989–2019). The National Committee of Inquiry, established to investigate the killing and injuring of protesters on 3 June 2019, had not concluded its work. On that day, members of the Rapid Support Forces and other security forces fired live ammunition at peaceful protesters outside the military headquarters in Khartoum, killing at least 100 and injuring 700 others.²⁶⁹

On 11 February 2020, a member of the sovereign council, a collective presidency body composed of both civilians and military, announced the government’s commitment to cooperate with the International Criminal Court (ICC), which officials reaffirmed throughout 2020. On 22 August 2020, Prime Minister Abdalla Hamdok affirmed that the government had reached a deal with rebel groups in February that all five Sudanese ICC suspects, including former President Omar al-Bashir (1944–), should appear before the court in The Hague, on charges related to war crimes, crimes against humanity, and genocide carried out in Darfur. The ICC had issued arrest warrants for al-Bashir in 2009 and 2010. However, the transitional government continued to fail to meet its obligation to surrender them to the ICC, and still had not ratified the ICC Rome Statute. In June 2020, Ali Muhammad Ali Abd-Al- Rahman (also known as Ali Kushayb), a former senior commander of the Janjaweed militia, surrendered to the ICC to answer charges of war crimes and crimes against humanity committed in Darfur.²⁷⁰

In July 2020, illegal gold diggers destroyed the 2,000-year-old Jabal Maragha archaeological site (dating from the Meroitic period between 350 BCE and 350 CE) in the eastern region of the Sahara desert. Earlier, at Sai, a river island in the Nile, hundreds of graves, some dating back to the times of the pharaohs, had been raided and destroyed by looters. “Out of a thousand more or less well-known sites in Sudan, at least a hundred have been destroyed or damaged,” said Hatem al-Nour, Sudan’s director of antiquities and museums.²⁷¹

²⁶⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 631; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 341.

²⁷⁰ “Sudan’s Omar al-Bashir a Step Closer to Facing War Crimes Charges,” Al Jazeera (23 August 2020); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 631; Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 341.

²⁷¹ “Sudan’s Jabal Maragha: Illegal Gold Diggers Destroy Ancient Site,” BBC News (24 August 2020).

SURINAME

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2004, 2009–2010, 2012–2013, 2015–2016, 2018.

See The Netherlands.

SWAZILAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011, 2013, 2016–2018.

SWEDEN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2017–2018, 2020.

See Syria.

SWITZERLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999–2000, 2004, 2007–2009, 2014, 2016–2018.

See Liberia.

SYRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2002, 2004–2020.

In April 2020, the trial of two alleged former Syrian intelligence officials began in Koblenz, Germany, in a landmark case on torture in one of Syria’s detention facilities (see below). The same month, the first trial addressing genocide by an ISIS suspect against the Yazidi minority began in Frankfurt. Other countries, including France and Sweden, were pursuing similar cases under their universal jurisdiction laws. On 24 February 2021, Eyad al-Gharib, a former colonel in the Syrian intelligence service, who carried out orders in one of President Bashar al-Assad’s notorious prisons, was found guilty of being an accomplice to crimes against humanity by the Koblenz court, in the first victory for efforts worldwide to bring legal accountability for atrocities committed in Syria's civil war (2011–).²⁷²

On the third year commemoration of the regime's chemical attack on Khan Sheikhoun, on 4 April 2017, and the second of its attack on Douma City, on 7 April 2018, victims were still awaiting accountability. The Syrian Network for Human Rights (SNHR) noted that despite the accurate and highly credible investigations, which confirmed the occurrence of the Khan Sheikhoun and Douma attacks, the United Nations Security Council had so far failed to take economic, political or military sanctions to implement its relevant resolutions. Regime forces perpetrated crimes against humanity, ranging from extrajudicial killing to sexual violence and torture, with all these crimes being perpetrated in a systematic and widespread manner, and war crimes, through indiscriminate shelling, and the destruction of building and facilities, since 2011. All of these had yet to be addressed with any form of accountability.²⁷³

On 9 February 2021, Syrian authorities announced that they believed having found the body of archaeologist and historian Khaled al-Asaad (1934–2015) in Kahloul, east of Palmyra [See also NCH Annual Report 2016].²⁷⁴

In [February 2021], Aleppo's city council announced that bodies buried in one of the biggest makeshift graveyards, in a park next to the Salah al-Din mosque, would be relocated to a large state cemetery on the outskirts of the city. In 2018, the Aleppo authorities first began to relocate bodies from the city's informal cemeteries, but identifying and documenting the inhabitants of all of the irregular gravesites proved to be a serious challenge which was soon abandoned. It appeared the city council paid no attention to the dignity of the dead: unverified pictures circulated widely on social media, showing skulls and bones lying haphazardly among red soil, and graveyards left with earth and makeshift headstones disturbed. According to Mohamed Kaheel, who directed the Aleppo opposition's forensic medicine commission, the purpose of transferring the graves was so that in the future, when criminal investigations would be carried out, a lot of important forensic evidence would be lost.²⁷⁵

²⁷² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 646; Bethan McKernan, "Germany Convicts Former Assad Regime Agent in Historic Syria Torture Verdict," Guardian (24 February 2021).

²⁷³ "On the 3rd Anniversary of the Syrian Regime's Chemical Attack on Khan Sheikhoun and the 2nd of Its Attack on Douma City, the Victims Still Await Accountability," SNHR (7 April 2020); Syrian Network for Human Rights, Tenth Annual Report: The Most Notable Human Rights Violations in Syria in 2020 (London: Syrian Network for Human Rights, 2021), 83.

²⁷⁴ "Syria 'Finds Body of Archaeologist Khaled al-Asaad Beheaded by IS'," BBC News (9 February 2021).

²⁷⁵ Bethan McKernan and Ahmad Haj Hamdo, "'A Crime on Top of a Crime': Assad Regime Reburies Aleppo's War Dead," Guardian (15 March 2021).

TAIWAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2008–2010, 2012, 2016–2020.

TAJIKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017–2018, 2020.

TANZANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2016–2017.

THAILAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2001–2002, 2005, 2007–2020.

Despite evidence showing that soldiers were responsible for most casualties during the 2010 political confrontations with the United Front for Democracy Against Dictatorship (the “Red Shirts”) that left at least 99 dead and more than 2,000 injured, no military personnel or officials from the government of then-Prime Minister Abhisit Vejjajiva had been charged for killing or wounding demonstrators or bystanders.²⁷⁶

On 19 August 2020, the authorities filed a complaint against historian Pavin Chachavalpongpun (1971–), an associate professor of politics at the Center for Southeast Asian Studies, Kyoto University, Japan [See also NCH Annual Report 2017], for opening a popular Facebook page with commentary on the monarchy. On 24 August 2020, after the Thai government threatened legal action, Facebook blocked access in Thailand to this page, “Royalist Marketplace,” on which a million-member group discussed the monarchy. The page could still be accessed from outside Thailand. A new Facebook group set up by Pavin on 24 August 2020 in the evening gained more than 400,000 followers overnight. Pavin was one of three dissidents the Thai government had warned its citizens to stay away from. The other two were British journalist Andrew MacGregor Marshall, who had published a book critical of the Thai monarchy, and Thai political history professor Somsak Jeamteerasakul [See also NCH Annual Reports 2011, 2014–2015, 2017] who was an outspoken critic of the monarchy and lived in exile in France.²⁷⁷

²⁷⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 658.

On 20 September 2020, in a context of ongoing student-led protests since February, anti-government demonstrators cemented a commemorative “People’s Plaque” close to a field known as Sanam Luang (Royal Field), near Bangkok’s Grand Palace, in a challenge to Thai King Maha Vajiralongkorn. The plaque proclaimed in Thai: “The people have expressed the intention that this country belongs to the people, and not the king.” Organizers said the plaque was a replacement for another marking the end of absolute monarchy in the 1930s, which went missing in 2017 [See also NCH Annual Reports 2018–2019]. The demands of protesters took an unprecedented turn in August 2020, when a 10-point manifesto for reform to the monarchy was read out at a rally. The sociology student who delivered the manifesto, Panusaya Sithijirawattanakul, had said that its intention was “not to destroy the monarchy but to modernize it, to adapt it to our society.” However, she and her fellow activists were accused of “chung chart” (“hatred of the nation”).²⁷⁸

On 19 October 2020, police searched the publishing house Fah Diew Kan and interrogated founding editor Thanapol Eawsakul. The police warrant reportedly cited three books: one written in 2013 by emeritus historian Thongchai Winichakul that was found to be “dangerous” in the context of the ongoing protests and to incite “hatred of the institution of the monarchy”; and two by political scientist and historian Nattapol Chaiching (see below). The warrant also said that “it is ... believed that the ... books were produced with the aim of creating agitation and resistance among the people, which is an offense against state security.”²⁷⁹

On 5 March 2021, Priyanandana Rangsit filed a THB50 million (US$1.6 million) civil lawsuit against Nattapol Chaiching [Nattapol Chaiching] (a political scientist and historian teaching at the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences of Suan Sunandha Rajabhat University in Bangkok and head of its Local Government Program), his thesis supervisor Kullada Kesboonchu-Mead (a lecturer in political science at Chulalongkorn University), and academic publisher Fah Diew Kan (Same Sky Books) for harming the reputation of the clan of her grandfather Prince Rangsit Prayurasakdi (1885–1951), the son of King Chulalongkorn Rama V (1853–1910). She further requested a temporary injunction to immediately stop the distribution of a 2013 book based on Nattapol’s thesis, and the 2020 book Khun Seuk Sakdina Phraya Insi (“The Junta, the Lords, and the Eagle”). The lawsuit followed the ban of ²⁷⁷ “Facebook Blocks Thai Access to Group Critical of Monarchy,” BBC News (25 August 2020); Joyce Lau, “Thai Protests Raise Academic Freedom Issues,” Inside HigherEd (28 August 2020).

²⁷⁸ “Thailand Protests: Activists Challenge Monarchy by Laying ‘People’s Plaque’,” BBC News (20 September 2020).

²⁷⁹ Scholars at Risk, “Thailand: End Crackdown on Peaceful Student Protesters” (2 November 2020).

Nattapol's PhD thesis, entitled "Thai Politics in Phibun's Government under the US World Order (1948–1957)," by Chulalongkorn University (CU), where Nattapol had obtained his PhD with distinction in 2009. The widely praised thesis had investigated how the United States had intervened in Thailand in 1948–1957 to support police and military groups and the resurgence of the monarchy. Eventually, the intervention led to the 1957 coup by Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat (1908–1963) and the establishment of a royalist authoritarian regime.

In [2017], while doing research on Thai politics under King Bhumibol Adulyadej Rama IX, royalist political philosopher Chaiyan Chaiyaporn at CU had found a mistake in Nattapol's PhD thesis, as evidence did not support a conclusion he had drawn on Prince Rangsit's interference in the government during his regency (1947–1951). Chaiyan Chaiyaporn reported this to CU claiming that Nattapol had falsified the fact in order to tarnish the monarchy, and demanded revision. When Nattapol subsequently wanted to revise the thesis, he was told that university regulations did not allow amendments to theses that were approved and published. After a CU investigation in 2018, the thesis examination committee and the faculty of political science concluded that Nattapol's mistake was unintentional and that the passage containing it could be removed without affecting the argument in that chapter or the thesis as a whole. Yet, despite this conclusion, CU blocked access to the dissertation.

In the meantime, interest in the historical role of the monarchy in politics made Nattapol's second book The Junta, the Lords and the Eagle a bestseller in 2020. His books became influential among youth and student protesters demanding reform of the monarchy. In February 2021, a petition signed by some 400 alumni and submitted to CU demanded further action against Nattapol, resulting in CU setting up an investigation committee to review the latter's academic integrity. Depending on its findings, the investigation could lead to a revocation of Nattapol's degree or other disciplinary action under research misconduct rules.

On 26 March 2021, 279 Thai scholars signed a petition asking CU to halt its attack on Nattapol and uphold academic freedom, stating that in The Junta, the Lords, and the Eagle he had rectified the mistake that could not be altered in his PhD thesis, and that it did "not directly alter the theme or main proposal of Dr Nattapol's thesis." The petition was followed by an international statement on 5 April calling for policies to provide protection to students and faculty members. The Association for Asian Studies, in a separate statement on 7 April, joined the call and urged the Bangkok Civil Court to dismiss the lawsuit.²⁸⁰

²⁸⁰ Thongchai Winichakul & Tyrell Haberkorn, "A Censored Thesis, Then a Defamation Lawsuit: Academic Freedom in Thailand," New Mandala (19 March 2021); Thongchai Winichakul & Tyrell Haberkorn, "International Scholars Appeal to Chulalongkorn University to Defend Academic Freedom," Prachatai (5 April 2021); Association for Asian Studies, "AAS Statement on Academic Freedom in Thailand," (7 April 2021); Sulakshana Lamubol, "Historian Influential with Protesters Is Investigated," University World News (13 April 2021).

TIMOR-LESTE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003–2013, 2015–2018.

See Australia.

TOGO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2008–2013, 2017–2018.

In September 2020, security forces killed one person and injured several others when they used tear gas canisters to disperse a traditional celebration in the Prefecture of Doufelgou.²⁸¹

TRINIDAD and TOBAGO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

TUNISIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2011–2020.

On 24 June 2020, the government took a step for transitional justice by publishing in its Official Journal, the final report of the Truth and Dignity Commission, a body tasked by a 2013 transitional justice law to investigate and expose serious human rights violations that took place in Tunisia from 1955 to 2013. On 26 March 2019, the commission had published its five-volume 2000-page report. It analyzed and exposed the multi-layered and intricate system of oppression and corruption prevalent for sixty years, and included recommendations for political, economic, administrative, and security sector reforms to safeguard against a return to repression. Trials of people accused of human rights violations perpetrated between 1955 and 2013, referred by the Commission, continued before specialized criminal chambers, albeit at a slow pace with frequent adjournments, while security force and police unions continued to boycott the process. Also in June, the government established a reparations fund for victims, and relatives of victims who had died between 1955 and 2013. The reparations included financial compensation, rehabilitation, professional integration or education, the restitution of rights and official apologies. The fund was activated on 24 December [See also NCH Annual Reports 2015–2020].²⁸²

²⁸¹ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 358.

TURKEY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2000–2020.

On 16 June 2021, the International Press Institute (IPI) and eighteen international freedom of expression organizations sent open letters to Justice Minister Abdulhamit Gül and a number of political parties to urge authorities to investigate the unsolved murder of Kutlu Adalı (1935–1996), after allegations by convicted mob leader Sedat Peker that former Interior Minister Mehmet Ağar had organized Adalı's killing.

On 17 March 1996, Adalı, a Turkish-Cypriot journalist and peace activist who wrote critically about the government of the unrecognized Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus, had penned a newspaper article about the alleged involvement of the Directorate of Civil Defense Organization in Northern Cyprus in the smuggling of historical artifacts taken from a tomb in the monastery of St. Barnabas. He was killed by unknown assailants in his house on 6 July 1996. From 1980 onward, Adalı and his wife had repeatedly been subjected to harassment, varying from threatening phone calls to an attack on his house with machine guns. In 2005, the European Court of Human Rights found that Turkey had violated Article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights (the right to life) for its “failure to carry out an adequate and effective investigation into the circumstances surrounding the killing” of Adalı.²⁸³

On 30 June 2020, the government canceled the operating license of Şehir University in Istanbul (founded in 2009) based on a presidential decree of April 2020. Among the libraries that were confiscated in the process was the one of historian of the Ottoman empire Fuat Köprülü (1890–1966).²⁸⁴

See also France, United States.

²⁸² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 663; Amnesty International, State of the World's Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 53, 360, 362.

²⁸³ European Court of Human Rights, Case of Adali v. Turkey (Application no. 38187/97): Judgement in the Case of Adali v. Turkey (Strasbourg: ECHR, 2005); “International Groups Call on Turkey to Investigate New Allegations Related to Journalists' Unsolved Murders,” IFEX (16 June 2021).

²⁸⁴ Kaya Genç, “Tearing Down the Ivory Tower,” Index on Censorship, 49 no. 4 (2020), 29–31.

TURKMENISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2004, 2009, 2011–2012, 2015–2019.

UGANDA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2017, 2019–2020.

On 4 February 2021, Dominic Ongwen, a former commander in the Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA), was found guilty on charges of war crimes and crimes against humanity, including murder, rape, sexual slavery, abduction and torture, at the International Criminal Court (ICC) in The Hague. Analysts in Uganda said the judgment suggested progress toward ending impunity in a country with a long history of conflict. On 6 May, the ICC sentenced Ongwen to 25 years in prison. Two ICC warrants remained outstanding for the arrest of LRA leaders Joseph Kony and Vincent Otti. The latter was presumed dead. [See also NCH Annual Reports 2016–2017, 2019–2020].²⁸⁵

UKRAINE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2009–2011, 2014–2020.

On 16 April 2015, historian and journalist Oleg Buzyna (–2015), a long-time contributor of controversial opinion pieces about Ukrainian history in the Segodnya newspaper and a pro-Russian commentator who publicly denounced Ukrainian nationalism, was shot dead by two masked attackers near his house in Kyiv. He had been frequently attacked verbally and physically by nationalists in the past. On 18 June 2015, Interior Minister Arsen Avakov announced that police had arrested two suspects, Andriy Medvedko and Denys Polischchuk, two Donbas war veterans from the ultra-nationalist group Sich C14. Both denied the killing, saying that they did not know each other before their arrest, that numerous witnesses confirmed they were both not in Kyiv that day, and that police planted evidence in the case and had taken DNA samples by force. In 2017, the Kyiv Prosecutor’s Office sent all case materials to the court where, despite dozens of hearings, the case was still pending as of late January 2020. Buzyna had a reputation as a provocateur who publicly denounced almost every person, tradition, tragedy, or event sacred to most Ukrainians (including national poet Taras Shevchenko [See also NCH Annual Reports 2014, 2016, 2018] in his 2000 book “Taras Shevchenko the Ghoul”). He openly opposed Ukrainian nationalism and called Russia’s war against Ukraine in the Donbas “a civil conflict.”

²⁸⁵ Jason Burke and Samuel Okiror, “Ugandan ex-Child Soldier Guilty of War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity,” Guardian (4 February 2021).

Born in the family of a KGB officer, Buzyna used to dress in the Russian Empire's White Guard uniform for historical reconstruction events.²⁸⁶

No justice, truth or reparation was attained for any of the victims of enforced disappearance, secret detention and torture of civilians by the Security Service of Ukraine (SBU) from 2014 to 2016, and not a single suspected perpetrator was prosecuted. The new SBU head noted in June 2020 that the agency currently had no secret prisons, but said nothing of such practices in the past, and denied torture. The four-year-old investigation into this practice was handed over by the Military Prosecutor's Office to the State Investigation Bureau in December 2019, but by the end of 2020, had yielded no tangible results.²⁸⁷

Although Ukraine was not a member of the International Criminal Court (ICC), it accepted the court's jurisdiction over alleged crimes committed on its territory since November 2013. The ICC prosecutor's preliminary examination as to whether it should open an investigation into abuses committed during the armed conflict (2014–) remained ongoing.²⁸⁸

In March 2020, members of Russian law enforcement agencies visited the homes of several Crimean Solidarity members, including its current coordinator Mustafa Seydaliyev, and human rights defender Abdureshit Dzhepparov, and served them with an official written warning against taking part in future “unsanctioned actions” (any protest or commemorative events).²⁸⁹

In October 2020, Viktor Medvedchuk, an influential Ukrainian politician and friend of Vladimir Putin, sued journalist Vakhtang Kipiani for his 2019 book The Case of Vasyl Stus because it suggested that Medvedchuk had been complicit in Stus's 1980 prosecution. Vasyl Stus (1938–1985) was a dissident poet, historian, archivist, and human rights activist who died in Soviet labor camp Perm 36 after many years of imprisonment. During a trial in 1980, he had been sentenced to ten years' labor camp for “anti-Soviet activity.” Medvedchuk had been his defense lawyer. In 1981, Yuriy Lytvyn, a poet and human rights activist imprisoned with Stus and also defended by Medvedchuk, had declared that the case against Stus was fabricated and that the “passivity” of Medvedchuk was due to “instructions from above.” The court in Kiev banned references to Medvedchuk in the book, especially in the chapter “Did Attorney Viktor Medvedchuk kill Vasyl Stus?” Despite the censorship order, the book continued to be printed in its entirety in Ukraine and topped the bestseller lists shortly after the judgment.²⁹⁰

²⁸⁶ “No Conclusions in 2015 Murder of Reviled Pro-Russian Journalist Buzyna,” Justice for Journalists (24 January 2020).

²⁸⁷ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 373.

²⁸⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 698.

²⁸⁹ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World's Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 376.

²⁹⁰ Stephen Komarnyckyj, “Poet Who Haunts Ukraine,” Index on Censorship, 50 no. 1 (2021), 90.

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2016.

UNITED KINGDOM

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998–2001, 2003–2004, 2006–2020.

In March 2020, the government introduced legislation in the Overseas Operations Bill creating a “presumption against prosecution” for members of the armed forces accused of crimes, including torture, committed overseas more than five years ago. In April 2021, the bill was voted down in the House of Lords, because it undermined “some of the most basic legal standards.” The peers wanted torture and war crimes to be excluded from the five-year limit on prosecutions.²⁹¹

On 20 June 2020, James Furlong ([1984]–2020), a history and politics teacher at Holt School, Wokingham, and two others were stabbed to death in a terrorist attack at the Forbury Gardens in Reading. At least three others were injured. The perpetrator was Khairi Saadallah ([1994]–). A former teenager member of the Islamist militia Ansar al-Sharia during and after the uprising against Muammar Gaddafi in Lybia, Saadallah had fled the civil war (2011–) there in 2012 and he was granted asylum for five years in 2018 after lying about his past. With a history of debt and homelessness, alcohol, and substance misuse, and “suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder,” he had six previous convictions for some 16 offenses (including two for racially or religiously aggravated harassment, eight for offenses of violence, and two for the possession of a knife). He had only been released from prison for another offense fifteen days before the attack. He was charged with three counts of murder and three counts of attempted murder. In November 2020, he pleaded guilty. On 11 January 2021, Saadallah was sentenced to life imprisonment. The judge said that it was a terrorist attack and that the purpose was to advance an extremist Islamic cause.²⁹²

²⁹¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 705; Dan Sabbagh, “Peers Vote to Halt Plans to Limit UK Soldiers’ Accountability for War Crimes,” Guardian (13 April 2021).

²⁹² Phil Creighton, “Holt School History Teacher Killed in Forbury Gardens Stabbing,” Wokingham.today (21 June 2020); “Reading Terrorist Attack: First Victim Named as ‘Wonderfully Talented’ Teacher James Furlong,” Grimby Telegraph (21 June 2020); Luke Powell & Flora Thompson, “Park Terror Suspect Khairi Saadallah’s History Revealed in Court Papers,” Grimby Telegraph (22 June 2020); “2020 Reading Stabbings,” Wikipedia (3 May 2021); Costas Pitas, “Libyan Jailed for Life for UK Attack that Killed Three,” Reuters (11 January 2021); Lizzie Dearden, “Reading Terror Attacker Khairi Saadallah Given Whole-Life Prison Sentence for Murdering Three Victims,” Independent (11 January 2021); Central Criminal Court, The Queen versus Khairi Saadallah: Sentencing Remarks (11 January 2021).

In August 2020 the United Kingdom-based Institute for Strategic Dialogue (ISD) found that Facebook algorithms “actively promote” Holocaust denial content. According to the ISD typing “holocaust” in the Facebook search function brought up suggestions for denial pages, which in turn recommended links to publishers which sold revisionist and denial literature, as well as pages dedicated to the notorious British Holocaust denier David Irving. The results followed a Facebook decision to ban conspiracy theories about Jewish people “controlling the world” and content depicting blackface. On 12 October this decision was followed by a ban on content denying the Holocaust.

Also in October, the Institute for Research of Genocide Canada sent an open letter to the social network’s CEO, Mark Zuckerberg, asking for a similar ban on the denial of the 1995 Srebrenica genocide. Numerous groups distorting the facts about the Srebrenica genocide remained on the social network, spreading misinformation, using hate speech in posts and allowing hate speech in comments. The phenomenon was particularly prominent around the anniversary of the genocide in July each year. Facebook could not give an official statement on the initiative to ban Srebrenica genocide denial, but pointed out that it already had policies that prohibited the praise of any hate crime or mass murder²⁹³

In January 2021, the United Nations (UN) International Tribunal for the Law of the Sea ruled the historical claim of the United Kingdom (UK) to sovereignty over the Chagos Islands to be an “unlawful occupation.” The UK retained possession of the Chagos archipelago after Mauritius gained independence in 1968, paying Mauritius more than £4 million for the islands. In the early 1970s, between 1,500 and 2,000 islanders were forcibly deported so that the largest island, Diego Garcia, could be leased to the United States to use as an airbase. None of them were ever able to return. In 2019 an advisory opinion by the International Court of Justice (ICJ), endorsed by the UN General Assembly, had found the UK in breach of international law by seeking to maintain its claim to the archipelago. The UK ignored the ICJ and the UN opinions, dismissing them as advisory, which prompted Mauritius to go to the international maritime court to press its claim.²⁹⁴

On 23 February 2021, Secretary of Culture Oliver Dowden and Heritage Minister Nigel Huddleston organized a round table with leaders of 25 heritage charities, museums and art galleries, with the aim of warning organizations against focusing too much on Britain’s imperial history. In the months leading up to the round table, Corrine Fowler, a professor of postcolonial literature at Leicester University and the director of the Colonial Countryside project (exploring links between national properties and ²⁹³ Alex Hern, “Facebook and Instagram Ban Antisemitic Conspiracy Theories and Blackface,” Guardian (12 August 2020); Mark Townsend, “Facebook Algorithm Found to ‘Actively Promote’ Holocaust Denial,” Guardian (16 August 2020); James Clayton, “Facebook Bans Holocaust Denial Content,” BBC (13 October 2020); Nejra Dzaferagic, “Facebook Urged to Ban Srebrenica Genocide Denial,” Balkan Insight (27 October 2020).

²⁹⁴ Patrick Wintour, “UN Court Rejects UK Claim to Chagos Islands in Favour of Mauritius,” Guardian (28 January 2021).

colonialism) and a National Trust project (investigating the African, Caribbean, and Indian connections of eleven country houses) had been at the center of a growing row over Britain's approach to history.

In September 2020, a National Trust-commissioned 115-page interim report entitled Connections between Colonialism and Properties now in the Care of the National Trust, Including Links With Historic Slavery (co-edited by Fowler) had highlighted that 93 trust properties were linked to wealth from plantations and the slave trade, while others were important to understanding Britain's colonial history. Many Members of Parliament (MPs) and several right-wing historians and newspaper columnists took exception to the report's references to Winston Churchill's role in colonial administration and his opposition to Indian independence. Historian Andrew Roberts accused the trust of "wokery" and of "trying to imply a moral equivalence between colonialism and slavery." In December 2020, Fowler and several other academics working on another trust project, Colonial Countryside: National Trust Houses Reinterpreted, had been accused of holding "biased" views about colonialism.

In January 2021, the Common Sense Group of more than fifty Tory MPs had asked Dowden to investigate how funding was agreed for the Colonial Countryside project, which it described as an "ideologically motivated endeavor" to rewrite history.²⁹⁵

On 16 March 2021, the British Committee for Universities for Palestine (BRICUP), John Chalcraft, a professor of Middle East history and politics at the London School of Economics, and James Dickins, a professor of Arabic at the University of Leeds, produced a report listing 294 revisions to the secondary education textbooks Conflict in the Middle East c. 1945–1995 (2016), and The Middle East: Conflict, Crisis and Change 1917–2012 (2017), aimed at changing what they saw as favoring the Israeli point of view.

In 2019, the Zionist Federation had launched an online petition for the removal of the textbooks published by Pearson. Following the petition, Pearson commissioned Parallel Histories, an organization that provided material for students to understand conflicts from different sides, to examine their accuracy. They suggested some changes in terminology but found "no overall bias." However, the Board of Deputies of British Jews and UK Lawyers for Israel continued to protest. The books were taken off the shelves until 2020, when Pearson published a revised edition.²⁹⁶

In May 2021, a row erupted over the publication of The History Maker, a book by Robert Cohen (1965–). Cohen was asked by his United States (US) publisher Random House to rewrite part of the 800-page book after failing to take into account enough black historians, academics, and writers. Cohen added an 18,000-word chapter, plus extra material in existing chapters, to include individuals such as the abolitionist Frederick Douglass (1818–1895), the sociologist W.E.B. DuBois (1868–1963) and the author Toni Morrison (1931–2019). Upon hearing about Random House’s request, Julieanna Richardson, the founder and executive director of The HistoryMakers, a US-based non-profit educational institution set up to collate oral and video records of the experiences of African Americans as well as their family histories, was furious that Cohen had largely omitted black history until prompted to write more, and claimed that he had appropriated the name of her organization. She sent “cease and desist” letters to Random House, to Weidenfeld & Nicolson, the book’s British publisher, and to Cohen. In June, Random House cancelled Cohen’s contract following “editorial differences.” Weidenfeld & Nicolson and his new US publisher Simon & Schuster postponed the publication until March 2022, aiming for a “cooling-off period.” Cohen suggested that his book bear the new title of Making History.²⁹⁷

²⁹⁵ Jamie Doward, "I've Been Unfairly Targeted, Says Academic at Heart of National Trust 'Woke' Row," Guardian (20 December 2020); Jessica Murray, "Politicians Should not 'Weaponise' UK History, Says Colonialism Researcher," Guardian (22 February 2021).

²⁹⁶ Liz Lightfoot, "'Serious Concerns': UK Education Row as Israel-Palestine Textbooks Pulled," Guardian (8 June 2021).

Northern Ireland

In March 2020, the government issued proposals to address the legacy of the conflict in Northern Ireland (1969–1998) which were not compatible with human rights standards and departed from commitments made in the 2014 Stormont House Agreement and subsequent government statements and agreements. The proposals would limit prosecutions of those suspected of criminal responsibility for crimes under international law and human rights violations and abuses during the conflict [See also NCH Annual Report 2016].²⁹⁸

The government refused to launch a public inquiry into the murder of Patrick Finucane, a Belfast lawyer killed in 1989, despite a 2019 Supreme Court ruling, which found that his murder was not effectively investigated in line with human rights standards [See also NCH Annual Reports 2010, 2016].²⁹⁹

See also Australia, France, Nigeria, Thailand.

²⁹⁷ Richard Brooks, “Publication Delayed of Epic History Book Amended after Being Called ‘Too White’”, Guardian (19 June 2021).

²⁹⁸ Amnesty International, Report 2020/21: The State of the World’s Human Rights (London: AI, 2021), 381.

²⁹⁹ Amnesty International, State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 381.

UNITED STATES

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2020.

Between 31 May and 1 June 1921, in a span of about 24 hours, a white mob invaded the Black community of Greenwood in Tulsa, Oklahoma, resulting in the Tulsa Race Massacre. The trigger of the attack had been a call to lynch a black man for assaulting a white woman based on flimsy evidence. No one was held accountable for the massacre. Some historians put the massacre's death toll at 300, but it took one century for a search for mass graves to be underway. For decades, the story of the massacre was largely erased from history: official records were lost or destroyed, the Tulsa newspapers did not mention it, and Oklahoma history books did not teach it (although from the fall of 2020, the massacre would be a part of the Oklahoma school curriculum).

In 2001, Oklahoma's "Tulsa Race Riot Commission" had recommended that Oklahoma and Tulsa issue reparations to the survivors of the massacre and their descendants but it was ignored. However, the Tulsa Reparations Coalition, formed in April 2001, began to gain national traction. In 2003, a legal team filed a civil lawsuit (Alexander versus Oklahoma) against Tulsa, the Tulsa Police Department, and Oklahoma on behalf of more than 200 survivors and descendants of victims of the massacre. The federal district and appellate courts in Oklahoma dismissed the claims because the statute of limitations had expired. The United States Supreme Court declined to hear the case. A June 2020 petition tried to persuade Congress to lift the statute of limitations from any reparations claim. On 1 September 2020, a group of Oklahomans, led by 105-year-old survivor Lessie Benningfield Randle, filed a lawsuit demanding reparations and arguing that racial inequality in Tulsa today can be traced back to the 1921 massacre. In 2021, the Library of Congress changed its subject heading for the historical event from "Tulsa Race Riot" to "Tulsa Race Massacre."

On 11 May 2021, Governor Kevin Stitt of Oklahoma was ousted from the 1921 Tulsa Race Massacre Centennial Commission (established 2015), after he had signed H.B. 1775, a bill that claimed to combat racism and sexism in the state's public schools but that commission members said would undermine their goal of teaching the state's painful history of racial discrimination. The legislation would ban the teaching of certain concepts about race in Oklahoma schools, a measure that was seen as part of a larger conservative backlash to the teaching of "critical race theory." Among others, the law banned teaching that a person, "by virtue of his or her race or sex, bears responsibility for actions committed in the past by other members of the same race or sex." On 1 June 2021, President Joe Biden flew to Tulsa to mark the 100th anniversary of the massacre; he became the first sitting president to do so.³⁰⁰

³⁰⁰ "Reparations for 1921 Tulsa Race Massacre Survivors and Descendants" (petition to State of Oklahoma, City of Tulsa, and U.S. Congress) ([June] 2020) see also [NCH Campaign]; Ed Pilkington, "Trump Rally in Tulsa Spurs Renewed Call for 1921 Racial Massacre Reparations," The Guardian (18 June 2020); Adam Gabbatt,

A decade after dozens of detainees were held in a CIA-operated secret detention program – authorized from 2001 to 2009 – during which systematic human rights violations were committed, including enforced disappearance, torture and other ill-treatment, no person suspected of criminal responsibility had been brought to justice for these crimes. The limited investigations conducted into those crimes were closed without charges being brought against anyone.³⁰¹

On 18 August 2020, President Donald Trump announced he would pardon Susan B. Anthony, who had been arrested in 1872 for voting, in violation of laws permitting only men to do so. The act of executive clemency was announced at a White House ceremony marking the 100th anniversary of the 19th amendment to the United States constitution, which expanded the right to vote to women. Anthony was fined $100 for her illegal act. Historians doubted whether Anthony may have wanted presidential clemency, which historians said had likely been available to her during her own lifetime, both because it would have admitted guilt and because she wore her conviction with pride.³⁰²

On 2 September 2020 sanctions were imposed on Fatou Bensouda, chief prosecutor of the International Criminal Court (ICC), and Phakiso Mochochoko, its director of jurisdiction, complementary, and cooperation division. The sanctions came after the ICC decision to open an inquiry into alleged war crimes and crimes against humanity committed in Afghanistan since 1 May 2003. On 2 April 2021, President Joe Biden lifted the sanctions. The sanctions were preceded by a peace agreement between the government and the Taliban. Under the agreement, no mention was made of human rights, and impunity was preserved for serious crimes under international law by all parties.³⁰³

On 12 September 2020, a bronze statue of a Confederate soldier known as “At Ready” in front of the Albemarle County courthouse, where it had stood since 1909, was taken down in Charlottesville, Virginia, the scene of a far-right rally in 2017. Albemarle County had voted to dismantle the statue in “Woman, 105, Leads Lawsuit Seeking Reparations for 1921 Tulsa Massacre,” The Guardian (1 September 2020); Human Rights Watch, The Case for Reparations in Tulsa, Oklahoma: A Human Rights Argument (New York: HRW, 2020; 73 pages); Maurice Willows, Disaster Relief Report – Riot June 1921 (Washington: American Red Cross, 30 December 1921; 100 pages); District Court for Tulsa County, State of Oklahoma, Joe Lockard versus T.D. Evans, Mayor and Others (petition 23 August 1921); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 708–709; Michael Levenson, [“Tulsa Race Massacre Commission Ousts Oklahoma Governor,” New York Times (14 May 2021); Kathryn Schumaker, “What Is Critical Race Theory and Why Did Oklahoma Just Ban It?” Washington Post (19 May 2021); Rebecca Jones, “Tulsa Massacre: The Search for Victims, 100 Years On,” BBC News (27 May 2021).

³⁰¹ Amnesty International, State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 385.

³⁰² Tom McCarthy, “Trump to Pardon Women’s Suffrage Leader Susan B Anthony,” Guardian (18 August 2020); Kevin Liptak, “Trump’s Pardon May Be Undermining Anthony’s Wishes, Historians Say,” CNN (18 August 2020).

³⁰³ “Afghanistan” International Criminal Court; Julian Borger, “US Imposes Sanctions on Top International Criminal Court Officials,” Guardian (2 September 2020); “US Lifts Trump Administration’s Sanctions on Top ICC Prosecutor,” Guardian (2 April 2021); Amnesty International, State of the World’s Human Rights 2020/21 (London: AI, 2021), 59.

August, the first decision to be made under a new law for removing Civil War monuments in Virginia introduced earlier in 2020.³⁰⁴

On 14 October 2020, ten Senators wrote to the Librarian of Congress to endorse a proposal to change the Library of Congress Subject Heading from “Armenian massacres, 1915–1923” to “Armenian Genocide, 1915–1923.” They argued that neither the Constitution nor any legislation provided that the President or Secretary of State was the primary authority on making historical genocide determinations. The Proxmire Act of 1988 (implementing the 1948 Genocide Convention) included no mention of genocide determinations, whether by the President, Secretary of State, or any other Cabinet member. The presidential memorandum delegating certain authorities from the 2018 Elie Wiesel Act to the Secretary of State only referred to reporting on “ongoing atrocities” and “countries and regions at risk of atrocities,” not historical cases like the Armenian genocide. Both houses of Congress had passed resolutions recognizing the Armenian genocide. They also argued that the scholarly consensus was that “Armenian Genocide,” not “Armenian massacres,” was the most accurate description of the tragedy.

On 23 April 2021, the 106th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide, Joe Biden became the country’s first President to declare formal recognition of the genocide.³⁰⁵

On 1 December 2020, the National Security Archive, the Society for Historians of American Foreign Relations, the American Historical Association, and the Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington filed suit against President Donald Trump, seeking to enforce the Presidential Records Act and prevent any destruction of records during the presidential transition. The lawsuit cited the inadequacy of White House policies that only required a screenshot of instant messages to be saved, preserving only the graphic content, when the law required “a complete copy” to be preserved, including digital links and attachments. As the Biden White House, in power since 20 January 2021, formally rescinded the screen shot policy and required complete electronic copies to be preserved in official records systems, the plaintiffs on 11 February 2021 informed the judge that they voluntarily dismissed the suit, leaving open the possibility of re-filing if any Trump records destruction came to light in the future.³⁰⁶

³⁰⁴ “Charlottesville: Confederate Soldier Statue Removed,” BBC News (12 September 2020); “Tulsa Race Massacre: President Biden Commemorates 100-year Anniversary” (1 June 2021).

³⁰⁵ Ten United States Senators, Letter to Carla Hayden, Librarian of Congress (14 October 2020); Julian Borger and Martin Chulov, “Biden Becomes First US President to Recognise Armenian Genocide,” Guardian (24 April 2021).

³⁰⁶ National Security Archive, “Archive, Historians, CREW Sue White House, Seek to Preserve Presidential Records During the Transition” (1 December 2020); US District Court for the D.C., NSA, SHAFR, AHA, CREW versus Donald Trump, Executive Office of the President, Jared Kushner, David Ferriero, NARA, Complaint (1 December 2020); “Historians Having to Tape Together Records That Trump Tore Up,” Guardian (17 January 2021); National Security Archive, “Lawsuit Saves Trump White House Records” (11 February 2021).

On 10 December 2020, two senators introduced two Smithsonian museum bills –regarding a National American Latino Museum and an American Women’s History Museum – and sought a unanimous vote of all hundred senators. However, Republican Senator Mike Lee, from Utah, cast a dissenting vote, thus blocking unanimous approval. Lee condemned politics based on identity and said that the museums would “further divide an already divided nation.” He argued that stories of Latinos and women should be told in the existing American History Museum. Measures supporting the museums had already been overwhelmingly passed earlier in 2020 by the House of Representatives.³⁰⁷

On 10 December 2020, Garrett Felber, a tenure-track assistant professor in the Arch Dalrymple III Department of History at the University of Mississippi (UM), received a letter from the department chair, Noell Wilson, informing him that she had recommended the non-renewal of his employment contract as per 31 December 2021. The reason she gave was that Felber had repeatedly refused to meet by phone or Zoom (although they had communicated in writing). The tension leading to the dismissal began in late October 2020, when Felber, an outspoken critic of the university administration, tweeted that Wilson had rejected a $42,000 grant he had been awarded to support “Study and Struggle,” a political education project on mass incarceration and immigrant detention in Mississippi, while months earlier, another grant for the same project had been accepted and promoted by UM. Wilson, he also tweeted, had called the project political rather than historical and said that it could potentially harm the history department’s ability to procure funding but that the real reason for the rejection was that the university would lose its “racist donors” if it supported an antiracist program such as his project. In a letter to the UM Chancellor hundreds of historians supported Felber’s views, calling the contract non-renewal an assault on academic freedom and pledging not to speak at UM until he was reinstated. The UM confirmed the contract non-renewal in a response to the American Historical Association.³⁰⁸

On 26 December 2020 a statue of Breonna Taylor ([1994] –2020), which was erected about two weeks earlier to honor her memory after she was shot and killed on 13 March 2020 during a police raid of her apartment, was smashed in Oakland, California.³⁰⁹

³⁰⁷ “Mike Lee: Lone US Senator Blocks Women’s and Latino Museums,” BBC News (11 December 2020); Savannah Behrmann, “‘Hyphenated Identity Groups’: Utah GOP Sen. Mike Lee Blocks Legislation for Latino and Women History Smithsonian,” USA Today (no date [10 December 2020]); Stephen Pitti, “What Americans Don’t Know about Latino History Could Fill a Museum,” Los Angeles Times (16 December 2020); Stephen Pitti (and 210 signatories), “Historian Letter to Senate Rules Committee” (16 December 2020).

³⁰⁸ Christian Middleton, “UM Fires History Professor Who Criticizes ‘Powerful, Racist Donors’ and ‘Carceral State,’” Mississippi Free Press (15 December 2020); [“Letter to Chancellor Boyce and Chair Wilson \[of University of Mississippi\]”](#) (Google Doc; 16 December 2020); Megan Zahneis, “His University Celebrated His Success, Then It Fired Him,” Chronicle of Higher Education (17 December 2020); Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE), Letter to Chancellor Boyce (18 December 2020); Colleen Flaherty, “Ole Miss Doubles Down on Professor’s Termination,” Inside HigherEd (12 January 2021).

³⁰⁹ “Oakland Police Investigate Smashed Statue of Breonna Taylor,” Guardian (29 December 2020).

On 15 January 2021, in an announcement to students enrolled in his course of Chinese Politics, Rory Truex, an assistant professor of politics and international affairs at Princeton University, said that he would “recommend that students who are currently residing in China should not take the course this year.” The reasons given were that the course contained “material that the Chinese government would find sensitive.” Examples given included Western sources about the 1966–1976 Cultural Revolution and the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre which were banned in China. Students participating in the course would not be permitted to record lectures or precepts, all written assignments would be submitted for blind grading without students’ names to preserve anonymity, and students’ faces would be edited out of lecture recordings. Truex also emphasized that he would not self-censor the content of his course. Reactions within the university praised Truex for his sensitive approach.³¹⁰

On 29 January 2021, three United Nations Special Rapporteurs wrote a so-called allegations letter to the United States (US) government about the impact of the increased US military presence on the island of Guam, Micronesia, and the failure to protect the indigenous Chamorro people from the loss of their traditional lands, territories, and resources; from serious adverse environmental impact; and from the loss of ancient cultural artifacts, sacred places, burial grounds, and ancestral remains. The US military buildup reportedly endangered as many as 269 historic properties.³¹¹

On [4] February 2021, the Arkansas Art Academy in Rogers fired history and social sciences teacher Josh Depner for sending an email to state legislatures objecting to legislation that would punish schools mentioning the 1619 Project in their curriculum (see below). The school said that Depner had violated their “personal technology agreement” and “code of ethics” by sending the email from his professional address.³¹²

On 4 February 2021, the Korean Association of Harvard Law School (KAHLS) issued a statement in response to the article “Contracting for Sex in the Pacific War” by J. Mark Ramseyer, the Mitsubishi Professor of Japanese Legal Studies at Harvard Law School, and his accompanying editorial (“Recovering the Truth about the Comfort Women”), in which he described the coercive sexual slavery system organized by Japan during the Pacific War (1931–1945) as a “consenting, contractual process.”

³¹⁰ Kathy Smail, “Amid Digital Crackdown, Chinese Politics Professor Recommends Students in China Avoid His Class,” Daily Princetonian (15 January 2021).

³¹¹ Mandates of the Special Rapporteur on the issue of human rights obligations relating to the enjoyment of a safe, clean, healthy and sustainable environment; the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples; and the Special Rapporteur on the implications for human rights of the environmentally sound management and disposal of hazardous substances and wastes, Allegations Letter AL USA 7/2021 (29 January 2021).

³¹² Max Brantley, “Rogers Teacher Fired for Hot Email to Legislators over Pending Legislation to Restrict Social Studies Teaching,” Arkansas Times (4 February 2021; Zack Linly, “Students Protest Firing of Arkansas Teacher Who Called Lawmakers Out for Being Fragile AF Over 1619 Project Curriculum,” The Root (6 February 2021).

The statement said that Ramseyer's denialist arguments were factually inaccurate and misleading, ignoring and going against decades of Korean scholarship, primary sources, and third-party reports. The review in which Ramseyer's article was published (online in December 2020; printed version pending) also issued a statement of concern about its use of historical evidence. Alexis Dudden, a history professor at the University of Connecticut, described Ramseyer's article as "academic fraud" analogous to Holocaust denialism.³¹³

On 25 February 2021, the contract of Lora Burnett, a history professor at Collin College, a community college in McKinney, Texas, was not renewed, after she had sent critical tweets about the college's handling of the Covid-19-pandemic and about the vice-presidential debate held in the run-up of the presidential elections of November 2020. On 28 January 2021, president of Collin College, H. Neil Matkin – who had called the pandemic "blown out of proportion" – had also ended the contracts of professor in humanities Audra Heaslip and professor in developmental studies Suzanne Jones after both had raised concerns about the college's Covid-19 reopening. Jones was also criticized for her participation in an open letter calling for the removal of Confederate statues in 2017.³¹⁴

On 5 March 2021, judge Camille Sarrouf ruled that ownership of the images of two enslaved people taken in the 1850s belonged to the photographer [See also NCH Annual Report 2020]. Harvard University said the photographs were "powerful visual indictments of the horrific institution of slavery." Descendant Tamara Lanier said that the judge missed the humanitarian aspect and intended to appeal the decision.³¹⁵

On 8 March 2021, Audrey Truschke, an American historian teaching South Asian history at Rutgers University, Newark, New Jersey, was subjected to online harassment and threats by the Hindu right-wing group Hindu on Campus who also wrote an open letter, reportedly signed by 5,000 persons, to Rutgers expressing "concerns" over Truschke's views on Twitter. Hindu on Campus was a student-led ³¹³ "KAHLS Statement in Response to Professor J. Mark Ramseyer's Article 'Contracting for Sex in the Pacific War'" (4 February 2021); Elizabeth Redden, "Harvard Law Professor Accused of Denialism in Rewriting 'Comfort Women' Narrative," Inside HigherEd (16 February 2021); Ariel H. Kim & Simon J. Levien, "Journal Delays Print Publication of Harvard Law Professor's Controversial 'Comfort Women' Article Amid Outcry," The Harvard Crimson (14 February 2021); Mark Ramseyer, "Recovering the Truth about the Comfort Women," Japan Forward (12 January 2021); Alexis Dudden, ed., "Supplement to Special Issue: Academic Integrity at Stake: The Ramseyer Article – Four Letters," The Asia-Pacific Journal, 19 no. 5 (1 March 2021), 2 pages; Youmi Kim & Mike Ives, "A Harvard Professor Called Wartime Sex Slaves 'Prostitutes' – One Pushed Back," New York Times (26 February 2021); Jeannie Suk Gersen, "Seeking the True Story of the Comfort Women: How a Harvard Professor's Dubious Scholarship Reignited a History of Mistrust between South Korea and Japan," New Yorker (26 February 2021).

³¹⁴ "Dallas' Confederate Memorials Scream 'White Supremacy'," Dallas Morning News (4 August 2017); Adam Steinbaugh, "Collin College Fires Third Professor in Transparent Campaign to Cull Its Critics," FIRE (26 February 2021); Hady Mawajdeh & Bill Zeeble, "Collin College Professors' Fight for COVID-19 Protocols Shifts to a Fight over Free Speech," KERA News (17 March 2021).

³¹⁵ "Judge Dismisses Suit over 'Slave Ancestor' Photos at Harvard," BBC News (5 March 2021).

group wanting to create “a safe space for diaspora Hindus to share their experiences with anti-Hindu bigotry and standing together against racism.” Truschke said she had been facing an “avalanche of hate speech, anti-Muslim sentiments, misogyny, violent threats, things endangering my family ... and aggression toward my students.” Rutgers issued a statement in support of Truschke.

On 11 August 2018, one of Truschke’s lectures in Hyderabad, titled “Unpopular Stories: Narrating the Indo-Islamic Past and Navigating Present-day Prejudices” and organized by the Krishnakriti Foundation, had been canceled after members of the Bajrang Dal, Rashtriya Swayamsevak Sangh, and Bharatiya Janata Party had written letters to the police, in which they complained about Truschke’s views on Hinduism. Truschke had planned to speak on three topics: Mughal Emperor Aurangzeb (1618–1707), the purported role of Islam in the death of Indian Buddhism, and Sanskrit narratives of Indo-Islamic rule. According to Truschke, she had “lightly” self-censored her book Aurangzeb: The Man and The Myth (2017) after Hindu nationalist pressure in order to comply with Indian laws that protected religious sentiments.³¹⁶

On 15 April 2021, the virtual annual meeting of the Society for American Archaeology (SAA) erupted in controversy after members realized that one of the sessions, “Curation, Repatriation, and Accessibility: Vital Ethical Conversations,” had allowed a talk arguing against the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act (1990; NAGPRA). The NAGPRA gave Native Americans rights to the human remains and cultural artifacts of their ancestors. The presentation was given by Elizabeth Weiss, a physical anthropologist at San José State University, SAA member, and co-author with James Springer of the controversial book Repatriation and Erasing the Past (2020). Its title was “Has Creationism Crept Back into Archaeology?” Her argument was that NAGPRA gave “control of research over to contemporary American Indian communities,” who may request repatriation or refuse to participate in certain research partly because of religious beliefs. Many archaeologists were reportedly shocked that the SAA gave a platform to what they considered anti-Indigenous views. Some were considering leaving the SAA and starting a new society.³¹⁷

In 2021, a number of proposed measures, largely ignoring the role of slavery and campaigns of anti-Mexican violence and aiming to promote patriotism in the classrooms and public spaces of Texas, was expected to become law. One bill that passed the House on 25 May 2021 banned teaching the 1619 Project (aiming to reframe U.S. history by placing the consequences of slavery and the contributions of Black Americans at the center of the national narrative [see below]) and limited how teachers in Texas classrooms discuss the ways in which racism had influenced the legal system in the state, long a segregationist bastion, and elsewhere. More than 220 Texas historians and teachers across the state signed a letter opposing the bill. Another bill would create a committee to “promote patriotic education” about the state’s secession from Mexico in 1836 largely by men who were fighting to expand slavery. A third bill would block exhibits at San Antonio’s Alamo complex from explaining that major figures in the Texas Revolution were slave owners (see below).

³¹⁶ “Rutgers University Stands by Audrey Truschke after Online Attacks, Statement from Hindu Group,” The Wire (9 March 2021); Audrey Truschke, “Silencing Scholarly Voices, One Event at a Time,” The Wire (20 August 2018).

³¹⁷ Lizzie Wade, “An Archaeology Society Hosted a Talk against Returning Indigenous Remains: Some Want a New Society,” Science Magazine (19 April 2021).

The proposed measures came as nearly a dozen other Republican-led states sought to ban or limit how the role of slavery and pervasive effects of racism were taught. Idaho was the first state to sign into law a measure that would withhold funding from schools that teach such lessons. Lawmakers in Iowa, Louisiana, New Hampshire, and Tennessee had introduced bills that would ban teaching about the enduring legacies of slavery and segregationist laws, or that any state or the country is inherently racist or sexist. In South Dakota, a vague “act to prohibit the use of curricular materials that promote racial divisiveness” appeared, and in Arkansas HB1231 was named “To Prohibit the Use of Public School Funds to Teach the 1619 Project.”

Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell had singled out the 1619 Project in a letter condemning the Biden administration’s proposal to teach about racism and slavery’s legacy in the nation’s public schools. Todd Rokita, Indiana Attorney General, wrote to the Biden administration to argue that they should not be “imposing the deeply flawed and radical teachings of critical race theory into the classroom.” The Attorneys General of at least nineteen other states signed it.³¹⁸

In late April 2021, Nikole Hannah-Jones, a Pulitzer Prize-winning writer for The New York Times Magazine, was appointed to the Knight Chair in Race and Investigative Journalism at the Hussman School of Journalism and Media at the University of North Carolina (UNC) at Chapel Hill on a five-year contract. Despite support from the UNC-Chapel Hill chancellor and faculty, she was denied a tenured position after the board of trustees failed to approve the journalism department’s recommendation, contrary to the fact that the last two people in the position were granted tenure upon their appointment. Critics pointed to political and donor pressure of conservative groups who had been concerned about Hannah-Jones’s founding role in The New York Times Magazine’s 1619 Project, launched in August 2019 and named for the year that slavery began in the colonies that would become the United States: Hannah-Jones won the 2020 Pulitzer Prize for commentary for her introductory essay to the Project. The successful 1619 Project ignited a continuing debate about the legacy of slavery, but had also faced criticism from historians over certain claims, and from conservatives who labeled it ³¹⁸ Simon Romero, “Texas Pushes to Obscure the State’s History of Slavery and Racism,” New York Times (20 May 2021); Ta-Nehisi Coates, Glenda Elizabeth Gilmore & Martha S. Jones, “We Stand in Solidarity With Nikole Hannah-Jones,” The Root (25 May 2021); Kate McGee, “Texas Educators Worry Bill Limiting the Teaching of Current Events and Historic Racism Would “Whitewash History,” Texas Tribune (26 May 2021).

“propaganda,” “unpatriotic,” and “too focused on racism.” Hannah-Jones threatened to sue UNC-Chapel Hill.

On 30 June, amid mounting pressure, the board of trustees granted her tenure during a special closed session. The vote, which happened in public, was nine to four. On 7 July 2021, however, Hannah-Jones announced that she declined the offer of tenure. In a letter she explained that she could not imagine working at a school named after “a man who ignored ... all of my credentials ... because he believed that a project that centered Black Americans equaled the denigration of white Americans.” Leading up to the vote on the board of trustees, Walter Hussman Jr., after whom UNC’s Hussman School of Journalism and Media was named and who was one of the most important donors of UNC Chapel Hill, had reportedly opposed Hannah-Jones’s appointment, writing to the chancellor and at least one board member to express his worries “about the controversy of tying the UNC journalism school to the 1619 project.”³¹⁹

In May 2021, Tennessee became the first state to pass what queer-rights advocates branded as “Don’t Say Gay” laws, which either forbade the teaching of LGBTQ+ history in K-12 schools (schools from Kindergarten to twelfth grade) outright, or allowed parents to choose whether their children would participate in lessons that included it. Within days, Montana followed, while similar bills were under consideration in Arkansas, West Virginia, Iowa, and Missouri.³²⁰

Thirteen May 2021 marked the thirty-sixth anniversary and the first official day of remembrance for the 1985 bombing of the Black liberation group MOVE. On 13 May 1985, a police helicopter flew over a communal house occupied by members of MOVE, a separatist organization that bore comparison to the Black Panthers combined with back-to-nature environmental activism, and dropped on to its roof a bomb. At the same time, Philadelphia police fired over 10,000 rounds of ammunition at the house in which children were known to be present. The bomb ignited a fire that was allowed to burn for almost an hour before emergency responders were called in. Eleven people linked to the group were killed, among them five children, some 61 houses were razed to the ground, and 250 people left homeless. No

³¹⁹ Katie Robertson, “Nikole Hannah-Jones Denied Tenure at University of North Carolina,” New York Times (19 May 2021); Joe Killian & Kyle Ingram, “After Conservative Criticism, UNC Backs Down from Offering Acclaimed Journalist Tenured Position,” NC Policy Watch (19 May 2021); Ta-Nehisi Coates, Glenda Elizabeth Gilmore & Martha S. Jones, “We Stand in Solidarity With Nikole Hannah-Jones,” The Root (25 May 2021); Colleen Flaherty, “A Breach of Trust?: UNC Chapel Hill Professors Demand a Vote on Nikole Hannah-Jones’s Tenure Case,” Inside HigherEd (25 May 2021); Wallace Hettle, “Keep History Teachers Free to Teach, in Iowa and the Nation,” History News Network (20 June 2021); Colleen Flaherty, “Tenure for Hannah-Jones,” Inside HigherEd (30 June 2021); “Nikole Hannah-Jones Issues Statement on Decision to Decline Tenure Offer at University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill and to Accept Knight Chair Appointment at Howard University,” NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund (6 July 2021); Scott Jaschik, “Hannah-Jones Turns Down UNC Offer,” Inside HigherEd (7 July 2021).

³²⁰ Gabriel Arana, “The Republican Plot to Ban LGBTQ History in Public Schools,” The New Republic (28 June 2021).

Philadelphia official ever faced criminal consequences for the atrocity. The only person held criminally liable was Ramona Africa, one of only two MOVE members who managed to escape the attack – she was charged with riot and conspiracy, and served seven years in prison.

In November 2020, Philadelphia’s governing council approved a resolution that apologized for the “immeasurable and enduring harm.” The 2021 anniversary was overshadowed by the discovery in April 2021, that the bones of two of the children had been held for almost four decades in the anthropology collection of the University of Pennsylvania. The bones were being used as a “case study” in an online course, entitled Real Bones: Adventures in Forensic Anthropology, focusing on “lost personhood” – cases where an individual cannot be identified due to the decomposed condition of their remains. Since 2019 the bones had also been used for teaching purposes without permission of the parents.

On 13 May 2021, mayor of Philadelphia Jim Kenney announced that he had dismissed the city’s health commissioner, Thomas Farley, after it was revealed that the bones of an undisclosed number of MOVE victims had been incinerated and dumped by the city without the knowledge or permission of living relatives. Farley had become aware of the bones’ existence in 2017 and instead of attempting to identify and returning them to the families made the decision to “cremate and dispose them.” On 14 May, Kenney stated that the remains had actually been stored at the medical examiner’s office for 35 years.³²¹

On 14 May 2021, President Joe Biden revoked two executive orders (EO) issued by former President Donald Trump to punish vandals who destroy monuments (EO 13933 of 26 June 2020) and to build a sculpture garden to honor American heroes (EO 13934 of 3 July 2020).³²²

On 4 June 2021, the Microsoft search engine Bing blocked image and video results for the phrase “tank man,” a reference to the iconic image of the lone protester facing down tanks during the 1989 protests in Tiananmen Square, in countries including the United States, Germany, Singapore, France, and Switzerland. It prompted accusations of possible censorship on the protest anniversary, but Microsoft spoke of an “accidental human error.” Microsoft Bing was one of the few foreign search engines that were accessible in China, because the company has agreed to censor results for sensitive terms such as the Dalai Lama, Tiananmen Square, or Falun Gong. In 2009, New York Times columnist Nicholas Kristof had received censored results on Bing when he searched for some of the topics censored in ³²¹ Ed Pilkington, “Philadelphia City Council Apologises for Deadly 1985 Move Bombing,” Guardian (13 November 2021); Ed Pilkington, “Bones of Black Children Killed in Police Bombing Used in Ivy League Anthropology Course,” Guardian (23 April 2021); “Philadelphia Holds Day of Remembrance for 1985 Move Bombing That Left 11 Dead,” Guardian (13 May 2021); Ed Pilkington, “Philadelphia Incinerated Remains of Police Bombing Victims Without Telling Families,” Guardian (13 May 2021); “Philadelphia Says Remains of 1985 Bombing Victims Were Not Destroyed,” Guardian (15 May 2021).

³²² “Biden Revokes Trump Order to Punish Statue Vandals,” BBC News (15 May 2021).

China, using simplified Chinese language characters. In 2014, Bing was censoring results for Chinese-language users in the United States for many of the same search terms that Bing censored in China.³²³

On 16 June 2021, PEN America, the American Historical Association, the American Association of University Professors, and dozens of history associations signed a Joint Statement on Legislative Efforts to Restrict Education about Racism and American History. They opposed the legislative proposals being introduced in at least twenty states across the United States that targeted the teaching of racism and related issues in American history in universities and aimed at prohibiting the teaching of so-called “divisive concepts.” The associations argued that these bills risked infringing academic freedom by suppressing teaching and learning about the role of racism in the history of the United States and sought to substitute the judgment of politicians for the judgment of professional educators. “A white-washed view of history cannot change what happened in the past,” the statement said.³²⁴

On 1 July 2021, the Bullock Texas State History Museum canceled a book event hours before it was supposed to start. The event centered around the book Forget the Alamo: The Rise and Fall of an American Myth by Bryan Burrough, Chris Tomlinson, and Jason Stanford. It dealt with the so-called “Texas creation myth,” which assumed that in 1836 around 200 Texians fought against thousands of Mexican troops, buying General Sam Houston enough time to defeat the tyranny of Mexican President Antonio López de Santa Anna and win freedom for Texas. This narrative, refuted by historical research, omitted that Texians specifically opposed Mexican laws that would free enslaved workers needed to farm their cotton. Forget the Alamo explored the 1836 Battle of the Alamo as a fight to ensure the preservation of slavery, as enshrined in the original Texas Constitution. The book event had to be canceled following an order from the museum board, made up of Governor Greg Abbott, Lieutenant Governor Dan Patrick and state House Speaker Dade Phelan (all Republicans), and three others.

In 2018, a panel reviewing the state history curriculum had suggested not to require seventh-graders to learn that those who died at the Alamo were “heroic.” The panel was fiercely criticized by Abbot and other Republican leaders. In June 2021, Abbot had signed into law an act establishing “the 1836 Project” to “promote patriotic education” and had put the discussion on whether critical race theory should be taught on the agenda for an upcoming special legislative session. In the days leading up to the event, the conservative Texas Public Policy Foundation had compared Forget the Alamo to the 1619 Project

³²³ Julia Carrie Wong, “Microsoft Blocks Bing from Showing Image Results for Tiananmen ‘Tank Man’,” Guardian (5 June 2021); “Microsoft Says Error Caused ‘Tank Man’ Bing Censorship,” BBC News (5 June 2021).

³²⁴ PEN America and others, Joint Statement on Legislative Efforts to Restrict Education about Racism and American History (Washington: PEN America, 16 June 2021).

(see above), calling it “an effort to diminish the great figures of history and place slavery at the center of every story.”³²⁵

On 10 July 2021, the statue of General Robert Lee (1807–1870) was removed from Market Street Park in Charlottesville, Virginia. In August 2017, plans to remove the statue had prompted a “Unite the Right” march that drew hundreds of neo-Nazis, white nationalists, and Ku Klux Klan members to Charlottesville. Heather Heyer, an anti-racism protester, was killed by a neo-Nazi who drove into her. After the protests, officials had continued to push for the removal of the statue, but they were prevented from acting by legal action and changes to the law. In April 2021, Virginia’s highest court ruled that the statue could be taken down. The statue of General Thomas “Stonewall” Jackson (1824–1863) was also removed. Local officials said they planned to redesign the park spaces where the statues had been located “in a way that promotes healing and that tells a more complete history of Charlottesville” [See also NCH Annual Reports 2017, 2020].³²⁶

See also China, Egypt, El Salvador, France, Haiti, Thailand, United Kingdom.

URUGUAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2013, 2015–2018, 2020.

Over the weekend of 1–2 May 2021, intelligence reports and orders belonging to two extinct repressive bodies of the dictatorship (1973–1985) were found in Artillery Group number 5, a military unit which functioned as a detention and torture center for political prisoners in 1972–1974. They belonged to the Information and Defense Service (SID) and the Coordinating Body for Anti-Subversive Operations (COCA), which were repressive institutions before and after the 1973 military coup. As of May 2020, 197 people were still reported missing. At least 380,000 Uruguayans were forced into exile during the dictatorship.³²⁷

³²⁵ Peter Weber, “Texas State History Museum Abruptly Cancels Speech by Authors of New Book on the Alamo,” The Week (2 July 2021); Jason Stanford, “Opinion: Texas Republicans Rush to Guard the Alamo from the Facts,” Washington Post (5 July 2021); Heather Cox Richardson, “July 7, 2021 Entry,” Letters from an American (7 July 2021).

³²⁶ “Charlottesville Takes Down Robert E Lee Statue that Sparked Rally,” BBC (11 July 2021).

³²⁷ “Uruguay: Military Withheld Information on Dictatorship Crimes,” teleSUR (13 May 2021).

UZBEKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2014, 2016, 2020.

See Kyrgyzstan.

VATICAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000, 2004, 2009, 2011, 2015, 2019–2020.

VENEZUELA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2003–2004, 2006, 2009–2010, 2012, 2014, 2017–2020.

Impunity for human rights abuses remained the norm in 2020. In July 2020, the United Nations (UN) Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) reported that contributing factors included security forces tampering with crime scenes and withholding information; conflicts of interest; and security forces' intimidation, threats, and reprisals against victims and their families. In September 2020, the Independent International Fact-Finding Mission created by the UN Human Rights Council to investigate allegations of atrocities since 2014 concluded that there were reasonable grounds to believe that pro-government groups and high-level authorities, including disputed-President Nicolas Maduro, had committed violations amounting to crimes against humanity, including extrajudicial executions, politically motivated detention and torture, and abuses against protesters. The mission found that the judiciary contributed to arbitrary arrests, impunity for egregious abuses, and denial of justice to victims.³²⁸

VIETNAM

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2006, 2009–2013, 2016–2017, 2019–2020.

³²⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 736, 739-740.

WESTERN SAHARA

See Morocco / Western Sahara.

YEMEN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2003, 2010, 2013–2016, 2018–2020.

In October 2020, the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Council renewed and strengthened the mandate of the Group of Eminent International and Regional Experts on Yemen. In their third report, the group of experts urged the international community to address the longstanding impunity for serious crimes, including by recommending the creation of a “criminally focused investigation body” and calling on the UN Security Council to refer the situation to the International Criminal Court.³²⁹ ³²⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 755.

ZAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2015.

On 26 April 2021, Sishuwa Sishuwa, a lecturer in modern history at the University of Zambia with a focus on nineteenth and twentieth century African history, was accused of sedition in a letter by the Zambian ambassador to Ethiopia and permanent representative to the African Union, Emmanuel Mwamba, to the Inspector General of Police. Since 2018, Sishuwa had been on temporary research leave at the University of Cape Town's Institute for Democracy, Citizenship, and Public Policy in South Africa. On 19 March 2021, he had written an opinion article in the independent local newspaper News Diggers (republished on 22 March 2021 in South Africa's Mail & Guardian) on the potential for unrest in Zambia after the general elections, entitled "Zambia may burn after the August election." The next day, the University of Zambia released a statement dissociating itself from his views, suggesting that Sishuwa was not currently employed by the university because he was on a temporary research leave. Mwamba initially responded to Sishuwa's article with a March 29 Facebook post in which he accused the columnist of "being a hired gun," calling the opinion piece an attempt to "scandalize Zambia, harm its reputation and impose a false and alarming international narrative." In April 2021, Sishuwa sued Mwamba, seeking damages for defamation and malicious falsehood in connection with the Facebook post. Mwamba retaliated by laying the sedition charge against Sishuwa with police. A letter signed by more than hundred academics from Zambia, Africa, and the rest of the world rejected the sedition allegation and called on the university to guarantee his continued employment and his right to academic freedom. The sedition charge was pending.³³⁰

ZIMBABWE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2001, 2004, 2006, 2008–2015, 2018.

The Mnangagwa administration had so far failed to implement recommendations of the Motlanthe Commission of Inquiry, established to investigate widespread violence in the aftermath of the August 2018 elections. The commission presented its report to President Mnangagwa in December 2018, and found that six people had died and 35 others were injured as a result of actions by state security forces.

³³⁰ "International Academics Reject Sedition Charge against Zambia's Dr Sishuwa," Mail & Guardian (30 April 2021); "Zambian Columnist Sishuwa Sishuwa Could Face Sedition Charge for Opinion Piece on Election," Committee to Protect Journalists (12 May 2021); Scholars at Risk, "Sishuwa Sishuwa" (26 April 2021).

It recommended that perpetrators be held accountable and that compensation be paid to families of the deceased and those who lost property.³³¹

³³¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2021: Events of 2020 (New York: HRW, 2021), 758.

INTRODUCTION

This twenty-sixth *Annual Report of the Network of Concerned Historians (NCH) contains news about the domain where history and human rights intersect, in particular about the censorship of history and the persecution of historians, archivists, and archaeologists around the globe, as reported by various human rights organizations and other sources. It mainly covers events and developments of 2019 and 2020.

Disclaimer. The fact that the NCH presents this news does not imply that it shares the views and beliefs of the historians and others mentioned in it.

Download this report at:

<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/20.pdf>

Cite this report as:

Network of Concerned Historians, Annual Report 2020

(<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/20.pdf>).

For the complete set of NCH Annual Reports, see:

<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/content/ar.html>

Or click:

				2020	2019	2018	2017	2016	2015
2014	2013	2012	2011	2010	2009	2008	2007	2006	2005
2004	2003	2002	2001	2000	1999	1998	1997	1996	1995

All Annual Reports (1995–2020) were compiled by Antoon De Baets. This year's report was co-edited by Ruben Zeeman.

Please send any comments to antoondebaets@concernedhistorians.org

AFGHANISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2016, 2018.

See Iran, United States.

ALBANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2012, 2015–2019.

In mid-July 2019, ten members of parliament from the ruling Socialist Party (PS/PPSh) wanted to prevent the Institute for the Study of the Crimes of Communism (ISKK), created in 2010 to probe Communist-era crimes in Albania, from studying incidents that happened during World War II. The parliament was reviewing the law that regulated the study of Communism with the aim of banning the study of World War II as part of the Communist period; it also demanded that the fifteen institute employees get security clearance. Institute director Agron Tufa (1967–) said that the proposed changes demonstrated a “Communist-era mentality” to the writing of history. A few months earlier, Spartak Braho, a Socialist Party member of parliament who had been a judge in the Communist era, had accused Tufa of insulting the anti-Fascist resistance during World War II through the publication of books that claimed that war crimes were committed by Communist guerrilla fighters.¹

On 31 October 2019, the International Commission on Missing Persons (ICMP) announced in Tirana that it had successfully identified two people who disappeared under the Communist regime. Further progress was impeded because prosecutors did not approve exhumations at Mount Dajti near Tirana and at another known grave site in Ballshi in southern Albania. They did not give reasons. In 2017, a project was started to find and identify some of the 6,000 missing victims of the Communist regime (1944–1991). In 2010, family members of some of those who disappeared under the Communist regime conducted private research at a known unmarked graveyard at Mount Dajti, finding the remains of thirteen people. The two persons identified by the ICMP belonged to these thirteen [see NCH Annual Report 2017].²

¹ Gjergj Erebara, “BIRN Wins Appeal to Declassify Albanian Secret Police Files,” Balkan Insight (29 May 2019).

² Gjergj Erebara, “Search for Victims of Albanian Communism Impeded by Prosecutors,” Balkan Insight (31 October 2019).

In December 2019, Albanian-Canadian historian Olsi Jazexhi, a history lecturer at the Alexander Moisiu University of Durrës, was barred from teaching his courses the next semester. In August 2019, Jazexhi had visited re-education camps in Xinjiang, China, where in video-recorded interviews he documented the attempts to suppress the language, culture, and religion of the Uyghurs. Jazexhi was accused of lying and spreading “fake news” by Chinese Communist Party media and the Chinese ambassador in Albania. Jazexhi declared that his university had ties to Beijing and believed that his suspension was in retaliation for his outspokenness about the plight of the Uyghurs.³

See also Austria.

ALGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001–2019.

ANGOLA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2009, 2017.

In 2019, the crackdown on peaceful protesters and activists in the Cabinda enclave continued. Between 28 January and 1 February 2019, police arrested 63 Cabinda pro-independence activists ahead of an announced protest to celebrate the anniversary of the signing of the Treaty of Simulambuco (1885) that gave Cabinda the status of a protectorate of former colonial power Portugal. Many of the activists were members of the Movimento Independista de Cabinda (MIC; Independence Movement of Cabinda), a peaceful separatist group that wanted independence or autonomy from Angola.

The crackdown started when Angolan security forces arrested eight MIC activists at their homes on 28 January, where they were preparing leaflets for a peaceful protest scheduled for 1 February. Zenaida Machado, Angola specialist at Human Rights Watch, told AFP that “[u]nlike other parts of Angola where we have seen progress in the right to protest and in freedom of expression, the situation in Cabinda remains tense.”⁴

³ Tom Blackwell, “Canadian Academic Denied University Work, Called Liar by Chinese Media after Exposing Uyghur Camps,” National Post (11 December 2019).

⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 27; “Thirteen Protesters Freed, Fifty Held Arbitrarily,” Amnesty International (3 April 2019); “In Angola’s Oil Region, Separatists Accuse President of Crackdown,” France24 (18 May 2019).

ARGENTINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2019.

On 26 February 2020, the Appeals Court in Resistencia, the capital of Chaco Province in the north of Argentina confirmed a first-instance ruling that the massacre of members of the indigenous community of Pilagá, carried out by forces of the Gendarmería Nacional on 10 October 1947 in the La Bomba zone, Formosa, was a genocide. The court accorded collective reparations to the Pilagá people. In the absence of many archival records, the massacre had long been denied until new documents were discovered by a documentary filmmaker (possibly Valeria Mapelman) in the Interior Ministry archives.⁵

Pardons and amnesty laws shielding former officials implicated in the crimes of the dictatorship (1976–1983) were annulled by the Supreme Court and federal judges in the early 2000s. As of March 2019, the Attorney General’s Office reported 3,161 people charged, 901 convicted, and 142 acquitted. Of 611 cases alleging crimes against humanity, judges had issued rulings in 221. As of September 2019, 130 people illegally taken from their parents as children during the dictatorship had been identified and many were reunited with their families. The large number of victims, suspects, and cases made it difficult for prosecutors and judges to bring those responsible to justice while respecting their due process rights. Argentine law allows judges to send inmates age seventy and older to serve their time under house arrest. The Attorney General’s Office reported in March 2019 that 650 pretrial detainees and convicted prisoners were under house arrest.⁶

Twenty-four years after the 1994 bombing of the Argentine Israelite Mutual Association (AMIA) in Buenos Aires that killed 85 people and injured more than 300, allegedly at the hands of Iranian suspects, no one had been convicted of the crime. In March 2018, an appeals court upheld a decision ordering the pretrial detention of former President Cristina Fernández de Kirchner for allegedly participating in a conspiracy with Iranian officials to undermine investigation of the bombing. It was not implemented because she had parliamentary immunity as a senator and she is currently Argentina’s vice president. Alberto Nisman, a prosecutor in charge of investigating the bombing, was found dead in his home in January 2015 with a single gunshot wound to the head and a pistol matching the wound beside him. In June 2018, an appeals court held that Nisman’s death appeared to be a murder. In February 2019, a court acquitted former President Carlos Menem of alleged interference in the initial investigation into the AMIA bombing but convicted a former head of intelligence and a judge of interfering. An appeal of the acquittal was pending.⁷

⁵ “La Cámara Federal consideró como un genocidio la matanza de Rincón Bomba,” El Comercial (4 March 2020); Archives and Human Rights: News from the Section on Archives and Human Rights (March 2020), 10–11.

⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 31.

See also Myanmar.

ARMENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2006, 2010, 2014–2016.

See Turkey.

AUSTRALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2001, 2003, 2007–2009, 2014–2016, 2018–2019.

In February 2020, the Returned Service League of Western Australia (RSLWA), a veterans' organization, decided to ban the Aboriginal flag and other forms of recognition, such as Welcome to Country and Acknowledgement of Country, from the ceremonies on Anzac Day (a remembrance day on 25 April for the 1915 Gallipoli battle in which the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps participated). The decision sparked widespread criticism. The Returned Service League (RSL) had previously been criticized for ignoring and diminishing the service of Aboriginal soldiers in World War I and other conflicts. According to the Australian War Memorial, at least 1,000 indigenous Australians were recorded to have fought for their nation in World War I.⁸

On 24 May 2020, mining firm Rio Tinto destroyed the 46,000-year-old Juukan Gorge caves, in the Pilbara region, Western Australia, as it expanded an iron ore project agreed with the authorities. The remote heritage site, of which the Puutu Kunti Kurrama and Pinikura People (PKKP) were the traditional owners (a link confirmed by scientific research), contained many prehistoric caves and artefacts dating back to the last Ice Age. A few days later, Rio Tinto apologized for the distress it caused, saying it was a mistake. It had obtained permission to expand an existing iron ore mine in 2013 – before the significance of the caves was known and the artefacts were discovered.

On 2 August 2013, mining firm OM Manganese had been found guilty of desecrating, in July 2011, ⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 33–34.

⁸ “Anzac Day: Aboriginal Flag Row in Western Australia,” BBC News (21 February 2020).

an Aboriginal site known as Two Women Sitting Down (including a distinctive rocky outcrop known as the Horse's Head) at Bootu Creek, north of Tennant Creek, Northern Territory, which was owned by the Kunapa people. It was the first time a company has been successfully prosecuted in Australia for desecration of a sacred site. The firm was fined A$150,000 ($134,000; £88,000). The CEO said: "The company never intended to harm, damage or disrespect the sacred site. We sincerely regret the damage and the hurt caused and I unreservedly apologize to the site's custodians and traditional owners."⁹

On 29 May 2020, in an appeal brought by historian Jenny Hocking, the High Court ruled 6 to 1 to make public letters between Queen Elizabeth II and her representative Governor-General Sir John Kerr (stored at the National Archives of Australia in Canberra since 1978) that would reveal what knowledge she had, if any, of the dismissal of an Australian government in 1975. The decision overturned lower court rulings that 211 letters between the Queen and Kerr before he dismissed the government of Prime Minister Gough Whitlam on 11 November 1975 were personal and could never be made public. Kerr dismissed Whitlam's reforming government and replaced him with opposition leader Malcolm Fraser as prime minister to resolve a month-old deadlock in parliament. Fraser's conservative coalition won an election weeks later. On 13 July 2020, the letters were released and they reportedly indicated that Queen Elizabeth II had not been informed in advance about Whitlam's dismissal. In a letter dated 4 November 1975, the Queen's private secretary, Martin Charteris, had told Kerr that his powers to dismiss the government were a "last resort and then only for Constitutional – and not for political – reasons." Whitlam and his supporters consistently claimed that he was the victim of a conspiracy between Kerr and Fraser to remove him from office.

A Monash University academic and Whitlam biographer who had launched the case in 2016, Hocking said that she expected to read the 211 letters at the National Archives of Australia in Canberra soon after a coronavirus lockdown was lifted. In a similar case, the Supreme Court of the United Kingdom had ruled in 2015 that 27 memos written by Prince Charles, the queen's son and heir, to British government ministers could be made public despite objections that their publication might damage public perceptions of the future king's political neutrality.¹⁰

On [10] June 2020, the social media site Facebook incorrectly removed a historical photo from the 1890s of Aboriginal prisoners in chains in Western Australia on grounds of nudity, and then for three days blocked it and even banned users who attempted to posted links to an article that reported the ⁹ "Mining Firm Rio Tinto Sorry for Destroying Aboriginal caves," BBC News (31 May 2020); "Mining Firm Desecrated Australia Aboriginal site," BBC News (2 August 2013); Tiffanie Turnbull, "Destruction of Ancient Aboriginal Site Sparks Calls for Reform in Australia," Thomson Reuters Foundation News (29 May 2020).

¹⁰ Rod McGuirk, "Australian Court Rules Queen's Letters Can Be Made Public," AP News (29 May 2020); "Gough Whitlam: Queen not Told in Advance of Australia PM's Sacking, Letters Show," BBC News (14 July 2020).

removal. Facebook apologized for the mistake. The user had published the photograph in the context of Prime Minister Scott Morrison's claim that there had been no slavery in Australia, before he backed down on those comments a day later.¹¹

In July 2019, the minister for Indigenous Australians, Ken Wyatt, announced plans to hold a referendum in the next three years on whether to enshrine constitutional recognition of Australia's indigenous people. In May 2017, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders had issued the "Uluru Statement from the Heart," but their recommendations to establish a First Nations voice in the constitution and a truth and justice commission had not been implemented.¹²

See also New Zealand.

AUSTRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2005–2007, 2009, 2018.

When in 2019 the exhibition "Lest We Forget" – a Holocaust remembrance project by Luigi Toscano which included photographs of Holocaust survivors – was on outdoor display in Vienna, it was repeatedly subjected to anti-Semitic vandalism. In response, members of the public repaired the works and began holding vigils to protect them.¹³

In December 2019, the Nobel Prize for Literature was awarded to Austrian writer Peter Handke. The ceremony in Stockholm was boycotted by diplomats from Albania, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia, and Kosovo among others, while North Macedonia did not send any representatives. In 1997, Handke had written a reportedly pro-Serb book about the Balkan wars entitled "A Journey to the Rivers: Justice for Serbia," and in 2006, when Slobodan Milosevic died, he had made a speech at the Serbian leader's funeral in his hometown Pozarevac in Serbia. Kosovo's Foreign Minister Behgjet Pacolli said that the boycott was a protest to support human rights, while Albania's Acting Foreign Minister Gent Cakaj wrote on Twitter that "justification of war atrocities during the Yugoslavia break-up must not be rewarded.” The Croatian foreign ministry said meanwhile that its ambassador would not be attending because an award was being given to someone who was “politically engaged in supporting Slobodan Milosevic’s Greater Serbian policies in the 1990s.” Mats Malm, the head of the Swedish Academy, said that Handke had made “provocative, unsuitable and unclear comments” but had not glorified violence or supported the 1995 Srebrenica genocide.¹⁴

¹¹ Josh Taylor, "Facebook Blocks and Bans Users for Sharing Guardian Article Showing Aboriginal Men in Chains," The Guardian (15 June 2020).

¹² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 43.

¹³ "International Day of Commemoration in Memory of the Victims of the Holocaust '75 years after Auschwitz – Holocaust Education and Remembrance for Global Justice'" Statement by Michelle Bachelet, UN High Commissioner for Human Rights (27 January 2020); "Lest We Forget."

See also Croatia.

AZERBAIJAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–1998, 2008–2013, 2015–2019.

In December 2017, a collected volume of personal correspondence and diary entries of historian Leyla Yunus [see NCH Annual Reports 2015–2018] was published, in an apparent attempt to discredit her. The book, Splendor and Misery of Leyla Yunus, was authored by her former defense lawyer. Excerpts were published on pro-government websites. The appeal of human rights activists and historians Leyla and Arif Yunus was reportedly ongoing as of late 2019.¹⁵

¹⁴ Anja Vladisavljevic & Sinisa Jakov Marusic, “Four Balkan States Boycott Nobel Ceremony to Protest Handke,” Balkan Insight (10 December 2019).

¹⁵ Website of the Institute for Peace and Democracy: http://www.ipdthinktank.org/about_en.html; PEN International, Case List 2018 (London: PEN, 2019), 85–86; International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 85.

BAHRAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2008–2012, 2015–2017.

On 29 January 2020, the Public Prosecutor ordered the arrest of Jassim Al-Abbas, a historian from Al-Ma'amir village, and detained him for seven days pending investigation over the charge of “publishing false information about a historical incident” (probably a blog about the history of an ancient Bahraini mosque). Al-Abbas was taken into custody after he was summoned for interrogation on 30 January 2020. In 2004 or 2008, al-Abbas had established the critical historical website “Sanawat Al-Jareesh” (Years of Al-Jareesh) containing unofficial accounts of Bahraini history; as Bahrain’s most popular website, it had been a frequent target of hacking attempts. After 2011, he had created an Instagram account with the same name (250,000 followers) and posted historical information and documents he had obtained about Bahrain scholars, figures, mosques, and other historical sites. The website was closed. Al-Abbas was released on 4 February 2020.

Al-Abbas wrote several historical works. In January 2020, the Awal Center published his latest book, Dohat Al-Farisiya, a study of the extinct Farisiya village.¹⁶

BANGLADESH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2019.

See Myanmar.

BELARUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2000, 2005–2007, 2009–2011, 2014–2019.

On 1 February 2019, journalists Ales Kirkevich and Ales Dzianisau were fined 765 Belarusian rubles (about $370) each in the Leninski district court of Hrodna. The charge followed their story entitled ¹⁶ “Blogger of ‘Sanawat Al-Jareesh’ Jassim Al-Abbas Arrested,” Bahrain Mirror (3 February 2020); “Historian Jassim Al-Abbas's Crime: Documenting ‘Non-Official’ History,” Bahrain Mirror (7 February 2020); “Bahrain: Arrest of the Historical Researcher Jassim Al Abbas,” Bahrain Center for Human Rights (4 February 2020); “Bahrain: Arresting Al-Abbas and the Ongoing Suppression of Freedom of Expression,” Sky Line International (4 February 2020); “Jassim Hussein Al-Abbas,” Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (no date).

Historians Exploring the Ancient Hrodna Cellars which was broadcast on Belsat Television. Both were charged with offenses stipulated in Article 22.9 of the Administrative Code (“illegal production and/or distribution of media content”).¹⁷

In March 2019, the unofficial Dzen Voli (Freedom Day) celebrations, commemorating the establishment of the Belarusian People’s Republic of 1918–1919, seen by the opposition as the foundation of an independent Belarus, were restricted. On 25 March 2019, independent media and civil society representatives were prevented from holding a peaceful commemorative event at Kastyryčnickaja Square in Minsk amidst heavy policing. At least fifteen people were detained in unmarked police vehicles. All those detained on both days were later released without charge.¹⁸

BELGIUM

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2008, 2010–2012.

In June 2020, there were calls and online petitions for statues of King Leopold II (1835–1909) to be dismantled. His statues in Ghent and Ostend were daubed with red paint, with cloth over its head marked with the words “I can’t breathe” (the last words spoken by United States black man George Floyd [1973–2020] as a white police officer knelt on his neck, unleashing renewed protests against racism and inequality). On 9 June 2020, a 150-year old statue of the king was set on fire by protesters in Antwerp and later removed by officials, who said it had been transferred to the Middelheim Museum for public safety reasons. In Brussels, a statue was marked with the word “assassin.” Between 1885 and 1908 Leopold owned the Congo Free State and reigned over the mass deaths of an estimated ten million Congolese. There were at least thirteen statues to Leopold II in Belgium and numerous parks, squares, and street names with his name. The Universities of Mons and Louvain removed busts of the king, following the circulation of student-led petitions. The cities of Kortrijk, Dendermonde and Sint-Niklaas renamed their Leopold II streets (the first two already in 2019). Statues of King Baudouin I (1930–1993) were daubed with red paint in Antwerp and Brussels; in Antwerp, a photograph of the first Congolese Prime Minister, Patrice Lumumba (1925–1961) was left at the statue. In 2002, Belgium had formally apologized for its role in Lumumba’s assassination [see NCH Annual Reports 2000, 2002, 2014]. On 17 June 2020, it was announced that a parliamentary commission would investigate

¹⁷ Kira Tverskaya, “In a Country that Keeps Its Media under a Dome, Belarus’s Independent Journalists Face Mounting Fines,” Index on Censorship (18 September 2019).

¹⁸ Amnesty International, Human Rights in Eastern Europe and Central Asia: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2019), 12; “Protesters Arrested in Belarus during Opposition Rally,” The Guardian (25 March 2018).

Belgium's colonial past.¹⁹

On 30 June 2020, the sixtieth anniversary of Congo's independence, King Philippe unexpectedly expressed his "deepest regrets" to Congo for Belgium's colonial abuses between 1885 and 1960 in a letter to Congolese President Félix Tshisekedi, saying that there had been "painful episodes" in their history. It was the first time that a Belgian monarch formally expressed remorse for his country's colonial rule. The remarks, however, fell short of an official apology with legal implications. Protesters and black communities argued that much more needed to be done. For decades, colonial history was barely taught in the country. The education minister announced that secondary schools would teach colonial history from 2021.²⁰

See also Democratic Republic Congo, Ivory Coast, Rwanda.

BELIZE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

BOLIVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2019.

Bolivia prosecuted only a few of the officials responsible for human rights violations committed under authoritarian governments from 1964 through 1982, partly because the armed forces at times refused to share information with judicial authorities about the fate of people killed or forcibly disappeared. A truth commission established by the government in August 2017 to conduct non-judicial investigations of grave human rights abuses during that period was intended to provide information to prosecutors and judges to convict those responsible. The armed forces had made limited progress in declassifying military files and releasing information about victims of enforced disappearance. In April 2019, the Commission received declassified documents from the Ministry of Foreign Relations and the Ministry of Justice and historical files from the Plurinational Assembly. The Commission was due to present a final report in 2020.²¹

¹⁹ "George Floyd Protests: The Statues Being Defaced," BBC News (10 June 2020); Monika Pronczuk & Mihir Zaveri, "Statue of Leopold II, Belgian King Who Brutalized Congo, Is Removed in Antwerp," New York Times (9 June 2020); Anouk van Kampen, "'Kolonistenkoning' Leopold II wankelt plots op zijn sokkel," NRC Handelsblad (12 June 2020), 11; Georgina Rannard, "Leopold II: Belgium 'Wakes Up' to Its Bloody Colonial Past," BBC News (13 June 2020).

²⁰ Anouk van Kampen, "België onderzoekt koloniaal verleden," NRC Handelsblad (18 June 2020), 1; "Belgian King Expresses 'Deepest Regrets' for DR Congo Colonial Abuses," BBC News (30 June 2020).

BOSNIA and HERZEGOVINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2019.

In 2018, the education ministry of the Canton Sarajevo of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) re-introduced history into classrooms, with other FBiH cantons following suit. Thus, a history textbook moratorium in place since 2000 came to an end. In 2000, the Council of Europe had issued a recommendation that Bosnian schools refrain from teaching about the Bosnian War (1992–1995) “to enable historians from all communities ... to develop a common approach.” In response to a 2017 petition submitted by the FBiH Academy of Sciences and Arts, however, a committee of experts was established by the Canton Sarajevo education ministry; it worked from July 2017 until January 2018 to create five new history curriculum units about the war (military-political developments of the 1992–1995 war; military-political developments of the 1992–1996 Siege of Sarajevo; everyday life in the Siege of Sarajevo; war crimes and ethnic cleansing; the Srebrenica genocide). The materials were circulated to teachers in April 2018 and implemented the next month. The Bosnian War became the final topic of twentieth-century history to be taught in the ninth grade of the primary school in Sarajevo.²²

A revised National War Crimes Processing Strategy to improve the process of allocating cases from the war in 1992–1995 across courts has awaited approval by the Council of Ministers since February 2018, made no progress in 2019, slowing down the rate at which war crimes cases were prosecuted. According to information provided by the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE), in August 2019 there were 250 war crimes cases against 512 defendants in the post-indictment phase pending before all courts in Bosnia and Herzegovina (BiH). Between January and June 2019, BiH courts rendered first instance judgments in 26 cases. In total, 29 of 42 defendants were convicted. In March 2019, the United Nations Mechanism for International Criminal Tribunal (MICT) ruled against the appeal of Radovan Karadzic, former Bosnian Serb wartime president, confirming his 2016 conviction for genocide and other crimes and extending his initial 40-year sentence to life in prison. In a positive move, in July 2019 BiH signed agreements with Serbia and Croatia to facilitate better cooperation in the search for missing persons from the 1990s wars.²³

²¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 72; Amnesty International, Human Rights in the Americas: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2020), 22.

²² Catherine Savitsky, “Bosnian War Moratorium Lifted in Sarajevo Schools,” EuroClio (19 August 2019).

On 12 April 2019, the Serb member of the Bosnian Presidency, Milorad Dodik, called the Srebrenica genocide a myth, stating that the massacre was “something that does not exist,” at a conference discussing war crimes committed during the Bosnian conflict. “[Bosnian Muslims] did not have a myth, so they decided to construct one around Srebrenica,” he said. Dodik had repeatedly downplayed the Srebrenica genocide [see NCH Annual Report 2019]. Other Bosnian Serb politicians have also denied the genocide, including Mladen Grujicic, the current mayor of Srebrenica, who referred to July 1995 as “the moment that Srebrenica was finally liberated. Liberated from the Bosniaks.”²⁴

See also Austria.

BOTSWANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

BRAZIL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2019.

Inês Etienne Romeu (1942–2015) studied history and went to work in the bank sector. She became a member of the student movement and the Bank Workers’ Union, and of the armed group A Vanguarda Armada Revolucionária Palmares (VAR-Palmares) and the Organização Revolucionária Marxista Política Operária (ORM-Polop). On 5 May 1971, she was arrested on suspicion of participating in the kidnapping of the Swiss ambassador Giovanni Enrico Bucher and until September imprisoned clandestinely in the torture house Casa da Morte (“House of Death”) in Petrópolis. While there, she tried to commit suicide three times. She managed to get out of the clandestine center alive by pretending to have been “turned” by her captors, agreeing to their demand that she spy on her fellow left-wing activists. Due to international pressure, she was released and transferred to a regular prison in Rio de Janeiro where she stayed for eight years. She was released due to the 1979 Amnesty Law and became ²³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 78–79.

²⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 79; Zamira Rahim, “Srebrenica massacre is ‘fabricated myth’, Bosnian Serb leader says,” The Independent (14 April 2019); Emilie van Outeren, “De kinderen van Srebrenica leren thuis elk hun eigen waarheid over de genocide,” NRC Handelsblad (10 July 2020), 24, 25.

engaged in research into the perpetrators of the dictatorial repression. On 14 August 2019, a federal tribunal in Rio de Janeiro ruled that former army sergeant, Antônio Waneir Pinheiro de Lima (arrested in 2014), should stand trial for the alleged rape of Romeu and other crimes, such as kidnapping, and that these were crimes against humanity not covered by the 1979 Amnesty Law.²⁵

On 31 March 2019, during a Mass celebrated by the Bishop of the Brazilian Military Archdiocese, Dom Francisco Falcão commemorated the 31 March 1964 military coup and referred to musician Caetano Veloso (1942–) as “a moron who sang in the ‘70s whom it is forbidden to ban,” adding: “I would like to give you mouse poison.” Among those present was Joseita Brilhante Ustra, the widow of notorious torturer colonel Carlos Alberto Brilhante Ustra. Veloso was a political exile during the dictatorship and during Jair Bolsonaro’s presidential campaign, he had criticized the ultra-right-wing measures Bolsonaro promised to implement.²⁶

In 2019, history teacher Valeria Borges and several other teachers were vilified in a YouTube campaign (in an online practice known as “linchamento” – lynching) which accused them of spreading Communism. Borges said that they had been overwhelmed with messages of hate, creating a climate of fear.²⁷

On 1 August 2019, President Jair Bolsonaro appointed Retired Colonel Wesley Antonio Maretti and army officer Vital Lima Santos to the seven-member Special Commission on Political Deaths and Disappearances set up in 1995 to investigate crimes during the military dictatorship (1964–1985) and to pay compensation to the victims’ families. He also appointed two legislators from the Social Liberal Party (PSL; his own party) to the commission. On 30 July 2019, Bolsonaro had also said that the debate about the 2014 truth commission report was “hot air.”²⁸

The perpetrators of human rights abuses during the dictatorship (1964–1985) were shielded from justice by a 1979 Amnesty Law that the Supreme Court upheld in 2010, a decision that the Inter-American Court of Human Rights ruled was a violation of Brazil’s obligations under international law. Since 2010, federal prosecutors had charged about sixty former agents of the dictatorship with killings, kidnappings, and other serious crimes. Lower courts dismissed most of the cases, citing the Amnesty Law or the statute of limitations. A few such cases were pending before the Supreme Court. In August

²⁵ Comissão dos Familiares dos Mortos e Desaparecidos Políticos, Instituto de Estudo da Violência do Estado (IEVE) & Grupo Tortura Nunca Mais-RJ e PE, Dossiê dos Mortos e Desaparecidos Políticos A Partir de 1964 (Recife 1995), 6; “Inês Etienne Romeu,” Wikipedia (8 April 2013); “Brazil Torture Victim’s Testimony Triggers Landmark Case,” BBC News (15 August 2019).

²⁶ International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 29.

²⁷ Max Fischer & Amanda Taub, “How YouTube Radicalized Brazil,” New York Times (11 August 2019).

²⁸ “Bolsonaro Appoints Military Men to Investigate Dictatorship Abuses,” France24 (1 August 2019).

2019, a federal court for the first time approved charges of rape against an agent of the military regime [see item above about Inês Etienne Romeu].

President Bolsonaro praised the dictatorships in Brazil and other South American countries. He had called a convicted torturer “a national hero” [see item above about Carlos Alberto Brilhante Ustra and NCH Annual Reports 2009, 2019]. He denied that journalist Miriam Leitão had been tortured by the military and that Fernando Santa Cruz, father of the president of Brazil’s Bar Association, had been killed by the regime, but offered no evidence. The Bolsonaro administration packed with allies, some of whom had publicly defended the dictatorship, two commissions that examined requests of compensation for victims of the dictatorship and sought to locate the bodies of the disappeared. From January through September 2019, the amnesty commission had denied 92 percent of the compensation requests.²⁹

BULGARIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2002, 2006, 2009, 2012, 2015–2017, 2019.

In April 2019, officials in Plovdiv, which were co-hosting the 2019 edition of the European capital of culture with Matera in Italy, said a “Balkan Pride” photo exhibition, opening in July, must be stopped. The exhibition, featuring photographs from past gay pride events that had taken place across the Balkan region, was organized by the Glas foundation, an LGBT rights group. “We don’t want them to do it. And we will stop them, using all legal and, if required, illegal means,” said Alexander Sidi, a member of parliament from the nationalist Bulgarian Nationalist Movement party (VMRO). Svetlana Kuyumdzhieva, artistic director of the Glas Foundation, said the intervention by local councilors was an “ugly provocation.” “This could seriously damage the reputation and image that we’ve been building in the past five years. Such interference with the program can only be treated as discrimination and censorship,”³⁰

Upon visiting Bulgaria in November 2019 Dunja Mijatović, Commissioner for Human Rights at the Council of Europe, expressed alarm when she learned about the “Concept for the Integration of the Unsocialized Gypsy (Roma) Ethnicity” proposed to Prime Minister Boyko Borissov. In February 2019, ²⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 88–89; Antoon De Baets, “The Censorship of History and Fact-Finding in Brazil (1964–2018),” in Nina Schneider, ed., The Brazilian Truth Commission in the Latin American Context: Local, National, and Global Perspectives (New York and Oxford: Berghahn, 2019), 73–74.

³⁰ Martin Dimitrov & Shaun Walker, “Homophobia Scandal Hits Plovdiv, Bulgaria’s European Capital of Culture,” The Guardian (7 April 2019); Dimitar Pizhev, “The GLAS Foundation Opened the Exhibition “Balkan Pride # Balkan Pride” in Plovdiv,” GLAS Foundation (9 July 2019).

Bulgaria's Defense Minister and Deputy Prime Minister, Krasimir Karakachanov, who was also the leader of the nationalist VMRO party, proposed controversial measures aimed at the ethnic Roma minority. They defined Roma as "asocial Gypsies," a term used by the Nazis, and called for limits to the number of children some Roma women could have; the introduction of compulsory "labor education schools" for Roma children and forced work programs for sections of the community. They also depicted the Roma as "non-native Europeans" left over from the Ottoman empire.

Karakachanov's party's manifesto also called for the creation of "reservations" for Roma based on the model used for Native Americans or Indigenous Australians, claiming that they could become "tourist attractions."³¹

BURKINA FASO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2004, 2005, 2013, 2015–2018.

BURUNDI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2015, 2017–2019.

On 8 June 2020, outgoing president of Burundi Pierre Nkurunziza died unexpectedly. When Nkurunziza first came to power following the 1993–2005 Burundian civil war, which pitted Hutu rebels against the Tutsi-led army, he had seemed genuinely committed to the ideals of peace and democracy. As the leader of the National Council for the Defense of Democracy (CNDD–FDD) Hutu rebel group, he had begun negotiating a peace deal in 2001. Two years later he signed the Arusha agreement, which ended the civil war in which 300,000 people died. However, after being re-elected with 92% of the vote in the 2010 poll, which was boycotted by many opposition candidates, Nkurunziza became increasingly authoritarian.

In 2015, Nkurunziza's decision to run for an unconstitutional third term led to an outbreak of protests and violence that spread across the country. He responded with brutal violence. Over the next two years, his youth-led militia group, known as the Imbonerakure, as well as various state security forces, killed more than 1,200 Burundians in an attempt to quash street protests. Four hundred thousand more fled ³¹ "Bulgarian Nationalists' Roma 'Integration' Plan Dismays Rights Advocates," Balkan Insight (8 February 2019); Atanas Zahariev, "Democracy under Siege: Bulgaria's Parliament to Vote on Fascist Anti-Roma Strategy," European Roma Rights Centre (14 May 2019); Vivek Chaudhary, "'Everybody Hates Us': On Sofia's Streets, Roma Face Racism Every Day," The Guardian (20 October 2019); Dunja Mijatović, Report of the Commissioner for Human Rights of the Council of Europe Following Her Visit to Bulgaria on 25–29 November 2019 (Strasbourg: Council of Europe, 2020), 12, 13.

the country. When the international criminal court (ICC) opened an investigation into crimes against humanity in 2017, he responded by withdrawing Burundi from the Rome statute; the first nation ever to do so [see NCH Annual Report 2018]. In 2019, he went a step further and shut down the United Nations human rights office in the country after 23 years, claiming he had made sufficient progress in human rights.³²

³² Vava Tampa, "Pierre Nkurunziza Obituary," The Guardian (12 June 2020).

CAMBODIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2018.

In July 2019, authorities detained two youth activists, Kong Raya [Raiya] and Soung Neakpoan, for participating in a commemoration ceremony on the third anniversary of the murder of prominent political commentator and government critic Kem Ley in Phnom Penh. In November 2019, Raya was denied bail by the Supreme Court. Authorities charged both with “incitement to commit a felony.” They arrested seven people for commemorating the anniversary; and disrupted or canceled commemorations around Cambodia.³³

On 4 August 2019 Nuon Chea (1926–2019), born Lao Kim Lorn, a lifelong revolutionary who served as “Brother No 2” in the Cambodian communist movement for almost half a century, died. He presided over extensive purges of suspected enemies within and outside the ruling party, resulting in the execution of more than 300,000 Cambodians between 1975 and 1979, when the Khmer Rouge regime of Pol Pot controlled what was then known as Democratic Kampuchea. On 7 August 2014, he was found guilty on crimes against humanity by the Extraordinary Chambers in the Country of Cambodia (ECCC) and sentenced to life imprisonment [see NCH Annual Report 2015]. On 16 November 2018, the ECCC found Chea guilty on separate charges, convicting him of genocide, crimes against humanity and grave breaches of the Geneva Conventions of 1949 [see NCH Annual Report 2018].³⁴

See also China.

CAMEROON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2012–2014, 2016.

On 24 September 2019, Rapid Intervention Battalion (BIR) soldiers attacked a UNESCO World Heritage site, the Royal Palace in Bafut, shot and wounded one man, and looted the palace museum, taking several precious artifacts.³⁵

³³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 101; Amnesty International, Human Rights in Asia-Pacific: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2020), 15.

³⁴ David Chandler, “Nuon Chea Obituary,” The Guardian (4 August 2019); Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia, Nuon Chea: Profile.

³⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 106.

On 20 April 2020, the Minister of Higher Education sent a letter to the vice-chancellor of the University of Buea (an English-speaking university in a predominantly French-speaking region), ordering him to take measures against Felix Agbor Nkongho Balla, a lecturer in the faculty of law and political science since 2015, for infringing on the “apolitical character of the university.” Wilfred Gabsa, a ministry official, accused Agbor-Balla of turning his classroom “into a political space.” The accusations were based on an examination question in a class called “Political & Constitutional History of Cameroon,” which Agbor-Balla and two other professors had taught on 3 March 2020. The question asked students to think critically about the reasons behind the Anglophone crisis, reading: “The Anglophone crisis and ensuing violence since 2016 was caused by the lawyers’ and teachers’ strike. Assess the validity of this statement.”

The Cameroonian government claimed that armed English-speaking separatists who wanted to create a new state called Ambazonia had terrorized civilians and attacked government forces, prompting the military to retaliate against them. However, English speakers displaced by military raids on their villages recounted how Cameroonian troops opened fire on unarmed civilians and burned down their homes. The university launched disciplinary procedures against Agbor-Balla (but not against his two co-lecturers) for breach of its code of ethics and conduct. He was suspended from teaching and on 5 May 2020 summoned before a disciplinary panel for “non-compliance of professional obligations.” The university formally dismissed him on 6 May 2020 after he protested the unfair treatment and boycotted the hearing.

Agbor-Balla was the founder of the Center for Human Rights and Democracy in Africa, which documented human rights violations in the Anglophone crisis ongoing since 2016. In 2017, a military court had imprisoned him for eight months on charges of terrorism and incitement of civil war for organizing a peaceful protest in Buea.³⁶

Between 2003 and 2020, activist Andre Blaise Essama repeatedly vandalized the statue of French World War II hero General Philippe Leclerc (1902–1947) in Douala. He decapitated Leclerc’s head seven times and toppled the statue at least twenty times. Each time, the statue, erected in 1948, was restored. Essama was imprisoned several times for it, serving up to six months at a time, sometimes paying a fine to avoid prison. He occasionally took the seven heads of Leclerc on to the streets to “sensitize Cameroonians about the country’s history.” He said that he was inspired by nationalist Mboua Massock, who once graffitied the general’s statue with the words: “Our own heroes and martyrs first.” Essama also targeted a statue of Gustav Nachtigal (1834–1885), who arrived in Cameroon in 1884 to establish a German empire. Essama dismissed the argument that statues should be protected because of their historical significance: “If your statue is history, the indigenous people are saying: ‘But you wrote your history on top of my history. It is overshadowing our own histories.’”³⁷

³⁶ Siobhán O’Grady, “Divided by Language: Cameroon’s Crackdown on Its English-speaking Minority Is Fueling Support for a Secessionist Movement,” Washington Post (5 February 2019); Lewis Mudge, “No Room for Debate in Cameroon Classrooms,” Human Rights Watch (1 May 2020); Human Rights Foundation, “Cameroon Pressures University To Fire Anglophone-Rights Advocate and Lecturer” (13 May 2020); Tunde Fatunde, “Law Lecturer’s Dismissal over Exam Question Raises Concerns,” University World News (26 May 2020).

CANADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000, 2002–2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2009, 2012–2019.

There remained considerable challenges to undoing decades of structural and systemic discrimination against Indigenous people. While Canada officially removed its objector status to the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (UNDRIP) in 2016 and vowed to implement UNDRIP in accordance with the Canadian Constitution, a private member’s bill to ensure that Canadian laws were in harmony with UNDRIP failed to pass in the Senate in June 2019. In September 2019, the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal found that the federal government wilfully and recklessly discriminated against Indigenous children living on reserves by failing to provide funding for child and family services. The Justin Trudeau government filed an application seeking a judicial review of the ruling in October 2019.

In January 2019, the United Nations Human Rights Committee found that Canada, through the long-controversial Indian Act, was still discriminating against First Nations women and their descendants. In August, the Trudeau government announced that First Nations women would be treated equally under the Indian Act, enabling them to retain their Indigenous status if they marry non-Indigenous men.

In June 2019, the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls – launched by the government in 2016 to address endemic levels of violence against Indigenous women and girls – released its final report. The inquiry made 231 recommendations and concluded that acts of violence against Indigenous women and girls amounted to “genocide.” Prime Minister Trudeau vowed that the government would develop a national action plan to “turn the inquiry’s calls to justice into real, meaningful, Indigenous-led action.”³⁸

See also Albania, Turkey.

³⁷ Dickens Olewe, “The Cameroonian Waging War against a French War Hero’s Statue,” BBC News (1 July 2020).

³⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 111–113; “Deaths of Indigenous Women ‘a Canadian Genocide,’ Leaked Report Says,” BBC News (1 June 2019); “Canada ‘Complicit in Race-based Genocide’ of Indigenous Women,” BBC News (3 June 2019); Ian Austen and Dan Bilefsky, “Canadian Inquiry Calls Killings of Indigenous Women Genocide,” New York Times (3 June 2019).

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2009, 2011–2012, 2014–2019.

A Political Agreement for Peace and Reconciliation was signed between the government and fourteen armed groups in Bangui in February 2019. As part of the agreement, a new government was formed, with several members of armed groups appointed to senior positions, including rebel leaders against whom there was credible evidence of responsibility for atrocities in recent years. The deal was the sixth signed since the crisis started in late 2012. Rendering justice for serious crimes continued to be a key challenge in 2019. After a slow start since the Special Criminal Court (SCC) was established in 2015, the court's special prosecutor opened four investigations from 22 priority cases he identified, and the judges conducted investigations into three cases, which were transferred from the ordinary courts. The special prosecutor also examined 27 complaints that individuals submitted to the SCC. The level of court staff overseeing investigations was limited, and additional prosecutors and judges were needed. Ensuring adequate security for court premises, staff, and witnesses and victims remained one of the most significant challenges during 2019, as much of the country remained under the control of armed groups.

The Office of the Prosecutor at the International Criminal Court (ICC) continued its second investigation into the situation in the Central African Republic, into alleged war crimes and crimes against humanity committed since 2012. The ICC combined proceedings against Alfred Yékatom, known as “Rambhot,” and Patrice-Edouard Ngaïssona began in September 2019. The authorities surrendered Yékatom, an anti-balaka leader, to ICC custody in November 2018. Ngaïssona, also an anti-balaka leader, was transferred to ICC custody in January 2019, after he was arrested in France in December 2018. A decision on whether to confirm the charges against Ngaïssona and Yékatom was expected by the ICC judges in early 2020.³⁹

CHAD

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2015–2016.

³⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 119, 122–123.

CHILE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2019.

On 5 November 2019, Alejandra Araya, history professor, director of the Archivo Central Andrés Bello (Andrés Bello Central Archive; established 1994) at the University of Chile and full professor of human rights at the University of Chile, was participating in a workshop in high school (liceo) 7 Teresa Prats, Santiago, during a peaceful student occupation of the school building when the Carabineros (Carabinieri; national police) reportedly entered it shooting. The mayor of Santiago Felipe Alessandri charged Araya with being “an accomplice of disruption and burglary.” The move, coming during the social protests which began on 18 October 2019 and in which universities participated, was criticized as intimidation.⁴⁰

On 7 February 2020, appeals court judge Mario Carroza indicted retired military officers Eduardo Jara Hallad (director of Departamento II of the Counterintelligence of the Military Intelligence Section, DINE), Mercedes del Carmen Rojas Kushevich (its former chief archivist), and General Carlos Patricio Chacón Guerrero for destruction in the Intelligence School of the Chilean army in 2000–2001 of microfilmed archives of the Central Nacional de Informaciones (National Information Center) covering the period 1980–1982. These included records proving the surveillance of former (1964–1970) President Eduardo Frei Montalva, who was assassinated in 1982.⁴¹

Chilean courts continued to prosecute former police and military officers responsible for human rights abuses during Augusto Pinochet’s dictatorship (1973–1990). In December 2018, a judge convicted 53 former agents of the Chilean secret police (DINA) for the kidnapping, torture, and enforced disappearance of seven communist leaders in 1976, and the murder of former Communist Party leader, Victor Díaz, in 1977. In January 2019, a judge convicted six men for poisoning to death the former president of Chile, Eduardo Frei Montalva, in 1982 [see item above]. Chile maintained a 50-year veil of secrecy over testimony by victims before the National Commission on Political Prison and Torture from November 2003 to May 2004. The testimony revealed places of detention and torture methods used by the dictatorship and identified former political prisoners and torture victims. The Bachelet administration (2014–2018) submitted a bill to lift the secrecy order in 2017, which generated heated debate between those who believed revealing the testimony would violate victims' rights to privacy, and those who believed revealing it was necessary to fully punish the guilty and bring justice to victims. In December 2018, a commission of the House of Representatives approved a bill that would punish anyone who "justified," "approved" of, or "denied" human rights violations committed during the dictatorship with up to three years in prison. The bill, which violated freedom of speech provisions of international human rights law, remained pending at the end of 2019.⁴²

⁴⁰ “Declaración de solidaridad con la académica Alejandra Araya, profesora de la Cátedra de Derechos Humanos, Universidad de Chile” (Santiago 12 January 2020); Javier García, “ACAB, la sigla de la polémica: una escuela de autodefensa y el Archivo Andrés Bello de la U. de Chile,” La Tercera (15 January 2020); Valentina Rojas Rojo, Personal communication to Trudy Huskamp Peterson (16 & 22 January 2020).

⁴¹ Sergio Jara Román, “Histórico: Procesan a tres militares en retiro que participaron en la quema de microfilms de la dictadura,” El Desconcierto.cl (7 February 2020).

CHINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2019.

In 2019, the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) marked the 70th anniversary of its rule by deepening repression. Under President Xi Jinping's leadership, the one-party government tightened its grip over sectors of society it found threatening, such as internet activists and nongovernmental organizations. It strengthened ideological control, particularly in higher education, among religious and ethnic minorities, and within the bureaucracy. It devoted massive resources to new technologies for social control, adding artificial intelligence, biometrics, and big data to its arsenal to monitor and shape the minds and behaviors of 1.4 billion people. Government censorship extended far beyond its borders; its mix of typically financial incentives and intimidation were manipulating discourse about China around the world. Thirteen million Uyghur and other Turkic Muslims in Xinjiang were suffering particularly harsh repression. The government's "Strike Hard Campaign against Violent Extremism" entailed mass arbitrary detention, surveillance, indoctrination, and the destruction of the region's cultural and religious heritage. Credible estimates indicate that about one million Turkic Muslims were being indefinitely held in "political education" camps, where they were forced to disavow their identity and become loyal government subjects. Others were prosecuted and sent to prison, and some received lengthy and even death sentences for crimes that violated fundamental rights, "splittism" or "subversion."⁴³

On 14 January 2019, Jin Andi (1953–), a freelance writer and probably also a historian, was reportedly released upon the expiry of his sentence [see NCH Annual Report 2013].⁴⁴

⁴² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 125–126.

⁴³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 130.

⁴⁴ International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 58–59.

In [2019–2020], Guo Yuhua ([1956–]), a sociologist and historian at Tsinghua University, spoke in defense of her colleague Xu Zhangrun, a law professor, who was interrogated and suspended from teaching after publishing essays critical of President Xi Jinping. Guo was reprimanded by the university’s party officials and blocked from social media. She struggled to get copies of her own books, only published in Hong Kong and repeatedly confiscated at customs. Her fieldwork consisted in collecting oral histories from Chinese farmers who had been forbidden to flee their villages amid the famine (1959–1961) following the Great Leap Forward (1958–1960).⁴⁵

In March 2019, Hong Kong Polytechnic University officials handed down disciplinary orders to four students in connection with their commemoration of the 2014 pro-democracy movement.⁴⁶

In April 2019, a Sichuan court sentenced activist Chen Bing to three-and-a-half years for commemorating the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre.⁴⁷

In April 2019, Sun Peidong, a lecturer at Fudan University, Shanghai, who was under surveillance when she taught a course about the Cultural Revolution, was turned in by her students. Sun had been invited to join Fudan’s history department in 2013 by its party secretary, himself a scholar of the Cultural Revolution. From 2015, several of her articles about the Cultural Revolution were rejected by academic journals. Secret police questioned her about her research and her Western connections. After completing fellowships at Harvard and Stanford universities, she returned in September 2018. Meanwhile, a new party secretary was in charge and Sun was blocked from giving public lectures and asked to change the name and content of her course, which she refused. In April 2019, students posted sheets of paper on her office door – printouts of her social media posts and accusations that she was supporting a female student to subvert state power. They also reported her to her department, the university president and university-level party secretary, and attacked her personally online. Anonymous users joined in, cursing her as a traitor and threatening her family in private messages. The department party secretary ordered Sun to write a personal statement pledging that she would stop speaking to foreign media. He threatened to block her from traveling abroad if she did not comply. In 2020, Sun quit her job and left China. Only two other history professors were teaching the Cultural Revolution at Fudan: one retired in 2020, the other was pressured into changing what he taught.⁴⁸

⁴⁵ Alice Su, “Spied on. Fired. Publicly Shamed. China’s Crackdown on Professors Reminds Many of Mao Era.” Los Angeles Times (27 June 2020).

⁴⁶ Scholars at Risk (Academic Freedom Monitoring Project), Obstacles to Excellence: Academic Freedom & China’s Quest for World-Class Universities (New York: SAR, 2019), 60.

⁴⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 134.

⁴⁸ Alice Su, “Spied on. Fired. Publicly Shamed. China’s Crackdown on Professors Reminds Many of Mao Era.” Los Angeles Times (27 June 2020).

A study published in May 2019 by Sheena Chestnut Greitens, University of Missouri, and Rory Truex, Princeton University, surveying over five hundred China scholars, pointed to several problems facing domestic and foreign scholars, including increasing difficulties in accessing archives. According to their survey results, scholars cited more than 150 separate instances of being denied access to archival materials in the past ten years; these included 26% of foreign academics who reported using archives for their research. Respondents reported being denied access to particular materials and sections of archives and having access permissions revoked.

According to historian Charles Kraus, of the Wilson Center, Washington DC, in 2016, the 1988 Archives Law of the People's Republic of China, gave state authorities an ambiguous and broad level of control over the declassification and accessibility of state records. Once declassified and available, materials could later be reclassified or subject to other forms of removal, including digitization and "appraisal" processes. Foreign researchers hoping to gain access to archives needed letters of introduction from a Chinese university and a passport.⁴⁹

In mid-June 2019, the film "The Eight Hundred" was withdrawn last-minute from the 22nd Shanghai International Film Festival, where it was scheduled to premiere on 15 June. On 25 June, the 5 July opening of the film was suddenly canceled. The film was based on a historical event: the four-day defense of Sihang Warehouse during the Japanese invasion of Shanghai in October 1937. A battalion with 400 soldiers (the commander leaked disinformation that there were 800) held the building long enough to let the bulk of Chinese forces withdraw from the city before the Japanese entered. At a conference organized by the NGO China Red Culture Research Association on 9 June 2019 in Beijing, participants (including researchers, critics, and a former propaganda official with the general staff of the People's Liberation Army) attacked the film for excessively glorifying the Republic of China, then led by Chiang Kai-shek and his party, the Kuomintang. The published conference report said that the film used "historical debris to cover up the actual truth of history." The battalion's actions had been lauded previously by the Communist government. Although no explicit reason was given by the Chinese Communist Party (CCP), the cancellation came amid a broadening political crackdown on cultural works that were not sufficiently in tune with Xi Jinping's ideology.⁵⁰

In September 2019, The Guardian revealed that TikTok, the popular social network owned by the Chinese company ByteDance and launched in 2017, instructed its moderators to censor videos that mentioned certain topics, according to leaked documents detailing the site's moderation guidelines.

⁴⁹ Scholars at Risk (Academic Freedom Monitoring Project), Obstacles to Excellence: Academic Freedom & China's Quest for World-Class Universities (New York: SAR, 2019), 23–25.

⁵⁰ Steven Lee Meyers, "Patriotic Movie Apparently Falls Afoul of China's Censors," New York Times (26 June 2019).

Among the “taboos” were: the Tiananmen Square massacre, Tibetan independence, Taiwanese independence, the 2014 and 2019 Hong Kong protests, Falun Gong, criticism of China’s socialist system, the demonization or distortion of local or other countries’ history such as the May 1998 riots of Indonesia and the Cambodian genocide; and separatism, conflicts between religion sects and between ethnic groups (for instance inciting the independence of Northern Ireland, Republic of Chechnya). The service also banned a specific list of twenty “foreign leaders or sensitive figures” including Kim Jong-il, Kim Il-sung, Mahatma Gandhi, Vladimir Putin, Donald Trump, Barack Obama, Kim Jong-un, Shinzo Abe, Park Geun-Hye, Joko Widodo, and Narendra Modi.⁵¹

On 8 September 2019, Chinese authorities detained Iwatani Nobu ([1977]–), a professor of modern Chinese history at Hokkaidō University graduate school of law, Japan, while visiting Beijing, on suspicion of spying (under the 2014 Counter-Espionage Law). Invited by the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences (CASS) Institute of Modern History, Iwatani had traveled to China to participate in two weeks of research activities. Upon arrival at his hotel, national security authorities raided his room and seized materials related to state secrets. These were reportedly old books and journals relating to the Sino-Japanese war (1937–1945) and the history of the Chinese Nationalists (the Kuomintang) – Iwatani’s area of expertise – that he had purchased at a second-hand bookstore in Beijing. On 15 November 2019, Iwatani reportedly confessed under questioning to illegally collecting a large quantity of state secrets in the past and expressed remorse. He was granted bail and released the same day; he returned to Japan. In the past, Iwatani had worked for the National Institute for Defense Studies at the Japanese Defense Ministry. He specialized in the history of the Second Sino-Japanese War (1937–1945) and collected historical documents around the world, including Taiwan and the United States. It was his second invitation from CASS; the previous visit in 2018 incurred no problems.⁵²

On 11 June 2020, the online meeting platform Zoom confirmed that it ended three Zoom meetings commemorating the Tiananmen Square massacre and terminated the host accounts associated with those meetings – one in Hong Kong and two in the United States – after the Chinese government informed it that the gatherings were illegal in China. Zoom said the accounts have been reinstated.⁵³

⁵¹ Alex Hern, “Revealed: How TikTok Censors Videos that Do Not Please Beijing,” The Guardian (25 September 2019).

⁵² Scholars at Risk, Data Sheet (21 October 2019); “Academics Protest China’s Detention of Japanese,” NHK World-Japan (30 October 2019); Jiji Kyodo, “China Frees Japanese Law Professor Accused of Spying after Obtaining Confession,” Japan Times (15 November 2019); Shin Kawashima, “China Releases Professor, but Travel Concerns Persist,” The Diplomat (2 December 2019); Suvendrini Kakuchi, “China Research Trips Cancelled over Scholar Spy Charge,” University World News (4 December 2019); Andrea Fischetti & Antoine Roth, “Why Did China Detain a Japanese History Professor?” Tokyo Review (30 December 2019).

⁵³ Elizabeth Redden, “Scholars Raise Concerns about Using Zoom to Teach about China,” Inside HigherEd (12 June 2020).

Hong Kong

On 1 June 2020, Hong Kong police banned a planned vigil marking the Tiananmen massacre on 3–4 June 1989 for the first time in thirty years. Authorities said that the decision was due to health concerns over the coronavirus. Hitherto, Hong Kong and Macau were the only places in Chinese territory where people could commemorate the deadly 1989 crackdown on pro-democracy protesters. Whether the commemoration would be allowed to go ahead in Hong Kong in 2021 – when the new anti-terrorism and anti-subversion law will most likely be in force – remained unclear. Despite the ban, tens of thousands still flocked to the barricaded venue, Victoria Park, to attend the vigil on 4 June 2020. The vigil took place against a background of a new national hymn bill and new security legislation shrinking Hong Kong’s independence from Beijing. It was the first time there had been unrest at a Tiananmen vigil in Hong Kong. Police said they had made several arrests.⁵⁴

In August 2020, 25 Hong Kong democracy activists were charged with taking part in the banned June candlelight vigil (see item above), including activist Joshua Wong, media tycoon Jimmy Lai and leaders of the Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements of China. They were formally charged with “knowingly taking part in an unauthorized assembly.” Lee Cheuk-yan, chairman of the alliance, was also charged, with organizing the assembly.⁵⁵

Inner Mongolia

On 4 April 2019, ethnic Mongolian historian Lhamjab A. Borjigin (1944–) [see NCH Annual Report 2019] was secretly tried at the Xilinhot Municipal People’s Court. In September 2019, Lhamjab was convicted of “national separatism” and “sabotaging national unity,” after a trial that lasted just three hours and during which he said he was denied a lawyer. He was sentenced to a one-year suspended prison term and remained under a strictly monitored form of house arrest in which his movements and personal communications were severely restricted, and he had to report daily to police.⁵⁶

Tibet

In 2019, university professors could reportedly not lecture on certain topics, and many had to attend political indoctrination sessions, while the government restricted course materials to prevent circulation of unofficial versions of Tibetan history.⁵⁷

⁵⁴ “Tiananmen: Police Ban Hong Kong Vigil for Victims of 1989 Crackdown,” BBC News (1 June 2020); “Hong Kong: Tens of Thousands Defy Ban to Attend Tiananmen Vigil,” BBC News (4 June 2020).

⁵⁵ “Hong Kong Activists Charged Over Traditional Tiananmen Vigil,” The Guardian (7 August 2020).

⁵⁶ Qiao Long & Wong Lok-to, “Third Ethnic Mongolian Writer Held in China’s Inner Mongolia,” Radio Free Asia (22 April 2019); Leigh Hartman, “China Arrests Mongolian Historian,” ShareAmerica (3 July 2019); Scholars at Risk (Academic Freedom Monitoring Project), Obstacles to Excellence: Academic Freedom & China’s Quest for World-Class Universities (New York: SAR, 2019), 43, 45–46; PEN America, Freedom to Write Index 2019 (Washington: PEN America, 2020), 8–9.

In their continuing campaign to crack down on Islamic traditions, authorities in Gansu, Ningxia, and other Hui Muslim areas demolished domes on mosques and banned the public use of Arabic script. A Chinese Communist Party notice banning retired Tibetan government employees from performing kora, the practice of circumambulating a sacred site, appeared to have been issued in early August 2019.⁵⁸

Xinjiang

In May 2017, Uyghur historian Iminjan Seydin ([1966]–) was arrested by the Public Security Bureau and imprisoned. Seydin had began teaching courses on Chinese history at the Xinjiang Islamic Institute in Urumqi in 1988 upon graduating from Xinjiang University and in 2012 founded the Imin Publishing House. He taught secular courses on revolutionary history, joined several government-sponsored hajj pilgrimages to Mecca, and in early 2017 was sent to Kokterek village, Guma (Pishan) county, Hotan (Hetian) prefecture, to join a work group with the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region (XUAR) Bureau of Religious Affairs. He was called back and then arrested. In May 2019, a closed trial was held at which a book called the Science of Rhetoric (aka Arabic Grammar) (2014) – published by the Imin Publishing House and containing some references to Islam – was reportedly given as evidence. A document, entitled “Notice on the Censuring of Iminjan Seydin” and issued by the Xinjiang Islamic Institute in November 2019, reportedly mentioned that in February 2019 Urumqi’s Tengritagh (Tianshan) District Court found Seydin guilty of “inciting extremism” and sentenced him to fifteen years in prison, five years’ deprivation of political rights, and a fine of 500,000 yuan (U.S. $71,000), although it cited no evidence of his crimes. In its notice, the institute also announced that it had ended Seydin’s employment contract after he was detained and placed in a camp. In early July 2020, the official newspaper China Daily released a video in which Seydin denied reports that he had been detained, prompting his daughter to suggest the recording was made under duress.⁵⁹

Abdukerem Paltu, a historian working at the Department of History, Kashgar University, was mentioned on a 15 June 2019 List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present.⁶⁰

⁵⁷ Freedom House, “Tibet” (2019).

⁵⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 138.

⁵⁹ Jilil Kashgary (with Elise Anderson and Joshua Lipes), “Prominent Uyghur Historian Confirmed Jailed in Xinjiang Over Published Book,” Radio Free Asia (11 December 2019; updated 6 January 2020); Aysha Khan, “A Daughter’s Duty: From Boston, a Uighur Woman Champions Her Father’s Release in China,” Religion News Service (13 February 2020); International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 62; PEN America, Freedom to Write Index 2019 (Washington: PEN America, 2020), 14; Jilil Kashgary (with Elise Anderson and Joshua Lipes), “Daughter of Uyghur Historian Questions Legitimacy of State Media Video Denying His Detention,” Radio Free Asia / Uyghur Human Rights Project (5 July 2020).

⁶⁰ Abduweli Ayup, “List of Uyghur Intellectuals Imprisoned in China from 2016 to the Present (15 June 2019);

On 21 July 2019, the State Council Information Office released an official 6,900 words white paper, Historical Matters Concerning Xinjiang (in Chinese), arguing that the region was an “inseparable part” of China, that Islam was introduced to Uyghur culture by force, and that internal and external hostile forces including separatists, religious extremists, and terrorists were distorting history and facts to split the country apart. The white paper was criticized by scholars and Uyghur activists as an attempt to rewrite Uyghur history. Among the criticisms was the observation that in 2016, more than two dozen Islamic religious sites had been partially or totally destroyed.⁶¹

In October 2019, a report by the Uyghur Human Rights Project presented evidence of the complete or partial destruction of over a hundred mosques and religious sites (including cemeteries, shrines, domes, and minarets) by the Chinese government. It said that Uyghurs’ Islamic faith has been a major target of the Chinese government’s campaign to eliminate the Uyghur ethno-cultural identity. Termed the “Mosque Rectification Program,” and undertaken with the justification of unsafe construction, the Chinese state had reportedly destroyed thousands of mosques since 2016. The report also contained evidence of the destruction of traditional Uyghur neighborhoods in cities around the region.⁶²

On 26 February 2020, the American Anthropological Association issued a statement protesting the Chinese government’s campaign of eliminating and replacing Indigenous languages and cultural heritage in the Uyghur and Kazakh regions in Xinjiang under the pretext of “countering violent extremism” which resulted in a surveillance state, the disregard of academic freedom, the disappearance of more than 400 Uyghur and Kazakh cultural leaders, and the systematic destruction of sacred lands such as family graves, saint pilgrimage sites, mosques, and traditional Turkic Muslim neighborhoods.⁶³

According to scholar of Uyghur history Rian Thum, a major sacred site in Khotan was bulldozed and turned into a parking lot in [April] 2020. The gravesite of the modern Uyghur national literary hero Lutpulla Mutellip was turned into a park.⁶⁴

See also Albania, Iran, Taiwan.

see also the list on the Uyghur Victims website.

⁶¹ “China Steps Up Defence of Xinjiang Policies in Government Report,” The Straits Times (21 July 2019); Isobel Cockerell, “Decoding China’s Claims about Uyghur Identity,” Coda (2 August 2019).

⁶² Uyghur Human Rights Project, “Demolishing Faith: The Destruction and Desecration of Uyghur Mosques and Shrines” (28 October 2019); Bahram Sintash, Demolishing Faith: The Destruction and Desecration of Uyghur Mosques and Shrines, Uyghurism.com & Uyghur Human Rights Project (October 2019).

⁶³ American Anthropological Association, “The Assault on Indigenous Peoples in Northwest China Must End” (26 February 2020).

⁶⁴ Magnus Fiskesjö, “China Ravages Xinjiang Cultural Heritage,” (29 April 2020).

COLOMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2004, 2006–2019.

On 19 February 2019, President Ivan Duque appointed Rubén Darío Acevedo Carmona as the new director of the Centro Nacional de Memoria Histórica (CNMH; National Center for Historical Memory or Museum of Memory). Originally a militant of the left-wing movement in the 1970s, he recently publicly criticized the guerrilla movement, questioned the impartiality of the Justicia Especial para la Paz (JEP; Special Jurisdiction for Peace; a separate tribunal established to prosecute the worst abuses of the 1964–2016 internal conflict), and on 2 February 2019 doubted the existence of an armed conflict in the country (a status conferred to the conflict by the 2011 Victims Law) and the number of its victims in an interview with El Colombiano. Eighty-nine victims' organizations urged Duque to reconsider the appointment. Many historians also protested, including the history staff at the National University of Colombia who wrote in a letter: "We are surprised that you, who openly denies the existence of an armed conflict, has accepted directing a state entity whose central purpose is to recognize it." Under Acevedo's directorship, the CNMH did not publicly launch the last report (Y a la vida por fin daremos todo ... , And we will finally give everything to life ...) produced under the leadership of the previous director Gonzalo Sánchez [see NCH Annual Report 2019]. Acevedo also said that the narrative of a traveling exhibit meant to test a museum narrative developed over five years by experts who had met victims throughout Colombia focused too heavily on social inequality as a cause of the conflict.

It also became known that in May 2017, Gabriel Cabrera had resigned as director of the history department of the Medellín campus of the Universidad Nacional de Colombia, because of an attempt by Acevedo (then associate dean of the Faculty of Human and Economic Sciences) to prohibit courses on Fascism and Marxism.

On 1 February 2020, the International Coalition of Sites of Conscience suspended membership of CNMH from its global network of over 275 historic sites, museums and memory initiatives after it had expressed concerns about biased public statements made on behalf of CNMH. On 5 February 2020, the Movimiento de Víctimas de Crímenes de Estado (Movice; movement of victims of state crimes) protested against the celebration of the symbolic first stone for the new Museum of Memory because they were invited for it at the last minute.⁶⁵

⁶⁵ Michael Evans, "Colombia Truth Commission Opens Doors, But Faces Significant Barriers to Access," National Security Archive (29 November 2018); "Darío Acevedo fue nombrado director del Centro Nacional de Memoria," El Espectador (19 February 2019); "Nuevo candidato al Centro de Memoria Histórica, sin acogida," El Colombiano (5 February 2019); César Augusto Dúque Sánchez, personal communication (5 July 2019); Christine Armario, "Colombia's Conflict Spills over to Museum of Memory," Washington Post (24 December 2019); International Coalition of Sites of Conscience, "Statement on the National Center for Historical Memory" (1 February 2020); "Intelectuales preocupados por el rumbo del Centro Nacional de Memoria Histórica," El Espectador (11 February 2020), including the letter "El negacionismo no es una

The 2016 peace agreement between the Colombian government and the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) provided for the creation of a Special Jurisdiction for Peace (JEP) to try those responsible for gross human rights violations and violations of international humanitarian law committed during the conflict (1964–2016). FARC guerrillas and members of the armed forces responsible for crimes against humanity and serious war crimes who fully cooperated with the new jurisdiction and confessed their crimes were subject to as many as eight years of “effective restrictions on freedoms and rights,” but no prison time. At the end of 2019, JEP magistrates had prioritized seven situations for analysis: kidnappings committed by the FARC; false-positive killings; army and FARC abuses against Afro-Colombian and Indigenous people in Nariño province; FARC and army abuses committed in the Urabá region, in the north; FARC and army abuses committed in the northern part of Cauca province; government abuses against members of the Patriotic Union, a political party created by the FARC in the 1980s; and recruitment and use of child soldiers by the FARC.

During 2019, the Special Jurisdiction opened investigations to determine whether four former FARC commanders had failed to fulfill their responsibilities under the 2016 peace accord, including reincorporating former guerrilla fighters into society and testifying before the Special Jurisdiction (JEP). In April, JEP issued a warrant for arrest of one of them, alias “El Paisa,” ruling that his failure to testify before JEP was unjustified. The whereabouts of all four, including the group’s top peace negotiator, alias “Iván Márquez” and alias “Jesús Santrich,” who the United States was seeking to have extradited on drug charges, remained unknown at the end of 2019. In August 2019, these four former FARC commanders, along with about twenty other former mid-level FARC commanders, announced that they were taking up arms again in response to what they called a “betrayal by the state of the peace accord.” In March 2019, the Constitutional Court ruled unconstitutional a 2018 law containing a provision that suspended, unless defendants requested otherwise, Special Jurisdiction prosecutions of armed forces soldiers until the government created a “special and differentiated process” for them.⁶⁶

CONGO (Democratic Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2000, 2003–2019.

In July 2019, a three-judge panel at the International Criminal Court (ICC) unanimously found the rebel leader and former army general Bosco Ntaganda guilty of thirteen counts of war crimes and five counts política aceptable hoy”; Andrés Bermúdez Liévano, “Lutte politique pour la vérité et la mémoire en Colombie,” JusticeInfo.Net (19 March 2020).

⁶⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 145–148; Amnesty International, Human Rights in the Americas: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2020), 35, 37.

of crimes against humanity committed in Ituri in 2002 and 2003. The charges included murder and attempted murder, rape, sexual slavery, attacking civilians, pillaging, displacement of civilians, attacking protected objects, and recruiting and using child soldiers. The judges found that Ntaganda and others agreed on a common plan to attack and drive the ethnic Lendu population out of Ituri through the commission of crimes. In November 2019, the ICC sentenced him to thirty years in prison. Troops under Ntaganda's command also committed ethnic massacres, killings, rape, torture, and recruitment of child soldiers in the Kivus, including when Ntaganda commanded troops in the Rwandan-backed National Congress for the Defense of the People (CNDP) and M23 armed groups, and while he served as a general in the Congolese army. His trial at the ICC only dealt with crimes related to the Ituri conflict.⁶⁷

In June 2020, Belgian King Leopold II's statues were moved to the National Museum in Kinshasa.⁶⁸

See also Belgium, Uganda.

CONGO (Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004–2006, 2008, 2010–2012, 2019.

COSTA RICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

CÔTE D'IVOIRE

See Ivory Coast.

⁶⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 166–168.

⁶⁸ Georgina Rannard, "Leopold II: Belgium 'Wakes Up' to Its Bloody Colonial Past," BBC News (13 June 2020).

CROATIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2001, 2003–2013, 2015–2019.

In January 2019, a Europe-wide universities-led Holocaust Remembrance project found historical revisionism in Croatia among the highest in the European Union.⁶⁹

On 21 August 2019, Hrvoje Klasić, a professor of contemporary history at Zagreb University history department who had criticized the rehabilitation of the World War II fascist Ustaša movement (1941–1944) in Croatia, received an anonymous letter containing a death threat signed in the name of the Ustaša at his office at Zagreb University’s Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences. Attached to it was a newspaper excerpt in which Klasić said that he would welcome a decision by the Austrian authorities to ban and sanction the public display of symbols of the Ustaša movement. Klasić had received similar letters and death threats in the past, but the latest contained the most explicit death threat.⁷⁰

In April 2020, President Zoran Milanovic said that a controversial plaque with the Ustaša slogan “Ready for the Home(land)” (“Za dom spremni”) should be removed. The plaque commemorated soldiers from a 1990s paramilitary organization called the Croatian Defense Forces. Milanovic had called for its removal after he and other senior Croatian officials, anti-fascists and leaders of Croatia’s Serb, Roma and Jewish communities had held a joint commemoration of victims of the Ustaša-run Jasenovac concentration camp. “It should be removed, thrown away somewhere. It has nothing to do with the Homeland War,” Milanovic said. The Ustaša killed over 83,000 Serbs, Jews, Roma and anti-fascists at the Jasenovac camp between 1941 and 1945 [see NCH Annual Reports 1996, 2017].⁷¹

On 3 June 2020 Holocaust historian Efraim Zuroff from the Jerusalem-based Simon Wiesenthal Center called upon Croatian political leaders to reject member of parliament Ruža Tomašić’s recent statements of sympathy for the Ustaša movement. Zuroff alleged that Tomašić was attempting to whitewash the large-scale atrocities committed by the Ustaša and the World War II-era Independent State of Croatia (NDH).⁷²

⁶⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 217.

⁷⁰ Anja Vladisavljevic, “Ustasa’ Letter Threatens Croatian Historian with Death,” Balkan Insight (28 August 2019); Jonathan Even-Zohar, “‘A Society Where I Should Be Quiet Is Not a Society for Me’ – Interview with Hrvoje Klasić,” EuroClio (10 October 2019).

⁷¹ Anja Vladisavljevic, “Croatian President Reignites Row over Ustasa Slogan,” Balkan Insight (23 April 2020).

⁷² Anja Vladisavljevic, “Croatian MEP Condemned for ‘Repulsive’ Ustasa Sympathies,” Balkan Insight (5 June 2020).

See also Austria, Bosnia and Herzegovina.

CUBA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2002, 2006, 2010–2012, 2015–2016, 2018.

CYPRUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2005, 2008–2011, 2013, 2015–2018.

See Turkey.

CZECH REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2010, 2013–2019.

In March 2020, Martina Lehmannová, director of the memorial in Lidice – a village razed to the ground by the Nazis after Adolf Hitler singled it out in retribution for the assassination in 1942 of Reinhard Heydrich, deputy leader of the SS, by British-trained Czech and Slovak resistance fighters – forcibly resigned from her post. This came after she refused to question in a television program in June 2019 the discovery by Czech historian Vojtěch Kyncl, member of the Czech Academy of Sciences, that a Jewish woman who had been secretly living in Lidice during the war was arrested – allegedly after being denounced by a neighbor – shortly before it was razed. The disclosure cast a shadow over the village’s status as symbol of national martyrdom. Lehmannová was ousted after survivors of Lidice – under the auspices of the Czech Union of Freedom Fighters, a local group with roots in the former Communist regime – wrote to senior politicians, complaining that she had failed to contradict Kyncl’s research in the documentary. The complaint prompted the intervention of Czech culture minister Lubomír Zaorálek, who accused Lehmannová of failing to empathize with the survivors and told her to resign or face being dismissed. Ten other board members quit in support of Lehmannová. She was replaced by Eduard Stehlík, a military historian and ex-army officer who had written two books on Lidice and who had cast doubt on Kyncl’s research.⁷³ ⁷³ Robert Tait, “Czech Village Razed by Hitler at Heart of Row on Truth and History,” The Guardian (14 March 2020); “Czech Museum Director Fired,” Jewish News (22 March 2020).

On 3 April 2020, officials removed a statue of Soviet Army marshal Ivan Konev (1897–1973) from a local park. In a reaction, Russia’s Investigative Committee said it had opened an investigation into alleged “defiling of symbols of Russia’s military glory.” Two days later, the Czech Embassy in Moscow was attacked by a group of masked individuals. This prompted a diplomatic row between Russia and the Czech Republic. Subsequently, three Czech officials, including Prague Mayor Zdeněk Hřib, were placed under police protection following reports of Russian poison plots. Russians considered Konev to be a war hero credited with liberating much of Czechoslovakia at the end of World War II; for Czechs, however, his legacy was more complicated, as he later commanded the suppression of the 1956 Hungarian uprising and lead reconnaissance missions for the 1968 invasion of what was then Czechoslovakia.⁷⁴ ⁷⁴ Robert Tait, “Statue Must Tell True Story of Soviet ‘Hero,’ Say Czechs,” The Guardian (5 August 2018); Amy Mackinnon, “As Putin Seeks to Reinvent History, Russia-Czech Relations Hit a New Low.” Foreign Policy (29 April 2020).

DENMARK

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2007, 2013, 2016–2019.

On 9 November 2019, the 81st anniversary of Kristallnacht, police arrested neo-Nazi activist Jacob Vullum Andersen ([1981]–), leader of the Nordic Resistance Movement (NRM), and an alleged accomplice after 84 Jewish tombstones were vandalized at a cemetery in Randers. They were charged with gross vandalism and a hate crime offense and put in custody for four weeks. There were also anti-Semitic incidents in four other places in Denmark, involving Nazi-style Star of David stickers and graffiti.⁷⁵

DJIBOUTI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013.

⁷⁵ “Neo-Nazi Held in Denmark over Jewish Cemetery Attack,” BBC News (14 November 2019).

ECUADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2007, 2009–2019.

A truth commission created by the Rafael Correa administration (2007–2017) to investigate government abuses from 1984 to 2008 documented gross human rights violations against 456 victims, including 68 extrajudicial executions and seventeen disappearances. A special prosecutorial unit created in 2010 initiated judicial procedures in fewer than fifteen cases. Final rulings have been rendered in only two. The remaining cases appear stalled.⁷⁶

In December 2019, United Nations experts recommended to Ecuador “to ensure that textbooks and other educational materials reflect historical facts accurately as they relate to past tragedies and atrocities, in particular slavery, the trade in enslaved Africans and colonialism, so as to avoid stereotypes and the distortion or falsification of these historic facts, which may lead to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance.”⁷⁷

In [January 2020] the building Aranjuez in Quito that housed the archaeological, colonial and modern art collections and the archival and photographic collections of the Ministry of Culture was declared at risk of collapse, putting the cultural heritage of Ecuador in jeopardy. At the same time, plans were drafted to transfer the collections to a new museum at the outskirts of the city (at the former headquarters of the Unión de Naciones Suramericanas, UNASUR, Union of South American Nations, in a earthquake-sensitive region). A broad coalition for the defense of the country’s cultural heritage demanded that the government would promptly transfer the collections to another building in the center of Quito.⁷⁸

⁷⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 172.

⁷⁷ “Statement to the Media by the United Nations’ Working Group of Experts on People of African Descent, on the Conclusion of its Official Visit to Ecuador, 16–20 December 2019” (Quito, 20 December 2019).

⁷⁸ Santiago Cabrera Hanna, “Ecuador: Fondos bibliográficos y colecciones arqueológicas y de arte están en riesgo” (Press release; [30] January 2020); Santiago Cabrera Hanna, personal communications (30 January & 28 April 2020); Juan Manguashca Guevara, personal communication (30 January 2020); Diego Araujo Sánchez, “Patrimonio en peligro,” El Comercio (21 January 2020); “Carta abierta al Ministro de Cultura y Patrimonio de Ecuador Juan Fernando Velasco” (28 April 2020), available as petition under the title “No a traslado de bienes patrimoniales de Ecuador en medio de Pandemia Covid-19” (28 April 2020).

EGYPT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2001, 2003, 2006–2007, 2010–2019.

In 2019, historian of religions Adam Duker [see NCH Annual Report 2019] returned to the United States on a temporary position at the Departments of History and Religion of Mount Holyoke College.⁷⁹

Despite the accelerated restoration of Jewish heritage (synagogues, cemeteries, bibles) by the government, Jews who were expelled in 1956 during the Suez Crises or fled in 1967 during the Six-Day War were still not allowed access to a vast register of community records, dating back to 1830 and located inside the national archives, ostensibly for national security reasons.⁸⁰

EL SALVADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2019.

Many human rights violations were committed during the armed conflict (1980–1992). In May 2019, a draft Special Law for Transitional and Restorative Justice for National Reconciliation was discussed in the Legislative Assembly. Its text was described by human rights groups as a threat to the right of access to justice for victims and a mechanism for perpetuating impunity. The President of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights (IACHR) asked El Salvador to suspend the legislative progress of the bill and the United Nations (UN) High Commissioner for Human Rights warned that the draft bill contained a series of provisions that could translate into a de facto amnesty. Also in May, the UN Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence concluded his official visit to El Salvador and expressed concerns about the slow pace of action by the Attorney General's Office in investigating crimes under international law and human rights violations during the armed conflict, obstacles to accessing military files from 1980–1992, and the insufficiency of the reparation and historical memory processes. In September 2019, human rights organizations and victims' groups informed the IACHR that state programs for victims' reparations, created in 2013, had been disestablished as a result of an institutional reorganization implemented by the new government. In December, the IACHR reiterated the need for the new national reconciliation law, expected to be ⁷⁹ Gilgamesh Nabeel & Mina Nader, "American University Cairo Religion Professor Loses Post in Academic Freedom Fight," Religion News Service (14 May 2019); Elizabeth Redden, "A Donor's Demands, a Revoked Chair," Inside HigherEd (24 May 2019).

⁸⁰ Declan Walsh and Ronen Bergman, "A Bittersweet Homecoming for Egypt's Jews," New York Times (23 February 2020).

approved in February 2020, to fully comply with El Salvador's international obligations with respect to transitional justice, and also to take into account the voices of the victims.⁸¹

In November 2019, President Nayib Bukele declared that the government would open the military archives related to the December 1981 El Mozote massacre as requested by Jorge Guzmán, an examining magistrate in San Francisco Gotera, Morazán.⁸²

In 2019, the trial continued against former military commanders accused in the 1981 El Mozote massacre (see item above), where soldiers committed mass rapes and killed 978 civilians, including 553 children. Investigations reached hearings in only 14 of 48 cases involving 116 extrajudicial killings committed from 2014 to 2018 that the Salvadoran Ombudsperson for the Defense of Human Rights (PDDH) examined. Two resulted in convictions.⁸³

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2019.

ERITREA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008, 2016, 2018.

ESTONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2010, 2015, 2017.

⁸¹ Amnesty International, Human Rights in the Americas: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2020), 49.

⁸² Gabriel Campos Madrid, "Gobierno dice que abrirá archivos militares," La prensa gráfica (3 November 2019); Nelson Rauda, "Juez de El Mozote envía inspectores a buscar los archivos que el Ejército niega," El Faro (26 June 2020).

⁸³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 185.

ETHIOPIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2011, 2015–2019.

A national reconciliation commission was set up in December 2018, resting on two pillars: the first concerning reconciliation, peace and national cohesion, the second to identify “the nature, cause, and dimension of the repeated gross violations of human rights.” What constituted gross human rights violations, however, was not defined.

Between 1974 and 1991, the Derg regime, led by Mengistu Hailemariam, killed over 150,000 people including students, academics, and political opponents, torturing, forcibly disappearing, and arbitrarily arresting many more. Mengistu fled to Zimbabwe in 1991 and was tried and convicted in absentia for genocide and war crimes by an Ethiopian court in 2006. On 28 May 1991, liberation groups overthrew the Derg and formed a coalition government. The coalition pledged to establish human rights in the country and respect the rule of law, but its military also murdered, raped, and tortured civilians in Gambella and the Somali region, and enforced systemic repression around election periods. Between 2014 and 2018, protesters, many of them students, took to the streets. In his inaugural address in 2018, Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed apologized for massive rights abuses and welcomed opposition groups back home. “I call on us all to forgive each other from our hearts — to close the chapters from yesterday, and to forge ahead to the next bright future through national consensus,” Abiy said in one address. So far, however, the commission’s mandate remained unclear, and some of its members lacked the necessary technical expertise to effectively carry out the body’s fact-finding function.⁸⁴

On 29 June 2020, in the turmoil and protests following the killing of Oromo musician Hachalu Hundessa (1986–2020), well-known for his political songs often inspired by Ethiopian history, protesters pulled down a statue of royal prince Ras Makonnen Wolde Mikael (1852–1906), sitting on a horse, in Harar, eastern Ethiopia. The father of Haile Selassie (1930–1974), Ethiopia’s last emperor, Ras Makonnen had been an important military figure and former governor of Harar province under then-Emperor Menelik II (1844–1913). Hachalu shared the view of Oromo historians that what was currently known as Addis Ababa was once the home of the Tulama clans of the Oromo, and that they were forced out by Emperor Menelik II. In June 2020, Hachalu had angered the emperor’s supporters after he had accused Menelik II of stealing the horses of Oromos – who saw themselves as warriors and horsemen – when he established Addis Ababa as his seat of power and as Ethiopia’s capital in 1886. Machalu had received several death threats. On 30 June 2020, a statue of Haile Selassie was destroyed in Cannizaro park, ⁸⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 207; Solomon Ayele Dersso, “Ethiopia’s Experiment in Reconciliation,” USIP Press (23 September 2019); Laetitia Bader, “To Heal, Ethiopia Needs to Confront its Violent Past,” Human Rights Watch (28 May 2020).

Wimbledon, south-west London. The damage to the bust was carried out by a group of around 100 people. Haile Selassie lived in Wimbledon in 1936 during his exile following the Italian invasion of Ethiopia.⁸⁵

See also Rwanda.

⁸⁵ “Hachalu Hundessa: Deadly Protests Erupt after Ethiopian Singer Killed,” BBC News (30 June 2020); “Hachalu Hundessa – Ethiopia’s Murdered Musician Who Sang for Freedom,” BBC News (2 July 2020); “Haile Selassie: Statue of Former Ethiopian Leader Destroyed in London Park,” BBC News (2 July 2020).

FIJI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006, 2010.

FINLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2017.

In November–December 2019, the Finnish government, the Skolt Sámi village meeting, and the Sámi parliament all accepted the mandate of a Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC), tasked with investigating atrocities committed against Finland’s Indigenous populations. The TRC’s primary stated goal was to recognize and evaluate the discrimination faced by Sámi people throughout history, and the continuing current effects of the trauma caused by officially sanctioned oppression. It would investigate the forced integration tactics used by the government and the trauma that Sámi people still faced due to Finland’s racist schemes of oppression. TRC preparations started in 2016.⁸⁶

See also Russia.

FRANCE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1999, 2001–2009, 2011–2014, 2016–2018.

In the spring of 2019, it was discovered that the Departmental Archives of the Haute-Garonne had destroyed police and court records of Spanish exiles who came to Toulouse in 1939. Toulouse was known as the exile capital of France and as the fifth province of Catalonia.⁸⁷

On 21 October 2019, a Holocaust memorial plaque in the center of Lyon (installed in 2011) was vandalized. It contained the names of the 86 Jews arrested on 9 February 1943, most of them subsequently murdered in Auschwitz and Sobibor. On the plaque, black paint was used to cross out their names.⁸⁸

⁸⁶ “Sámi Reconciliation Process Gains Final Approval,” Yle (18 December 2019).

⁸⁷ Bruno Pardo Porto, “Francia destruye parte de la memoria histórica del exilio ante la inacción del Gobierno español,” ABC (2 February 2020).

⁸⁸ Norman Goda, “The History Behind a Recently Defaced French Holocaust Memorial,” History News Network (10 November 2019).

On 1 February 2020, historian Jean-Marc Berlière, expert in French police history, criticized the Defense Ministry Historical Service, which since the beginning of 2020 had closed all police files from 1940 until the present, making research on World War II very difficult, if not impossible. On 14 February 2020, a group of French historians started a petition directed to President Emmanuel Macron, Prime Minister Édouard Philippe, Minister of Culture Franck Riester, Minister for the Armed Forces Florence Parly and the Secrétariat général de la Défense et de la Sécurité nationale (SGDSN) to lift access restrictions to the public archives of contemporary history (1940–1970), in particular the instruction of November 2011 (tightened in December 2019) to declassify secret records one by one — threatening historical writing about World War II, the decolonization of Algeria and other subjects.⁸⁹

On 12 June 2020, the State Council ruled that genocide researcher François Graner [see NCH Annual Report 2018] was allowed to consult the archives of late President François Mitterrand. In April 2019, President Macron had appointed a panel of experts to investigate France’s actions in Rwanda.⁹⁰

On 23 June 2020, an activist of the group Brigade Anti Négrophobie vandalized the statue of Jean-Baptiste Colbert (1619–1683) outside the National Assembly, spraying the words “négrophobie d’État” (the state’s fear of black people) at the monument’s base before police detained him. Colbert was a statesman who served under King Louis XIV and helped write the Code noir (1685; Black Code) on his orders. The Code noir set regulations for French colonies in the Americas and the Caribbean, including banning Jewish people from all colonies, defining how slavery would work, and restricting the freedoms of free black people.

In Lille, protesters wrote the words “murderer” and “colonist” on the statue of Louis Faidherbe (1818–1889), a nineteenth-century governor of Senegal when it was a French colony.⁹¹

See also Cameroon, Central African Republic, Iran, Yemen.

⁸⁹ Benoit Robert, “Les historiens n’ont plus accès aux archives de 39-45, leurs travaux sont menacés,” Ouest-France (1 February 2020); Petition text; “Archives, secret défense et crise sanitaire : le rôle opaque du Secrétariat général de la défense et de la sécurité nationale \(SGDSN\),” L’Humanité (22 April 2020).

⁹⁰ “France Grants Researcher Access to Mitterrand’s Archive on Rwandan Genocide,” France 24 (12 June 2020).

⁹¹ “France Colbert Row: Statue Vandalised over Slavery Code,” BBC News (24 June 2020); Lucy Williamson, “Colonial Abuses Haunt France’s Racism Debate,” BBC News (19 June 2020); Olga Nedbaeva & Fiachra Gibbons, “Top French Historian Slams Macron’s Hardline Stance on Statues,” AFP (24 June 2020).

GABON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016, 2018.

GAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016–2018.

See Myanmar.

GEORGIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2003, 2010–2012, 2014, 2016, 2019.

GERMANY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–2000, 2003, 2006–2013, 2015–2017, 2019.

In December 2019, Sibylle Ehringhaus did not renew her contract as an art provenance researcher at the Georg Schäfer Museum in Schweinfurt, northern Bavaria. Since 2016, she had to verify claims of heirs of Jewish collectors who said that some of their works in the museum had been stolen by the Nazis and should be returned. Ehringhaus said that she was denied access to historical documents vital for her research and forbidden to contact colleagues at another museum with her research inquiries. She added that although she had identified several plundered works, the museum did not seem to have any plans to return them to the heirs of the original Jewish owners.⁹²

On 4 February 2020, the regional appeals court of Saxony-Anhalt in Naumburg ruled on a complaint by Michael Düllmann that a thirteenth-century anti-Semitic carving showing a rabbi and two other Jews with a pig on the wall of the Stadtkirche in Wittenberg (where Martin Luther preached) was defamatory to the Jewish people and should be removed. The court, however, rejected the complaint, saying that since the 1980s the church had undertaken serious efforts to contextualize the carving, finding that while the sculpture would be offensive if viewed in isolation, “in the context in which it has been placed by the church it has lost its insulting character.”⁹³

⁹² Catherine Hickley, "She Tracked Nazi-Looted Art: She Quit When No One Returned It," New York Times (17 March 2020); Jenn Gidman, "Researcher: Museum Won't Give Up Art Nazis Plundered," Newser (20 March 2020).

On 2 April 2020, an almost 200-foot (around 60-meter) stretch of the graffiti covered Berlin Wall was demolished in Pankow, northeast Berlin, to make way for new apartments. The Berlin Wall Foundation said it had not been informed about the removal.⁹⁴

On 20 June 2020, the far-left party Marxist-Leninist Party of Germany (MLPD) unveiled a statue of Communist leader Vladimir Lenin (1870–1924) in front of its headquarters in Gelsenkirchen. City authorities had attempted to stop the statue being installed, but the courts had blocked their appeals.⁹⁵

See also Cameroon, Czech Republic, Iran, Iraq, Israel, United Kingdom, United States.

GHANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2004–2008, 2017, 2019.

GREECE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2004–2011, 2013–2019.

GRENADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007.

⁹³ “Anti-Semitic Sculpture to Remain on German Church,” BBC News (4 February 2020).

⁹⁴ Kate Brown, “A 200-Foot Section of the Berlin Wall Has Been Torn Down to Make Way for Condos, Leaving Historians Appalled,” Artnet News (2 April 2020).

⁹⁵ “Gelsenkirchen: Controversial Lenin Statue Erected in German City,” BBC News (21 June 2020).

GUATEMALA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2019.

In early June 2019, in the middle of safe third-country negotiations between Guatemala and the United States, Kimberly Breier, the U.S. assistant secretary of state for Western Hemisphere affairs, blocked the release of a public statement that would have urged Guatemala to back down on its effort to restrict access to the Archivo Histórico de la Policía Nacional (AHPN; Historical Archive of the National Police) [see NCH Annual Reports 2013, 2019]. In early July 2019, the Guatemalan Ministry of Culture and Sports informed the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP, responsible for administering international donations to the AHPN) that it would take over full management of the archives. On 10 July 2019, Anna Carla Ericastilla, director for more than a decade of the Archivo General de Centro América (AGCA; Guatemala’s national archives), was dismissed on the grounds that she had provided access to the AHPN to foreign institutions, including the University of Texas, and improperly raised funds from donors to pay salaries to archivists. The staff that was reduced from hundreds to 35 people, operating on temporary contracts that needed renewal every couple of months. The investigations unit – which, in the past, constantly reviewed records for information to give to families of the disappeared, human rights investigators, scholars, and prosecutors – was eliminated. Outside researchers were not permitted to conduct their work on AHPN premises but were asked to submit record requests under the Access to Information law. Gustavo Meoño Brenner, who had been dismissed as AHPN director in August 2018, left Guatemala; Ericastilla would give a declaration in her first hearing before the Public Ministry on 18 November 2019 to address the criminal complaint filed against her. She also asked a labor tribunal to order compensation for her unjustified dismissal from the archives.⁹⁶

In July 2019, the Human Rights Ombudsman filed an amparo (a request for the protection of legal rights) with the Supreme Court of Justice to ensure preservation of and access to the AHPN police records (see item above). When no decision was forthcoming, on 3 February 2020 the Ombudsman together with representatives of the prosecutor for human rights and the Association of University Students, in a public hearing renewed the request. On 3 March 2020, the Supreme Court ruled in favor of the Ombudsman’s position. Applying Article 2 of the American Convention on Human Rights, the court said that the Interior Ministry must not “threaten the integrity” of the AHPN archives. The Ministry of Culture, which was the home of the national archives, must develop a plan within four months to restore the archive’s staff to numbers sufficient to carry on the work, the Congress must work on a revised archives law, and the government should obtain advice from national and international archivists. The Court cited the 16 June 2019 statement published by the International Council on Archives on the Guatemalan police archives.⁹⁷

⁹⁶ David Fricker & Antonio González Quintana, “Statement of the International Council On Archives on the Situation of the Historical Archives of the National Police of Guatemala” (16 June 2019); Colum Lynch, “Guatemala Declares War on History,” Foreign Policy (30 July 2019); “Joint Declaration of the International and National Advisory Councils of the Historical Archive of the National Police of Guatemala \(AHPN\)” (English and Spanish versions; 17 November 2019); National Security Archive, “Joint Declaration on the Guatemala Police Archive” (18 November 2019).

The limited progress that Guatemala made in recent years in judging crimes of the past seemed to have come to a standstill. In November 2018, a former special forces member was convicted for his role in the 1982 Dos Erres massacre, in which Guatemalan army special forces killed around 200 civilians as part of its counterinsurgency policy during the armed conflict (1960–1996). In 2011 and 2012, five others had been convicted for their roles in the massacre. However, ten others remained at large and three high-level former officials, including former President Efraín Ríos Montt, died before facing trial. In June 2019, in a case regarding sexual violence against 36 Maya Achí women in the 1980s, a pre-trial judge dismissed proceedings against six former paramilitaries and ordered the immediate release of the defendants after she excluded key evidence from the case, including testimonies from victims and witnesses. At the end of 2019, plaintiffs’ appeals against the decision remained pending, as did the request from the prosecutor to strip the judge of immunity and charge her with malfeasance and denial of justice. The same judge had reached a similar decision in the CREOMPAZ case, involving enforced disappearances and sexual violence at a military base during the armed conflict. The judge barred 123 of the 152 victims from the case and excluded key military documents from the evidence. The prosecutors’ appeals remained pending at the end of 2019.

In March 2019, Guatemalan Congress passed the second (of three required) approvals of a bill that would provide amnesty for genocide and other past atrocities, in clear violation of international human rights law. That same month, the Inter-American Court on Human Rights ordered Guatemala, in a binding ruling, to shelve the proposed legislation and in July 2019, Guatemala’s Constitutional Court issued a similar ruling. However, at the end of 2019, that had not happened.⁹⁸

GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2019.

⁹⁷ Archives and Human Rights: News from the Section on Archives and Human Rights (No. 123; February 2020), 1.

⁹⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 244.

At least eleven demonstrators were allegedly shot dead by the security forces during protests on 14–16 October 2019. Security forces shot dead three people during a 4 November 2019 funeral procession to commemorate October’s protest deaths. Security forces shot dead three more protesters on 7 November 2019.⁹⁹

Ten years after security forces massacred over 150 peaceful opposition supporters, and raped dozens of women, at a stadium on 28 September 2009, those responsible have not been tried. Judges indicted fourteen people over the massacre, including Moussa Dadis Camara, then-leader of the military junta that ruled Guinea in September 2009, and individuals who remained in positions of power such as Moussa Tiegboro Camara, who was in charge of fighting drug trafficking and organized crime. In August 2019, a steering committee, established in August 2018 to organize the trial, confirmed Conakry’s Court of Appeal as the site for the trial. Justice Minister Mohammed Lamine Fofana stated in November 2019 that the trial would take place no later than June 2020.

With the exception of a handful of cases, impunity largely continued for past human rights abuses. There have been no trials for alleged killings of demonstrators by the security forces during protests in 2018, as well as for demonstrators killed in protests in 2019 (see item above). There have similarly been no trials for the killing of protesters prior to and following the 2015 presidential elections and the 2013 parliamentary elections; for the 2012 killing of six men in the southeastern mining village of Zoghota; or the 2007 killing by security forces of some 130 unarmed demonstrators.

The trial of the former governor of Conakry, Sékou Resco Camara, and the former head of the army, Nouhou Thiam, for the 2010 torture of several opposition detainees, which began in April 2018, was repeatedly delayed.¹⁰⁰

GUINEA-BISSAU

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2012, 2015.

GUYANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997.

⁹⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 249.

¹⁰⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 250.

HAITI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2000–2003, 2006, 2008–2009, 2013–2019.

Accountability for past human rights abuses continued to be a challenge. As of November 2019, a re-opened investigation into crimes committed by former President Jean-Claude Duvalier’s collaborators remained pending. Duvalier died in 2014, six months after the Port-of-Prince Court of Appeal ruled that the statute of limitations could not be applied to crimes against humanity and ordered that investigations against him should continue for crimes committed during his presidency (1971–1986). Allegations of violations included arbitrary detentions, torture, disappearances, summary executions, and forced exile [see NCH Annual Reports 2000–2001, 2003, 2012–2019].¹⁰¹

HONDURAS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998, 2001–2002, 2009–2015.

HONG KONG

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996. See China.

HUNGARY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997, 2004, 2007–2019.

On 13 February 2019, the Committee of Historical Sciences of the Polish Academy of Sciences expressed its support for the action of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences aiming to preserve the autonomy of its research and finances.¹⁰²

In June 2019, Prime Minister Viktor Orbán signed a decree to incorporate the 1956 Institute (a historical research center funded in June 1989 and dedicated to the 1956 Hungarian uprising against the Soviet ¹⁰¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 255.

¹⁰² Letter from Tomasz Schramm \(Head of the Presiding Office of the Committee of Historical Sciences\) to László Lovász \(President of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences\) (13 February 2019).

Union) into the Veritas Historical Research Institute and Archive, created by the government in 2014 and which critics said promoted a version of history favoring Orbán's agenda. The 1956 Institute had been part of the national library and its director, historian Janos Rainer, was not consulted prior to the decision. All ten historians employed at the institute resigned. Government spokespersons insisted that the change was intended to improve the efficiency of research.¹⁰³

In 2019, the government withdrew accreditation and funding for the two gender studies masters' programs in Hungary (at Eötvös Loránd University, ELTE, and Central European University, CEU). Andrea Pető, historian in the CEU Department of Gender Studies, received an anonymous threatening email via the website academia.edu because of her lectures dealing with gender, politics, the Holocaust, and war. The email was also anti-Semitic, saying that it "foresaw the eradication of her breed." The CEU offered to provide her with a bodyguard, but she turned the offer down. As a result of the affair, her book on sexual violence during World War II in Hungary moved on to the bestseller list and remained there for weeks. Pető is the author, with Ildikó Barna, of Political Justice in Budapest after World War II (2015); co-editor, with Ayşe Gül Altınay, of Gendered Wars, Gendered Memories: Feminist Conversation on War, Genocide and Political Violence (2016), and has edited the volume on War in the Interdisciplinary Handbook: Gender Series (Macmillan, 2017). She has also written about the women raped by Soviet soldiers at the end of the Second World War, in Telling the Untellable (in Hungarian).¹⁰⁴

In mid-February 2020, after Prime Minister Orbán emphasized national pride in his state-of-the-nation speech on 16 February, the government announced that it would modify the national curriculum in September in order to instill a spirit of national pride in school pupils. The change would affect the teaching of history and literature. Hungarian history would be taught in a continuous form while global history only insofar as it affected Hungary. Military victories would be emphasized, defeats downplayed. State-published textbooks would be pushed. The move was widely criticized, among others by the President of the Történelemtanárok Egylete (TTE; Association of Hungarian History Teachers), László Miklósi. TTE published reports outlining the many errors in new state-published history textbooks.¹⁰⁵

See also Czech Republic.

¹⁰³ Valerie Hopkins, "Hungary's Viktor Orban and the Rewriting of History," Financial Times (25 July 2019).

¹⁰⁴ Sally Gimson, "Macho Politics Drive Academic Closures," Index on Censorship, 2019 no. 3, 103; "Andrea Peto" (CEU website, September 2019); Matthew Reisz, "History: From a Different Perspective," Times Higher Education (16 August 2018).

¹⁰⁵ Nick Thorpe, "Hungary's New Patriotic Education Meets Resistance," BBC News (25 February 2020); Zsolt Istvan Vodli, "History and Courage: The Position of Teachers in Hungary," EuroClio (7 October 2019).

INDIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1997, 2000–2019.

In March 2019, it was announced that National Council for Educational Research and Training (NCERT) history textbooks for class IX would soon no longer contain chapters related to caste conflict. They would be removed as part of the curriculum-rationalizing exercise initiated by Minister of Human Resource Development Prakash Javadekar to reduce the burden on students. Chapters to be deleted included those on clothing (and how social movements influenced how people dressed), on the history of cricket in India (and its connection to the politics of caste, region and community), and on the growth of capitalism (and how colonialism altered the lives of peasants and farmers). In 2016 already, the Central Board of Secondary Education (CBSE) had sent a circular to affiliated schools stating that no questions should be asked from the section “Caste Conflict and Dress Change” in 2017 as it was omitted from the syllabus.¹⁰⁶

In October 2019, historian Ramachandra Guha [see NCH Annual Report 2019], filmmakers Adoor Gopalkrishnan and Mani Ratnam, and 46 others, were charged with sedition in Muzaffarpur, Bihar, for writing an open letter to Prime Minister Narendra Modi urging him to combat the frequent mob lynchings since he assumed office. The charges (that also included “tarnishing the image of the country,” “undermining the impressive performance of the prime minister” and “supporting secessionist tendencies”) were dropped later.

On 19 December 2019, police detained historian Guha together with 200 peaceful protesters during a demonstration in Bengaluru (Bangalore), Karnataka, against a new citizenship law (see item below), which critics said was prejudicial to Muslims and undermined India’s secular constitution. Several cities, including the capital New Delhi and Bengaluru, imposed curbs on public gatherings after some protests turned violent.¹⁰⁷

On 9 November 2019, the Supreme Court of India unanimously pronounced its verdict in the Ayodhya title dispute case, saying that the Hindu parties would be given the disputed land where the Babri Masjid (mosque) once stood. The Sunni Waqf Board, the biggest Muslim litigant in the case, would be given five acres at a separate “prominent” location in Ayodhya. The court said that a (disputed) report by the ¹⁰⁶ “NCERT Is Removing Caste Conflict Chapters from Class 9 History Textbooks for HRD Ministry Exercise,” India Today (19 March 2019).

¹⁰⁷ “Indian Police Detain Historian Guha at Protest against Citizenship Law,” Reuters (19 December 2020); Soutik Biswas, “Citizenship Act Protests: How a Colonial-era Law Is Being Used in India,” BBC News (20 December 2020); “Ramchandra Guha, Mani Ratnam, Aparna Sen among 49 Booked for Sedition for Letter to Narendra Modi against Mob Lynching,” The Hindu (4 October 2019); Somak Ghoshal, “Modi and His Angry Men,” Index on Censorship (2019 no. 4), 27–28.

Archaeological Survey of India (ASI) provided evidence that the remains of a building “that was not Islamic” were beneath the structure of the demolished Babri mosque. The judgment delivered was in the civil dispute case. The criminal case on the December 1992 demolition of the 450-year-old mosque was still pending in a special Central Bureau of Investigation court in Lucknow [See also NCH Annual Reports 2002–2004, 2006–2007, 2010–2011, 2015, 2017].¹⁰⁸

On 27 November 2019, Pragya Thakur, a controversial member of parliament from the ruling Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), was dropped from a key parliamentary panel after she had called Mahatma Gandhi’s killer “a patriot” during a discussion in the lower house of parliament, repeating the comment for the second time (the first time was in May). Gandhi was killed on 30 January 1948 by Nathuram Godse, an activist with nationalist right-wing groups who saw Gandhi as too moderate. The comment sparked outrage, including from Prime Minister Narendra Modi. Thakur later apologized.¹⁰⁹

On 16 January 2020, in the context of wide peaceful protests against the Citizenship Amendment Act (CAA) and NRC (National Register of Citizens), Sharjeel Imam, a PhD student in modern Indian history at Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU; New Delhi), delivered a speech at Aligarh Muslim University (AMU; Uttar Pradesh) in which he called for a chakka jam – a road blockade – on the highway to Assam, that would be so effective that the North East (which includes Assam) was cut off from the rest of India. Imam was also accused of making an inflammatory anti-CAA speech at Jamia Millia Islamia in Delhi. Five states filed FIRs (First Information Reports) for sedition and other grave crimes against him. The chief ministers of Delhi and Uttar Pradesh also issued statements condemning him as “anti-national.” On 27 January 2020, Imam was arrested by the Delhi Police in Jehanabad, Bihar, on sedition charges. Around the same time, JNU’s chief proctor summoned Imam to appear before him for his speech at AMU, “endangering the unity, integrity and sovereignty of the country.” The CAA and NRC were widely believed to be anti-Muslim measures.¹¹⁰

In February 2020, the right-wing Hindutva group Hindu Janajagruti Samiti (HJS) demanded the immediate withdrawal of a Class XI World History textbook published by the Goa Board of Secondary ¹⁰⁸ Supreme Court of India, M. Siddiq versus M.S. Das and others: Judgment (9 November 2019); “Ayodhya: Once There Was A Mosque” [timeline], The Wire (9 November 2019); “Supreme Court Verdict: Ram Temple Trust to Get Disputed Ayodhya Land,” The Wire (9 November 2019); “Ayodhya Verdict: Indian Top Court Gives Holy Site to Hindus,” BBC News (9 November 2019); Soutik Biswas, “Ayodhya Verdict: The Man Who Helped Lord Ram Win,” BBC News (9 November 2019); B. Z. Khasru, “Muslims Should Reject Indian Supreme Court’s Land Offer,” History News Network (12 November 2019); Nandini Surdar, “Five Acres in Lieu of Citizenship,” The Wire (15 November 2019).

¹⁰⁹ “Pragya Thakur: India MP Sacked from Panel for Calling Gandhi Killer ‘a Patriot’,” BBC News (28 November 2019).

¹¹⁰ Apoorvanand, “Sharjeel Imam’s Speech Was Wild and Irresponsible, But Was It ‘Sedition’?” The Wire (27 January 2019); Shuriah Niazi, “Sedition Charges against JNU Scholar for Citizenship Speech,” University World News (30 January 2020).

and Higher Secondary Education (GBSHSE), because it allegedly depicted Marathi King Chhatrapati Shivaji (1627–1680) in a too critical light, calling the content “totally false.” The textbook claimed that when Shivaji attacked Goa in the late 1600s, his forces not only plundered the countryside, but also killed prisoners. In a reaction, Goa chief minister Pramod Sawant hinted that the contentious sections would be deleted from the next print.

In 2016, the HJS was one of several Hindu groups that had demanded the immediate removal of a picture in the Balbharti textbook for Class IV that allegedly depicted Shivaji “embracing” Afzal Khan. On other occasions, the HJS had demanded a ban on a book containing derogatory remarks about Hindutva ideologue V. D. Savarkar (1883–1966) and action against the book’s author and publisher. HJS members, or of its parent group Sanatan Sanstha, were also accused of involvement in the killings of rationalists and activists such as M. M. Kalburgi [see NCH Annual Report 2016].¹¹¹

On 5 March 2020, the Karnataka government – led by the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) – recommended the withdrawal of 46 legal cases, mostly against leaders of the BJP, the Vishva Hindu Parishad (VHP) and several right-wing organizations (such as Bajrang Dal). These leaders were accused of direct involvement in violence that erupted around the birth anniversary celebrations of 18th-century ruler of the Kingdom of Mysore Tipu Sultan (1750–1799) on 10 November (called Tipu Jayanti), of fanning communal tension in the state, making inflammatory speeches and derogatory comments on Tipu Sultan, and ridiculing then state chief minister Siddaramaiah in their speeches. These cases – ranging from assaults on Muslims celebrating Tipu Jayanti to unlawful assembly – were registered across Karnataka between 2014 and 2018 when the Congress party was in power. While Congress lauded Tipu Sultan as a national hero, the BJP and its right-wing affiliates weaved tyrannical stories of mass murder, torture and pillaging around Tipu Sultan and demanded that he should be condemned.

One day after the BJP had come to power in July 2019, it had announced a state-wide cancelation of celebrations of Tipu Sultan Jayanti, a decision challenged in the Karnataka high court by Bilal Ali Shah, who claimed to be Tipu Sultan’s descendant, and two organizations, Tipu Sultan United Front and Tipu Rashtreeya Seva Sangha, Bengaluru. In January 2020, the court gave the government eight weeks to reconsider its decision and to peruse voluminous records and literature on Tipu before issuing a fresh order. The state was yet to make a new decision on this.¹¹²

On 23 May 2020, the Delhi Police arrested Jawaharlal Nehru University students Devangana Kalita ([1990]–), studying at the Center for Women’s Studies, and Natasha Narwal ([1988]–), a PhD student ¹¹¹ “Goa: Hindutva Group Objects to Textbook’s ‘Distorted History’ of Shivaji’s Raids,” The Wire (20 February 2020).

¹¹² Sukanya Shantha, “Tipu Jayanti: Karnataka Govt Proposes Withdrawal of Cases Against BJP, VHP Leaders,” The Wire (18 May 2020).

at the Center for Historical Studies. Both were founding members of Pinjra Tod, a women’s student organization. The arrests were connected to their alleged role in the Jafrabad Metro Station sit-in protest against the Citizenship Amendment Act (CAA) in February 2020 (see also item above). The Jafrabad sit-in had prompted a pro-CAA rally on 23 February and on 24 February riots broke out in northeast Delhi. The two students were arrested under Indian Penal Code sections 186 (obstructing public servant in discharge of public functions) and 353 (assault or criminal force to deter public servant from discharge of his duty). Freed on bail, Kalita and Narwal were immediately re-arrested by the Crime Branch on new charges ranging from section 147 (rioting), 307 (attempt to murder), 302 (murder), among others, related to the northeast Delhi riots.¹¹³

See also China.

INDONESIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2001–2002, 2004–2013, 2015–2019.

See China, Netherlands.

IRAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2019.

In 2015, the Ministry of Intelligence opened a case against Baktash Abrin, Reza Khandan-Mahabadi, and Keyvan Bazhan, members of the unauthorized Iranian Writers’ Association (IWA). The trial started on 22 January 2019 before Branch 28 of the Revolutionary Court during which they were indicted on the politically motivated charges of “spreading propaganda against the regime” and “assembly and collusion against national security” relating to their publications critical to the censorship of art and literature in Iran as well as their IWA membership. Evidence submitted against them included the publication of the IWA’s internal newsletter and statements, the compilation of a book on IWA history, and attendance of the annual commemoration of Mohammad Mokhtari (1942–1998) and Mohammad-Jafar Pouyandeh (1954–1998) – two victims of the so-called Serial Murders (relating to at least fourteen dissidents who were killed or disappeared between 1988 and 1998) – as well as the memorial ceremony of renowned Iranian poet Ahmad Shamlu (1925–2000). On 28 December 2019, it was announced on appeal that the verdict for Bazhan had been commuted from six to three and half years’ prison, and the verdicts for Abrin and Khandan, each sentenced to six years’ prison, had been upheld.¹¹⁴

¹¹³ Aranya Shankar & Jignasa Sinha, “Delhi Police Arrest Two Women from Pinjra Tod over February Protest,” Indian Express (24 May 2020); “Anti-CAA Protest: Pinjra Tod Activists Granted Bail, Rearrested,” The Hindu (25 May 2020).

On 7 December 2019, Xiyue Wang [see NCH Annual Reports 2018–2019], a PhD student in the Department of History at Princeton University and a China-born naturalized United States citizen since 2009, was released in a prisoner swap; he went to Switzerland, Germany, and then back to the United States. Later, Wang declared that his Iranian interrogators had wanted to extract a confession of espionage from him.¹¹⁵

On 5 June 2019, Franco-Iranian Fariba Adelkhah (1959–), social and political anthropologist, specialist in Shia Islam, and director of research at Sciences Po’s Center for International Studies (CERI) in Paris, and sociologist Roland Marchal ([1955]–) a senior researcher at CERI with a focus on civil wars in sub-Saharan Africa, were arrested by Islamic Revolution Guard Corps (IRGC) intelligence agents in Tehran. According to their defense attorney, Adelkhah was charged with “espionage” (later replaced by “propaganda against the political system” and “conspiracy against national security”) and Marchal with “conspiracy against national security.” Marchal was sentenced to five years’ imprisonment. Adelkhah was denied consular assistance. On 24 December 2019, Adelkhah started a hunger strike with Australian co-prisoner Kylie Moore-Gilbert of the University of Melbourne. She ended it on 12 February 2020 after health concerns. On 23 February 2020, she was admitted to a prison hospital for treatment for severe kidney damage. Adelkhah was brought before Tehran’s Revolutionary Tribunal during a closed-door hearing on 3 March 2020 for the first time. On 20 March 2020, Iran and France agreed to swap Marchal and Iranian engineer Jalal Ruhollahnejad (detained in France over alleged violations of American sanctions against Tehran) and he was released the same day. On 16 May 2020, Adelkhah was sentenced to six years in prison, five for conspiring against national security and one for propaganda against the state. On 5 June 2020, President Emmanuel Macron urged Iran to release Adelkhah.

¹¹⁴ International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 119.

¹¹⁵ Website about Xiyue Wang: <https://sites.google.com/view/freexiyuewang> “Wife Pleads for Release of Princeton Student Incarcerated in Iran While Doing Research on Dissertation,” Committee of Concerned Scientists (9 June 2019); Laura Dean, “The Threat of War Brings New Fears to an American Hostage in Iran,” New Yorker (24 June 2019); “UN Experts Urge Iran to Release Imprisoned American Scholar Xiyue Wang” (press release, 7 May 2019); Hua Qu, “My Husband Is Unjustly Imprisoned in Iran: The International Community Must Help,” Washington Post (24 May 2019); Scholars at Risk, Case Information (7 August 2019); Template letter to Ayatollah Ali Khamenei (7 August 2019); Teresa Davis, “Iran Has Imprisoned a Historian for Three Years: Here’s Why His Research Matters,” Washington Post (8 August 2019); “Iran’s Jailed Dual Nationals and Their Uncertain Fate,” BBC News (1 October 2019); Danielle Ranucci, “Vigil Marks Third Year of Wang’s Detainment,” Daily Princetonian (4 October 2019); Scholars at Risk, Free to Think: Report of the Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (New York: Scholars at Risk, 2019), 17; Michael Crowley, “In Prisoner Swap, Iran Frees American Held Since 2016,” New York Times (7 December 2019); “US and Iranian Men Released in Prisoner Swap,” BBC News (7 December 2019); Colin Dwyer, “Released From Iranian Prison, U.S. Student Xiyue Wang Says He Was Held As A ‘Hostage’,” NPR (11 June 2020).

Adelkhah's research focused on social and political change in Iran during the second half of the 20th century. She had done research in Iran for several months and spent time in the holy city of Qom to examine the movement of Shia clerics between Afghanistan, Iran, and Iraq. Among her books were Revolution under the Veil: Islamic Women of Iran and Being Modern in Iran, about changes in Iran after the 1979 Islamic revolution.¹¹⁶

See also Argentina, Iraq, United States, Yemen.

IRAQ

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2019.

On 11 January 2020, the Secretary-General of the International Historians Association for Culture, Development, and Social Sciences, Ibrahim Saeed Al-Baidhani, a specialist in American and European modern history and foreign relations, was the subject of a failed assassination attempt in central Baghdad by an unknown group that stabbed him before fleeing. The attack appeared to be connected to a string of violent attacks and kidnappings targeting activists and public figures since the start of nationwide protests in October 2019.¹¹⁷

On 6 July 2020, historian Hisham al-Hashimi (1973–2020) was fatally shot by unknown gunmen

¹¹⁶ “Fariba Adelkhah: French-Iranian Academic ‘Arrested in Iran’,” BBC News (15 July 2019); Angelique Chrisafis & Jennifer Rankin, “France Demands Access to Dual-National Academic Held in Iran,” The Guardian (15 July 2019); Ehsan Abdoh-Tabrizi, personal communication (24 July 2019); “Paris Demands Answers after Franco-Iranian Academic Arrested in Iran,” France24 (15 July 2019); “France Confirms Second Academic Detained in Iran since June,” France24 (16 October 2019); John Irish, “France Demands Iran Release Two of Its Citizens Held since June,” Reuters (16 October 2019); Ehsan Abdoh-Tabrizi, personal communication (28 October 2019); Nasser Karimi, “Iran Lawyer: No Proof of Charges against 2 French Citizens,” AP News (28 October 2019); Allan Kaval, “Détenue à Téhéran, l’universitaire franco-iranienne Fariba Adelkhah entame une grève de la faim,” Le Monde (27 December 2019); AFP, “France Calls for ‘Gesture’ from Iran over Detained Academics,” France24 (10 January 2020); “Iran: Free Fariba Adelkhah and Roland Marchal!”, Scholars at Risk (11 February 2020); AFP “Jailed French Academic Adelkhah hospitalised in Iran: Lawyer,” France24 (25 February 2020); AFP, “Two Detained French Academics Go on Trial in Iran,” France24 (3 March 2020); “Iran, France to Swap Iranian Engineer, French Academic,” Reuters (20 March 2020); “Iran Releases French Academic Roland Marchal: French Official,” Reuters (21 March 2020); Christophe Boisbouvier & Franck Mathevon, “French Academic Roland Marchal Speaks Out after Nine Months of Detention in Iran,” France24 (8 April 2020); “Fariba Adelkhah: French academic ‘Jailed for Six Years’ in Iran,” BBC News (16 May 2020); News Wires, “Macron Demands Iran Release French-Iranian Academic Fariba Adelkhah,” France24 (5 June 2020).

¹¹⁷ “Iraq: First Periodic Report on Violations during Ongoing Popular Demonstrations,” Gulf Centre for Human Rights (GCHR) (30 January 2020); Scholars at Risk, “Ibrahim Saeed Al-Baidhani” ([February 2020]).

outside his house in Baghdad. A frequent target of the propaganda of Iran-backed militia groups, especially Kataib Hezbollah (“Brigades of the Party of God” or Hezbollah Brigades, an Iraqi Shia paramilitary group which was part of the Popular Mobilization Forces supported by Iran), Hashimi had faced a rising tide of threats. His last work before his assassination, published on 1 July 2020, was “The Internal Dispute within the Popular Mobilization Forces.”

Hashimi was an Iraqi historian and researcher in security and strategic affairs and extremist groups; he was among the world’s leading experts on the Islamic State group and al-Qaeda in Iraq, providing details of its inner workings to the international media and advising the Iraqi government on counterterrorism. He had a historical interest in Al-Dhahabi (1274–1348), a Syrian Islamic historian and expert of hadiths (reports of statements or actions of the Prophet Muhammad). He had been arrested and sentenced to prison by Saddam Hussein’s regime, due to his affiliation with Salafi jihadism, only to be released from prison in 2002.¹¹⁸

During 2019, the extremist group Islamic State in Iraq and Syria (ISIS) continued to carry out attacks, mostly killings of community leaders and targeting security forces. Some of the crimes perpetrated by ISIS since 2014 amounted to war crimes and may have amounted to crimes against humanity and genocide. Iraq failed to make war crimes and crimes against humanity specific offenses under Iraqi law. A 2017 United Nations (UN) Security Council resolution created a UN investigative team to document serious crimes committed by ISIS in Iraq. In 2019, the United Nations Investigative Team to Promote Accountability for Crimes Committed by Da’esh/ISIL (UNITAD) assisted Iraqi authorities in exhuming at least fourteen mass grave sites left by ISIS in Sinjar, as a first step toward gathering evidence and building cases against ISIS suspects. An Iraqi law from 2009 created commissions to compensate Iraqis affected by terrorism, military operations, and military errors. Compensation commissions in areas that fell under ISIS control have received thousands of compensation requests but had not paid out many claims since 2014.

German judicial authorities continued efforts to investigate ISIS crimes in Syria and Iraq under the international law principle of universal jurisdiction. Member states of the Global Coalition to Defeat ISIS continued discussions on accountability options for ISIS crimes, including the possibility of establishing a criminal tribunal in the region.¹¹⁹

See also Iran.

¹¹⁸ Mustafa Salim & Louisa Loveluck, “Leading Iraqi Researcher Assassinated Outside His House in Baghdad,” Washington Post (6 July 2020); “Hisham al-Hashimi,” Wikipedia (9 July 2020).

¹¹⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 293–295.

IRELAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000, 2002, 2004, 2006, 2013, 2015–2016.

ISRAEL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000–2003, 2008–2014, 2016–2019.

In May 2018, upon returning from a short stint abroad, retired history professor Roger Heacock and his wife – both Birzeit University (a Palestinian university in the occupied West Bank) employees and United States citizens – were given a two- or three-week visa only, although their work permits were valid through the end of the academic year (September 2018). They were given no reason. Heacock had been living in the West Bank since 1983, had been teaching at Birzeit University since 1985, and had his visa renewed every three months. In March 2019, the Heacocks attempted to return to the West Bank (Roger Heacock had a 30-hour teaching assignment at Bethlehem University), but they were stopped at the border with Israel and told that they failed to get the necessary permission from the Israeli military’s Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories.¹²⁰

In late 2018, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said that Welcome to Jerusalem, an exhibition at the Jewish Historical Museum in Berlin, paid not sufficient attention to Israel’s position, whereupon he reportedly insisted that the German government reconsider the museum’s subsidy.¹²¹

In July 2019, the NGO Akevot [see also NCH Annual Report 2017, 2019] released Silencing: DSDE’s Concealment of Documents in Archives, a report about the Director of Security of the Defense Establishment (DSDE) which exposed a Defense Ministry mechanism to conceal archival records in various archives without any authority under Israeli law. Several historians, including leading critic Ilan Pappé, said that this discovery fitted into a larger pattern of suppressing (removing, reclassifying) official documentation of the ethnic cleansing of Palestinians in 1948 (the Nakba) from Israeli historians. The documents were collected from Israel State Archives and taken to locked vaults in the Ministry of Defense.¹²²

¹²⁰ Elizabeth Redden, “Groups Protest Israeli Visa Policies for Foreign Academics Teaching in the West Bank,” Inside HigherEd (26 July 2019).

¹²¹ Toef Jaeger, “Diplomatieke Nederlandse directeur Joods Museum Berlijn,” NRC Handelsblad (28 November 2019), 6.

¹²² Akevot, Silencing: DSDE’s Concealment of Documents in Archives (July 2019); International Council on Archives Human Rights Working Group, Newsletter (July 2019); Ilan Pappé, “Israel’s Latest Attempt to Erase Palestine,” The Electronic Intifada (25 July 2019); “How Israel’s Erasure of Palestinian History Perpetuates

See also Croatia, Yemen.

ITALY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2003, 2008, 2010, 2012, 2016–2019.

See Bulgaria, Ethiopia, United States.

IVORY COAST (Côte d’Ivoire)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006–2019.

On 15 January 2019, an International Criminal Court (ICC) trial chamber acquitted former President and historian Laurent Gbagbo and his youth minister and militia leader Charles Blé Goudé of crimes against humanity after an almost three-year trial, ending the case before the defense was even required to present evidence. In its written decision on 16 July 2019, the two-judge majority strongly criticized the weakness of the prosecution evidence. The ICC prosecutor appealed the acquittals on 16 September 2019, asking judges to declare a mistrial. At the end of 2019, Gbagbo and Blé Goudé were on conditional release, in Belgium and the Netherlands respectively.

The ICC continued its investigations into crimes committed by pro-Ouattara forces during the post-election crisis of 2010–2011 (which left thousands dead) but had yet to issue arrest warrants. President Alassane Ouattara said that no further suspects would be transferred to the ICC. In the year after President Ouattara’s August 2018 amnesty for crimes committed during the post-election violence, there was little progress in domestic investigations by the Special Investigative and Examination Cell. The cell, established in 2011, had in previous years charged more than two dozen senior military officers and political leaders with crimes against humanity or war crimes. In February 2019, the government stated that the amnesty law did not preclude Ivorian judges from investigating the worst crimes committed during the crisis, noting that it did not apply to individuals who were “members of the military and armed groups.” On 6 November 2019, Ivorian judges confirmed charges against Blé Goudé in Ivory Coast for alleged crimes during the 2010–2011 postelection crisis, including murder, rape, and torture. Other than the Blé Goudé’s case, however, the Special Cell had frozen its investigations, making it unlikely that alleged perpetrators would ever face trial.

Occupation” (Greg Wilpert Interviews Ilan Pappé) The Real News Network (9 August 2019).

On April 4, three human rights groups, two Ivorian and one international, filed a Supreme Court complaint contesting Ouattara's authority to issue the amnesty, arguing that it violated Ivory Coast's international human rights treaty obligations. At the end of 2019, the case had not yet been decided. Neither the Special Cell nor the International Criminal Court (ICC) had investigated crimes committed during election-related violence in 2000 or the armed conflict in 2002–2003. A government reparations program continued to give victims of the 2002–2011 conflicts financial payments, medical treatment, and other forms of assistance.¹²³ ¹²³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 151–152.

JAMAICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017–2018.

JAPAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2019.

In July 2019, Prime Minister Shinzo Abe offered the government's first official apology to families who had members who lived with leprosy and had suffered under the government's segregation policy between 1907 and 1996, after the government decided it would not appeal a district court ruling that ordered the state to pay compensation. In November 2019, Japan's House of Councilors (Upper House) approved a law that would enable compensation for affected families.¹²⁴

On 3 August 2019, organizers of the international Aichi Triennale in Nagoya closed the exhibition "After 'Freedom of Expression?'" (intended to showcase artwork that had been excluded from museums in Japan or elsewhere) that featured a statue symbolizing Korean women forced into sexual slavery during World War II. The artistic director of the triennale, Daisuke Tsuda, said that he regretted the decision, which the governor of Aichi Prefecture said was made after threats of terrorism. More than 16,000 people signed an online petition protesting the decision to halt the exhibit.¹²⁵

In September 2019, five conservative men (including Nobukatsu Fujioka, vice president of the Japanese Society for History Textbook Reform, and Shunichi Fujiki) sued Japanese-American filmmaker Mike Dezaki ([1983–]) before the Tokyo District Court for defamation and breach of contract regarding his two-hour documentary, Shusenjo: The Main Battleground of the Comfort Women Issue, a film about the sexual slavery system during the Pacific War (1931–1945) which had been shown commercially in Japan and South Korea. The five had been interviewed for the documentary but Dezaki had concluded that they were "revisionists," using terms like "racism" and "sexism" to characterize some of their claims. In addition to defamation, the lawsuit accused Dezaki and Tofoo Films, the distributor, of breach of contract, saying the plaintiffs agreed to be interviewed only for his graduate thesis, not a commercial film. They demanded compensation and a suspension of all public screenings.

¹²⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 314.

¹²⁵ Mokoto Rich, "The Exhibit Lauded Freedom of Expression: It Was Silenced," New York Times (5 August 2019); "Don't Cancel "Exhibit of Non-Freedom of Expression Thereafter" at Aichi Triennale" (petition); Kim Tong-Hyung, "New Statues Stoke Sensitivity between South Korea, Japan," StarTribune (28 July 2020).

Due to the affair, the film festival in Kawasaki first canceled screening of the documentary for safety reasons, but upon receiving many signs of solidarity decided in November 2019 to show it after all on the last day of the festival.¹²⁶

See also China, Korea, South, Myanmar, United States.

JORDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003–2004, 2015, 2018.

¹²⁶ Mokoto Rich, "A Filmmaker Explored Japan's Wartime Enslavement of Women. Now He's Being Sued." New York Times (18 September 2019); "Japan Festival to Show 'Comfort Women' Film after Backlash." BBC News (3 November 2019).

KAZAKHSTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999–2001, 2007, 2012.

See China.

KENYA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2000, 2002–2005, 2007, 2009–2018.

Despite documentation and investigations into the violence during the 2017–2018 elections, in which more than hundred were killed, the government had yet to bring charges against any security officers. There was also no progress in investigating or holding anyone to account for the violence around the 2007–2008 elections in which 1,100 people were killed. In 2015, President Uhuru Kenyatta announced plans to establish a restorative Ksh10 billion fund (approximately US$100 million) for victims of human rights abuses, including of the 2007–2008 post-election violence, but did not set up the fund until April 2019 and had yet to make any payouts at the end of 2019. Kenya had yet to surrender three persons wanted by the International Criminal Court (ICC) on allegations of witness tampering in cases relating to the 2007–2008 election violence. Other ICC cases against Kenyatta, Deputy President William Ruto, and former broadcaster Joshua arap Sang collapsed amid witness tampering allegations and state non-cooperation.¹²⁷

KOREA, NORTH

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2006–2007, 2009–2011, 2013–2015, 2017, 2019.

See China, Japan, United States.

¹²⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 330–331.

KOREA, SOUTH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998–2001, 2003, 2006, 2008–2010, 2012–2013, 2016–2019.

In early July 2019, Japan announced that it would tighten curbs on exports of three materials crucial for advanced consumer electronics because trust with South Korea had been broken over the forced labor dispute [see NCH Annual Report 2019].¹²⁸

On 19 September 2019, a civil society group (probably the Korean Council for Justice and Remembrance, an organization supporting former comfort women) filed a complaint against Ryu Seok-chun (aka Lew Seok-choon), a professor of sociology at Yonsei University, for allegedly spreading false information by referring to Korean women sex slaves during World War II as “prostitutes” during a university lecture. The Yonsei University Students Council and alumni, and several civil society groups and political parties either condemned Ryu’s opinion or called on him to apologize. In late September, the university suspended Ryu from teaching and a university ethics committee launched an internal investigation. Stating “harmful facts,” particularly on Japanese wartime aggressions or on North Korea, was punishable in South Korea with up to three years’ imprisonment or fines; stating “harmful falsehoods” was punishable with up to seven years’ imprisonment or fines.

In 2018 a district court in Kwangju had handed down a six-month prison sentence to a former professor of Sunchon National University [name undisclosed] for spreading false information defaming “comfort women,” saying during an April 2017 university lecture that they had gone to Japanese military brothels voluntarily. In October 2017, he was expelled from the university.¹²⁹

See also China, Japan, Korea, North.

KOSOVO

See Serbia / Kosovo.

¹²⁸ Takaya Yamaguchi & Hyunjoon Jin, “Japan, South Korea Raise Stakes in Dispute over Forced Labor,” Reuters (9 July 2019); “South Korea and Japan’s Feud Explained,” BBC News (23 August 2019).

¹²⁹ Aimee Chung, “Police Probe Professor for Wartime Sex Slavery Remarks,” University World News (9 October 2019).

KUWAIT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2000, 2004–2005, 2018.

KYRGYZSTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010–2013, 2016–2017.

LATVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2006, 2008, 2015–2016, 2019.

LEBANON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2003, 2006–2019.

An estimated 17,000 Lebanese were kidnapped or “disappeared” during the 1975-1990 civil war. On 12 November 2018, parliament passed a landmark law creating an independent national commission to investigate the fate of the disappeared. On 29 August 2019, the Justice Ministry nominated ten individuals to serve on the committee. Their nominations had to be approved by the Cabinet.¹³⁰

During the civil protests which started in October 2019, anti-protest rioters broke into the compound where the NGO UMAM Documentation & Research (UMAM D&R) was located in Beirut. UMAM D&R held materials relating to the 1975–1990 civil war, including lists of disappeared persons, and took an overt political stand in favor of the protests. The rioters were restrained by the intervention of local people and persuaded not to damage the building and its contents. Threats were made against the UMAM founders.¹³¹

LIBERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2004–2015, 2018.

LIBYA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2005–2019.

Governance in Libya remained divided between two feuding entities: the internationally recognized and Tripoli-based Government of National Accord (GNA); and their rivals in eastern Libya, the Interim ¹³⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 358.

¹³¹ Personal communication to Trudy Huskamp-Peterson, in News from the Section on Archives and Human Rights (January 2020).

Government, which was supported by the Libyan House of Representatives (HOR) and by the armed group known as the Libyan National Army (LNA). Intermittent armed conflicts in most parts of Libya since the end of the 2011 revolution that ousted Moammar Gaddafi had displaced more than 300,000 civilians.

The United Nations (UN) Security Council established in Resolution 1970 of 2011 individual targeted sanctions and an open-ended embargo on the supply of arms and military equipment to and from Libya. As of September 2019, the UN said it had begun investigating over forty cases of violations of the arms embargo.

General Khalifa Haftar launched his attack to conquer Tripoli on 4 April 2019, supported by LNA units and armed groups, including the al-Kani militia from Tarhouna, his main ally in the west, against the GNA and affiliated armed groups from western Libya. As of November 2019, the fighting, which was concentrated in the southern suburbs of Tripoli, had killed over 200 civilians, injured over 300, and displaced over 120,000. According to the UN Children Fund (UNICEF), as of June, 21 schools were being used as shelters for displaced persons in and around Tripoli. The violence had led to the suspension of school for 122,088 children.

While the extremist group Islamic State (ISIS) no longer controlled territory in Libya, its fighters carried out attacks in the eastern city of Derna and the southern city of Sebha, mostly against LNA fighters. In September 2019, the United States military said it conducted airstrikes on four different days within ten days against ISIS targets in southern Libya, killing a total of 43 alleged militants. These strikes, the first conducted by the US military in 2019, were carried out by drones.¹³²

Saif al-Islam Gaddafi, a son of former President Muammar Gaddafi (1942–2011), who was sentenced to death in absentia by a Libyan court in 2015, continued to be subject to an International Criminal Court (ICC) arrest warrant for his alleged role in attacks on civilians, including peaceful demonstrators, during the country's 2011 uprising. At the end of 2019, his whereabouts remained unknown. Two other Libyans continued to be subject to ICC arrest warrants: Al-Tuhamy Khaled, former head of the Internal Security Agency under Muammar Gaddafi, for war crimes and crimes against humanity committed in Libya between February and August 2011, and LNA commander Mahmoud El-Werfalli for the war crime of murder related to several incidents in and around Benghazi between June 2016 and January 2018.¹³³

¹³² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 359–362.

¹³³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 363.

LITHUANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005, 2009, 2015, 2018.

MACEDONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2006–2008, 2010–2015, 2017–2018.

MADAGASCAR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

MALAYSIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2002, 2007–2008, 2010–2011, 2016–2017, 2019.

In September 2019, the authorities detained dozens of Shiites who were commemorating Ashura, a Shia holy day, in raids around the country. Witnesses reported that the police ill-treated those detained in a raid in Johor, including threatening some detainees with a gun. They were later released.¹³⁴

MALAWI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2019.

See Rwanda.

MALDIVES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2009–2010, 2013.

In November 2018, the Ibrahim Mohamed Solih government established the Commission on Deaths and Disappearances to investigate past attacks on activists and journalists. Cases included the 2014 abduction of Ahmed Rilwan, who had criticized Islamist gangs and exposed government corruption, and Yameen Rasheed, a blogger and activist who was stabbed to death in April 2017. In January 2019, ¹³⁴ Amnesty International, Human Rights in Asia-Pacific: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2020), 34.

the commission chair, former Attorney General Husnu Al Suood, stated that extremist Islamist gangs had influence over police and criminal courts, and colluded to protect perpetrators and “fix” the outcome of trials. On 1 September 2019, the commission issued a draft report accusing a local extremist group with ties to Al-Qaeda of Rilwan’s murder. On 17 November, the commission reported that local extremists had also murdered a former member of parliament, Afrasheem Ali, in 2012. In both cases, the commission implicated police and politicians in shielding the perpetrators from prosecution. The trial of six suspects accused of killing Rasheed was delayed repeatedly.¹³⁵

After a visit to the country, the United Nations Special Rapporteur in the Field of Cultural Rights, Karima Bennouna, reported in February 2020 that approximately 80 per cent of Maldivian historical and archaeological sites, including sites relating to the Buddhist, Hindu and Sufi past, had reportedly been destroyed for the construction of resorts and development projects. She was also concerned to hear about the targeted destruction of symbols and monuments by fundamentalists who believed that the statues represented idols prohibited in their interpretation of Islam. These incidents occurred during the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation Summit in November 2011 and at the National Museum in February 2012. The National Museum’s pre-Islamic collection contained many pieces that had been smashed and, in some cases, damaged beyond repair. The perpetrators of these attacks had still not been successfully brought to justice despite some ongoing attempts to do so with regard to the events at the National Museum. The rise of fundamentalism had also led to acts of vandalism in one of the oldest cemeteries on Meedhoo in the Addu atoll.¹³⁶

MALI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011, 2013–2019.

The worsening security situation in 2019 provoked a political crisis and led to delays in the constitutional review process and parliamentary elections. The peace process envisioned to end the 2012–2013 crisis in the north made scant progress, including on disarmament and the restoration of state authority. There was scant progress on delivering justice for atrocities committed since 2012–2013, although several investigations were opened by local courts and the Specialized Judicial Unit, including into the 2019 Ogossagou massacre in which at least 150 civilians were massacred. Local ¹³⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 372–373.

¹³⁶ United Nations Special Rapporteur in the Field of Cultural Rights, Visit to Maldives: Report to the Human Rights Council (Geneva: 21 February 2020), paragraphs 35–36, 53.

groups said the government was reluctant to question or charge leaders of militias (including Dogon and Peuhl militias) credibly implicated in massacres, favoring short-term reconciliation efforts envisioned to mitigate communal tension. In contrast, the Specialized Unit was actively investigating over two hundred terrorism-related cases and in 2018, completed ten trials.

The Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission, established in 2014 to investigate crimes and root causes of violence since 1960, had taken over 14,000 victim and witness statements, but its credibility was weakened by the inclusion of armed group members and exclusion of victims' representatives. Public hearings were scheduled to begin in December 2019.¹³⁷

On 10 September 2019, the United Nations Independent Expert on the Human Rights Situation in Mali asked the government to promptly revise the new "law of national understanding" (July 2019) which if left unaltered may promote impunity for those responsible for serious human rights violations, help circumvent the traditional justice process, and prevent victims from exercising their rights, including the right to know the truth about the violations committed in the past.¹³⁸

MALTA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2012.

MARSHALL ISLANDS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2015.

MAURITANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2002, 2009, 2011, 2017, 2019.

Mauritania abolished slavery in 1981, the world's last country to do so, and criminalized it in 2007. The Global Slavery Index, which measures forced labor and forced marriage, estimated that there are 90,000 living in "modern slavery" in Mauritania, or 2.4 percent of the population. Three special courts that ¹³⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 380.

¹³⁸ "New Mali Law Risks Giving Rise to Impunity for Many Past Human Rights Violations, Says UN Expert" (press release; 10 September 2019).

prosecuted slavery-related crimes had tried a handful of cases since their creation under a 2015 law. According to the 2019 United States State Department Trafficking in Persons Report, Mauritania investigated four cases, prosecuted one alleged trafficker, but did not convict any. Nine appeals cases remained pending at the anti-slavery court.¹³⁹

See also Senegal.

MAURITIUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2012.

MEXICO

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999, 2001–2019.

Despite a court ruling in February 2019 in favor of opponents of the Bicentenario-Los Pilares dam in the Sierra de Alamos of Sonora state, President Andrés Manuel López Obrador declared three months later that federal funding would be released in order to finish the dam “as soon as possible.” The 25-storey Bicentenario-Los Pilares barrier loomed above thermal springs where for thousands of years, the Indigenous Guarijío people would gather to commune with their ancestors. The springs – and the land around them – were submerged beneath rising waters, threatening to displace the Guarijío and leave the graves of their forefathers under water.¹⁴⁰

On 29 November 2019, a group of United Nations Special Rapporteurs regretted in a joint declaration the impunity for perpetrators of crimes committed during the “dirty war” (1964–1982) and urged the authorities to clarify the fate and whereabouts of hundreds of persons who disappeared during that period.¹⁴¹

On 10 December 2019, protesters stormed the Palace of Fine Arts in Mexico City over a painting showing Emiliano Zapata (1879–1919), a hero of the Mexican Revolution (1910–1917), naked on an ¹³⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 386.

¹⁴⁰ Analy Nuño, “‘Guajirío Culture Is Dying’: Mexican Dam Poised to Displace Living and Flood Ancestors’ Graves,” The Guardian (4 August 2020).

¹⁴¹ “Mexico: UN Experts Regret Impunity for Crimes of ‘Dirty War’” (press release; 29 November 2019).

aroused horse in high heels and a pink hat. They said that Zapata was depicted as gay, finding it offensive and shouting “burn it, burn it.” Zapata’s grandson, Jorge Zapata González, threatened to sue the Palace of Fine Arts. The 2014 work by Fabián Cháirez, called La Revolución (The Revolution), was part of an exhibition commemorating the 100th anniversary of Zapata’s death. Museum officials said that they would not remove the painting.¹⁴²

Mexico has relied heavily on the military to fight drug-related violence and organized crime, leading to widespread human rights violations by military personnel. Between December 2012 and January 2018, the National Human Rights Commission (CNDH) received more than 4,600 complaints regarding alleged military abuses. From January to July 2019, it received 241 such complaints. In 2014, Congress reformed the Code of Military Justice to require that abuses committed by members of the military against civilians be prosecuted in civilian, not military, courts. However, the pursuit of justice for these violations remained elusive. In November 2019, the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Committee highlighted its concern about the 2016 reforms to the Military Code of Criminal Procedures and the Code of Military Justice that provided military prosecutors and judges with ample faculties to search dwellings and intervene in private communications without a warrant.¹⁴³

Since 2006, enforced disappearances by security forces have been a widespread problem. Criminal organizations have also been responsible for many disappearances. Prosecutors and police routinely neglected to take basic investigative steps to identify those responsible for enforced disappearances, often telling the missing people’s families to investigate on their own. By January 2019, the Attorney General’s Office had opened 975 investigations into allegations of enforced disappearances and had pressed charges in only twelve cases. By September 2019, the office’s specialized unit on kidnappings reported having only one open investigation into disappearances committed by non-state agents. In November 2019, the United Nations Human Rights Committee highlighted its concern for “alarming” impunity in cases of disappearances, including those where organized crime and authorities were allegedly colluded.

The 2017 law on disappearances established a single nationwide definition for the crime and mandated the creation of entities to facilitate the investigation and prosecution of disappearances. These include the National Search Commission (CNB) created to coordinate search efforts in the field, and the National Search System (SNB), established to coordinate state institutions involved in the search for the disappeared. In August 2019, Karla Quintana, the National Search Commissioner and head of the CNB, stated that the whereabouts of 40,000 people who had gone missing remained unknown. In ¹⁴² “Mexico’s Naked Zapata Painting Causes Protests,” BBC News (11 December 2019).

¹⁴³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 388–389.

November, the commissioner announced the creation of a new national registry for disappeared persons. Authorities noted that the official number of missing persons would likely increase after the establishment of the new registry. According to official numbers, by August 2019, 4,874 bodies had been found in 3,024 clandestine graves nationwide between 2006 and 2019. As of September 2019, the SNB was not yet fully operational.

A Standardized Protocol for the Search of Disappeared and Missing Persons, which the law mandated be in place by April 2018, had likewise failed to materialize. In May 2019, the National Search Commissioner announced the beginning of the process towards a regional search plan in northeast Mexico, and the federal government established a subsidy to provide funds to local search commissions. Victims' families repeatedly denounced serious shortcomings regarding the identification and storage of bodies. Government officials conceded that more than 26,000 bodies remain unidentified.

In August 2019, the National Search Commissioner reported the creation of a national forensic assessment to address obstacles to identifying and storing bodies. The same month, following demands by families, the government announced the creation of an Extraordinary Mechanism of Forensic Identification to identify bodies.¹⁴⁴

See also United States.

MOLDOVA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2003, 2010.

MONGOLIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2013.

MONTENEGRO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2017.

¹⁴⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 390–392.

MOROCCO / WESTERN SAHARA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2013, 2015–2018.

The trial of Maâti Monjib ([1960]–) [see NCH Annual Report 2016], a journalist and historian of political ideas and of the Maghreb, had not ended by the end of 2019.¹⁴⁵

In October 2019, local authorities banned for “security reasons” demonstrations organized in Al Hoceima to commemorate the death of Mouhcine Fikri, a fisherman killed in the town in 2016 during a police campaign against illegal fishing.¹⁴⁶

MOZAMBIQUE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

Impunity for serious abuses by state security forces and the main opposition party Renamo persisted. In July 2019, parliament approved a broad amnesty law that exempted Renamo members from prosecution for crimes committed between 2014 and 2016. During this time, both government security and defense forces and Renamo armed men had been involved in sporadic fighting that led to serious human rights abuses, including enforced disappearances, torture, killings, and destruction of private property.¹⁴⁷

MYANMAR (BURMA)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2001, 2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2019.

On 28 December 2018, a small group of university student activists set fire to a makeshift cardboard coffin containing photos of government and university officials before a crowd of more than hundred students, university officials, and others gathered outside the main gate of Yadanabon University in ¹⁴⁵ Koen Greven, “Kritisch schrijven over de Marokkaanse koning kan niet” (interview), NRC Handelsblad (1 June 2017); Koen Greven, “Over persvrijheid praat je niet in Marokko,” NRC Handelsblad (16 January 2020); International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 121–122.

¹⁴⁶ Amnesty International, Human Rights in the Middle East and North Africa: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2020), 48.

¹⁴⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 405.

Mandalay. The mock funeral was part of a planned peaceful protest for improved security measures for students following a series of student murders in Mandalay and to bring attention to students' concerns regarding the administration of the university. Plainclothes police officers quickly dispersed the crowd and arrested three students who led the demonstration, including archaeology student Myo Chit Zaw ([2000–]). Five days later, Myanmar authorities arrested four more students, including archaeology student Ye Lin Aung ([1998]–), for organizing a protest to demand the release of the three student leaders. On 13 February 2019, the Amarapura Township Court sentenced the seven students, all members of the All Burma Federation of Student Unions (ABFSU), to three months in prison for arson and failing to provide advanced notice of the demonstration to the authorities. The students spent more than eighty days in Obo Prison before being released. Four of the students reported that prison guards beat them in detention.¹⁴⁸

Between 12 and 14 July 2019, state security forces detained and charged eight university students in Yangon who had taken part in a student march on 7 July commemorating the anniversary of a 1962 student protest in which as many as hundred students were killed. The students reportedly chanted anti-government slogans during the march. They were charged with “protesting without permission from authorities.”¹⁴⁹

On 28 August 2019, the NGO Centre for Law and Democracy (Canada) made an analysis of a draft National Records and Archives Law. It noted some weaknesses, including the fact that the proposed system of classification appeared to set rigid periods of secrecy and the fact that access to information was subject to the discretion of officials.¹⁵⁰

In September 2019, two Kachin activists, Paulu and Seng Nu Pan, were sentenced to fifteen days in prison for a street performance marking the eight-year anniversary of the end of a 17-year ceasefire in Kachin State. Paulu received an additional three months in prison for contempt of court, after presenting the presiding judge with a set of broken scales symbolizing the broken justice system.¹⁵¹

The government of Myanmar in 2019 continued to defy international calls to seriously investigate human rights violations against ethnic minorities in Shan, Kachin, Karen, and Rakhine States. A United Nations (UN)-mandated Fact-Finding Mission (FFM) found sufficient evidence to call for the

¹⁴⁸ Athan & Fortify Rights, “Our Demands Are for All Students”: Violations of Students’ Rights in Mandalay, Myanmar (Belfast, ME, Bangkok, Geneva: Fortify Rights, 2020), 10–13, 35–40, 57–58

¹⁴⁹ Global Coalition to Protect Education from Attack, Education under Attack (New York: GCPEA, 2020), 172.

¹⁵⁰ Centre for Law and Democracy, “Myanmar: Archives Law Fails to Respect the Right to Information” (press release; 28 August 2019); Toby Mendel, “Note on the Draft Myanmar National Records and Archives Law” (August 2019).

¹⁵¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 415.

investigation of senior military officials for crimes against humanity and genocide against ethnic Rohingya Muslims. The government had been unwilling to address the root causes of the crises, including systematic persecution and violence, statelessness, and continued military impunity. The FFM ended its mission in September 2019, handing over evidence of serious crimes committed by Myanmar's armed forces against the Rohingya, Kachin, Shan, and Karen ethnic minorities to the newly operational Independent Investigative Mechanism for Myanmar (IIMM). The UN Human Rights Council mandated the IIMM to follow up from the FFM and collect and preserve evidence of serious crimes to facilitate and expedite fair and independent criminal proceedings.

More than two years after the military's campaign of ethnic cleansing in northern Rakhine State, over 900,000 Rohingya refugees remained in overcrowded camps in Cox's Bazar in Bangladesh, now the largest concentration of encamped refugees in the world. The FFM's final report in September 2019 found that the 600,000 Rohingya remaining in Rakhine State were still the target of a government campaign to eradicate their identity and that they were living under "threat of genocide."

The Independent Commission of Enquiry (ICOE), established by the Myanmar government in July 2018, operated without transparency, lending further weight to concerns about its credibility to investigate allegations of grave abuses against the Rohingya. Governments such as those of the United Kingdom and Japan continue to support the ICOE despite profound concerns about its independence, impartiality, and working methods.

In July 2019, the United States (US) imposed travel bans against key military leaders, including commander in chief General Min Aung Hlaing, for their role in the persecution of the Rohingya. His second-in-command, General Soe Win, and two other senior officials were also subjected to travel bans. In September 2019, a bill was passed by the US House of Representatives by a huge majority to strengthen sanctions against Myanmar's military leaders.

The European Parliament passed a resolution on 19 September 2019 calling for the imposition of a comprehensive arms embargo on Myanmar and referral of the situation of Myanmar to the ICC. The resolution called on European Union members to support efforts aimed at holding Myanmar to account for violations of the 1948 UN Genocide Convention before the International Court of Justice.

On 11 November 2019, Gambia brought a case against Myanmar before the International Court of Justice for its atrocities against the Rohingya as violating the 1948 Genocide Convention. Gambia's filing marked the first time that a country without any direct connection to the crimes relied on its membership in the Genocide Convention to bring a case before the world court. On 13 November in Argentina, Rohingya and Latin American human rights organizations used the principle of universal jurisdiction to file a criminal case against Myanmar's top military and civilian leaders, including Aung San Suu Kyi, for crimes committed in Rakhine State. This avenue was available for crimes so serious that all states have an interest in addressing them.

Despite strong findings pointing to Myanmar's security forces' responsibility for atrocities against the Rohingya, the UN Security Council remained paralyzed, making impossible the referral of Myanmar to the International Criminal Court (ICC) and the imposition of sanctions on military and government officials implicated in grave abuses against the Rohingya. In May 2019, the report of an independent inquiry into UN involvement in Myanmar was published, finding “systemic and structural failures,” which undermined the UN response to the crisis.

On 14 November 2019, the ICC also confirmed that it would begin investigations into alleged crime against humanity, namely deportation, other inhumane acts, and persecution committed against Rohingya in Myanmar since October 2016. In 2018, the court had confirmed its jurisdiction over the crime of deportation, which was completed in Bangladesh, an ICC member country, as well as other related crimes.¹⁵²

See also Syria.

¹⁵² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 116–117, 409–410, 416–417.

NAMIBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 2006–2009, 2011, 2016–2018.

NEPAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007–2019.

The government of Prime Minister K. P. Sharma Oli proposed amendments in the law relating to transitional justice, but they did not meet international standards that could ensure those most responsible for the worst crimes committed during the armed conflict and the Maoist insurgency (1996–2006) come to trial. Instead, the current government, like its predecessors, continued to resist amending the transitional justice legislation to abide by a landmark 2015 Supreme Court ruling, which struck down key components of the current law, such as provisions that would allow amnesties even for perpetrators of war crimes and crimes against humanity. A commitment to transitional justice was included in the 2006 Comprehensive Peace Agreement, but it was not until 2015 that a Truth and Reconciliation Commission (TRC) and a Commission of Investigation on Enforced Disappeared Persons (CIEDP) were finally established. Despite being previously extended, the terms of members of both commissions expired in spring 2019.

The TRC had registered 58,052 complaints of abuses, including allegations against senior figures, while the CIEDP had registered over 3,200 cases of people who remain “disappeared” over ten years since the conflict ended. However, neither commission had completed a single investigation before the commissioners’ mandates expired. Victims’ groups objected to the stalled system for appointing new commissioners, which appeared designed to ensure that selected candidates were acceptable to political leaders and the army. They also demanded that the transitional justice law be amended before the commissions resumed work, and that they be consulted on strengthening the process, demands which the government had so far resisted. Members of the international community, including diplomatic missions in Kathmandu and United Nations special rapporteurs, continued to warn the government that if a transitional justice process that met international standards was denied within Nepal, perpetrators of war crimes and crimes against humanity might be subject to prosecution abroad under the principle of universal jurisdiction.¹⁵³

¹⁵³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 418–419, 422.

NETHERLANDS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 2004–2005, 2007–2019.

On 24 December 2019, the Council of State ruled that the Ministry of Education, Culture and Science, the state organ responsible for the National Archives, had to decide about early access to search the Centraal Archief Bijzondere Rechtspleging (CABR; Central Archives for Special Criminal Jurisdiction) for information about guards in Dutch concentration camps (Vught, Amersfoort) who were still alive [see NCH Annual Report 2019].¹⁵⁴

On 10 March 2020, King Willem-Alexander of the Netherlands offered apologies “for excessive violence on the part of the Dutch” during the period from Indonesia’s declaration of independence in 1945 until 1949. The Dutch government had previously apologized to Indonesia and paid some damages to survivors for violence carried out during colonial rule. In 2011, Tjeerd de Zwaan, the then Dutch ambassador, had apologized for killings in 1947 in Rawagede in the province of West Java. Two years later, de Zwaan had also apologized for killings in 1947 on the island of Sulawesi.¹⁵⁵

On 27 or 28 June 2020, the Monument Indië–Nederland (Monument [Dutch East] Indies–Netherlands) in Amsterdam was defaced with the slogan “Van Heutsz is alive!” written in red ink over it. From its erection in 1935 until 2001, the monument had been dedicated to Jo van Heutsz (1851–1924), the governor-general of the Dutch East Indies since 1904 who as a military officer had previously been responsible for the brutal “pacification” of Aceh after a protracted war (1873–1904). In 1967 and 1984 bombs exploded at the monument and in 2001 it was renamed and refurbished after Van Heutsz’s statue had been removed.¹⁵⁶

See also Ivory Coast, Rwanda.

¹⁵⁴ Karel Berkhout, “Minister van OCW moet oordelen over openbaarheid oorlogsarchief,” NRC Handelsblad (24 December 2019); Council of State, Judgment (24 December 2019).

¹⁵⁵ Stanley Widiyanto, “Dutch King Apologizes for 'Excessive Violence' in Colonial Indonesia,” Reuters (10 March 2020); Maartje Geels, “Excuses koning voor Nederlands geweld bij onafhankelijkheid Indonesië,” NRC Handelsblad (10 March 2020).

¹⁵⁶ Thijs Niemantsverdriet, “Monument Indië–Nederland: Gemoderniseerd monument blijft weerzin oproepen,” NRC Handelsblad (1 July 2020), 12–13.

NEW ZEALAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2003, 2005, 2007, 2017, 2019.

In 2018, on a morning, Maori activist Taitimu Maipi, eighty years old, painted the bronze statue of British Captain John Hamilton (1820–1864) and broke his nose with a claw hammer in a downtown square of the city of Hamilton (named after the captain). The act of vandalism, intended as a reminder of the pain that white settlers inflicted on the Indigenous Maori people, led to a police warning. The ensuing debate in a local newspaper was picked up by Hamilton-born Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern who in September 2019 announced that the national school curriculum for both primary and secondary schools would be changed within the next three years to require lessons on the 19th-century New Zealand Land Wars (1845–1872), in which British troops killed more than 2,000 Maori. The Land Wars broke out after the signing of the 1840 Treaty of Waitangi between the colonial government and the Maori. Disputes over land sales grew into major campaigns to confiscate territory and reinforce British sovereignty.

Some residents complained about the damage to public property and argued that removing the statue would be akin to erasing history. Others argued that there were not many Maori statues or any kind of acknowledgment of their role. At the time of writing, New Zealand history was reportedly an elective in school, and the Land Wars were not part of the curriculum.¹⁵⁷

In September 2019, the organizers of a fleet of ships (including a replica of Captain James Cook’s HMS Endeavour, which landed in the country in 1769) that would circumnavigate New Zealand in October to mark 250 years since the arrival of European settlers, cancelled a scheduled stop in the North Island village of Mangonui after complaints by Maori. “The celebration is a renewal of the colonial myth that they discovered us,” said Anahera Herbert-Graves, head of the Northland Ngāti Kahu iwi, “We’re looking at people who behaved like barbarians wherever they went in the Pacific.” In 2018, local authorities removed a Captain Cook statute from Gisborne (or Tuuranga-nui, the place where Cook came ashore) after it was repeatedly vandalized with graffiti. A similar statute was vandalized in Australia in 2018 ahead of Australia Day. In early October, British High Commissioner Laura Clarke delivered a statement of regret to local tribes – known as iwi – over the nine Indigenous people who died during the first meeting between Cook and the Maori, stopping short of issuing an apology.¹⁵⁸

¹⁵⁷ Jamie Tarabay, “How Charlottesville’s Echoes Forced New Zealand to Confront Its History,” New York Times (2 December 2019).

¹⁵⁸ Joshua Cheetham & Frances Mao, “The Countries Grappling with Their European Heritage,” BBC News (19 September 2019); “NZ Anniversary: New Zealand Divided over Cook’s Landing,” BBC News (8 October 2019).

NICARAGUA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998.

On 15 September 2018, police detained Ricardo Baltodano, a history professor at the Polytechnic University of Nicaragua and an active member of the civil society group Articulación de Movimientos Sociales y Sociedad Civil (Connection of social movements with civil society). The group played a leading role in the student-led protest movement that started in April 2018, demanding democratic reforms and calling for President Daniel Ortega's resignation. Thirty police officers raided Baltodano's home shortly after he returned from a protest. He fled to his neighbor's house, but police arrested him shortly thereafter. On 18 September, police accused Baltodano of terrorism, murder, and other crimes. He was held incommunicado for the following nine months. He was released on 11 June 2019.¹⁵⁹

NIGER

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2013.

NIGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2006, 2008, 2010–2013, 2016–2019.

In July 2020, elected officials in Lagos state called on the state's governor to look into renaming some of the streets in order to remove the reminders of colonialism and slavery: Lugard Avenue, named after Nigeria's first Governor-General, Sir Frederick Lugard (1858–1945), responsible for amalgamating Nigeria's southern and northern protectorates in 1914; Bourdillon Road, named after the Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Nigeria, Sir Bernard Bourdillon (1883–1948); and Victoria Island, named after Queen Victoria (1819–1901).¹⁶⁰

NORWAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2012, 2016–2017.

¹⁵⁹ Scholars at Risk, Free to Think: Report of the Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (New York: Scholars at Risk, 2019), 15.

¹⁶⁰ Joshua Adetunji, "Lagos Lawmakers Propose to Decolonise Street Names," BBC News (2 July 2020).

OMAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2017, 2019.

PAKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2004, 2006, 2009–2012, 2014, 2016, 2018–2019.

PALESTINIAN AUTHORITY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998–2002, 2008–2010, 2013–2015, 2018.

See Israel.

PANAMA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2008, 2013, 2015–2017.

PAPUA NEW GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

PARAGUAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2005, 2007, 2009–2010, 2012, 2015, 2019.

Writer and teacher Nelson Aguilera's appeal to the constitutional section of the Supreme Court [see NCH Annual Report 2015] was at a standstill as of December 2019. Aguilera reported that he was required to attend court and register each month. It was suggested that his sentence for plagiarism may have been influenced by the fact that Garay's brother, César Garay Zuccolillo, was a Supreme Court judge.¹⁶¹

¹⁶¹ PEN International, Case List 2018 (London: PEN, 2019), 37; International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 38.

PERU

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2019.

In 2018, President Martín Alberto Vizcarra Cornejo passed a decree establishing a genetic profile bank to help in the search for the disappeared.

Efforts to prosecute grave human rights abuses committed during the armed conflict (1980–2000) had mixed results. The Truth and Reconciliation Commission estimated that almost 70,000 people died or were subject to enforced disappearance during the armed conflict. Many were victims of atrocities by the Shining Path and other insurgent groups; some were victims of human rights violations by state agents. Authorities made slow progress in prosecuting abuses committed by government forces during the conflict. As of September 2019, courts had issued rulings in 86 cases related to abuses committed during the conflict, including 44 convictions.

In December 2017, then-President Pedro Pablo Kuczynski granted former President (1990–2000) Alberto Fujimori a “humanitarian pardon,” based on claims of illness, but in October 2018, a Supreme Court judge overturned the pardon. Fujimori returned to prison in January 2019. In February, the Special Criminal Chamber of the Supreme Court upheld the decision. In November 2018, Fujimori was charged for his alleged role in forced sterilizations of mostly poor and Indigenous women during his presidency. The case was pending at the end of 2019. More than 5,000 victims of forced sterilizations committed between 1995 and 2001 had registered in a government registry at the end of 2019.

Also at the end of 2019, former President (2011–2016) Ollanta Humala continued to face criminal investigations for his alleged role in atrocities and cover-up of egregious human rights violations committed at the Madre Mía military base, in the Alto Huallaga region, during the armed conflict. Courts made little progress in addressing abuses, including extrajudicial killings, enforced disappearances, and torture, committed during the earlier administrations of Fernando Belaúnde (1980–1985) and Alan García (1985–1990).¹⁶²

PHILIPPINES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2015, 2019.

In November 2019, the University of the Philippines, Diliman campus, launched a new General Education subject that would cover the years of military rule during the Ferdinand Marcos dictatorship ¹⁶² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 456–547.

(1972–1986). It was presented as a way of countering attempts by political allies of Marcos (1917–1989), including the incumbent Rodrigo Duterte government, to whitewash the crimes, corruption, and human rights abuses in that period. The Marcos family thought that the subject would be “one-sided” while the armed forces feared that it would be used as a recruitment tool for “Communist rebels.” President Duterte openly expressed admiration for Marcos and his government called on the public to “move on” from the horrors of dictatorial rule and even called those years the “Golden Age” of Philippine history.¹⁶³

POLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2000–2001, 2004–2005, 2007–2011, 2014–2019.

In [September] 2019, four Polish historians involved in the creation of the Museum of the Second World War [see NCH Annual Report 2017] in Gdańsk – Paweł Machcewicz, Janusz Marszałec, Rafał Wnuk, and Piotr Majewski – sued the museum’s new director, Karol Nawrocki, over the infringement of their copyright for the exhibition’s content and managed to halt other changes to the museum.

Another Gdańsk museum, the European Solidarity Center (ECS), also clashed with the historical views of the ruling Law and Justice (PiS) party. The latter interpreted the roundtable talks of 1989 (negotiations between the Solidarity opposition movement and the then Communist government leading to a transition to democracy) as a “lost opportunity” for Poland which it sought to repair today, arguing that many of the leading characters highlighted at the ECS main exhibition – such as Lech Wałęsa, Tadeusz Mazowiecki, Bronisław Geremek and Andrzej Wajda, were responsible for abandoning Poland’s conservative national values. The PiS-led government found the ECS exhibit’s narrative blatantly one-sided. Officially launched in 2007, the ECS opened in 2014 on the grounds of the former Lenin Shipyards – the birthplace of the Solidarity movement.

Gdańsk’s mayor, Paweł Adamowicz, a strong opponent of PiS, was assassinated on 14 January 2019. Adamowicz had cultivated the idea of Gdańsk being a “free city” – a reference to the Free City of Danzig, as the city and surrounding area was known from 1920 to 1939.¹⁶⁴

As of November 2019, historian Dariusz Stola, the first director of the Polin Museum of the History of ¹⁶³ Karlo Mongaya, “University of the Philippines Unveils New Subject on the Marcos Dictatorship to Counter Historical Revisionism.” Global Voices (14 November 2019).

¹⁶⁴ Adam Reichardt, “Standing Up for Freedom,” Index on Censorship (2019 no. 1), 68–69; Estera Fliieger, “The Populist Rewriting of Polish history Is a Warning to Us All,” The Guardian (17 September 2019); Emilie van Outeren, “In Polen zet de regering zelfs de geschiedenis naar haar hand,” NRC Handelsblad (11 October 2019); United Nations Special Rapporteur in the Field of Cultural Rights, Visit to Poland: Report to the Human Rights Council (21 February 2020), paragraph 25.

Polish Jews (2014–2019) [see NCH Annual Report 2019], was still awaiting the confirmation of his renewed contract, despite having been chosen in a selection process.¹⁶⁵

In [October] 2019, Filomena Leszczyńska, a niece of the late Edward Malinowski, sued historians Jan Grabowski and Barbara Engelking in the District Court of Warsaw for defamation because in their 2018 book Dalej jest noc (It Is Still Night) they had written that Malinowski had been “an accomplice in the deaths of several dozen Jews who were hiding in the woods [near his village during World War II] and were ousted to the Germans.” Supported by the Polish League against Defamation (Reduta Dobrego Imienia, RDI), Leszczyńska stated that the book confused two men with the same name and merged their biographies. Her uncle Edward Malinowski was, in fact, a Polish hero who, risking his life, helped Jews and hid them from the Germans. Leszczyńska demanded rectification and a financial compensation.¹⁶⁶

On 12 November 2019, Prime Minister Mateusz Morawiecki wrote to streaming company Netflix insisting on changes to The Devil Next Door, a documentary about the Nazi death camp guard John Demjanjuk, saying that a map shown in it located the death camps within modern-day Poland’s borders rather than Third Reich borders. He added that it was important to “honor the memory and preserve the truth about World War II and the Holocaust” and accused “certain works” on Netflix of being “hugely inaccurate” and “rewriting history.” A few days later, Netflix announced that it would amend the map “to avoid any misunderstanding.”¹⁶⁷

See also Hungary, Russia.

¹⁶⁵ “Dariusz Stola, Head of the POLIN Museum, in the Midst of a Political Storm” (16 February 2019); “Statement of Professor Dariusz Stola, Director of POLIN Museum of the History of Polish Jews” (22 February 2019); Slawomir Grunberg and Others, “Petition for Stola” (no date [February 2019]); United Nations Special Rapporteur in the Field of Cultural Rights, Visit to Poland: Report to the Human Rights Council (21 February 2020), paragraph 26; Madeline Roache & Olivia Waxman, “World War II in Europe Ended 75 Years Ago—But the World Is Still Fighting Over Who Gets to Say What Happened,” Time (8 May 2020).

¹⁶⁶ “The Trial against Barbara Engelking and Jan Grabowski,” Polonia Institute (1 November 2019); United Nations Special Rapporteur in the Field of Cultural Rights, Visit to Poland: Report to the Human Rights Council (21 February 2020), paragraphs 37, 76; Madeline Roache & Olivia Waxman, “World War II in Europe Ended 75 Years Ago—But the World Is Still Fighting Over Who Gets to Say What Happened,” Time (8 May 2020).

¹⁶⁷ “Poland Reacts Angrily to Netflix Nazi Death Camp Documentary,” BBC News (12 November 2019); “Netflix to Amend Devil Next Door Series after Poland Complaint,” BBC News (15 November 2019).

PORTUGAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017.

See also Angola.

QATAR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

ROMANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000, 2003, 2005, 2007–2008, 2010, 2019.

RUSSIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1998, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2019.

On 2 October 2018, historian Sergei Koltyrin ([1953]–2020), director of the District Museum in Medvezhegorsk, Karelia, since 1991 and member of Memorial, was arrested after he publicly rejected attempts to rewrite history about the mass graves of victims of the terror at Sandarmokh in Karelia and criticized the contentious excavations by the Military History Society [see Yuri Dmitriev case below]. He and another person, Yevgeny Nosov, were remanded in custody until 27 November 2018 on disputed pedophilia charges (sexual abuse of a 13-year-old in September 2018). Koltyrin had written a confession after initially denying the act, with many of his supporters believing that he had been pressured to confess. On 27 May 2019, Koltyrin was sentenced to nine year's imprisonment in a corrective labor colony after a closed-door trial without independent legal assistance. Nosov was sentenced to eleven years for allegedly acting as Koltyrin's accomplice. Koltyrin was convicted under three articles of the criminal code—one about alleged depraved actions; a second about sexual relations with respect to a person over twelve but under fourteen, carried out by a group by prior agreement; and the third (as in Dmitriev's case) an arms offense. On 2 April 2020, Koltyrin died in the Medvezhegorsk prison hospital from cancer. On 4 March 2020, a court in Medvezhegorsk had ordered his release on humanitarian grounds, noting a deterioration in his health and arguing that he should be allowed to see relatives before he died, but prosecutors had filed an appeal against the judge's decision and Koltyrin died before that appeal could be overturned. His funeral was planned for 6 April, but due to the Covid-19 crisis, the family was not allowed to attend.¹⁶⁸

In mid-March 2019, the Federal Security Service (FSB) refused to declassify the names of members of Stalin's so-called three-judge panels that issued death sentences without trials during the Great Terror of 1937–1938 in which as many as 700,000 people were executed. Two Moscow courts approved the FSB refusal to grant historian Sergei Prudovsky [see NCH Annual Report 2015] access to files containing the names of so-called Troika judges of the NKVD (secret police at the time). Senior FSB legal adviser Yelena Zimatkina reportedly told the court that Prudovsky’s position (he called the judges “butchers”) could “harm both the living relatives of officials who signed the protocols and the objective assessment of the 1937–1938 historical period.” Meanwhile, the head archivist in Novosibirsk region barred researchers from accessing local NKVD files pending an examination for classified materials.

¹⁶⁸ Halya Coynash, "Russia Arrests Second Historian of Stalin's Terror," Human Rights in Ukraine (3 October 2018); Matthew Luxmoore, "In Russia's North, A Gulag Grave Site, A Child-Abuse Trial, And A Battle Over Historical Truth," RFE/RL News (24 June 2019); Jamie Dettmer, "No End in Sight for Jailed Gulag Historian Yury Dmitriyev," Voice of America (4 November 2019); "Sergei Koltyrin Has Died," The Dmitriev Affair: The Life, Work And Trials of Yury Dmitriev (2 April 2020); Matthew Luxmoore, "Russian Historian Jailed On Disputed Pedophilia Charges Dies In Custody," RFE/RL News (2 April 2020); Halya Coynash, "Historian of the Soviet Terror Dies in a Russian Prison," Human Rights in Ukraine (3 April 2020); Andrew Higgins, "He Found One of Stalin's Mass Graves: Now He's in Jail," New York Times (27 April 2020).

In an article titled “The KGB Archives: A Year After the Coup,” in the edited volume “Modern Russia: A View From Within,” historians Arseny Roginsky (1946–2017) and Nikita Okhotin (1949–) had mentioned several campaigns of archival destruction in the past, including orders in the Khrushchev era to destroy documents that “defamed honest Soviet citizens.”¹⁶⁹

Ten years after her abduction and murder, in 2019, the suspected killers of historian Natalia Estemirova (1958–2009) [see NCH Annual Reports 2010–2012, 2015] had still not been brought to justice.¹⁷⁰

On 28 October 2019, authorities in Tver ordered to take down two metal plaques commemorating the 1940 Katyń massacre. The plaques had been affixed to the facade of Tver State Medical University (which once was the regional headquarters of the secret police NKVD) in 1991. They carried inscriptions commemorating those who died in its basement: the 6,000 Poles estimated to have been transported east as prisoners of the invading Soviet forces to a camp near Ostashkov, secretly shot in Tver (Kalinin), and clandestinely buried near Mednoye. In a letter to the university’s rector Lesya Chichanovskaya, the local prosecutor’s office said that crucial documents relating to the plaques’ origins were missing from the archives and that their inscriptions were “not based on documented facts.” The Tver branch of the Communists of Russia political party had initiated the campaign to get the plaques removed. Aleksandr Guryanov, the coordinator of Memorial’s Polish research team, saw the order to remove the plaques in Tver as part of a years-long effort to rewrite the history of the Katyń massacre. In 2019, Memorial released a three-volume book listing the names and biographies of 6,287 Polish inmates of the Ostashkov camp.¹⁷¹

On 23 March 2020, the municipal court extended the pretrial detention of Yuri Dmitriev [see NCH Annual Reports 2018–2019] until 25 June 2020. Several thousand people signed a petition calling for ¹⁶⁹ “Russian Authorities Seal Stalin-Era NKVD Archives,” Moscow Times (14 March 2019).

¹⁷⁰ Michel Forst, United Nations Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders, World Report on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders (December 2018), 427; Amnesty International, Human Rights in Eastern Europe and Central Asia: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2019), 25.

¹⁷¹ Matthew Luxmoore, “In Removal of Plaques Marking Katyn Massacre, Critics See Russian Campaign To Rewrite History,” RFE/RL News (22 December 2019).

Dmitriev to be placed under house arrest for the duration of the Covid–19 pandemic. On 7 May 2020, the Supreme Court upheld the municipal court decision. On 22 July 2020, Dmitriev was sentenced to three and a half years on the charge of sexual assault for abusing his foster daughter. He was cleared of all other charges. He was set to be released in November 2020 due to time already served. His supporters received the verdict with relief as he was given a much shorter prison term than the fifteen years requested by the prosecution.

After two Karelian historians (Yuri Kilin, a history professor at Petrozavodsk State University, and Sergei Verigin) in June 2016 proposed the controversial theory that the Sandarmokh mass graves could contain hundreds of graves of Soviet prisoners of war held in Finnish concentration camps and then killed by Finnish forces during their occupation of Karelia in World War II, excavations sponsored by the Military Historical Society (a state-funded organization created by President Putin in December 2012, headed by Minister of Culture Vladimir Medinsky, and of which Kilin and Verigin were members) took place at Sandarmokh in the summers of 2018 and 2019, uncovering the remains of sixteen corpses that supposedly proved that the killing at Sandarmokh was, at least in part, the work of foreigners. Anatoli Razumov, director of the Center for Recovered Names in St. Petersburg, described this as an attempt to create “hybrid history” designed to confuse and distort. Antti Kujala, a historian at the University of Helsinki, took a similar view.¹⁷²

See also China, Czech Republic, Germany, Hungary, United States.

¹⁷² Website about Yuri Dmitriev: <https://dmitrievaffair.com>. Petition for Yuri Dmitriev: <https://www.change.org/p/chairman-of-petrozavodsk-city-court-a-a-sudakov-public-appeal-in-defense-of-yuri-dmitriev>; Memorial petition for Yuri Dmitriev (27 March 2020): <https://www.memo.ru/en-us/memorial/departments/intermemorial/news/375> PEN International, Case List 2018 (London: PEN, 2019), 89–90; PEN International, “Fair Trial Must Be Guaranteed for Memorial Historian and Human Rights Activist” (4 November 2019); Jamie Dettmer, “No End in Sight for Jailed Gulag Historian Yury Dmitriyev,” Voice of America (4 November 2019); Matthew Luxmoore, “Russian Historian Jailed On Disputed Pedophilia Charges Dies In Custody,” RFE/RL News (2 April 2020); Halya Coynash, “Historian of the Soviet Terror Dies in a Russian Prison,” Human Rights in Ukraine (3 April 2020); Andrew Higgins, “He Found One of Stalin’s Mass Graves: Now He’s in Jail,” New York Times (27 April 2020); International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 90–91; “Russian Court Upholds Decision To Extend Detention of Prominent Gulag Historian,” RFE/RL News (7 May 2020); PEN America, Freedom to Write Index 2019 (Washington: PEN America, 2020), 8; “Russian Historian Jailed in Controversial Sex Abuse Case,” BBC News (22 July 2020); PEN, “Conviction of Russian Writer and Historian ‘Deplorable’” (New York 22 July 2020); Yuri Dmitriev, “Closing Statement before the Court,” Meduza (21 July 2020).

RWANDA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2017, 2019.

Twenty-five years after the 1994 genocide, a significant number of people responsible for the genocide, including former high-level government officials and other key figures, have been brought to justice. In recent years, the government had requested extradition treaties with dozens of countries in an attempt to try remaining genocide suspects in Rwanda. In 2018, it ratified treaties with Ethiopia, Malawi, and Zambia. On 28 January 2019, genocide-suspect Vincent Murekezi was extradited to Rwanda from Malawi “courtesy of a prisoner exchange agreement” where he had been convicted of fraud-related offenses. In March 2019, Dutch police arrested a Rwandan man suspected of being involved in the genocide, after an extradition request. According to a local media report published in August 2019, Rwandan judicial authorities had sent out over 1,000 extradition requests for genocide suspects. In November 2019, the trial began in a Belgian court of genocide-suspect Fabien Neretse, charged with thirteen counts of murder and accused of causing an “incalculable” number of additional deaths.¹⁷³

In May 2020 French authorities arrested Félicien Kabuga (1935–) in Asnières-sur-Seine. The International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda had charged him with genocide and crimes against humanity. He was allegedly the main financier of ethnic Hutu extremists. He also co-founded and funded the notorious Radio Télévision Libre des Mille Collines (RTLM), a Rwandan broadcaster that actively encouraged people to search out and kill anyone who was from the Tutsi ethnic group. Kabuga was expected to be transferred to the custody of the International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals (IRMCT) at The Hague, where he will stand trial.¹⁷⁴

See also Democratic Republic of Congo, France.

¹⁷³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 485–486.

¹⁷⁴ “Félicien Kabuga: Rwanda Genocide Suspect Arrested in France,” BBC News (16 May 2020).

SAINT VINCENT

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

SÃO TOMÉ

Previous Annual Report entries: —.

SAUDI ARABIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001, 2006, 2010–2011, 2013, 2017–2019.

With few exceptions Saudi Arabia did not tolerate public worship by adherents of religions other than Islam and systematically discriminated against Muslim religious minorities, notably Twelver Shia and Ismailis, including in public education, the justice system, religious freedom, and employment. Government-affiliated religious authorities continued to disparage Shia and Sufi interpretations, versions, and understandings of Islam in public statements, documents, and school textbooks.¹⁷⁵

See also China, United States, Yemen.

SENEGAL

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2009, 2013, 2017–2018.

On 7 February 2020, director of the Archives of Senegal Fatoumata Cissé Diarra condemned the destruction on 4 February 2020 of a large part of the archives of the Organisation pour la mise en valeur du fleuve Sénégal (OMVS; Senegal River Basin Development Authority) in Saint-Louis during a fishermen's protest to obtain permits for Mauritanian waters.¹⁷⁶

¹⁷⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 490.

¹⁷⁶ “Saint-Louis : La Directrice des Archives condamne la destruction d’une partie du patrimoine documentaire de l’OMVS.” APS – Agence de Presse Sénégalaise (7 February 2020); “Saccage des archives de l’OMVS.” ASF-France – Archivistes sans frontières (22 February 2020).

See also France.

SERBIA / KOSOVO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008–2019.

In August 2019, RECOM (a coalition of civil society organizations in the post-Yugoslav countries advocating for the establishment of an official Regional Commission to establish the facts about crimes committed in 1991–2001) said that certain state institutions, such as the Defense Ministry of Serbia and some wartime commanders possessed information on the locations of a large number of mass graves, but that this information was kept in private archives.¹⁷⁷

Progress on prosecutions for crimes committed in the 1991–1995 wars was slow and lacked political will, adequate resources and strong witness support mechanisms. The low numbers of high-ranking officials prosecuted and convicted by courts remained a problem. By August 2019, the Belgrade Appeals Court had convicted five lower ranking officials of war crimes, while the first instance court had rendered two convictions and three acquittals. At the end of 2019, 56 individuals were under investigation for war crimes, and 20 cases were pending before Serbian courts. Since the establishment of the War Crimes Prosecutor Office in 2003, 133 judgments had been issued, of which 83 were convictions and 50 acquittals. In July 2019, Chief Prosecutor Serge Brammertz at the Mechanism for International Criminal Tribunals (MICT) expressed concern to the United Nations Security Council that in Serbia, and other former Yugoslav countries, convicted war criminals were considered heroes and glorified by politicians, with widespread denial by public officials of war crimes. He called on Serbia and neighboring countries to support the regional cooperation process to hold war criminals to account.¹⁷⁸

Kosovo

The Hague-based Specialist Chambers and Prosecutor's Office trying serious war crimes committed during the 1998–1999 Kosovo war summoned three suspects during 2019 for questioning but had issued no indictments at the end of 2019. In July 2019, the Hague Prosecutor's Office summoned Kosovo

¹⁷⁷ “The Fate of the Persons Missing in the 1990s Wars in the Balkans: Obstruction instead of Civilisational Prospects and a Humanitarian Dimension,” Humanitarian Law Center (29 August 2019).

¹⁷⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 497–498.

Prime Minister Ramush Haradinaj for questioning, prompting his resignation. Former senior Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) fighters were expected to be indicted and stand trial.

The Human Rights Review Panel, an independent body set up in 2009 to review allegations of human rights violations by staff of the now-concluded European Rule of Law Mission (EULEX), ruled in thirteen cases between January and September. Twenty-four cases were pending before the panel at the end of 2019. Since its existence, the panel had registered 200 cases.¹⁷⁹

On 25 April 2020, outgoing Prime Minister Albin Kurti dismissed his adviser Shkelzen Gashi for saying that individual Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA) fighters committed crimes during the 1998–1999 war, which sparked a furious backlash. Gashi, a history and politics expert, said in an interview that individuals within the KLA committed crimes against civilians, including ethnic Albanians. He added that the facts had been reported by international watchdogs and cited in trials at the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia as well as in domestic cases prosecuted by the UN's Kosovo mission UNMIK and the EU's rule-of-law mission EULEX.

Threats to Gashi continued, leading to a group of over forty civil society organizations in Kosovo issuing a joint statement in June 2020 saying that Gashi had been “threatened and insulted in the worst way by the general public, but also by many personalities and politicians including president Hashim Thaçi,” Kushtrim Koliqi, the head of Pristina-based NGO Integra, whose work focuses on peace, dealing with the past and human rights, said that the campaign against Gashi was “a warning for any serious idea or initiative that intends to deal with the past properly.”¹⁸⁰

On 29 July 2020, the United States Ambassador to Kosovo, Philip Kosnett, expressed his concern about a draft law on Protection of the Kosovo Liberation Army War Values, because it obliged “any public official and citizen of the Republic of Kosovo ... to respect and protect the war values determined by this law in any time and circumstance within the country and abroad.” According to the draft law, the so-called values of war include the KLA itself as an armed military formation, its veterans, flag, soldier's oath, coat of arms, the General Staff, Political Directorate, staffs of operational areas and archives, as well as the Adem Jashari Memorial Complex in Prekaz and other complexes.¹⁸¹

See also Austria, Bosnia and Herzegovina.

¹⁷⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 335–336.

¹⁸⁰ Serbeze Haxhijaj, “Kosovo PM Sacks Adviser for Criticising Wartime Guerrillas,” Balkan Insight (26 April 2020); Serbeze Haxhijaj, “‘Lynch Mob’ Campaign Against Kosovo Rights Activist Condemned,” Balkan Insight (4 June 2020).

¹⁸¹ Xhorxhina Bami, “Kosovo Pushes Ahead with Law to Protect KLA's Reputation,” Balkan Insight (30 July 2020).

SERBIA / MONTENEGRO

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2007. See Montenegro and Serbia / Kosovo.

SEYCHELLES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2019.

SIERRA LEONE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2016.

SINGAPORE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2009–2011, 2015–2016, 2018–2019.

In 2019, activist Jolovan Wham [see NCH Annual Reports 2018–2019] faced charges for organizing a peaceful protest on a train and a candlelight vigil for a condemned prisoner.¹⁸²

SLOVAKIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2002, 2007, 2009, 2011, 2013–2015, 2017.

See Czech Republic.

SLOVENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2018.

¹⁸² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 501.

SOMALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2003, 2006, 2012–2014, 2019.

SOUTH AFRICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2004, 2006–2010, 2012–2019.

On 29 May 2020, the Supreme Court of Appeal (SCA) in Bloemfontein ruled that the South African History Archive (SAHA) prevailed in a legal case (started in August 2014) for access to information held by the South African Reserve Bank (SARB). SAHA's request was based on a public interest provision of the 2000 Promotion of Access to Information Act (PAIA) No. 2. The information regarded secret apartheid era records from the period 1980–1995 that could reveal corruption at the time.¹⁸³

SOUTH SUDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2015–2019.

South Sudan did not make progress in establishing the African Union (AU)–South Sudanese hybrid court envisioned in the 2018 peace agreement. It had yet to sign the memorandum of understanding with the AU or promulgate legislation to establish the court. In April 2019, the government hired Gainful Solutions Inc., a United States (US)-based lobby group, to “reverse current sanctions and further block potential sanctions” and “delay and ultimately block establishment of the hybrid court ...” Following public criticism, the terms of the contract were later revised to exclude blocking of the hybrid court.¹⁸⁴

¹⁸³ South African History Archive, Press Release: Openness Prevails in Victorious Judgment in SCA Appeal (30 May 2020).

¹⁸⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 525–526.

SPAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999, 2002–2019.

On 3 March 2020, historian Oriol Junqueras (1969–), who as a former vice president for Catalonia (2016–2017), was serving a thirteen-year sentence for his role in the illegal secession push against Spain by the Catalan government in 2017, was allowed to leave prison to take up part-time teaching work at a university. Junqueras had been elected to the European Parliament in May 2019 while in custody. He would be allowed three furloughs a week to teach classes at the University of Vic (Universitat Central de Catalunya; Central University of Catalonia). On 19 December 2019, the European Court of Justice ruled that Junqueras had parliamentary immunity as he was an elected member of European Parliament and should have been released from prison.¹⁸⁵

See also France.

SRI LANKA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2004, 2008–2019.

In March 2019, Sri Lanka supported a consensus resolution of the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Council, requesting that the government “implement fully” the measures set out in a 2015 resolution, and encouraging “the adoption of a time-bound implementation strategy.” This included a number of commitments to justice and accountability for violations committed during the civil war (1983–2009) between the government and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, through an office of missing persons, an office for reparations, and by setting up an independent accountability mechanism including international investigators, prosecutors, and judges. Despite important initial developments after the 2015 resolution – including lifting severe restrictions on freedom of speech and association, holding consultations, releasing some civilian land held by the military, and re-establishing an independent government human rights commission – progress slowed considerably. Commissioners were appointed to the Office for Reparations in April 2019.

The Office on Missing Persons (OMP) began work in 2018, recording over 14,000 cases, but made little progress in discovering their whereabouts. Relatives of the forcibly disappeared protested against the OMP, questioning its authority and independence. Other commitments not met by the government included security sector reform and repealing the draconian Prevention of Terrorism Act (PTA). A Counter Terrorism Act (CTA) to replace the PTA was drafted, but it also contained provisions that would facilitate abuse.

¹⁸⁵ AP, “Jailed Catalan Independence Leader to Teach at University,” ABC News (3 March 2020); “Oriol Junqueras,” Wikipedia (9 March 2020).

In May 2019, ethnic Tamil victims' groups marked ten years since the end of the civil war with protests and vigils against the government's failure to address conflict-related violations and provide redress. Some families of people forcibly disappeared during the war reported intimidation by soldiers. The army also disrupted Tamil memorial events. In May 2019, families of the disappeared from Ampara were at a remembrance ceremony when soldiers arrived and destroyed or removed banners and decorations, and threatened to arrest the participants.¹⁸⁶

SUDAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2003, 2006–2019.

Following months of protests, President (1989–2019) Omar al-Bashir was ousted in April 2019 and replaced by a military council. Following negotiations between the military leaders and opposition groups, a transitional government led by a “sovereign council” composed of military and civilian members replaced the military council in August. The agreement to form the transitional government included setting up a national independent investigation into the events of 3 June 2019, when the paramilitary force Rapid Support Forces (RSF) attacked a protesters' sit-in in Khartoum. The agreement also called for accountability for all past abuses under the al-Bashir government. Because women played an important role in the protests, women's rights groups expressed disappointment that few women were included in a transitional government. The government had yet to cooperate with the International Criminal Court (ICC) in respect of cases against al-Bashir and four other men on charges of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes committed in Darfur.

On 30 June 2019, the anniversary of al-Bashir's assumption of power in 1989, RSF soldiers opened fire on protesters calling for justice for the 3 June 2019 victims, as they crossed a bridge linking Khartoum and Omdurman, killing eight. Another three bodies were found the next day in Omdurman covered with banners used in protests, with blood stains on their bodies and a megaphone near where the bodies were found. The father of one victim said he believed his son died from torture.¹⁸⁷

¹⁸⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 527–529.

¹⁸⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 531, 534.

See also Syria.

SURINAME

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2004, 2009–2010, 2012–2013, 2015–2016, 2018.

SWAZILAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011, 2013, 2016–2018.

SWEDEN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2017–2018.

On 9 November 2019, Nazi-style Star of David stickers were plastered on the Great Synagogue and Bajit Jewish Center in Stockholm.¹⁸⁸

At the end of the autumn semester in 2019, senior lecturer Inga-Lill Aronsson at Uppsala University was reprimanded after four students complained when she used the Swedish word neger (negro) as an example when asked how to look up in older archives words that today were considered controversial or offensive. “You enter the word directly into [the] window,” she explained in a panel debate on classification and knowledge organization in the master program on archival science, library and information science, museum and heritage studies. This was reported as a provocation by the four students present, stating that she had no right to use this word since she was not of color and had not experienced racism. A social media storm erupted after the news leaked, with most condemning the move as “political correctness.”¹⁸⁹

See also Austria.

¹⁸⁸ “Neo-Nazi Held in Denmark over Jewish Cemetery Attack,” BBC News (14 November 2019).

¹⁸⁹ Jan Petter Myklebust, “Lecturer Is Told that the Word ‘Negro’ Can Never Be Used,” University World News (18 January 2020).

SWITZERLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 1999–2000, 2004, 2007–2009, 2014, 2016–2018.

See Brazil, Iran, Turkey.

SYRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2002, 2004–2019.

On 23 October 2019, Hadi Al Khatib, a human-rights activist and video archivist, and Dia Kayyali, a collaborator of Witness (an NGO helping people use digital tools to document human rights violations), accused the video-channel YouTube and other companies of censorship and erasure of history because they had taken down more than 200,000 videos that included evidence of government attacks in Syria and elsewhere because they were flagged as being violent or propaganda. Since 2017, YouTube had also taken down a number of accounts that were trying to document the Syrian conflict (2011–), including pages run by groups such as the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, the Violation Documentation Center, and the Aleppo Media Center. Khatib also said that activists in Sudan, Yemen, and Myanmar had similar problems with important content being removed.¹⁹⁰

Tens of thousands of persons have been detained or disappeared since 2011, the vast majority by government forces. Thousands died in Syrian government custody from torture and horrific detention conditions. In 2019, the government updated the records of hundreds thought to be disappeared or dead, but none of their families had received their loved ones' remains or additional information from authorities. A report by the Syrian Network for Human Rights, published in June 2020, stated that the Syrian government was responsible for 98.9 percent of cases of torture resulting in death (out of 14,388 cases) between 2011 and June 2020.¹⁹¹

See also Iraq.

¹⁹⁰ Mathew Ingram, "YouTube Takedowns Are Making It Hard to Document War Crimes," Columbia Journalism Review (24 October 2019).

¹⁹¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 541–542; Syrian Network for Human Rights, The Ninth Annual Report on Torture in Syria on the International Day in Support of Victims of Torture (London: Syrian Network for Human Rights, 2020).

TAIWAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2008–2010, 2012, 2016–2019.

On 25 February 2019, the Transitional Justice Commission (TJC; established 2018) stated that a total of 1,056 people who were killed or unjustly convicted in the crackdown during and after the 2/28 Incident (28 February 1947; with the crackdown continuing until May 1947 and leaving an estimated 18,000 to 28,000 people dead) were expected to be exonerated. By May 2020, the total exonerated for the entire period of the White Terror (1947–1987) was 6,000, but in name only: criminal records remained because the passage of time had made retrials impracticable. On 7 July 2019, President Tsai Ing-wen said that she would press the National Security Bureau and other agencies to declassify major cases from the White Terror era (as she presided over a ceremony in Taipei marking the exoneration of another 2,006 political victims. Tsai pointed to the passage of the Political Archives Act on 4 July 2019, containing regulations for the collection, review, and declassification of documents on political cases. On 26 February 2020, the TJC launched a searchable online database of curated court files of 9,800 victims of political persecution during the White Terror era.¹⁹²

On 8 March 2020, a two-volume “Draft Report on the Truth of the 228 Incident and Transitional Justice” (1.260 pages), written by ten Taiwanese historians and scholars for the Memorial Foundation of 228 (see item above), was published during a ceremony held at the National 228 Memorial Museum. It built on the investigation report released by the Executive Yuan (1992) and a study on the accountability of perpetrators released by the foundation (2006), incorporated new, declassified archival materials, and touched upon the role of the government intelligence agencies, the deployment of government troops in quelling the uprising and the casualties including individuals from mainland China. The report was meant to be submitted to the Transitional Justice Commission (TJC).¹⁹³

See also China.

¹⁹² Chen Yu-fu, “Declassification Slowing Justice Process: Source,” Taipei Times (31 December 2018); “Agency to Release Third Exonerations List,” Taipei Times (27 February 2019); Jason Pan, “Tsai Vows to Open White Terror Files,” Taipei Times (8 July 2019); Matt Yu & Matthew Mazzetta, “TJC Unveils Online Database of Persecutions in Martial Law Period,” Focus Taiwan (26 February 2020); Violet Law, “Taiwan Targets Truth Not Justice As It Investigates Darker Times,” Al Jazeera (26 May 2020).

¹⁹³ Emerson Lim, “New Report on 228 Incident Published in Pursuit of Transitional Justice,” Focus Taiwan (8 March 2020).

TAJIKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2017–2018.

In July 2019, the United Nations Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances (WGEID) visited Tajikistan. It expressed concern that the existence of mass graves and the fate of thousands of persons unaccounted for in connection with the 1992–1997 civil war remained a “virtually unaddressed issue” and that more should be done “to deal with issues related to truth, justice, reparation and memory in relation to the serious human rights violations.” The working group also pointed to a “number of recent and previous cases of Tajik individuals, reportedly political opponents who were residing abroad and were forcibly returned to Tajikistan. In some cases, these individuals have appeared in detention in Tajikistan after short periods of disappearance, while in a few instances their whereabouts are still unknown.”¹⁹⁴

TANZANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2016–2017.

THAILAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2001–2002, 2005, 2007–2019.

As the chief of the National Council for Peace and Order (NCPO) junta, Prime Minister General Prayut Chan-ocha wielded power from 2014 to 2019 that was unhindered by oversight or accountability. While the NCPO disbanded after the new government took office in July 2019, the constitution protected junta members and anyone acting on the junta’s orders from ever being held accountable for human rights violations committed during military rule. No redress was available for victims of those human rights violations. The government still had not repealed all of the human rights violating NCPO orders.¹⁹⁵

Despite evidence showing that soldiers were responsible for most casualties during the 2010 political confrontations with the United Front for Democracy Against Dictatorship (the “Red Shirts”) that left at least ninety dead and more than 2,000 injured, no military personnel or officials from the government of former Prime Minister Abhisit Vejjajiva (2008–2011) had been charged for killing or wounding demonstrators or bystanders.¹⁹⁶

¹⁹⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 552.

¹⁹⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 559.

TIMOR-LESTE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003–2013, 2015–2018.

TOGO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2008–2013, 2017–2018.

TRINIDAD and TOBAGO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

TUNISIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2011–2019.

In 2013, Tunisia adopted legislation to address crimes of the past, which included the creation of an Instance Vérité et Dignité (IVD; Truth and Dignity Commission). The commission was mandated to investigate all serious human rights violations from 1955 to 2013 and was designed to provide accountability for torture, forced disappearances, and other past abuses. During the years it operated, from 2013 to 2018, the commission received more than 62,000 complaints and held confidential hearings for more than 50,000 of these. On 26 March 2019, the commission published its five-volume 2000-page report analyzing and exposing the senior officials and state institutions responsible for systematic human rights abuses over five decades. It outlined the role of former Presidents Habib Bourguiba (1957–1987) and Zine el-Abidine Ben Ali (1987–2011) and others in torture, arbitrary detention, and numerous other abuses. The commission documented abuses not only against political opponents but against their families, including sexual assaults of the wives and daughters of opposition members.

¹⁹⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 563.

The commission named former Prime Minister (2011) and President (2004–2019) Caid Essebsi (1926–2019) as complicit in torture when serving as the interior minister for Bourguiba (1965–1969). The law also tasked the commission with referring cases of torture, forced disappearance, and other serious abuses to thirteen specialized chambers created within ordinary courts. The commission's recommendations included reform of the judicial and security sectors, the creation of an independent body to monitor the work of the security forces, the harmonization of laws with the Constitution, measures to establish accountability for crimes committed and other steps to strengthen the rule of law. The government failed to publish the report in the official gazette or present a plan to implement the IVD's recommendations, as required by Article 70 of the Transitional Justice Law. The parliament had yet to establish a specialized parliamentary committee to oversee implementation of the recommendations.

By the end of the commission's mandate, it had transferred to the specialized courts 173 cases of human rights violations, including cases of torture, enforced disappearances, and arbitrary detentions. The specialized courts opened at least 78 trials around the country, involving 541 victims and 687 accused. In at least thirteen trials, the defendants did not attend; in sixteen others, only their lawyers appeared. The largest trade union for the security forces asked its members not to appear in court, saying that the trials were vindictive. The Ministry of Interior appeared reluctant to implement court subpoenas of indicted suspects to the hearings. The first case before a specialized court involved the forced disappearance of Kamel Matmati, an Islamist activist whom the police arrested in 1991. It opened in Gabes on 29 March 2018, and was continuing at the end of 2019.¹⁹⁷

TURKEY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2000–2019.

On 17 April 1995, writer and journalist Ahmet Altan (1950–) [see NCH Annual Report 1997] was dismissed from Milliyet, charged with “inciting racial hatred,” and given a twenty-month suspended sentence because in a satirical column entitled “Atakürt,” he had suggested that the Turkish independence war after World War I (1920–1922) had been led by Kurds rather than Turks and that the country was called Kurdey (“Kürdiye”). He also wrote that Atatürk was a dictator. Over the rest of his journalistic career, including as chief editor of the daily Taraf (2007–2012), he faced continual charges on grounds ranging from raising the Armenian genocide to insulting the president. In September 2008, for example, when he published an article titled “Oh, My Brother” dedicated to the victims of the Armenian genocide, he was charged under Article 301 of the Turkish Penal Code for “denigrating Turkishness.” The claim was initiated by the far-right Great Union Party. Altan is the author of historical novels spanning the half-century before the rise of Mustafa Kemal Atatürk. He was sentenced to life imprisonment after the failed July 2016 coup (in February 2018) on sedition charges, later changed into terrorism charges, but in early July 2019, his life sentence was overturned.¹⁹⁸

¹⁹⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 569; Amnesty International, Human Rights in the Middle East and North Africa: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2020), 65–66.

On 20 December 2017, Çayan Demirel (1977–) and Ertuğrul Mavioğlu (1961–) were charged with disseminating propaganda in favor of a terrorist organization (Article 7/2 of Law no. 3713 on Counter-Terrorism) for their documentary film Bakur (“North” in Kurdish). The documentary explored the conflict between the Turkish armed forces and the outlawed Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK), showed the daily lives of PKK guerrillas in three camps in southeast Turkey in 2013, and focused on the withdrawal of the PKK from Turkey during the peace process that started in 2013 and collapsed in July 2015. The film was scheduled to premiere at the Istanbul Film Festival in May 2015, but the screening was canceled by the Turkish Ministry of Culture, on the grounds that the film did not have the required registration certificate. As Demirel gave his deposition in Istanbul on 28 December 2017, dozens of filmmakers came in solidarity to protest outside the courthouse, holding signs that read “Sinema Yargılanamaz! Keep Films Out of Court!” The first hearing in their case took place on 18 January 2018. The Batman 2nd High Criminal Court sentenced both directors to four years and six months in prison in absentia on 18 July 2019. Demirel and Mavioğlu remained free pending appeal but were subject to a travel ban.

Demirel had started working on historical documentaries in 2000, after he had received his degree from the Faculty of Economics. In 2006, he had completed his first ever documentary called 38, which reflected on the incidents of the Dersim Massacre (1936–1938) [see NCH Annual Reports 1998, 2002, 2007–2008, 2012, 2015]. He then founded Surela Film Production in 2009 and directed his award-winning documentary Prison Number 5: 1980–84 that same year. Mavioğlu worked as a journalist for nearly thirty years at multiple newspapers and television stations. He spent eight years in prison during the period 1980–1991, following the September 1980 military coup. He was also granted two awards from the Progressive Journalists Association.¹⁹⁹

¹⁹⁸ H. Cemal, “Freedom of Expression in Turkey,” Free Speech Debate (April 2012); Human Rights Watch, Ifex Alert (7 July 1997); Ahmet Altan, “Knowing that They Are there, Helps Me Keep Smiling in My Cell,” Index on Censorship (2019 no. 2), 84–88; Alison Flood, “Tackling News Stories that Journalists Aren’t Writing,” Index on Censorship (2019 no. 3), 59; “Ahmet Altan,” Wikipedia (28 September 2019); Index on Censorship and Others, Statement (4 November 2019); PEN America, Freedom to Write Index 2019 (Washington: PEN America, 2020), 12, 16.

¹⁹⁹ International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 99–100.

In March 2018, parliament speaker İsmail Kahraman allegedly barred female actresses from performing at the Grand National Assembly, in which they were commemorating the 1915 Gallipoli battle. This decision was reportedly made after an emergency meeting held just an hour before the performance was due to start.²⁰⁰

On 29 May 2018, Evren Altinkas arrived at the University of Guelph, Canada, to start working as a visiting history professor. He had had a history of dissidence since 2000. While a teaching assistant in history at the public Dokuz Eylül University in Izmir (1994–2012), Altinkas went to King’s College, London (1999–2000) to get his masters in Mediterranean studies. His master’s thesis on the Kurdish people in Turkey was, however, not recognized in Turkey. Later, he began teaching political science classes at the university, with a focus on democracies around the world. Pro-government students allegedly reported him to his superiors. He was officially warned several times until he left the university in 2012, moving on to the private Avrasya University in Trabzon (2012–2014). During the 2013 protests, Altinkas spread his views on the social media: he criticized the ongoing attacks on academic freedom, increasing nationalism and religious authoritarianism, and discrimination of ethnic and religious minorities. As a result, the university asked him to leave. Altinkas then went to the public Artvin Coruh University, Artvin (2013–2014), where he was eventually forced out after rector told him that he and his wife were under investigation. Following a short stint at Girne American University, in Cyprus (2014–2015), Altinkas was unemployed until he left Turkey for Canada. At Guelph, he taught courses on politics and the history of the Middle East and did research into Ottoman and Turkish history.²⁰¹

Büşra Ersanlı (1950–) [see NCH Annual Reports 2012–2013, 2018] – emeritus professor of political science at Marmara University specialized in historical subjects – was acquitted after the Turkish Constitutional Court ruled in July 2019 that the rights of ten academics who had signed the 2016 petition of the Initiative of Academics for Peace [see NCH Annual Reports 2017–2019] had been violated.²⁰²

On 25 March 2019, the United Nations (UN) Mandates of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances; the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression; and the Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of nonrecurrence wrote a six-page Letter of Allegations to the Turkish government saying that they had “received alleging violations attributable to Turkey in relation to the ²⁰⁰ Freemuse, The State of Artistic Freedom 2019: Whose Narratives Count? (Copenhagen: Freemuse, 2019), 59.

²⁰¹ Graeme McNaughton, “‘Never Come Back’: Turkish Professor Finds New Home in Guelph,” Guelph Mercury (28 November 2018); Scholars at Risk, Email about Evren Altinkas (23 December 2019).

²⁰² PEN International, Case List 2018 (London: PEN, 2019), 101; International PEN, The PEN International Case List 2019 (London: PEN, 2020), 101.

tragic events that affected the Armenian minority from 1915 to 1923, and their consequences for the population concerned.” On 17 May 2019, Turkish Ambassador Sadik Arslan (Turkey’s Permanent Representative to the United Nations in Geneva) responded that the UN letter “will be left unanswered by the Government of Turkey,” further stating that “my authorities were rather baffled by the communication” which he described as “ill-intended and politically motivated.”²⁰³

In June 2019, authorities detained Baki Tezcan, an associate professor of history specialized in the early modern Ottoman period at the University of California, Davis, upon his arrival in Istanbul with his wife and children. A signatory of the 2016 peace petition [see item above], Tezcan had been indicted for it in May 2018. An Istanbul court overseeing the case had requested that the United States Department of Justice turn over Tezcan after he missed the first hearing in his trial, but the latter had responded in January 2019 that his signing the petition was protected by the First Amendment of the United States Constitution. The court then issued an arrest warrant which was executed in June 2019 when Tezcan returned to Turkey. Tezcan was quickly released from custody, but his legal status remained unclear in the wake of the July 2019 Constitutional Court decision (see item below). His next hearing was scheduled for October 2019.²⁰⁴

In July 2019, Ayşe Gül Altınay, professor of cultural anthropology and director of the Gender and Women’s Studies Center at Sabancı University in Istanbul [see NCH Annual Report 2019], was reportedly free to travel abroad.²⁰⁵

On 26 July 2019, the Constitutional Court ruled with a one-vote majority that ten educators who had signed the 2016 petition of the Initiative of Academics for Peace (entitled “We Will Not Be a Party to This Crime!”) (see item above) had been tried in violation of their rights. The decisions of the Constitutional Court are binding on inferior courts. According to pro-state media, however, 1,071 academics signed a manifesto condemning the Constitutional Court judgment. The number “1071” was also a reference to the Malazgirt (Manzikert) battle in 1071 (in which the Seljuks defeated the Byzantine Empire).²⁰⁶

²⁰³ United Nations Mandates of the Working Group on Enforced or Involuntary Disappearances; the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression; and the Special Rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of nonrecurrence, Letter to Turkish Government (Reference AL TUR 1/2019) (25 March 2019); Harut Sassounian, “UN Questions Turkey on the Armenian Genocide in Stunning Letter,” Armenian Weekly (25 June 2019), ²⁰⁴ Robert Quinn, “Fighting to Protect—and Define—Academic Freedom,” American Association of University Professors (no date [September 2019]); Rebecca Bihn-Wallace, “UC Davis Professor Arrested in Turkey Recalls Experiences,” The Californian Aggie (4 October 2019).

²⁰⁵ Brennan Cusack, “Turkey’s Crackdown on Academics Represses History Once Again,” New York Times (8 July 2019); Ann Rigney, personal communication (16 July 2019).

²⁰⁶ Sophia Paley, “Cases against Academics for Peace Have Become Emblematic of the Attacks on Freedom of Expression in Turkey,” Index on Censorship (28 August 2019).

See also Hungary.

TURKMENISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2004, 2009, 2011–2012, 2015–2019.

UGANDA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2009, 2011–2013, 2015–2017, 2019.

In 2019, the case of Dominic Ongwen, alleged former Lord’s Resistance Army (LRA) commander charged with seventy counts of war crimes and crimes against humanity, continued at the International Criminal Court (ICC). In October 2019, the court announced that closing statements in this case would commence on 10 March 2020. Two ICC warrants remained outstanding for the arrest of LRA leaders Joseph Kony and Vincent Otti, who was presumed dead. The International Crimes Division (ICD) of the High Court continued the trial of alleged former LRA commander Thomas Kwoyelo – in custody since his capture in the Democratic Republic of Congo in 2009 – on charges of war crimes and crimes against humanity. The trial had numerous delays. In September 2019, the ICD confirmed charges of terrorism, murder, attempted murder, aggravated robbery against Jamil Mukulu, alleged leader of the rebel Allied Democratic Forces (ADF), and 37 others.²⁰⁷

UKRAINE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2009–2011, 2014–2019.

In October 2019, Alex Krakovsky filed suit against the Ministry of Justice after it issued an order in June 2018 barring the copying of documents larger than letter-size as well as files thicker than 1.5 inches, old printed books, and listings of documents. The court in Kyiv ruled partially in Krakovsky’s favor, saying that people have the right to copy documents with cameras – with the caveat, however, that people would be required to fill out a form requesting specific documents. Since 2011, Krakovsky had sued more than a dozen archives that obstructed access to their records in some form; he won all the cases. Krakovsky planned to appeal the ministry but after hearing that the case would be tied up in court for one to two more years, he decided against it.²⁰⁸

See also United States.

²⁰⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 594–595.

²⁰⁸ Greg Stricharchuk, “Access and Digitization on Trial: Alex Krakovsky’s Archival Battle in Ukraine,” H-Ukraine (18 December 2019).

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013, 2016.

See Yemen.

UNITED KINGDOM

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998–2001, 2003–2004, 2006–2019.

In July 2019, Elizabeth Ford, an American music historian specialized in eighteenth-century Scottish music, received a letter from the Home Office, saying that her leave to remain, granted a year before, was erroneous, and that she had to leave the United Kingdom within two weeks. Ford had been working in the country for eight years, first at Glasgow University and then as a research fellow at Edinburgh University and was due to begin a research fellowship at Oxford University. Researchers from abroad criticized the British visa system as “hostile, cumbersome and punitively expensive.” Ford herself called it “arcane and arbitrary.”²⁰⁹

On 23 January 2020, Selina Todd, a historian at St Hilda’s College, University of Oxford, specialized in the modern history of women and the working class and associated with campaign group Women’s Place UK (WPUK), was given two security guards (male staff members) to accompany her to lectures after she received threats from transgender rights activists on social media and email networks. Accusing her of being “transphobe,” the activists reportedly believed that Todd’s views on the need to protect women’s spaces, such as single-sex refuges, from people who self-identify as women but are anatomically male were unacceptable. In early March 2020, Todd was disinvited (“no-platformed”) to address the Oxford International Women’s Festival (29 February – 14 March 2020).²¹⁰

On 7 June 2020, anti-racist protesters tore down the statue of slave trader Edward Colston (1636–1721) in Bristol and threw it into the harbor. A member of the Royal African Company, which transported about 80,000 men, women and children from Africa to the Americas, Colson bequeathed his wealth to ²⁰⁹ Anna Fazackerley, “US Academic Given Two Weeks to Leave UK after Eight Years,” The Guardian (17 September 2019).

²¹⁰ “Oxford Professor Given Protection Following Threats from Trans Activists,” BBC News (25 January 2020); Camilla Turner & Ewan Somerville, “Oxford University Professor Given Security Guards for Lectures after Threats from Transgender Activists,” Telegraph (23 January 2020); “Oxford University Professor Condemns Exclusion from Event,” BBC News (4 March 2020).

charities. The statue was retrieved on 11 June 2020 and would become a museum exhibit. Also on 7 June 2020, the statue of Winston Churchill (1874–1965) on Parliament Square in London was sprayed with graffiti declaring him a “racist” and it had a Black Lives Matter sign attached. On 10 June 2020, a monument erected in the Scottish capital Edinburgh in 1823 commemorating Henry Dundas (1742–1811), a politician who delayed the abolition of slavery, was spray-painted with the words “George Floyd” and “BLM” (for Black Lives Matters). Dundas had put forward an amendment to a bill which would have abolished slavery in 1792, opting for a more “gradual” approach. This allowed the practice to continue for fifteen years longer than it otherwise would have done.

On 11 June 2020, a statue of Robert Baden-Powell (1857–1941), founder of the Scouts movement, was to be removed in Poole amid fears that it was on a “target list for attack.” Baden-Powell had been criticized by campaigners who accused him of racism, homophobia and support for Adolf Hitler and fascism. A statue of slaveholder Robert Milligan (1746–1809) was also removed from outside the Museum of London Docklands, while in Oxford thousands of people called for the removal of a statue of British imperialist Cecil Rhodes (1853–1902). On 17 June 2020, the governors of Oriel College, Oxford University, voted to remove the controversial Rhodes statue; they would also launch an “independent commission of inquiry” into his legacy, which also included the Rhodes scholarships.²¹¹

The Ivor Bell trial [see NCH Annual Reports 2012–2017, 2019] took place in mid-October 2019. On 16 October, Justice John O’Hara ruled that the Boston tapes that implicated Ivor Bell and Gerry Adams in the McConville murder were inadmissible. Apparently concurring with witness Kevin O’Neill, a professor of history from Boston College, the judge also said that Boston tapes interviewer Anthony McIntyre had an agenda and was not a “neutral interviewer” in respect of Adams, the peace process and the 1998 Belfast Agreement.²¹²

See also Australia, China, Czech Republic, Ethiopia, Myanmar, New Zealand, Turkey, United States, Yemen.

²¹¹ “George Floyd Death: Protesters Tear Down Slave Trader Statue,” BBC News (7 June 2020); “Robert Baden-Powell Statue To Be Removed in Poole,” BBC News (11 June 2020); “George Floyd Protests: The Statues Being Defaced,” BBC News (10 June 2020); “Churchill Statue ‘May Have To Be Put in Museum’, Says Granddaughter,” BBC News (13 June 2020); Sean Coughlan, “Oxford College Wants to Remove Rhodes Statue,” BBC News (18 June 2020).

²¹² Ryan McChrystal, “Failing to Face Up to the Past,” Index on Censorship (2019 no. 2), 49; Gerry Moriarty, “Jean McConville’s Murder, the Boston tapes, Gerry Adams and the Ivor Bell Trial,” Irish Times (17 October 2019).

UNITED STATES

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2019.

On 29 December 1997, a group called Friends of Acoma – people protesting the 400th anniversary of the arrival of Juan de Oñate (1550–1626; founder and governor of the colony of New Mexico in 1598) in New Mexico – cut off the right foot of a 1991 statue of Oñate in Alcalde, New Mexico, with an electric saw. In 1599, Oñate had killed 800 Indigenous people in Acoma Pueblo, enslaved the remaining 500, and amputated the right foot of at least 24 of the Acoma men. For these crimes, he was sentenced in 1606 and he had to resign in 1610. The protesters left a note that read: “We took the liberty of removing Oñate’s right foot on behalf of our brothers and sisters of Acoma Pueblo.” On 15 June 2020, authorities in Alcalde removed the statue. Later that day, gunfire broke out during a protest in Albuquerque to demand the removal of a 2004 statue of Oñate outside the Albuquerque museum. One victim was hospitalized, and the police took into custody several members of a right-wing militia called the New Mexico Civil Guard and made up of armed white gunmen. Hours later, the mayor announced that the statue would be removed until “the appropriate civic institutions” could determine how to proceed.²¹³

Recognition grew in 2019 that current racial disparities in policing, criminal justice, and other aspects of American life could not be understood without reference to slavery and its continuing impact on society. The United States (US) Congress held an historic hearing on Juneteenth – a day commemorating the 19 June 1865 announcement of the abolition of slavery in the US – to discuss possible ways to account for these harms, including reparations and more investment in black communities to address continued inequality and discrimination.²¹⁴

In August 2019, a local chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) filed a federal lawsuit against Hanover County and its school board in the District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia over two schools that commemorated Confederate leaders (Lee-Davis High School and Stonewall Jackson Middle School). It argued that both schools violated the First and Fourteenth Amendment rights of African American students by forcing them “to champion a legacy of segregation and oppression in order to participate in school activities.” According to the lawsuit, as of 2018, 31 Virginia schools were named for Confederate figures; 18 of them had been removed by the end of 2018. Hanover school board members, however, had voted 5 to 2 to keep the Confederate school names after some residents had petitioned for change. Earlier in 2019, the county board of supervisors had declined to reappoint one of the two school board members who voted to change the names.²¹⁵

²¹³ Simon Romero, “Statue’s Stolen Foot Reflects Divisions Over Symbols of Conquest,” New York Times (30 September 2017); Simon Romero, “Man Is Shot at Protest Over Statue of New Mexico’s Conquistador,” New York Times (15 June 2020); Sarah Mervosh, Simon Romero & Lucy Tompkins, “Reconsidering the Past, One Statue at a Time,” New York Times (16 June 2020).

²¹⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 606.

On 1 October 2019, the National Security Archive (NSA) together with Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington (CREW) and the Society for Historians of American Foreign Relations (SHAFR) filed a motion in the District Court for the District of Columbia for a temporary restraining order to compel the White House to create and preserve records of foreign leader phone calls and meetings with the president, and records of White House practices and policies. News reports indicated that no such records existed for at least five meetings with Russian President Vladimir Putin, one meeting with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, and a meeting with Saudi Arabian Prince Mohammad Bin Salman. The motion cited recent whistleblower revelations that the White House had restricted access to presidential transcripts of calls and meetings such as the controversial 25 July 2019 call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, and that such records were placed into a “codeword-level system solely for the purpose of protecting politically sensitive – rather than national security sensitive – information.” On 4 November 2019, the three organizations sued Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and the State Department for violating the Federal Records Act by failing to create and preserve essential State Department records. On 10 February 2020, the judge dismissed the suit on the grounds that courts lacked the authority to review the chief executive’s “day-to-day compliance” with the Presidential Records Act. She added that the ruling “should not be interpreted to endorse” the White House’s records-keeping practices, “nor does it include any finding that the Executive Office is in compliance with its obligations.” The NSA, CREW, and SHAFR appealed the ruling.²¹⁶

On 27 November 2019, the University of North Carolina (UNC) Board of Governors agreed to settle a lawsuit filed by the North Carolina division of the Sons of Confederate Veterans (SCV; founded 1896) over a Confederate monument (nicknamed Silent Sam) that had stood on the UNC campus in Chapel Hill since 1913 before demonstrators toppled it in August 2018 [see NCH Annual Report 2019]. UNC agreed to pay SCV 2.5 million dollars to take custody of the monument. The decision was widely criticized.²¹⁷

²¹⁵ Gregory Schneider, “NAACP Challenges Legality of Confederate Names on Virginia Schools,” Washington Post (16 August 2019).

²¹⁶ National Security Archive, “Archive, CREW, Historians Ask Federal Judge to Preserve Head of State Records” (Washington, 1 and 2 October 2019); National Security Archive, “Archive, CREW, Historians Sue Pompeo, State Department over Failure to Create Records” (Washington 5 November 2019); National Security Archive, “Court Rejects Archive Lawsuit over Trump’s Abuse of Records Law” (Washington 11 February 2020).

²¹⁷ David Blight, Fitzhugh Brundage, and Kevin Levin, “A University’s Betrayal of Historical Truth,” The Atlantic (9 December 2019); Scott Jaschik, “UNC Will Give Away Confederate Statue,” Inside HigherEd (2 December 2019); for the legal case, see: <http://www.concernedhistorians.org/le/646.pdf>;

On [9] December 2019, after a three-year Freedom of information Act (FOIA) legal battle and two federal lawsuits, the Washington Post won the release of a set of confidential government documents revealing that senior United States officials failed to tell the truth about the war in Afghanistan throughout the 18-year campaign (2001–2019), making rosy pronouncements they knew to be false and hiding unmistakable evidence that the war had become unwinnable. As part of a federal project called “Lessons Learned” and examining American policy failures in Afghanistan, the Office of the Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction (SIGAR; created by Congress in 2008 to investigate waste and fraud in the war) interviewed 428 people who had a direct role in the conflict, from generals and diplomats to aid workers and Afghan officials. The documents included more than 2,000 pages of previously unpublished notes of these interviews. They were soon nicknamed the “Afghanistan Papers,” an allusion to the “Pentagon Papers,” a secret history of the American involvement in Vietnam revealed in 1971. In addition, the Washington Post also obtained hundreds of confidential memos (known as “snowflakes”) by former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld from the National Security Archive.²¹⁸

In December 2019, Louisiana Tech University briefly removed instructor of history Michael Savage from teaching about race and other topics before reinstating him. Savage had asked students in a course to reflect on what it was like to wake up every day in the United States as someone of their respective racial group. The follow-up discussion included a discussion of colonization. A student’s parent allegedly complained to the administration about an intimidating learning environment, and Savage was removed as instructor for two sections of a world history course. The history department staff supported Savage.²¹⁹

On 4 January 2020, United States (US) President Donald Trump made a threat via Twitter (reiterated to reporters on 5 January) that his forces had “targeted 52 Iranian sites” some of which were “important to Iran & the Iranian culture” in case Iran would attack Americans or US assets in retaliation for the assassination of Iranian General Qassem Suleimani on 3 January 2020. The 52 targets represented the 52 Americans who were held hostage in Iran for 444 days after being seized at the US embassy in Tehran in November 1979.

Academic researchers of Iranian history, archaeology, art and culture, based in national museums and universities across the world, deplored the threat, stating that Trump’s statement was contrary to the Hague Convention for the Protection of Cultural Property in the Event of Armed Conflict (1954)

<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/le/647.pdf>;
<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/le/649.pdf>.

<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/le/648.pdf>;

²¹⁸ Craig Whitlock, Leslie Shapiro & Armand Emamdjomeh, “The Afghanistan Papers: A Secret History of the War,” Washington Post (9 December 2019); Gillian Brockell, “‘Modern-day Pentagon Papers’: Comparing the Afghanistan Papers to Blockbuster Vietnam War Study,” Washington Post (9 December 2019).

²¹⁹ Colleen Flaherty, “Professor Removed Then Reinstated Over Discussion on Race,” Inside HigherEd (17 December 2019).

and the Geneva Conventions (1949) and their Protocols (1977), and that the International Criminal Court considered the destruction of cultural heritage to be a war crime. The ruins of the ancient Persian capital of Persepolis (in modern-day southwest Iran) were reportedly on the target list. Other sites threatened were 24 sites of pre-Islamic and Islamic heritage that were designated by UNESCO as being of universal significance. These were imperial monuments from the Bronze Age to the Elamite, Achaemenid, Sasanian, Ilkhanid, Ziyarid, Safavid and Qajar eras.

In March 2017 – only weeks after Trump’s inauguration – the United Nations Security Council, with the United States as a permanent member – had unanimously adopted a resolution condemning the “unlawful destruction of cultural heritage, inter alia destruction of religious sites and artefacts” in armed conflicts.²²⁰

On 18 January 2020, the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) apologized for substantially altering a photo of the January 2017 Women’s March in Washington by Getty Images photographer Mario Tama in at least four places. The photo would be used as a “promotional graphic” for an exhibition on the 19th Amendment (voting rights for women and the suffragist movement), entitled “Rightfully Hers: American Women and the Vote.” The changes included removing the president’s name from signs that read “God Hates Trump” and “Trump & GOP – Hands Off Women,” and blurring out the word “vagina.” NARA archivist David Ferriero said in a statement that the decision to blur the signs was driven by a desire “to avoid accusations of partisanship or complaints that we displayed inappropriate language in a family-friendly Federal museum.” The Society of American Archivists called it a violation of its Code of Ethics. The American Historical Association called the alteration to “sanitize or whitewash history” a “lapse in professional ethics” but applauded NARA’s admission of the mistake and apology. The photo was removed and restored, unretouched, on 22 January 2020.²²¹

In February 2020, Native American burial sites in Arizona were blown up by construction crews building the US-Mexico border wall. Authorities confirmed that “controlled blasting” had begun in Organ Pipe Cactus National Monument, a UNESCO-recognized natural reserve which included the ²²⁰ “Condemn Trump’s Threat to Iran’s Cultural Heritage,” The Guardian (7 January 2020); Rick Noack, “The Disturbing History behind Trump’s Threat to Target Iranian Cultural Sites,” Washington Post (6 January 2020); “Defenders of History Take Aim at Trump’s Threat to Strike Iran’s Cultural Sites,” New York Times (5 January 2020); Shadi Khan Saif, “Academics Decry Trump’s Threat to Hit Cultural Sites,” University World News (25 January 2020).

²²¹ “National Archives Sorry for Censoring 2017 Women’s March Signs,” BBC News (19 January 2020); American Historical Association, Letter to National Archives and Records Administration Regarding Alteration of Photograph (19 January 2020); “SAA Statement: NARA Exhibit on 2017 Women’s March in Washington, DC” (19 January 2020), Jennifer Tucker & Peter Rutland, “How the National Archives’ Notorious Alteration of a Women’s March Photo Is Part of a Long American Tradition,” Artnet (24 January 2020).

sacred burial site Monument Hill. Democrat congressman Raul Grijalva called the destruction “sacrilegious” and said that the government, in waiving the Native American Graves Protection Act, failed to consult the Tohono O’odham Nation. Crews reportedly also destroyed ancient saguaro cacti, which the O’odham saw “as the embodiment of their ancestors.”²²²

In February 2020, German professor and expert on far-right politics Hajo Funke was invited to teach classes on right-wing populism and the far right and on political and historical memory in the spring semester at the University of Virginia, but his visa was delayed by United States immigration authorities without any reason. The classes were being taught via videoconferencing while Funke continued to wait for his visa. It is believed that his 2014 travel to Iran to visit his wife’s family was the most likely reason for the delay.²²³

In mid-February 2020, Gayle Colston Barge, vice president of Bellevue College, Seattle, acknowledged that she had removed a reference in the description accompanying the campus mural “Never Again Is Now,” an art installation depicting two Japanese American children in a World War II incarceration camp and created by Seattle artist Erin Shigaki. The project commemorated the day President Franklin Roosevelt signed Executive Order 9066 (19 February 1942), authorizing the imprisonment of Japanese Americans during World War II. One sentence in a paragraph about Japanese immigrants and their connection to Bellevue was whited out: “After decades of anti-Japanese agitation, led by Eastside businessman Miller Freeman and others, the mass incarceration of Japanese Americans included the 60 families (300 individuals) who farmed Bellevue.” On 2 March 2020, the trustees of the college announced that Barge and college president Jerry Weber were dismissed. Barge apologized but did not explain why she ordered the removal. Board of trustees Chair Rich Fukutaki’s family members had been among those imprisoned during World War II.²²⁴

On 20 March 2020, Tamara Lanier, a resident from Norwich, Connecticut, sued Harvard University for the wrongful seizure, possession and expropriation of old photographs of two enslaved people of which she believed to be a descendant. In 1850, Harvard professor Louis Agassiz had commissioned daguerreotypes of an African-born enslaved man in South Carolina named Renty and his daughter Delia, also enslaved, using them to support his pseudoscientific theory of polygenism (“Africans have different origins from Europeans”) to justify slavery. Lanier claimed that through oral history and years of research, including consultations with genealogists, she had determined that she was the descendant ²²² “Native Burial Sites Blown Up for US Border Wall,” BBC News (10 February 2020).

²²³ Elizabeth Redden, “Visa Obstacles Thwart Renowned Foreign Scholars,” HigherEd (24 February 2020).

²²⁴ Paige Cornwell, “Bellevue College President, Vice President Out after Mural on Japanese American Incarceration Was Altered,” Seattle Times (2 March 2020).

of Renty and Delia. Renty's image was still used on the cover of a Harvard publication about anthropology and photography that the university sold for $40. More than forty descendants of Louis Agassiz supported Lanier's efforts and wrote an open letter to Harvard University asking the university to relinquish the photos, but Harvard refused to acknowledge Lanier's claim to the photos.²²⁵

In March 2020, anthropologist Doug Bailey destroyed more than 1,200 transparencies from the now closed Adan E. Treganza Anthropology Museum of San Francisco State University. He culled 35-millimeter images from decades-old research projects that were now considered unethical and soaked them in diluted sodium oxochloride. The images on the transparencies consisted of animal dissections, graphic drawings and photographs of human reproduction and female anatomy, fossilized human skulls, ethnic profiling, animals in captivity in zoos and game reserves, and ethnographic field photos. It was part of his efforts to create what he called a new discipline, art/archaeology. He labeled his action "Releasing the Archive."²²⁶

On 9–10 June 2020, within a context of widespread anti-racist manifestations following the death of George Floyd (1973–2020) in Minneapolis, Minnesota, police custody on 25 May 2020, statues of Confederate leaders and Italian explorer Christopher Columbus (1451–1506) were torn down or defiled as pressure grew on authorities to remove monuments connected to slavery and colonialism. On 10 June 2020, a statue of Confederate President Jefferson Davis (1808–1889) was toppled in Richmond, Virginia. Elsewhere in the city, a statue of Columbus was pulled down, set alight and thrown into a lake a day earlier. Also on 10 June 2020, a statue of Columbus was toppled in Saint Paul, Minnesota, while statues of Columbus were vandalized in Boston (Massachusetts), Baltimore (Maryland), Miami (Florida), and Kenosha (Wisconsin). The one in Boston was decapitated. In Philadelphia, supporters went to court to block the removal of a Columbus statue. In Portland, Oregon, demonstrators protesting police killings toppled a statue of Thomas Jefferson (1743–1826), one of the country's founding fathers who also enslaved more than 600 people. In Sacramento, a marker to John Sutter (1803–1880), a settler famous for his role in the California gold rush who enslaved and exploited Native Americans, was taken down.

In Dallas, construction crews removed a statue of a Texas Ranger, long seen as a mythical figure in Texas folklore, amid concerns over historical episodes of police brutality and racism within this law enforcement agency. On 21 June 2020, the American Museum of Natural History in New York decided to relocate a bronze statue of President Theodore Roosevelt (1858–1919) atop a horse, flanked by nameless Native American and African men on foot, at the museum’s entrance. Critics said that the statue depicted Black and Indigenous people as subjugated and racially inferior. In October 2017, a group called the Monument Removal Brigade had splashed red paint at the statue’s base, saying the monument represented “patriarchy, white supremacy and settler-colonialism.” On 24 June 2020, a bronze statue of John Calhoun (1825–1832), vice president of the United States and an advocate of slavery, was removed from Marion Square in Charleston, South Carolina [see NCH Annual Report 2017]. A statue of Union General Ulysses S. Grant (1822–1855), a former slave owner, was removed in San Francisco. Grant had defeated the slave-owning Confederacy during the Civil War (1861–1865).

²²⁵ Robyn Doyon-Aitken, Lucy Nalpathanchil & Ryan Caron King, "Connecticut Woman Explains Why She's Suing Harvard for Family Photos," Connecticut Public Radio (26 February 2020); Matthew Schwartz, "Harvard Profits from Photos of Slaves, Lawsuit Claims," Connecticut Public Radio (21 March 2019); Robyn Doyon-Aitken & Lucy Nalpathanchil, "Who Owns History? Connecticut Woman Sues Harvard for Family Photos," Connecticut Public Radio (14 April 2020); Tamara Lanier, "Harvard: #FreeRenty" (petition; no date).

²²⁶ Matt Itelson, "Professor Bailey Destroys Archival Research Images in the Name of Art, Ethics," University Updates San Francisco State University (11 May 2020).

In an act of apparent retaliation, a statue of former slave and abolitionist Frederick Douglass (1818–1895) was toppled in Rochester, New York, on 5 July 2020. On 5 July 1852, Douglass gave a famous speech “What, to the American Slave is your Fourth of July?” saying that the Independence Day celebrations were a sham in a nation that still enslaved its black citizens.

On 27 June 2020, President Donald Trump signed an executive order calling for protesters who targeted monuments to be imprisoned. The measure said that anyone who damaged a public statue must be prosecuted to the “fullest extent of the law.” On 3 July 2020, Trump signed another executive order on Building and Rebuilding Monuments to American Heroes.²²⁷

On 27 June 2020, the wake of worldwide antiracist protests, Princeton University announced that it would remove the name of President and historian Woodrow Wilson (1856–1924; Princeton University president 1902–1910; United States president 1913–1921) from the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs because of his racist beliefs and policies and rename it into the Princeton School of Public and International Affairs [see NCH Annual Report 2016]. Earlier in June, Monmouth University, New Jersey, removed Wilson’s name from one of its most prominent buildings.²²⁸

See also China, Colombia, Egypt, Guatemala, Iran, Israel, Japan, Libya, Mauritania, Myanmar, Serbia/Kosovo, South Sudan, Turkey, United Kingdom, Yemen.

²²⁷ “Confederate and Columbus Statues Toppled by US Protesters,” BBC News (11 June 2020); Kelly Grovier, “Black Lives Matter protests: Why Are Statues So Powerful?,” BBC News (12 June 2020); Sarah Mervosh, Simon Romero and Lucy Tompkins, “Reconsidering the Past, One Statue at a Time,” New York Times (16 June 2020); Meagan Flynn, “Theodore Roosevelt Statue, Flanked by African and Native American Men, To Be Removed in New York,” Washington Post (22 June 2020); “Trump Orders Statues Be Protected from ‘Mob Rule’,” BBC News (27 June 2020); “Frederick Douglass: Historic US Black Activist’s Statue Toppled,” BBC News (6 July 2020).

²²⁸ “Princeton to Remove Woodrow Wilson’s Name from Policy School,” BBC News (28 June 2020).

URUGUAY

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2013, 2015–2018.

The failure to ensure justice, truth and reparation for crimes against humanity committed under the former military regime (1973–1985) remained an outstanding concern. Of the 187 criminal investigations opened on these crimes, 91% had not been prosecuted and convictions had been secured in only fourteen cases. Out of the 196 enforced disappearances acknowledged by state authorities, the fate of 163 people remained unresolved. Only eight of the 44 people forcibly disappeared inside Uruguay had been located. The Supreme Court upheld again the statute of limitations for crimes against humanity committed between 1973 and 1985, in breach of international law. Special Reparatory Pension to victims of state violence between 1973–1985 was denied for those who received other pensions or social benefits.²²⁹

UZBEKISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2014, 2016.

In March 2017, Andrei Kubatin, a specialist on the history and culture of the Turkic world, was arrested by the National Security Service (later: State Security Services) on fabricated treason charges: he had supposedly connived to hand classified historical documents to the Turkish Cooperation and Coordination Agency, Ankara's foreign aid agency, in exchange for payment of $1,000. Investigators argued that the materials in question could be used to incite anti-patriotic, pan-Turkic sentiments and provide insider information about Uzbekistan's geological reserves. Kubatin's defenders dismissed the charge, arguing that the material in question was freely available to the public. Kubatin was sentenced to eleven years' imprisonment, later reduced to five years on appeal. He was tortured in prison. On 26 September 2019, however, the Tashkent regional criminal court suddenly ordered his release. He was fully exonerated and charges against him were dropped. Some connected the release with the visit to Uzbekistan by the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the Independence of Judges and Lawyers, Diego Garcia-Sayán.²³⁰

²²⁹ Amnesty International, Human Rights in the Americas: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2020), 84.

²³⁰ "Uzbekistan: Scholar Imprisoned for Espionage Absolved and Released; Rights Activists Warn More Needs to Be Done to Ensure Justice Prevails," Eurasianet (27 September 2019); Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 620.

On 9 August 2019, two United Nations Special Rapporteurs had received information concerning urban regeneration projects that would result in the destruction of historic neighborhoods in Samarkand, and ongoing demolitions of houses in Tashkent, in violation of the rights to housing and to culture of about 6,500 residents.²³¹

See also Turkey.

²³¹ United Nations Special Rapporteurs Database 2010–2020.

VATICAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000, 2004, 2009, 2011, 2015, 2019.

On 2 March 2020, the Vatican archives regarding World War II were made accessible to the public, with the purpose to shed light, among other things, on the role of Pope Pius XII (1876–1958) in connection with the Holocaust [see NCH Annual Reports 1998, 2000, 2004, 2011, 2015].²³²

VENEZUELA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2003–2004, 2006, 2009–2010, 2012, 2014, 2017–2019.

The authorities reported that, as of June 2019, 44 people were detained and 33 arrest warrants were issued for people allegedly responsible for killings during demonstrations in 2017 and 2019. Authorities claimed that five agents of FAES (a special police force created in 2017 to combat drug trafficking and criminal organizations, replacing in 2019 the Operaciones de Liberación y Protección del Pueblo, OLPs, “Operations to Liberate and Protect the People,” in security operations) were convicted of attempted murder and other crimes for events occurred in 2018, and that another 388 FAES agents were under investigation for alleged crimes committed in 2017 and 2019. Impunity for human rights abuses, however, remained the norm. In July 2019, the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) reported that factors contributing to impunity included “lack of cooperation by security and armed forces with investigations,” “the tampering with crime scenes” by security forces, the de facto immunity of senior officials, and lack of judicial independence.²³³

VIETNAM

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2006, 2009–2013, 2016–2017, 2019.

In January 2019, a new cybersecurity law entered into effect, despite concern expressed at both the domestic and international level that it could criminalize a broad swath of online expression. Article 8 of the law prohibited people from “distorting history, denying revolutionary achievements, destroying the national solidarity block,” and “providing false information, causing confusion amongst the ²³² “Vatican Opens Archives of Holocaust-era Pope Pius XII,” BBC News (2 March 2020).

²³³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 628.

Citizens, [and] causing harm to socioeconomic activities.” Article 16 of the law, similarly, set out an overly broad definition of what constituted propaganda against the state, including “insulting the [Vietnamese] people, the national flag, national emblem, national anthem, great men, leaders, famous people or national heroes.” By its overbroad language and vague wording, the provision gave the authorities excessive and arbitrary powers to ban a range of legitimate activities. The Press Law prohibited publishing or broadcasting information which was against the Republic, including anything that distorted, defamed or negated the administration, distorted history, undermined the implementation of international solidarity or caused division among people.²³⁴

See also United States.

²³⁴ Amnesty International, Human Rights in Asia-Pacific: Review of 2019 (London: AI, 2020), 66; Centre for Law and Democracy, Restrictions on Civic Space Globally: Law and Policy Mapping Series, vol. 1, Asia Pacific Region (Halifax: CLD, July 2020), 65.

WESTERN SAHARA

See Morocco / Western Sahara.

YEMEN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2003, 2010, 2013–2016, 2018–2019.

On 3 September 2019, the United Nations Group of Eminent International and Regional Experts on Yemen reported that all parties to the conflict (September 2014 – September 2019) damaged and destroyed cultural property. The old city of Sana'a, with its unique architecture and Islamic heritage, had been impacted by airstrikes since 2014. In Ta'izz, Al-Qahira (the Cairo Castle) sustained significant damage. The city of Sa'dah was heavily affected, also predominantly as a result of airstrikes, including the historic old city and the historic mosque of Imam al-Hadi (partially destroyed in May 2015). The ancient citadel of Baraqish, an archaeological protected site in al-Jawf governorate, was destroyed in 2014. During the confrontations in Aden in 2015, the renowned al-Husseini Shia Mosque (built at the end of the 19th century) in the Craiter area under the control of Houthis-Saleh forces, was partially destroyed during a coalition airstrike in July 2015. Once the Southern Resistance took over the area, they renamed it the Mosque of the Sunni Martyrs. The seventh-century Ahmed al-Fazah Sufi Mosque and Mausoleum in al-Hudaydah (Hodeida) were destroyed in June 2018 while the area was under the control of the United Arab Emirates-backed Giants Brigades. In 2014, the National Museum of Ta'izz, while under occupation by the Houthis, was shelled by the Resistance forces, which took it over in August 2015. In February 2016, the Houthis shelled the museum causing extensive damage. Similarly, in Aden, Houthi-Saleh fighters took control over the Military Museum (founded 1918), establishing therein a military warehouse and a secret detention facility. In addition to its looting by the Houthis, a coalition airstrike struck the museum in July 2015, destroying the northeast wing of the museum. There was also great concern for the old town of Zabid, Yemen's capital from the 13th to the 15th century, and the archipelago of Socotra. In Zabid, a large collection of more than 1,000 manuscripts was removed from the Zabid museum.²³⁵

In early 2020, the Houthis imposed sectarian academic materials, including new curricula, and dismissed opposing faculty members at public universities in Houthi-held provinces such as Sana'a, Ibb, Dhamar, Umran and Hajjah. At the University of Sana'a, for example, Houthis introduced the following courses: Military Media, Contemporary History of Yemen, the Arab-Israeli Conflict and National Education. The new material was reportedly largely imported from Iran and linked to the legacy of Hussein al-Houthi, a key Houthi military leader. The strategy was meant to transform universities into recruitment hubs for the Houthis.²³⁶

²³⁵ “UNESCO Condemns the Intentional Destruction of a Historical Mosque and Mausoleum in the Hodeida Governorate of Yemen” (press release; 30 October 2018); Situation of Human Rights in Yemen, Including Violations and Abuses Since September 2014: Report of the Detailed Findings of the Group of Eminent International and Regional Experts on Yemen (UN Doc. A/HRC/42/CRP.1) (3 September 2019), paragraphs 845–857; Mwatana for Human Rights, The Degradation of History: Violations Committed by the Warring Pasts against Yemen's Cultural Property (Sana'a: Mwatana; November 2018).

In April 2020, the Ministry of Culture accused the Houthis of tampering with old manuscripts (including of the Great Mosque in Sana'a), seizing rare manuscripts and databases, dismissing employees qualified to preserve antiquities and replacing them with non-specialists and loyalists to the group. Activists and government sources confirmed that the Houthis, since their coup against the legitimate government in 2014–2015, had looted and smuggled antiquities, historical manuscripts, artifacts and collections to fund their activities.²³⁷

The armed conflict in Yemen (2015–present) has resulted in the largest humanitarian crisis in the world; parties to the conflict killed and injured thousands of Yemeni civilians. According to the Yemen Data Project, more than 17,500 civilians were killed and injured since 2015, and a quarter of all civilians killed in air raids were women and children. More than twenty million people in Yemen were experiencing food insecurity; ten million of them were at risk of famine. Since March 2015, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates (UAE) led a coalition of states in Yemen against Houthi forces that, in alliance with former President Ali Abdullah Saleh, took over Yemen's capital, Sana'a, in September 2014. In September 2019, a United Nations (UN) Group of Eminent Experts on Yemen stated that "The parties to the conflict in Yemen are responsible for an array of human rights violations and violations of international humanitarian law. Some of these violations are likely to amount to war crimes." The Group also stated that several world powers, including the United States, the United Kingdom, and France, may be complicit in war crimes in Yemen through arms sales and intelligence support given to the Saudi-led coalition. The parties failed to acknowledge any responsibility for violations and refused to take any meaningful steps to remedy the situations in which they occurred. This resulted in a pervasive lack of accountability, which heightened disregard for the protection of the Yemeni population and fomented a climate of impunity.

Despite mounting evidence of violations of international law by the parties to the conflict, efforts toward accountability had been inadequate. However, on 20 June 2019, the United Kingdom (UK) government agreed to suspend arms sales to Saudi Arabia after the Court of Appeal in London ruled that the government's refusal to consider the latter's laws-of-war violations in Yemen before licensing arms sales was unlawful. The ruling required the UK government to reconsider its decision on arms sales to Saudi Arabia. The UK was appealing the court decision. Despite multiple congressional efforts in the United States (US) to end US arms sales to Saudi Arabia that could be used unlawfully in Yemen, ²³⁶ "Houthis Continue to Target Yemen's Higher Education Sector," Asharq al-Awsat (8 January 2020).

²³⁷ "Houthis Tamper With Yemeni Manuscripts, Govt Calls on UNESCO to Interfere," Asharq al-Awsat (4 April 2020).

President Donald Trump used his veto power to block such efforts and continued his support to Saudi Arabia, American's largest weapons buyer. France was under pressure to stop its arms sales to members of the Saudi-led coalition after a surge in its sales to Saudi Arabia. A positive step was the extension of the mandate of war crimes investigators in Yemen by the UN Human Rights Council in September 2019 after the group found evidence of grave violations by all sides in the conflict.²³⁸

See also Syria.

²³⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2020: Events of 2019 (Washington: Human Rights Watch, 2020), 646–647.

ZAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2009, 2015.

See Rwanda.

ZIMBABWE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2001, 2004, 2006, 2008–2015, 2018.

See Ethiopia.

INTRODUCTION

This twenty-fifth *Annual Report of the Network of Concerned Historians (NCH) contains news about the domain where history and human rights intersect, in particular about the censorship of history and the persecution of historians, archivists, and archaeologists around the globe, as reported by various human rights organizations and other sources. It mainly covers events and developments of 2018 and 2019.

Disclaimer. The fact that the NCH presents this news does not imply that it shares the views and beliefs of the historians and others mentioned in it.

Download this report at:

<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/19.pdf>

Cite this report as:

Network of Concerned Historians, Annual Report 2019

(<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/ar/19.pdf>).

For the complete set of NCH Annual Reports, see:

<http://www.concernedhistorians.org/content/ar.html>

Or click:

					2019	2018	2017	2016	2015
2014	2013	2012	2011	2010	2009	2008	2007	2006	2005
2004	2003	2002	2001	2000	1999	1998	1997	1996	1995

All Annual Reports (1995–2019) were compiled by Antoon De Baets.

Please send any comments to antoondebaets@concernedhistorians.org

AFGHANISTAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2016, 2018.

ALBANIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2012, 2015–2018.

In May 2019, after a legal challenge by BIRN Albania (Balkan Investigative Reporting Network Albania) initiated in March 2016, an appeals court ordered the declassification of annual reports compiled by the Communist-era secret service Sigurimi in 1980–1989 and statistics on the number of Albanians under its active surveillance in that period. The court dismissed the argument of the current State Information Service (SHISH), which has controlled a large part of the Sigurimi archive since the fall of Communism, that such information should be kept secret in perpetuity. The ruling, which cannot be appealed, upheld a first-instance court decision from November 2016.¹

See also Serbia/Kosovo.

ALGERIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 2001–2018.

During the armed conflict of 1992–2000, the security forces, allied militias, and armed Islamist groups battling the government killed more than 100,000, according to estimates, and forcibly disappeared several thousand whose fate remains unknown. The 2006 law implementing the Charter on Peace and National Reconciliation granted legal immunity to perpetrators of grave abuses. It also criminalized acts of speech that “denigrate” state institutions or security forces in relation to their conduct during that conflict. The law promised compensation for families of “disappeared” persons but brought them no closer to learning what happened to their missing relatives.

On 6 June 2018, the appeals court in Relizane upheld a two-year prison sentence against blogger Abdullah Benaoum for social-media publications accusing the authorities and the Algerian army of being responsible for several massacres of civilians and the disappearance of thousands during the internal armed conflict (1992–2000). The charges were based both on penal code articles prohibiting the defamation of public institutions and article 46 of the Charter for Peace and National Reconciliation, which prohibited exploiting the wounds of the “‘National Tragedy’ to harm the institutions of Algeria” or tarnish its image internationally. Benaoum was serving his term at the end of 2018.²

¹ Gjergj Erebara, “BIRN Wins Appeal to Declassify Albanian Secret Police Files,” Balkan Insight (29 May 2019).

On 7 May 2019, a group of students at the University of Tizi Ouzou used violent force to obstruct an on-campus event commemorating the 39th anniversary of the Berber Spring (a series of peaceful protests in 1980 supporting Berber cultural and linguistic rights in Algeria that followed the cancelation of a speech by Berber poet Mouloud Mammeri at the University of Tizi Ouzou). Students had organized the event, entitled “From the Berber Cultural Movement of 1980 to the Popular Movement of February 2019,” to discuss the Berber Spring. The event apparently drew parallels between the Berber Spring and the nationwide pro-democracy protests that had taken place since February 2019. A group of students reportedly entered the campus auditorium where the commemoration was taking place and demanded its cancelation, reportedly attacking some of the event’s attendees and throwing a tear gas canister. Shortly thereafter, the speakers fled the venue and the event was abandoned. On 8 May 2019, the rector of the University of Tizi Ouzou condemned the violence.

Since 1980, Algerians as well as the Kabyle across North Africa have commemorated the anniversary of the Berber Spring on 20 April. On 18 April 2001, during preparations for the 21st anniversary of the Berber Spring, an 18-year-old student was killed whilst in police custody in Tizi Ouzou. The incident sparked riots and confrontations between civilians and the security forces which spread through the region and resulted in the deaths of around 123 protestors. It became known as the Black Spring. As a result of the 2001 events, a Citizens’ Movement was created which has since propelled other political movements to front the cause of Kabyle identity.³

ANGOLA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2003, 2009, 2017.

² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 25–26, 27–28.

³ Scholars at Risk, “University of Tizi Ouzou” (7 May 2019); Yasmina Allouche, “Algeria’s Repression of the Berber Uprising,” Middle East Monitor (20 April 2017).

ARGENTINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2018.

As of November 2018, the Attorney-General's Office reported 3,007 people charged, 867 convicted, and 110 acquitted of crimes committed by the last military junta (1976–1983). Of 599 cases alleging crimes against humanity, judges had issued rulings in 2003. Prosecutions were made possible by a series of actions taken in the early 2000s by Congress, the Supreme Court, and federal judges annulling amnesty laws and striking down pardons of former officials implicated in the crimes. As of November 2018, 128 people who were illegally taken from their parents as children during the dictatorship had been identified. Many were reunited with their families. In May 2018, an appeals court upheld the criminal conviction of 12 people accused of participating in Operation Condor, a regional strategy to coordinate repressive efforts by dictatorships in several Latin American countries. They were sentenced to up to 25 years in prison for participating in an illicit association that kidnapped 103 people. The large number of victims, suspects, and cases made it difficult for prosecutors and judges to bring those responsible to justice while respecting their due process rights. Argentine law allowed judges to send inmates age 70 and older to serve their time under house arrest. The Attorney-General's Office reported in September that 641 pretrial detainees and convicted prisoners were under house arrest. In 2016, the government said it would not appeal judicial rulings granting house arrest to pretrial detainees and convicted prisoners.⁴

Twenty-five years after the 1994 bombing of the Argentine Israelite Mutual Association (AMIA) in Buenos Aires that killed 85 people and injured more than 300, no one has been convicted of the crime. The investigation stalled when Iran, which Argentina's judiciary suspects of ordering the attack, refused to allow Argentine investigators to interview Iranian suspects in Argentina. In 2013 Argentina and Iran signed a memorandum of understanding (MOU) that allowed an international commission of jurists to review evidence and question Iranian suspects—but only in Tehran—likely rendering the interviews inadmissible in an Argentine court. A federal court declared the MOU unconstitutional; the Mauricio Macri administration did not appeal. Red notices—a form of international arrest warrant—that the government requested from Interpol to detain several Iranians implicated in the attack remained in force. In September 2018, President Macri called on Iranian authorities to collaborate with the investigations during his speech at the United Nations General Assembly. In January 2015, Alberto Nisman, the prosecutor in charge of investigating the bombing, was found dead in his home with a single gunshot wound to the head and a pistol beside him matching the wound. His death came just days after he had filed a criminal complaint accusing then-President Cristina Fernández de Kirchner and her foreign affairs minister of conspiring with Iran to undermine the investigation. A federal court dismissed Nisman's complaint, but, following an appeal, in 2016 the judiciary ordered the case reopened. In March 2018, an appeals court upheld a decision ordering the pretrial detention of Fernández de Kirchner for her alleged role in the cover-up. It was not implemented because she had parliamentary immunity as a senator. As of November 2018, courts had not determined whether Nisman's death was suicide or murder. In 2015, several officials—including former President Carlos Menem, his head of intelligence, and a judge—were put on trial for alleged interference with the initial investigation into the bombing. The trial continued at the end of 2018.⁵

⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 34–35.

See also Ecuador.

ARMENIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2006, 2010, 2014–2016.

AUSTRALIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2001, 2003, 2007–2009, 2014–2016, 2018.

Between 1939 and 1944, Barney Waria (1873–1948), reportedly the last initiated Ngadjuri man, was extensively interviewed about the Aboriginal Ngadjuri people and culture by anthropologist-in-training Ronald Berndt (–1990). In 1994, Berndt's wife and fellow anthropologist Catherine died. Her will, written in 1993 and following her husband's wishes, stipulated a 30-year embargo (until 2024) on a subset of their extensive collection of papers, including the Waria field notebooks stored in the Berndt Museum at the University of Western Australia. In November 2017, Waria's grandson Vince Copley senior ([1937–]) and three other archaeologists from Flinders University and the University of Queensland demanded access to the notebooks to anthropologist John Stanton, the literary executor of Ronald and Catherine Berndt's estate. Copley expressed the wish to read them with his adult children before he died in order to give them a fuller picture of their Ngadjuri ancestry. Between 1936 and 1944, Waria had worked with three anthropologists (Norman Tindale, Charles Mountford, and Ronald Berndt). Copley argued that Berndt's field notes were intellectual property jointly held by Aboriginal ⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 37–38.

Elders, such as Barney Waria, and that the university should re-assess the legal basis for the embargo. Stanton confirmed that the notebooks containing Waria's interviews had been read by people outside the Berndt Museum on only two occasions, both times after South Australia Supreme Court writs. The notebooks written by Tindale and Mountford were readily available in libraries and museums.⁶

In 1977, a court had ruled that Nomads of the Australian Desert (Adelaide 1976), a book by anthropologist Charles Mountford (1890–1976) about Central Australian Aboriginal lifestyles, art, and myths, had to be withdrawn from sale in the Northern Territory because it reproduced images of tribal sites and items of cultural and religious significance forbidden to uninitiated members of the Pitjantjatjara people. The Pitjantjatjara Council proved that an obligation of confidence was placed on Mountford when he took the photographs during a 1940 field trip. In 1982, the court ruled that more than 100 slides taken by Mountford and dealing with secret ceremonies belonged to the Pitjantjatjara Council.⁷

AUSTRIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2001, 2005–2007, 2009, 2018.

AZERBAIJAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–1998, 2008–2013, 2015–2018.

Authorities held dozens of critics in prison for up to 30 days following pro forma court hearings on bogus misdemeanor charges, including six members of the opposition REAL political party after they had organized a peaceful march in Baku in May to mark the centennial anniversary of the Azerbaijan Republic.⁸

In December 2018, writer Akram Aylisli was once again prevented from attending an international literary event in Switzerland in January 2019. [See also NCH Annual Reports 2013 and 2016.]⁹

⁶ Claire Smith, Gary Jackson, Geoffrey Gray, Vincent Copley, "Who Owns a Family's Story? Why It's Time to Lift the Berndt Field Notes Embargo," The Conversation (13 September 2018).

⁷ M. Blakeney, "The Protection of Traditional Knowledge under Intellectual Property Law," European Intellectual Property Review (2000), 255; T. Janke, Our Culture: Our Future; Report on Australian Indigenous Cultural and Intellectual Property Rights (1998), 72–74; J. Ritchie, ed., Australian Dictionary of Biography, vol. 15 (Melbourne 2000), 432.

⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 55.

⁹ International PEN, "Azerbaijan: Harassment of Writer Must End" (19 December 2018).

BAHRAIN

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2008–2012, 2015–2017.

BANGLADESH

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001, 2004–2006, 2008–2018.

On 9 June 2018, the International Crimes Tribunal (ICT) investigation agency handed over the documents of four war crimes cases (Abdul Quader Molla, Salauddin Quader Chowdhury, Chowdhury Moeen Uddin, Ashrafuzzaman Khan) to the Directorate of Archives and Libraries. [See also NCH Annual Reports 2011 and 2013–2017.]¹⁰

See also Myanmar.

BELARUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2000, 2005–2007, 2009–2011, 2014–2018.

Police arbitrarily detained at least 110 people in connection with peaceful protests held in Minsk and other cities on 25 March 2018, traditionally celebrated by the opposition as Freedom Day (the anniversary of the creation of the Belarusian People’s Republic or Belarusian National Republic in 1918). In the lead-up to the rally in Minsk, police arrested opposition leader Mikalay Statkevich and three rally organizers. Courts sentenced them to up to 10-days’ detention. Police detained seven members of the Belarusian Helsinki Committee and Viasna while they monitored the rally in central Minsk, charging six with “participating in unauthorized mass events” and additionally charging one with “disobeying a police officer.” All were released the same day, and in April 2018 they filed appeals against unlawful actions by police. An official inquiry found no police misconduct. In August 2018, the charges against the activists were dropped due to the statute of limitations. [See also NCH Annual Reports 2009 and 2017–2018.]¹¹

In [April] 2019, officials used bulldozers to demolish 70 “illegally erected” crosses marking Kurapaty

¹⁰ “Archiving of War Crimes Starts,” Daily Star (10 June 2018).

¹¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 76.

[Kuropaty], a site of Stalinist mass executions near Minsk discovered in 1987–1988. The crosses formed an unofficial memorial. Officials estimated that about 30,000 victims of the Stalinist terror were buried at Kuropaty, but independent historians said that as many as 200,000 were shot there by Soviet secret police in the 1930s and 1940s. Fifteen civil society activists were detained by police. In March 2019, President Alexander Lukashenko criticized those who had placed the crosses at Kuropaty. “We’re going to restore order at Kuropaty, so that there are no demonstrations with crosses around the perimeter,” he told a public meeting. No government memorial has been placed at Kuropaty.¹²

BELGIUM

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002–2004, 2006, 2008, 2010–2012.

See Burundi, Rwanda.

BELIZE

Previous Annual Report entries: 2014.

BOLIVIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2018.

Bolivia has prosecuted only a few of the officials responsible for human rights violations committed under authoritarian governments in the period 1964–1982, partly because the armed forces have at times refused to give information to judicial authorities about the fate of people killed or forcibly disappeared. A truth commission established by the government in August 2017 to carry out non-judicial investigations of grave human rights abuses committed during that period continued to operate in 2018. The commission, which would provide information to prosecutors and judges trying to convict those responsible for abuses, was originally required by law to publish a report on its findings by August 2019, but in May the Plurinational Assembly (the legislature) allowed the president to extend the deadline by one year.¹³

¹² “Belarus Demolishes Crosses at Soviet-era Execution Site,” BBC News (4 April 2019).

¹³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 79.

BOSNIA and HERZEGOVINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2018.

In July 2018, Bosnia and Herzegovina signed a joint Declaration on War Crimes at a summit meeting on the Western Balkans with regional and European Union leaders, committing to assist efforts to bring perpetrators of human rights crimes to justice. However, the Bosnian government did not support a civil society-backed initiative to establish a regional truth commission, known as RECOM. With the closure of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) in December 2017, the prosecution of war crimes in domestic courts took on a new importance. But in practice, progress in Bosnia remained slow. A revised National War Crimes Processing Strategy had been waiting approval by the Council of Ministers since February 2018. The revised strategy aimed to improve the process of determining which cases merit handling by the State Court War Crimes Chamber and prosecutor, and which could be dealt with in entity, district, and cantonal courts.

There were 114 cases for war crimes before the State Court involving 296 defendants as of September 2018. Between January and September 2018, the court delivered 29 verdicts, 14 convictions, 12 acquittals, and three partial acquittals. The court delivered seven verdicts for conflict-related sexual violence, five of which were convictions. Between January and September 2018, the Supreme Court of Republika Srpska, which tries war crimes cases in that entity, received seven war crime cases, four of which resulted in convictions and three of which were being processed at the end of 2018. One of the four convictions was for conflict-related sexual violence. Statistics for cantonal courts in the federation were not available at the end of 2018. In January 2018, the State Court confirmed a genocide indictment against former Bosnian Serb Interior Minister Tomislav Kovac. He was accused of controlling the police forces involved in capturing, detaining, and executing up to 8,000 Bosniak men in Srebrenica in 1995.

Several cases were dealt with during the year by the residual Mechanism for International Criminal Tribunal (MICT) set up to deal with any outstanding issues arising from the ICTY caseload. In April 2018, former Bosnian Serb wartime President Radovan Karadzic in the appeal hearings at the MICT against his March 2016 conviction at the ICTY for genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes, denied the charges and demanded a new trial. Prosecutors urged the judges at the MICT to reject Karadzic's appeal and change his sentence to life in prison.¹⁴

On 14 August 2018, the National Assembly of Republika Srpska (RS) voted to annul a 2004 report that had acknowledged that Bosnian Serb forces had violated humanitarian law by killing thousands of ¹⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 86–87.

Bosniaks during the 1995 Srebrenica massacre. RS president Milorad Dodik argued that it contained “false data” and that it was created under pressure from the international community’s High Representative in Bosnia at the time, Paddy Ashdown. He said that it did not include crimes against Serbs. The RS Assembly ordered the RS government to draw up a new report, which was to discuss Srebrenica in 1992–1995, including “the suffering of Serbs in and around Srebrenica.” The decision was not backed by Bosniak and Croat members of the RS Assembly and sparked negative reactions from Bosniak politicians who condemned the move as an electoral gesture.

In February 2019, RS established two commissions to probe wartime crimes in Srebrenica and Sarajevo. The move was criticized from many sides as unhelpful for achieving truth and justice and as an attempt to rewrite and deny history.¹⁵

BOTSWANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2018.

BRAZIL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2018.

The perpetrators of human rights abuses during military rule from 1964 to 1985 were shielded from justice by a 1979 amnesty law that the Supreme Court upheld in 2010, a decision that the Inter-American Court of Human Rights ruled violated Brazil’s obligations under international law. Since 2012, federal prosecutors have charged more than 40 former military officers and other agents of the dictatorship with killings, kidnappings, and other serious human rights abuses. Lower courts dismissed most of the cases, while the Supreme Court halted two, pending re-examination of the amnesty law.

In July 2018, the Inter-American Court of Human Rights condemned Brazil’s handling of the case of journalist Vladimir Herzog, whom state agents tortured and killed in 1975. The court ruled that killing should be considered a crime against humanity and ordered Brazilian institutions to recognize that this type of crime is not subject to statutes of limitation. In compliance with the ruling, federal prosecutors re-opened the Herzog investigation.¹⁶

¹⁵ Danijel Kovacevic (BIRN), “Bosnian Serb MPs Annul Report Acknowledging Srebrenica,” Balkan Insight (14 August 2018); Mladen Lakic, “Western Diplomats Criticise Bosnian Serb Srebrenica Commission,” Balkan Insight (8 February 2019); Filip Rudic, “Bosnian Serb War Commissions ‘Seeking to Revise Truth’: Academics,” Balkan Insight (21 February 2019).

¹⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 99.

In the run-up to the presidential elections of 28 October 2018, historian Janaína de Almeida Teles (1967–) and her mother Maria Amélia [Amelinha] de Almeida Teles were interviewed on television about their experience as victims of torture under the military dictatorship during the broadcast time of one of the two presidential candidates, Fernando Haddad. Promptly, both were subjected to a wave of attacks on social media (including death threats) by adherents of the other presidential candidate, Jair Bolsonaro (who won the elections). In December 1972 Maria Amélia de Almeida Teles and her husband, two members of the Partido Comunista do Brasil (PCdoB), were imprisoned and tortured in the DOI-Codi detention center in São Paulo, including by the prison’s director, colonel Carlos Alberto Brilhante Ustra. Janaína Teles and her brother, then five and four years respectively, were kidnapped by the Operação Bandeirante (Oban), also under Ustra’s command, and forced to attend the torture sessions of their parents. In 2008, the Tribunal de Justiça (Court of Justice) in São Paulo declared that Ustra had been a torturer. Punishment for his crimes was prevented by the 1979 amnesty law. Janaína Teles was specialized in the history of the military dictatorship (1964–1985).¹⁷

On 29 March 2019, judge Ivani Silva da Luz barred a planned celebration marking the anniversary of the 31 March 1964 military coup. He said that the celebration, ordered by President Jair Bolsonaro and to be carried out by the Defense Ministry, was not “compatible with the process of democratic reconstruction” and that commemorative dates had to be approved by the Congress. On 26 March 2019, the Federal Public Prosecutor’s Office (MPF) had declared that celebrating the dictatorship would be celebrating “an unconstitutional regime responsible for serious crimes of violation of human rights” and that “This initiative sounds like an apology for the practice of mass atrocities and therefore deserves social and political repudiation.” On 29 March 2019, Fabián Salvioli, United Nations Special Rapporteur on the Promotion of Truth, Justice, Reparations and Guarantees of Non-Recurrence, declared that “Attempts to revise history and justify or condone gross human rights violations of the past must be clearly rejected by all authorities and society as a whole ...” On 30 March 2019, however, appeals judge Maria do Carmo Cardoso overturned the ban, allowing the government’s argument that Brazilian democracy was strong enough to support a “pluralism of ideas” and saying that commemorating the coup was not rewriting history nor hiding the truth.

Bolsonaro, a former army captain, had defended the celebration, stating that the aim was to remember the era rather than commemorate military rule itself. He viewed the 1964 events not as a coup but as a necessary intervention to spare the country from Communist domination. He repeatedly praised one of the dictatorship's most notorious torture chiefs, Carlos Alberto Brilhante Ustra [see previous entry]. He also denied that Portuguese colonizers (1500–1821) had been responsible for slavery here and blamed Africans instead. Public broadcaster EBC also stopped using the words “coup” and “dictatorship,” referring to the period as the “military regime.”¹⁸

¹⁷ Carla Osmo, personal communication (25 October 2018); Nina Schneider, personal communications (25–26 October 2018); Comissão Nacional da Verdade, Relatório, volume 1 (Brasília 2014) [<http://cnv.memoriasreveladas.gov.br>], 368–369, 385, 407, 410, 954; “Edson e Janaína Teles,” Memórias da Ditadura; Aluizio Palmar, “Mortos e desaparecidos políticos: reparação ou impunidade?” Documentos Revelados (29 June 2012); Roney Domingos, “Julgamento mostra que ferida do regime militar ainda não sarou,” (1 November 2006); Antoon De Baets, “The Censorship of History and Fact-Finding in Brazil (1964–2018),” in Nina Schneider, ed., The Brazilian Truth Commission in the Latin American Context: Local, National, and Global Perspectives (New York and Oxford: Berghahn, 2019), 68–85.

In early April 2019, President Jair Bolsonaro and then Education Minister Ricardo Vélez advocated revising the history textbooks to paint the dictatorship in a more favorable light. They denied that the 1964 military ousting of democratically elected President João Goulart was a coup. Vélez referred to the 21 years of military rule (1964–1985) as “a democratic regime by force which was necessary at the time” and said that the toppling of Goulart was “an institutional shift, not a coup against the constitution at the time.” He also said that there would be a “progressive shift” in history textbooks to reflect “a wider version of history.” The president of the Brazilian Association of Textbooks, Cândido Grangeiro, was very critical of the plan.¹⁹

In mid-April 2019, the government ordered the closure of two working groups responsible for finding and identifying the bodies of people forcibly disappeared during the military dictatorship (1964–1985). By order of Decree 9,759, it shut down the work of the Perus Working Group (PWG), responsible for identifying over a thousand bones found in a mass, clandestine grave in Perus, west of São Paulo, and the Araguaia Working Group (AWG), responsible for the search and identification of remains of Araguaia guerrilla fighters who battled the dictatorship in the Amazon rainforest between the states of Para and Tocantins in the 1970s. [See also NCH Annual Reports 1999, 2005, 2008–2012 and 2015.]²⁰

¹⁸ Ishaan Tharoor, “The Grim History that Brazil’s President Wants to Celebrate,” Washington Post (27 March 2019); “Bolsonaro’s Coup Celebration Barred by Judge,” BBC News (30 March 2019); “Brazil Judge Overturns Ban on Bolsonaro’s Coup Celebration,” BBC News (31 March 2019); “Brazil Must Reconsider Plan to Celebrate Military Coup Anniversary, Says UN Expert,” (press release; 29 March 2019); Lucinda Elliott & Tom Phillips, “Bolsonaro’s Pledge to Return Brazil to Past Alarms Survivors of Dictatorship,” Guardian (22 October 2018); Samantha Pearson, “Bolsonaro Takes Aim at Brazil’s History,” Wall Street Journal (12 April 2019).

¹⁹ “Brazil Textbooks ‘To Be Revised To Deny 1964 Coup’,” BBC News (4 April 2019); Samantha Pearson, “Bolsonaro Takes Aim at Brazil’s History,” Wall Street Journal (12 April 2019); Katy Watson, “How Brazil’s Culture Wars Are Being Waged in Classrooms,” BBC News (7 May 2019).

²⁰ Ramzy Baroud, “Brazil’s Bolsonaro Terminates Investigation Teams Identifying Remains of Dictatorship Victims,” Telesur (23 April 2019).

BULGARIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–1998, 2002, 2006, 2009, 2012, 2015–2017.

History teacher and political candidate Emil Jassim filed four defamation cases against several media outlets, who had spread untrue and defamatory claims that he had been involved in “anti-Bulgarian propaganda.” Prior to filing the cases, he had been the victim of threats and intimidation for his attempts to encourage interethnic dialogue and for his defense of the rights of minority groups in Bulgaria. He was assaulted after filing the cases.²¹

In February 2019, Russian Ambassador to Bulgaria Anatoliy Makarov was asked when Russia would return the Bulgarian government archives from the period 1923–1944 taken to the USSR after the Communist takeover in September 1944. He replied that Bulgaria could receive copies but that “the originals cannot be handed over in accordance with Federal Law No. 64 of 15 April 1998 [‘On Cultural Valuables Displaced (to the USSR) as a result of World War II and Located on the Territory of the Russian Federation’].” He added that some of the archives had been returned in 1949 and 1958. The documents had been seized “from different Bulgarian institutions and by different representatives of the Soviet government, or by the Allied Control Commission in connection with the preparation of the Nuremberg process.” In 2009, the Bulgarian government had formally asked Moscow to return the seized archives. The Russian law violated the Hague Conventions of 1907 and 1954 and the 1949 Geneva Conventions. Instead of following international law, Soviet leader Joseph Stalin had established special “Trophy Brigades” to ransack museums, castles, and state coffers, seize millions of cultural treasures, state archives, and gold in Germany and Eastern Europe and transport them to the USSR. As Bulgarian researchers made requests for copies of original documents, Moscow demanded exorbitant payments.²²

BURKINA FASO

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001, 2004, 2005, 2013, 2015–2018.

²¹ Michel Forst, United Nations Special Rapporteur on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders, World Report on the Situation of Human Rights Defenders (December 2018), 415.

²² Margarita Assenova, “Moscow Refuses to Return Bulgarian Archives,” polygraph.info (7 March 2019).

BURUNDI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2001–2003, 2005–2015, 2017–2018.

On 1 July 2019, Burundi's 57th Independence Day, President Pierre Nkurunziza renamed national landmarks in his independence-day speech to reflect the historical contribution of the majority Hutu ethnic group. The renaming was meant to “remind Burundians of their history” and “to remove names that emerge from betrayal and bad behavior brought in by colonialism.” Nkurunziza was a former Hutu rebel leader who became the second president to be chosen in democratic elections in 2005, after the end of a civil war. The National Stadium, named after Louis Rwagasore (the first prime minister, assassinated before Burundi attained independence in 1962), was renamed Heroes Stadium; the main airport in Bujumbura was renamed Melchior Ndadaye airport (after Burundi's first democratically elected president, an ethnic Hutu who only ruled for three months in 1993 before he was assassinated after his reforms antagonized the Tutsi-dominated army); the 3rd September Street (marking the day that former military leader Pierre Buyoya overthrew his cousin President Jean-Baptiste Bagaza in 1987) was renamed Lt-Gen. Adolphe Nshimirimana Street (after Nkurunziza's presidential adviser and former head of the intelligence unit, who was assassinated in 2015); and the new presidential palace was renamed after King Ntare Rushatsi (reportedly Burundi's first king in 1680–1709).²³ ²³ “Burundi's Pierre Nkurunziza Renames Historical Landmarks,” BBC News (2 July 2019).

CAMBODIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999–2018.

CAMEROON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010, 2012–2014, 2016.

CANADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000, 2002–2003, 2005–2006, 2008–2009, 2012–2018.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau promised a “renewed, nation-to-nation relationship with Indigenous peoples,” but there remain considerable challenges to undoing decades of systemic discrimination. In February 2018, the government announced fundamental changes to how the federal government recognizes Indigenous rights and land title, vowing to work with Indigenous communities across Canada to develop a new legal framework to advance self-determination and self-governance. In May 2018, parliament passed a bill aimed at ensuring that the laws were in harmony with the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples.²⁴

In May 2018, the Senate passed Bill C-66, which expunged the records of individuals who were prosecuted because of their sexuality when homosexuality was criminalized in Canada. The bill followed Prime Minister Trudeau’s 2017 apology in the House of Commons for the historic mistreatment of sexual minorities by the government.²⁵

In early August 2018, the city of Victoria, British Columbia, decided to remove a statue of John A. Macdonald (1815–1891), which had been frequently vandalized. Known as the “Father of Confederation,” Macdonald had also established the so-called Residential Schools (a network of boarding schools for Indigenous peoples) and sponsored a highly racist Indian Act in 1876. In 2016, the Canadian Elementary School Teachers Association had voted in favor of taking the name Macdonald from schools. In June 2018, the Canadian Historical Association took the name off its prize for most ²⁴ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 120.

²⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 122.

influential Canadian history book of the year.²⁶

In [2018], a group of 41 individuals requested the Superior Court of Ontario to issue an order clarifying which privacy protections applied to the records transferred to the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation by the now closed Truth and Reconciliation Commission that investigated the history of the Indian Residential Schools System and the Independent Assessment Process. On 25 October 2018, the judge ruled that there is no requirement in the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement (IRSSA) “that provides that all personal information in the historical records should be permanently withheld.”²⁷

On 28 November 2018, an expert committee of three historians (Terry Copp, Jennifer Lonergan, and John Zucchi) submitted a report to the English Montreal School Board in which it concluded that Quebec high school history textbooks introduced for Grade 9 and 10 in September 2017 were “fundamentally flawed” and should be removed from all schools across the province. According to the report, by focusing narrowly on the history of French Quebecois, the textbooks largely ignored contributions by Quebec’s Indigenous, Anglophone, Italian, Greek, Portuguese, Jewish, Haitian, and other cultural communities as well as Blacks and women. The committee recommended continued use of the current books until June 2021 when corrected versions could be introduced.²⁸

In June 2019 it became known that the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) destroyed a Cold War dossier on Pierre Trudeau (Prime Minister in 1968–1979 and 1980–1984) in 1989 instead of turning it over to the national archives. The Trudeau file was among hundreds of thousands CSIS inherited in the 1980s after the RCMP (Royal Canadian Mounted Police) Security Service was dissolved following a series of scandals. When in 1988, James Kelleher, the federal minister responsible for CSIS at the time, directed the CSIS to sort through the files, some RCMP records (including voluminous files on Quebec premier René Lévesque and NDP leaders David Lewis and Tommy Douglas) were sent to Library and Archives Canada. In 2012 it was revealed that other records were destroyed, including dossiers on Prime Ministers John Diefenbaker and Lester Pearson. Still other files, judged to have current value at the time, went to CSIS’s active intelligence holdings.

The United States Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) kept watch on Trudeau for more than thirty years, charting his path from a public intellectual who visited the Soviet Union in the early 1950s through his time as a Liberal prime minister. The FBI's heavily censored, 151-page dossier was released under the United States Freedom of Information Act just months after Trudeau's death in September 2000. The Canadian press recently requested Trudeau's RCMP file under the access law from Library and Archives Canada and CSIS prior to the 20th anniversary of his passing in 2020. The archives replied that they did not have a Trudeau dossier; CSIS said its records indicated that the file was destroyed on 30 January 1989. CSIS also said that a 1988 analysis of the Trudeau file had concluded that it did not meet the threshold in the CSIS Act to justify being kept in service's active inventory and that it also fell short of criteria for preservation set out by the national archives.²⁹

²⁶ Jennifer Ackerman, “The Statue Dilemma: Indigenous Research Week Tackles Commemoration of Historic Figures,” Regina Leader-Post (28 September 2018); Mark Wolfram, “The Past and Future of the Iconoclast,” Historical Dialogues (4 September 2018).

²⁷ Superior Court of Justice, Ontario, Fontaine versus Canada (2018; <http://canlii.ca/t/hvq7c> or <http://www.concernedhistorians.org/le/599.pdf>); International Council on Archives Human Rights Working Group, Newsletter (November 2018), 12–13.

²⁸ Giuseppe Valiante, “Quebec High School History Textbooks Are ‘Fundamentally Flawed,’ Should Be Removed: Committee,” Canadian Press (29 November 2018).

See also China, Poland.

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2009, 2011–2012, 2014–2018.

While some local courts rendered convictions of armed group leaders implicated in serious crimes, overall impunity for past abuses and war crimes continued. The Special Criminal Court, a hybrid court with national and international judges and prosecutors that would focus on grave international crimes committed since 2003, officially began to function in October 2018. In May, parliament had passed the rules of procedure and evidence necessary for the court to proceed with investigations and prosecutions.

The Office of the Prosecutor at the International Criminal Court (ICC) continued its second investigation into the situation in the Central African Republic, into alleged war crimes and crimes against humanity committed in the country since 2012. On 17 November 2018, the ICC took Alfred Yékatom, known as “Rombhot,” into custody. Yékatom was an anti-balaka leader who had been charged with crimes against humanity and war crimes committed between December 2013 and August 2014. In September 2018, the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Council decided to continue the mandate of the UN independent expert on the Central African Republic for another year.³⁰

See also Congo (Democratic Republic), India.

²⁹ Jim Bronskill, “CSIS Destroyed Secret File on Pierre Trudeau, Stunning Historians,” CBC (15 June 2019).

³⁰ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 125, 128–129.

CHAD

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000–2012, 2015–2016.

CHILE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2018.

Chilean courts continued to prosecute former police and military officers responsible for human rights abuses during Augusto Pinochet's dictatorship (1973–1990). Notable convictions in 2018 included 24 former DINA (secret police) agents for their participation in the enforced disappearances of 119 leftist collaborators between 1974 and 1975, known as "Operation Colombo." In November 2018, Juan Emilio Cheyre, an officer under Pinochet and the commander-in-chief of the Chilean army from 2002 to 2006, was convicted for his role in the murder of 15 people following the 1973 coup. Cheyre was the most senior official to be held accountable for human rights abuses during the Pinochet years.

Chile continued to maintain a 50-year veil of secrecy over victim's testimony given to the National Commission on Political Prison and Torture from November 2003 to May 2004. The testimony revealed places of detention and torture methods used by the dictatorship, and identified former political prisoners and torture victims. The Michelle Bachelet administration had submitted a bill to lift the secrecy order in 2017, which had generated heated debate between those who believed revealing the testimony would violate victims' rights to privacy, and those who believed revealing it is necessary to fully punish the guilty and bring justice to victims.

In a controversial decision in July 2018, the Supreme Court granted conditional release to seven former police and military officers who had been serving sentences for human rights abuses committed during the Pinochet dictatorship. Members of opposition parties attempted to remove the three Supreme Court judges responsible for the decision, but Chile's congress rejected the attempt.³¹

³¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 130.

CHINA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2018.

In July 2018, the first Chinese-language edition of Red-Color News Soldier, a book by photographer Li Zhensheng ([1940]–), was published by the Chinese University Press of Hong Kong. Containing photos from a collection of more than 100,000 taken by Li during the Cultural Revolution (1966–1976) when he was working at a local newspaper in northeastern China, the Chinese edition could be distributed only within the semiautonomous city of Hong Kong but not on the mainland. The photos had been exhibited in more than 60 countries since 2003. For many years, Li had hidden his collection under the floorboards of his home in Harbin. Censors had rejected an earlier attempt to publish the Chinese-language edition without explanation. Although his photos could not be published in the mainland, Li had given lectures on the Cultural Revolution at several Chinese universities, including Tsinghua University and Peking University. A recent exhibition at the Capital Museum in Beijing featuring historical images taken by photographers for the official news agency Xinhua had made no mention of the Cultural Revolution.³²

On 1 August 2018, Zhou Yunzhong, an assistant history professor at the Department of History, School of Humanities, Xiamen (Amoy) University, Fujian province, was dismissed for expressing negative opinions about China and the Chinese on his microblog under the nickname “Donghai Daozi.” Reportedly criticizing the declining moral values and saying that “[t]he highest achievements of the Chinese people consist[ed] of lying, cooking the books and issuing fake contracts,” he was accused of “distorting historical facts, damaging the image of the Party and the country, hurting the feelings of the Chinese people, and crossing the bottom line of teachers’ morality and style.” Zhou received his BA from Nanjing University and his Ph.D. from Fudan University. He was a specialist in historical geography, the ancient Silk Road, and the history of Yuan and Ming Dynasties.³³

In late January 2019, one of the most popular shows, Story of Yanxi Palace, a historical fiction located in eighteenth-century Beijing during the Qing dynasty, was pulled from state-run television channels after an article in Theory Weekly (linked to state newspaper Beijing Daily) had criticized the “negative impact” of imperial dramas, singling out Story of Yanxi Palace. The show was, however, still available on the iQiyi network, the place that Story of Yanxi Palace was initially produced for and was first shown. The article listed several “negative impacts” of this and similar shows on Chinese society, like propagating a luxurious and hedonistic lifestyle, encouraging admiration for imperial life and a glorification of emperors overshadowing the heroes of today. Official ideas promoting the thought that the rise of China was peaceful and that China believes in harmony was contrasted with Story of Yanxi Palace, which painted an image of a China of intrigue, conspiracy, power struggles, conflict, commercialism, and consumerism.³⁴

³² Amy Qin, “A Photographer’s Quest to Reverse China’s Historical Amnesia,” New York Times (1 January 2019).

³³ “Teachers in Xiamen University Have Been Dismissed because of Wrong Statements,” Wao News (1 September 2018); “Together with Jie Jie Liang, Who Is the Donghai Dao Zi Who Was Dismissed by the Xiamen University?” (2 September 2018); Wong Lok-to & Shi Shan, “Professor Fired after Tweeting that Chinese ‘Lie, Commit Fraud and Poison Each Other’,” Radio Free Asia (4 September 2018).

On 11 February 2019, film director Zhang Yimou’s much anticipated latest feature, One Second, was withdrawn from the Berlin International Film Festival, officially for “technical reasons.” Based on a novel by Zhang’s frequent collaborator Yan Geling, the film was set during the Cultural Revolution (1966–1976) and followed a fugitive and a homeless girl who were drawn together by an enigmatic film reel. Zhang classic debut feature, Red Sorghum, had won the Golden Bear for best picture at the 38th Berlin International Film Festival in 1988.³⁵

Officials tried to silence Xu Zhangrun, a law professor at Tsinghua University in Beijing who had issued a series of essays that criticized the Chinese Communist Party and Xi Jinping, and called for a reappraisal of the 1989 Tiananmen massacre. In March 2019, Tsinghua suspended him, put him under internal investigation, and barred him from teaching and research. On 28 April 2019, security police in plain clothes kept watch as Xu gathered with two dozen friends and well-wishers to lay flowers at an inscribed stone memorial that commemorated Wang Guowei (1877–1927), a famous historian at Tsinghua who had committed suicide in 1927, for his “independence of spirit and freedom of thought.”³⁶

In March 2019, a Chinese online education company, VIPKid, that employs 60,000 teachers in the United States and Canada dismissed two American teachers for discussing the 1989 Tiananmen massacre and Taiwan with their students in China.³⁷

In the run-up to the centenary of the 4 May 1919 Revolution, officials told schools to guard against displays of discontent around 4 May. In 1989, the seventieth anniversary of the 4 May 1919 Revolution

³⁴ Andreas Illmer, “Yanxi Palace: Why China Turned against Its Most Popular Show,” BBC News (8 February 2019).

³⁵ Patrick Brzeski, “Berlin Film Festival: Zhang Yimou’s ‘One Second’ Withdrawn from Competition,” Hollywood Reporter (11 February 2019).

³⁶ Chris Buckley & Amy Qin, “Xi Praises a Student Protest in China – From 100 Years Ago,” New York Times (29 April 2019); Yojana Sharma, “Tiananmen Square a Topic that Still Can’t Be Studied,” University World News (25 May 2019).

³⁷ Louisa Lim, “After Tiananmen, China Conquers History Itself,” New York Times (2 June 2019); Julie Steinberg & Shan Li, “Chinese Education Startup Puts Western Teachers on Notice,” Wall Street Journal (21 March 2019).

inspired the massive Tiananmen square student protests which ended in a massacre on 4 June 1989. Lin Xianzhi, a writer in southern China, said that [in April 2019] publishers backed out of reissuing his 2012 book, “The Spirit of May 4,” which stressed the iconoclastic side of that time.³⁸

In late May 2019, a financial-information company, Refinitiv, partly owned by the news organization Thomson Reuters, removed articles related to the 1989 Tiananmen Square massacre from the feeds of its data terminals in China, complying with censorship demands. It prevented some articles that included mentions of the 1989 pro-democracy demonstrations from appearing on its Eikon software and mobile app in China. On 3 June 2019, Reuters reported that the Cyberspace Administration of China, which censored online speech, had threatened to suspend Refinitiv if it did not comply. A small number of people shared the news of the 1989 Tiananmen massacre by posting images that appeared upside down or were otherwise manipulated to fool censoring software.³⁹

On 31 May 2019—in the run-up to the 30th anniversary of the 1989 Tiananmen massacre, New Century Press, a Hong Kong–based publisher, published Zuihou de mimi: Zhonggong shisanjie sizhong quanhui “liusi” jielun wengao (The Last Secret: The Final Documents From the June Fourth Crackdown; 209 pages), a group of secret speeches that top officials delivered at an enlarged Politburo meeting of 19–21 June 1989, consolidating support for the armed repression, backing Deng Xiaoping’s order for the crackdown and Zhao Ziyang’s purge. New Century obtained the transcripts (and two sets of written remarks) from a party official who managed to make copies at the time. Bao Tong, the father of Bao Pu, the publisher of New Century Press, was a former top aide to Zhao Ziyang. Bao Pu also helped issue Zhao’s memoirs and a diary-like account by Li Peng, the Chinese premier who supported the crackdown.

In 2001, the magazine Foreign Affairs had published excerpts from The Tiananmen Papers, a series of official reports and meeting minutes that had been smuggled out of China and that documented the fierce debates and contentious decision-making that unfolded as the Chinese Communist Party reacted to the protests in the spring of 1989. [See also NCH Annual Reports 2001–2002.] The newly leaked speeches shed light on what happened after the crackdown, making clear the lessons party leaders drew from the Tiananmen crisis.⁴⁰

On 4 June 2019, police reportedly detained and interrogated Yang Shaozheng, a former Guizhou

³⁸ Chris Buckley & Amy Qin, “Xi Praises a Student Protest in China – From 100 Years Ago,” New York Times (29 April 2019).

³⁹ Marc Tracy, “In China, a Reuters Partner Blocks Articles on the Tiananmen Square Massacre,” New York Times (4 June 2019).

⁴⁰ Andrew Nathan, “The New Tiananmen Papers: Inside the Secret Meeting That Changed China,” Foreign Affairs (July–August 2019); “New Documents Show Power Games Behind China’s Tiananmen Crackdown,” ENM News (31 May 2019).

University professor of economics, in connection to social-media posts regarding the 1989 Tiananmen massacre. On the night of 3 June 2019, Yang reportedly described in a post on social-media platform WeChat the number of fatalities resulting from the army's crackdown on protesters at Tiananmen Square on 3–4 June 1989. The next morning, police reportedly detained Yang, accusing him of “picking quarrels and stirring up trouble.” After taking him into custody, officers reportedly handcuffed Yang to a chair and interrogated him for eight hours. Yang, however, managed to escape and fled to an unknown location. On 15 August 2018, Guizhou University had expelled Yang, in apparent retaliation for academic writings, including an article in which he raised questions over the economic costs of maintaining the Chinese Communist Party.⁴¹

Inner Mongolia

On 11 July 2018, Public Security Bureau personnel detained ethnic Mongolian historian Lhamjab A. Borjigin (1944–) in Xilinhot (regional capital of Xilin Gol League in the region's northwest), pending prosecution for his book Ulaan Huvisgal (China's Cultural Revolution), which was identified as a publication that advocated national separatism and undermined ethnic harmony. On 19 July 2018, he was indicted on charges of separatism and sabotaging national unity. Borjigin had gathered testimony of persecution during the Cultural Revolution (1966–1976) in Inner Mongolia (Southern Mongolia) and published his book in 2006, calling the events a “genocide.” In the book, he estimated that the campaign had taken the lives of at least 27,900 persons and that 346,000 persons had been imprisoned and tortured, detailing accounts of torture techniques. The book was rejected by major state-run Chinese publishing houses but eventually published by an underground press at the author's own expense. It was widely read among ethnic Mongolians. A second edition was issued and it was published in Cyrillic Mongolian scripts in Ulaanbaatar, Mongolia. In 2017, an abridged audio version was published. If convicted, he risked fifteen years in prison.⁴²

Xinjiang

In April 2017, musician Abdurehim Heyit (1964–), a dutar specialist and member of the Xinjiang Song and Dance Troupe who wrote many songs reflecting on Uyghur history and culture, was arrested and held without formal charge in Urumchi. The poet who wrote the lyrics, Abdurehim Abdulla, was arrested at the same time. Their arrest was most likely linked to the song “Atilar” (Forefathers). The song, which had previously been cleared by government censors, was about remembering past sacrifices made by the forefathers and called upon younger generations to respect them. Due to the phrase

⁴¹ Scholars at Risk, Incident (4 June 2019).

⁴² “China Holds Ethnic Mongolian Historian Who Wrote ‘Genocide’ Book,” Radio Free Asia (23 July 2018); Southern Mongolian Human Rights Information Center (SMHRIC), “Southern Mongolian Writer Faces Charges of ‘National Separatism’ and ‘Sabotaging National Unity’” (23 July 2018); American PEN, “Detention of Southern Mongolian Author is Putting Historical Inquiry on Trial” (25 July 2018).

“jenglerde shehit” (martyrs of war), however, it was interpreted as encouraging jihad and radicalism. Under the crackdown in Xinjiang which began in April 2017, expressions of ethnic pride—even those previously approved by state censors—were conflated with ethnic separatism and criminalized as Islamic extremism. Heyit was reportedly sentenced to eight years’ imprisonment.⁴³

At the end of 2017, Erkin Tursun, a history teacher by education, was detained. Tursun had graduated from the history faculty at Xinjiang University, hosted a show on Ili Television, and opened a school of music, arts, dance, and language for Uyghur children. Later, he directed a movie about the social problems facing Uyghurs, such as drug use and high divorce rates. In 2002 or 2003, he had gone to Japan on a cultural exchange program, traveling on a diplomatic passport. His wife, mathematics teacher Gulnar Telet, was also detained. In August 2018, their son Alfred, living in the United States, learned that Erkin Tursun received a prison sentence of between nine and eleven years on an unknown charge and might be held in Xinyuan prison near Kanas.⁴⁴

In November or December 2017, Rahile Dawut ([1966]–), an anthropologist and ethnographer who studied Uyghur traditions at Xinjiang University in Urumqi, and Gheyretjan Osman, a history and literature professor at the same university, were secretly detained together with three other academics after they had been called “the leading figures in Uyghur ideology” at Xinjiang University. They disappeared and were possibly interned in a so-called re-education camp. Uyghur academics with foreign links and specializing in Uyghur Muslim culture, language, or religion were particularly targeted in the crackdown on the Uyghur Muslim population of Xinjiang, which began in April 2017 as a campaign to clamp down on religious extremism, separatism, and terrorism, but had since broadened in scope to include anyone who was critical. The government purged so-called “two-faced” Uyghur teachers in particular, those who paid lip service to the Chinese Communist Party line but were suspected of secretly resisting the hard-line policies. Until recently, Dawut’s work was welcomed by Chinese officials: she had received grants and support from the Ministry of Culture. She had earned an international reputation as an expert on Uyghur shrines, folklore, music and crafts neglected by previous generations of scholars.⁴⁵

⁴³ Rachel Harris & Aziz Isa Elkun, “‘Uyghur Dutar King’ Detained in China,” Freemuse (1 November 2017); Kurban Niyaz, “Prominent Uyghur Musician Arrested Amid Ideological Purge in Xinjiang,” Radio Free Asia (2 November 2017).

⁴⁴ Uyghur Human Rights Project, Detained and Disappeared: Intellectuals Under Assault in the Uyghur Homeland (Washington: UHRP, October 2019), 13–14.

⁴⁵ Yojana Sharma, “Scholars Targeted as Uighur Purge Engulfs Universities,” World University News (28 September 2018); Chris Buckley & Austin Ramzy, “Star Scholar Disappears as Crackdown Engulfs Western China,” New York Times (10 August 2018); Uyghur Human Rights Project, The Persecution of the Intellectuals in the Uyghur Region: Disappeared Forever? (Washington: UHRP, October 2018), 5–6; Uyghur Human Rights Project, Detained and Disappeared: Intellectuals Under Assault in the Uyghur Homeland (Washington: UHRP, October 2019), 5.

In March 2018, Abdukerim Rahman (1941–), known as the father of folklore studies and a professor at Xinjiang University (1964–2011) in Urumqi, was taken to a “re-education camp,” apparently after charges of being a “two-faced” person. During the Cultural Revolution (1966–1976), he spent terms in prison and many of his collections were lost. In 1979, he was rehabilitated. In 1983, he started the first graduate program in Xinjiang Minority Literature at the university. In 2000 he became a founder of the Folklore Museum at Xinjiang University. He published more than twenty books, including History of Uyghur Culture. His book Uyghur Folk Literature was reprinted more than ten times. He published a 12-volume Encyclopedia of Uyghur Folk Literature, containing thousands of legends, folk tales, epic poems, ballads, and proverbs.⁴⁶

On 2 September 2018, Gulnar Obul (female), a professor from Kashgar University, Xinjiang, was dismissed for “two-faced activities” together with another professor and the university’s president and vice president. High-level cadres at the university led by a disciplinary committee from the XUAR (Xinjiang) Education Supervision Bureau said that the four were dismissed because they exhibited “separatist tendencies.” Their names were deleted from the university’s website. Obul had been detained for publishing an article about Uyghur culture and history (entitled “Dialogue on Cultural Formation in Xinjiang”) that included her opinions on religious extremism in 2016. An official said that while her views were praised at the time, they were now deemed “two-faced.” Her whereabouts were unknown.⁴⁷

In May 2019, Timothy Grose, an assistant professor of China studies at Rose-Hulman Institute of Technology, Terre Haute, Indiana, accused the chief editor of China and Asia: A Journal in Historical Studies (Brill), Han Xiaorong (a professor and head of the department of Chinese culture at Hong Kong Polytechnic University), of censoring his November 2018 review of anthropologist Tom Cliff’s Oil and Water: Being Han in Xinjiang (University of Chicago Press), an ethnographic study of members of the majority Han ethnic group who had settled in Xinjiang. Han had requested the deletion of an opening paragraph that contextualized the book in light of Chinese Communist Party policy toward members of the Uyghur ethnic minority group in the region of Xinjiang, discussing the detention of Uyghurs in “concentration re-education centers.” Grose did not want to delete the passage and when the journal was slow in responding, he offered the review to the British online magazine The Asia Dialogue, which published it without changes.⁴⁸

⁴⁶ Amy Anderson, “How Is Abdukerim Rahman Surviving without His Books?” Art of Life in Chinese Central Asia (2 October 2018); Uyghur Human Rights Project, The Persecution of the Intellectuals in the Uyghur Region: Disappeared Forever? (Washington: UHRP, October 2018), 6.

⁴⁷ “Xinjiang’s Kashgar University Sacks Four ‘Two-Faced’ Uyghur Professors,” Radio Free Asia (19 September 2018); Uyghur Human Rights Project, The Persecution of the Intellectuals in the Uyghur Region: Disappeared Forever? (Washington: UHRP, October 2018), 7.

⁴⁸ Elizabeth Redden, “Another Alleged Case of Censorship Roils China Studies,” Inside HigherEd (20 May See also Iran, Korea (South), Vietnam.

COLOMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2004, 2006–2018.

The 52-year armed conflict (1964–2016) between the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC) and the government officially ended with a peace accord in 2016, but violence associated with armed groups increased again in 2018 after initial declines following a 2015 FARC ceasefire. Civilians suffered serious abuses at the hands of the National Liberation Army (ELN) guerrillas, FARC dissidents, and paramilitary successor groups. Human rights defenders, journalists, indigenous and Afro-Colombian leaders, and other community activists faced death threats and violence. Violence associated with the conflict had forcibly displaced more than 8.1 million Colombians since 1985.

The 2016 peace agreement between the Colombian government and the FARC provided for the creation of a “Special Jurisdiction for Peace” (JEP; a special tribunal established to prosecute the conflict’s worst abuses) to try those responsible for gross human rights violations committed during the conflict. FARC guerrillas and members of the armed forces responsible for crimes against humanity and serious war crimes who fully cooperated with the new jurisdiction and confessed their crimes were subject to as much as eight years of “effective restrictions on freedoms and rights,” but no prison time. Throughout 2018, JEP magistrates prioritized four situations for analysis: kidnappings committed by the FARC; false-positive killings (from 2002 through 2008, army brigades across Colombia routinely executed civilians in what have come to be known as “false-positive” killings); army and FARC abuses against Afro-Colombian and indigenous people in three municipalities in the southern province of Nariño between 1990 and 2016; and FARC and army abuses committed in the northern zone of Urabá between 1986 and 2016.

In July 2018, lawmakers passed a law containing a provision that suspended, unless defendants requested otherwise, Special Jurisdiction prosecutions of soldiers of the Colombian Armed Forces until the government created a “special and differentiated process” for them. The provision, which was proposed by the Democratic Center—the party of former President Álvaro Uribe and President Iván Duque—and was being reviewed by the Constitutional Court at the end of 2018, could halt prosecutions for false-positive killings. Throughout 2018, the Democratic Center introduced in Congress other bills that would seriously undermine prosecutions against members of the armed forces, including by allowing soldiers to receive sentencing benefits regardless of whether they confessed their crimes. But these proposals had for the most part been withdrawn or fixed by lawmakers at the end of 2018. The Democratic Center falsely accused Special Jurisdiction magistrates of being biased against the armed forces. A bill that would name 14 additional judges in the Special Jurisdiction remained pending in Congress at the end of 2018.⁴⁹

On 29 November 2018, the Commission for the Clarification of the Truth, Coexistence and Non-Repetition was officially launched. It had to produce an analysis of more than fifty years of political violence and civil war in three years. Despite a ruling of the Constitutional Court earlier in 2018 that the commission would have access to all records, the armed forces tried to restrict access to its key archival files (including records of military intelligence agencies responsible for serious abuses and those linked to illegal paramilitary groups and drug traffickers). In addition, a smear campaign was waged against Father Francisco DeRoux, the human rights advocate who served as Commission president. Also in November 2018, Gonzalo Sánchez resigned his post as the director of the National Center for Historical Memory, saying that “the political atmosphere” had forced him to step aside. In an interview with El Espectador, he said that he feared the “political instrumentalization” of the center. Meanwhile, the records of insurgent groups like the FARC and the paramilitary AUC were reportedly in disarray, and most of them would probably never be recovered.⁵⁰

CONGO (Democratic Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2000, 2003–2018.

In June 2018, an appeals chamber at the International Criminal Court (ICC) overturned the war crimes and crimes against humanity convictions of Jean-Pierre Bemba, a former vice-president of Congo and leader of the Mouvement pour la Libération du Congo (Movement for the Liberation of the Congo). Bemba was found guilty of rape, murder, and pillage in March 2016 for crimes committed in the Central African Republic in 2002 and 2003. In September 2018, the appeals chamber sentenced him to twelve months for a related conviction of witness tampering, but this time had already been served. Bemba returned to Congo in August 2018. Interpreting witness tampering as a form of corruption prohibited by the Congolese electoral law for presidential candidates, Congo’s electoral commission later invalidated Bemba’s presidential candidacy in what appeared to be a politically motivated decision.⁵¹

⁴⁹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 151, 155–156.

⁵⁰ Michael Evans, “Colombia Truth Commission Opens Doors, but Faces Significant Barriers to Access.” National Security Archive (29 November 2018).

⁵¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 125, 128,

See also Uganda.

CONGO (Republic)

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004–2006, 2008, 2010–2012.

On 5–14 May 1999, Congolese refugees who had fled the civil war (1993–1999) crossed the river between the two Congos to return to their homeland. When they reached Brazzaville’s port, called “The Beach,” they went through a selection process. At least 353 of them were never seen again. Under pressure from the missing’s families, Congo’s parliament launched a probe in 2002, broadening the scope to cover all forced disappearances recorded in the country since 1992. A trial finally opened in Brazzaville three years later with fifteen defendants in the dock, mostly serving officers in the security forces. They were all acquitted in August 2005. However, the court ordered the state to pay compensation to close kin of 86 of the 353 missing men. Separately in France, several human rights NGOs went to court with a suit alleging “crimes against humanity, disappearances and torture.” The case, lodged in early 2002, targeted President Sassou-Nguesso and three senior officials in his regime and was still pending. In November 2007, the Ministry of Security and Public Order banned a commemoration for the missing planned by NGO’s and families of the victims, saying it would disturb public order. At the time, the authorities were hunting members of the rebel Ninja militia loyal to former Prime Minister Bernard Kolelas. Some of the missing were executed on the premises of the security forces, including the General Directorate of Presidential Security, according to a 2012 United Nations report based on testimony by people claiming to be survivors.⁵²

COSTA RICA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2010.

173.

⁵² Amnesty International, Report 2004 (London: Amnesty International, 2004), 45; Amnesty International, Report 2005 (London: Amnesty International, 2005), 86; Amnesty International, Report 2006 (London: Amnesty International, 2006), 98; Observatory for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders, Steadfast in Protest: Annual Report 2007 (Paris and Geneva 2008), 70; AFP, “The Missing of Brazzaville’s ‘Beach,’ 20 Years On,” JusticeInfo.Net (14 May 2019).

CÔTE D’IVOIRE

See Ivory Coast.

CROATIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2001, 2003–2013, 2015–2018.

In June 2018, the parliament passed legislation barring public access to archive materials on individuals aged 100 and over, living and deceased. The government argued that the law was meant to defend the “victims of communism” and aimed at protecting the privacy of the deceased, but critics said that the legislation served to silence research into the collaboration of the wartime Ustasha government with the Nazis. Former Croatian Culture Minister and historian Zlatko Hasanbegovic called the legislation “cowardly and underhanded.” An estimated 80,000 files, including those pertaining to the fascist Ustasha movement, would be closed to the public.⁵³

CUBA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–2002, 2006, 2010–2012, 2015–2016, 2018.

CYPRUS

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2005, 2008–2011, 2013, 2015–2018.

⁵³ Neta Bar and Israel Hayom Staff, “Historians Accuse Croatia of Covering Up World War II Crimes,” Jewish News Syndicate (17 July 2018).

CZECH REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997–1998, 2000, 2010, 2013–2018.

In August 2018, the inscription on a monument honoring Marshal Ivan Konev, who was twice designated a Hero of the Soviet Union by Soviet leader Joseph Stalin, was rewritten to highlight the marshal's prominent role in suppressing the Prague Spring in 1968.⁵⁴

On 18 January 2019, an unidentified man (1964–) seriously injured himself by setting himself on fire at Wenceslas Square in Prague as Czechs marked the 50th anniversary of the self-immolation on 19 January 1969 of history student Jan Palach (1948–1969) in protest at the Soviet invasion that crushed the Prague spring. The man was taken to hospital after bystanders doused the flames that enveloped him.⁵⁵

⁵⁴ Antony Kalashnikov, "Soviet War Memorials in Eastern Europe Continue to Strain Relations with Russia," The Conversation (20 August 2018).

⁵⁵ Reuters, "Man Sets Himself on Fire in Prague as Czechs Mark 1968 Protest" (18 January 2019).

DENMARK

Previous Annual Report entries: 2006–2007, 2013, 2016–2018.

In [November] 2018, Danske Slægtsforskere—the association of Danish genealogical researchers—published a part of the so-called Bovrup Archive, a list of DNSAP [Danish Nazi party] members. In 1945 the list had been copied and published in book form by members of the Danish Resistance who were angry that many ex-Nazis seemed to escape punishment. The original archive contained around 50,000 names, but for some reason the published version only contained 28,000. However, the 1945 book was subjected to a court injunction; it was not publicly available. Historians and other interested parties had to resort to scouring second-hand bookshops for copies. Danish data protection laws stated that persons must be dead for at least ten years before information about them could be revealed; consequently, only 5,265 names from the archive would be published.⁵⁶

DJIBOUTI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

Previous Annual Report entries: 2013.

⁵⁶ Stephen Gadd, "Danish Nazi Membership Archives Available Online for the First Time," CPH Post (2 November 2018).

ECUADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2005–2007, 2009–2018.

A truth commission set up by the Rafael Correa administration to investigate government abuses from 1984 to 2008 (from the beginning of the repressive presidency of León Febres Cordero until Correa took office) documented 136 cases of gross human rights violations involving 456 victims, including 68 extrajudicial executions and 17 disappearances. A special prosecutorial unit created in 2010 to investigate the cases had initiated judicial procedures in less than ten of them, and final rulings were rendered in only two. Both the investigation and judicialization of the remaining cases appeared to be completely stalled.⁵⁷

On 22 May 2019, historian Jaime Galarza presented a request at the Attorney-General's office to reopen the investigation on the alleged role of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and the Israeli Mossad in the 1981 murder of left-wing President Jaime Roldós Aguilera (in office August 1979—May 1981). In his book, "Who Killed Roldós," Galarza argued that the CIA and the Israelis were involved in the crime as part of Operation Condor in the region.

After Roldós's death information was misplaced, people were threatened, peasants from the alleged area of the accident disappeared, and some military personnel involved or aware of the event died in plane crashes. After a CIA document was released in 2014 revealing that Ecuador assisted in Operation Condor, the office of former Attorney-General Galo Chiriboga opened an investigation into Roldós's death, but it had been filed without explanation.⁵⁸

See also Argentina.

EGYPT

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2001, 2003, 2006–2007, 2010–2018.

In [2018], the censors banned In the Last Days of the City, a film about the two years which preceded the 2011 Egyptian Revolution by British-Egyptian actor and producer Khalid Abdalla. The film was pulled from the Cairo International Film Festival and banned in Egypt. Abdalla sued the censorship board. He said that footage of signs of discontent such as scenes of striking workers, Islamist marches, ⁵⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 180.

⁵⁸ "Ecuador: Request to Reopen Probe on CIA Killing of Jaime Roldos," Telesur (22 May 2019).

and police brutality could have been problematic.⁵⁹

In mid-April 2019, historian of religions and assistant professor Adam Duker resigned from the Abdulhadi H. Taher Chair of Comparative Religions (2016–2019) at the American University in Cairo (AUC), saying in his letter that AUC has been in breach of contract since July 2017 by denying him the title included in his contract and retaliating against him for his refusal to stop using it. A historian of the sixteenth-century French religion wars, Duker taught about Christianity, Islam, Judaism, Buddhism and Hinduism in a “Religions of the World” survey course. Saudi businessman Tarek Taher (son of Abdulhadi H. Taher) persuaded the AUC leadership to withdraw the title awarded in Duker’s contract after the latter had refused his demand that he advocate for Islam over other religions in his teaching. At a meeting in January 2017, Taher had also demanded the right to pre-approve all of Duker’s lectures and course materials and insisted that he not teach any non-Abrahamic religions. The chair (2002–2019) had been the largest endowment for the humanities in the Arabic-speaking world (at approximately $3.5 million). In April 2019, the AUC Faculty Senate Grievance Committee had formally determined that Duker did not commit faculty misconduct and expressed concern that Taher had been allowed to interfere in academic matters and influence the decision to strip Duker of his title.⁶⁰

EL SALVADOR

Previous Annual Report entries: 2001–2018.

In July 2016, the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional a 1993 amnesty law that prohibited the prosecution of war crimes and crimes against humanity, committed overwhelmingly by state security forces, according to the United Nations Truth Commission, during the country’s civil war (1979–1992).

In March 2017, former military commanders were brought to trial for their alleged responsibility for the 1981 El Mozote massacre, in which 978 civilians died, including 553 children, and soldiers committed mass rapes. The trial was ongoing at the end of 2018. Four other cases remained open but had not reached trial, including one related to the assassination of Archbishop Oscar Romero as he celebrated mass in a hospital chapel in March 1980, a day after his radio homily begging soldiers to stop their repression and killings. In October 2018, a judge ordered the arrest of ex-Captain Álvaro Saravia for his alleged role in planning the crime.⁶¹

⁵⁹ Jemimah Steinfeld, “An Undelivered Love Letter,” Index on Censorship, 47 no. 4 (winter 2018), 61–63.

⁶⁰ Gilgamesh Nabeel & Mina Nader, “American University Cairo Religion Professor Loses Post in Academic Freedom Fight,” Religion News Service (14 May 2019); Elizabeth Redden, “A Donor’s Demands, a Revoked Chair,” Inside HigherEd (24 May 2019).

⁶¹ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 193.

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: —.

Beginning 16 July 2018, the government held a five-day “National Dialogue and Political Interaction,” an event that President Teodoro Obiang initiated to bring political opposition activists and groups, including those in exile, into dialogue with the government and ruling party. Obiang promised amnesty to political prisoners and opposition members who were sentenced by an Equatoguinean court while living in exile. However, most opposition groups and leaders remained wary of this promise and did not attend the dialogue. Moreover, the imprisoned Citizens for Innovation (CI) members were not released until 22 October 2018, when Obiang issued a pardon for them and 48 other prisoners. Obiang did not provide any official reason for the pardon.⁶²

ERITREA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2008, 2016, 2018.

See Ethiopia.

ESTONIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2010, 2015, 2017.

ETHIOPIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998–2011, 2015–2018.

In [2008], historian Abebaw Ayalew was forced to quit his position at Addis Ababa University and accept a lectureship at the School of Fine Arts because “he had not followed the official historical explanations.” In August 2018, he was again working at Addis Ababa University.⁶³

⁶² Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 201.

⁶³ Koert Lindijer, “Het is wennen, te kunnen zeggen wat je vindt,” NRC Handelsblad (1–2 September 2018), 21.

After he acceded to power in 2 April 2018, President Abiy Ahmed reportedly reintroduced the independence of history teaching at the Addis Ababa University.⁶⁴

In July 2018, Ethiopia and Eritrea resolved a decades-long stalemate, signed a peace agreement and agreed to implement the 2002 international boundary commission decision. Relations between the countries had been violent or frozen since their troops clashed in the border town of Badme in 1998.⁶⁵

On 13–16 September 2018, tens of thousands of people gathered to welcome back leaders of the Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), one of the groups removed from a list of terror organizations earlier in 2018 by Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed. In the days leading up to the OLF leaders' arrival, supporters of the group trickled into the capital Addis Ababa carrying and waving its controversial, multicolored flag. Many Oromo—the country's largest ethnic group representing about a third of the 100 million inhabitants—saw the OLF and flag as a resistance against decades of alleged discriminatory practices by elites belonging to other ethnic groups. However, the move angered some residents in Addis Ababa—who saw the flag as a symbol to separate the Oromia region from the rest of Ethiopia—leading to clashes that left more than 20 people dead. The flag riots reportedly unfolded as young Oromos, popularly known as Qeerroo, started painting sidewalks with their patriotic flag colors and removing other flags. Abiy, himself an Oromo, condemned the violence. Police called on citizens to respect each other's freedom of expression, including carrying flags of their own choice.⁶⁶

⁶⁴ Koert Lindijer, "Het is wennen, te kunnen zeggen wat je vindt," NRC Handelsblad (1–2 September 2018), 21.

⁶⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 213.

⁶⁶ AFP, "Violence in Ethiopian Capital ahead of Opposition Group's Return," News24 (13 September 2018); "Riots Leave Ethiopian Capital in a State of Tension," Prensa Latina (14 September 2018); Abdi Latif Dahir, "Ethiopia's Flag Protests Show a Nation Fighting to Become United," Quartz Africa (17 September 2018).

FIJI

Previous Annual Report entries: 2004, 2006, 2010.

FINLAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2011–2012, 2017.

FRANCE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1999, 2001–2009, 2011–2014, 2016–2018.

See Congo (Republic), Egypt, Poland, Turkey, Vietnam.

GABON

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016, 2018.

GAMBIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2016–2018.

GEORGIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2003, 2010–2012, 2014, 2016.

The International Criminal Court continued its investigation into war crimes and crimes against humanity allegedly committed in the lead-up to, during, and after the August 2008 war between Russia and Georgia over South Ossetia. [See also NCH Annual Reports 2010–2012 and 2016.]⁶⁷

GERMANY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997–2000, 2003, 2006–2013, 2015–2017.

On 29 August 2018, a golden statue of Turkish President Recep Erdogan was removed in Wiesbaden. Part of the Wiesbaden biennial art exhibition with the theme of “Bad News,” the four-meter tall statue looked like the one of Saddam Hussein that was taken down after the American invasion in Baghdad in 2003. The city declared that it could not guarantee public order and safety of Erdogan’s followers and opponents at the location where it had been shown for two days.⁶⁸

In [2018], the Hamburg State Archive destroyed an estimated one million death certificates dating from 1876 to 1953 (including those from the Nazi era). The archive’s director, Udo Schäfer, admitted that it was a mistake: he thought that it were duplicates, adding that almost all the information contained in the files could be found in other archived documents, like death registries and in files from prisons or ⁶⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 247.

⁶⁸ Rob Vreeken, “Gouden standbeeld Erdogan in Wiesbaden na twee dagen verwijderd, kunstwerk deed emoties hoog oplopen,” Volkskrant (29 August 2018).

hospitals).⁶⁹

While on a tour in the Sachsenhausen Memorial, a former Nazi concentration camp outside Berlin, in July 2018, members of the far-right populist party Alternative for Germany (AfD) interrupted the guide to cast doubt on the existence of Sachsenhausen's gas chambers and diminish the crimes committed in Nazi death camps. AfD co-leader Alexander Gauland referred to the Nazi era as a "speck of bird poop" in Germany's otherwise admirable history, while Björn Höcke, leader of AfD's most extreme wing, called Berlin's Holocaust memorial a "monument of shame" and defended Holocaust deniers. In January 2019, Foreign Minister Heiko Maas wrote in a newspaper that "Right-wing populist provocateurs diminish the Holocaust, knowing that such a breach of taboo will garner maximum attention."⁷⁰

On 27 September 2018 during its General Assembly in Münster, the Verband der Historiker und Historikerinnen Deutschlands (Association of German Historians) adopted a Resolution on Current Threats to Democracy. It stated, among others, that "In Germany as in numerous other countries, excessive attacks on democratic institutions are currently threatening the foundations of the political order. As historians, we feel it is our duty to warn against these threats. Dispute is essential in a pluralistic society, but it must follow certain rules if it is not going to undermine democracy itself." It singled out five basic attitudes for democratic interaction in politics and society: "for historically sensitive speech, against discriminatory terms"; "for parliamentary democracy and a pluralistic culture of debate, against populism"; "for unified European action, against nationalist unilateralism"; "for humanity and the rule of law, against the slander of migrants"; and "for critical engagement with the past, against the political misuse of history."⁷¹

See also China, Croatia, Denmark, Greece, Hungary, Israel, Italy, Netherlands, United Kingdom.

⁶⁹ JTA, "Holocaust Historian Slams Germany for Shedding Millions of Death Records," Haaretz (23 September 2018).

⁷⁰ Emily Schultheis, "Teaching the Holocaust in Germany as a Resurgent Far Right Questions It," The Atlantic (10 April 2019).

⁷¹ "Resolution des Verbandes der Historiker und Historikerinnen Deutschlands zu gegenwärtigen Gefährdungen der Demokratie / Resolution of the Association of German Historians \(VHD, Verband der Historiker und Historikerinnen Deutschlands\) on Current Threats to Democracy." (Stellungnahme; Münster 27 September 2018).

GHANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2002, 2004–2008, 2017.

In October 2016, the authorities announced that they would remove a statue of the Indian leader and pacifist Mahatma Gandhi (unveiled by Indian President Pranab Mukherjee in June 2016) from the University of Ghana's Legon campus in Accra and relocate it. The statue had sparked protests over Gandhi's racism: when he lived in South Africa at the turn of the 19th and 20th centuries, he had advocated the superiority of Indians over black Africans and used the derogatory term kaffir to refer to native Africans. On 12 December 2018, the campus-based news outlet Radio Univers reported that the statue had been taken down.⁷²

GREECE

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1999, 2004–2011, 2013–2018.

In December 2018, the children of General Athanassios Chrissochoou, the commander and governor of Greek Macedonia during the occupation (from April 1941) who collaborated with the Nazis, sued three inhabitants of Thessaloniki, Aleko Gripas, Spiridon Saketta, and Triantafilou Mitafidi, for insulting their father's memory because they had lobbied the municipality to remove the latter's name from one of the streets and replace it with the name of historian Alberto Nar (1947–2005), a descendant of Jewish victims of the wartime genocide in Thessaloniki. Although the initiative had been approved by the municipal council on 26 March 2018, the family sued and demanded 600.000 euros in damages and six months' imprisonment for each of the defendants.⁷³

On 20 January 2019, protesters clashed with police in Athens at a big rally to oppose the government's deal with Macedonia (FYROM) on changing the latter's name into North Macedonia. Police fired tear gas at some of those attending the protest which attracted tens of thousands. The name Macedonia was sensitive to many Greeks who said it implied a claim on the Greek province of the same name. In mid-January, Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras narrowly survived a vote of no confidence after his junior ⁷² Abigail Abrams, "Ghana Will Remove 'Racist' Gandhi Statue From Its Oldest University," Time (6 October 2016); "Petition: Gandhi's Statue at the University Of Ghana Must Come Down" (12 September 2016); "University of Ghana Removes Mahatma Gandhi Statue at the Centre of Anti-Racism Protests," Scroll.in (13 December 2018).

⁷³ Children of General Athanasios Chrysochoou versus three persons (10 December 2018); Antonis Liakos, personal communication (31 December 2018 and 6 March 2019); "La Réhabilitation de la mémoire historique et ses négateurs: En soutien à des citoyens de Salonique poursuivis en justice" ([2019]) coalition partner withdrew support. Some members of the parliament received death threats intended to influence their vote.⁷⁴

GRENADA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007.

GUATEMALA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995–2018.

In 2011 and 2012, five former members of the military had been convicted for their roles in the 1982 Dos Erres massacre, in which army special forces killed around 200 civilians as part of their counterinsurgency policy during the armed conflict (1960–1996). In May 2013, former President Efraín Ríos Montt was found guilty of genocide and crimes against humanity for the assassination of over 1,771 Mayan Ixil civilians in 105 massacres, when he was head of state (1982–1983). He was sentenced to 80 years in prison, but ten days later the Constitutional Court overturned the verdict on procedural grounds. The retrial began in March 2016 but it was suspended two months later because of outstanding legal challenges. The trial restarted in October 2017 with just one session per week. Ríos Montt died in April, before the trial concluded. In September 2018, the other defendant in the case, the former head of intelligence, was acquitted.⁷⁵

On 3 August 2018, Gustavo Meoño Brenner, the director of the Archivo Histórico de la Policía Nacional (AHPN; Historical Archive of the National Police), was abruptly dismissed. AHPN's remaining staff of more than 50 people was placed on temporary contract. Oversight for AHPN was transferred from the national archives, where it had functioned since 2009, to the Ministry of Culture and Sports. The Ministry and the Guatemalan office of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP, responsible for administering international donations to the AHPN) agreed to eliminate the position of director in favor of a “technical liaison” and hired a trained archivist with no human rights experience to replace Meoño. They also dismissed all but one member of the investigative staff dedicated to locating and analyzing police records containing information about illegal state terror campaigns during the 1970s and 1980s. Since its discovery in 2005, the AHPN had crucially contributed to human rights trials with its records serving as legal evidence for the prosecution. This enraged powerful military intelligence and operational officers who were responsible for human rights violations in the 1980s have sought to harass, intimidate, and shut down the human rights and justice organizations contributing to the prosecutions. This probably caused the government of President Jimmy Morales to seek to control the AHPN and dismiss its director.

⁷⁴ “The Man Who Has Focused on One Word for 23 Years,” BBC News (2 August 2017); “Greece Macedonia: Name Dispute Draws Mass Protest in Athens,” BBC News (4 February 2018); Guy Delauney, “Macedonia: Why the Row with Greece over the Name Runs so Deep,” BBC News (8 February 2018); “Macedonia Name Dispute: PMs Watch as Ministers Sign ‘Historic’ Deal,” BBC News (17 June 2018); “Macedonia Parliament Agrees to Change Country’s Name,” BBC News (11 January 2019); “Macedonia and Greece: Clashes in Athens over Neighbour’s Name Change,” BBC News (20 January 2019).

⁷⁵ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 249–250.

On 27 May 2019, Interior Minister Enrique Degenhart (in charge of the police) declared his intent to assert his control over the AHPN, including new restrictions on AHPN access and possible legal action against “foreign institutions” holding digitized copies of the documents (the Federal Archives of Switzerland and the University of Texas at Austin). Degenhart referred to the collection as the “Historical Archive of the National Civil Police”—incorrectly imposing the name of the security force he headed for the National Police, which was abolished in 1997 by the peace accords for its role in assassinating, disappearing, and torturing Guatemalan citizens during the internal conflict (1960–1996). After major protests, the agreement with the Ministry of Culture was extended for six months. [See also NCH Annual Report 2013.]

Guatemalan media outlets reported in late March 2019 that both the chief of the General Archive of the Supreme Court (Rossana Aracely Alvarado Cortez) and the head of the Court’s Information System (Daniel Girón) were pressured to resign by Justice Department (Organismo Judicial) officials. Another archive under stress was the collection of records of the former “Presidential General Staff” (Estado Mayor Presidencial—EMP, dissolved in 2003), located inside the General Archive of Central America, Guatemala’s national archives since 2012.⁷⁶

⁷⁶ Kate Doyle, “Guatemala Police Archive under Threat,” National Security Archive (13 August 2018) (including petition text); Asociación Latinoamericana de Archivos (ALA), “Comunicado ante la situación del Archivo Histórico de la Policía Nacional de Guatemala” (letter to the United Nations Development Programme office in Guatemala and Minister of Culture) (Mexico DF, 7 November 2018); Asociación Latinoamericana de Archivos (ALA), “Comunicado ante la situación del Archivo Histórico de la Policía Nacional de Guatemala” (letter to Inter-American Commission on Human Rights) in International Council on Archives Human Rights Working Group, Newsletter (November 2018), issue 108, 17–19; Archiveros sin Fronteras Internacional, “Declaración sobre la situación del Archivo Histórico de la Policía Nacional de Guatemala \(AHPN\)” (s.d. [November 2018]); International Council on Archives Human Rights Working Group (Giulia Barrera), Letter to United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights Michelle Bachelet (15 November 2018) in International Council on Archives Human Rights Working Group, Newsletter (November 2018), issue 108, 15–16; National Security Archive, “Imminent Threat to Guatemala’s Historical Archive of the National Police (AHPN)” (Press release, 30 May 2019); Mandato del Grupo de Trabajo sobre las Desapariciones Forzadas o Involuntarias; y del Relator Especial sobre la promoción de la verdad, la justicia, la reparación y las garantías de no repetición, Letter to Prime Minister of Guatemala (30 May 2019); Kate Doyle, “Imminent Threat to Guatemala’s Historical Archive of the National Police \(AHPN\),” National Security Archive (30 May 2019); NCH Campaign (2018).

GUINEA

Previous Annual Report entries: 2007, 2009–2018.

There was meaningful progress in the investigation of the 28 September 2009 stadium massacre, in which security forces killed over 150 peaceful opposition supporters, and raped dozens of women. In December 2017, the panel of Guinean judges investigating the massacre concluded over seven years of investigations. At least 13 suspects were indicted, including Moussa Dadis Camara, the then leader of the military junta that ruled Guinea in September 2009, and two high-ranking officials currently serving in the security forces. The investigation ended before judges had located and exhumed mass graves believed to contain more than 100 victims. However, the trial had yet to start at the end of 2018. In April 2018, the Ministry of Justice created a steering committee to prepare for the trial by securing funding and ensuring adequate security for witnesses and magistrates. The committee, which included key figures in the national justice system, United Nations representatives, and international donors, had only met three times over a seven-month period, but it had identified a location and budget for the trial.⁷⁷

GUINEA-BISSAU

Previous Annual Report entries: 1999, 2012, 2015.

GUYANA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997.

⁷⁷ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 255–256.

HAITI

Previous Annual Report entries: 1997, 2000–2003, 2006, 2008–2009, 2013–2018.

As of November 2018, a re-opened investigation into crimes committed by former President Jean-Claude Duvalier's collaborators remained pending. Duvalier died in 2014, six months after the Port-of-Prince Court of Appeal ruled that the statute of limitations could not be applied to crimes against humanity and ordered that investigations against him should continue for human rights crimes allegedly committed during his tenure as president (1971–1986). Allegations of violations included arbitrary detentions, torture, disappearances, summary executions, and forced exile.⁷⁸

HONDURAS

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1998, 2001–2002, 2009–2015.

HONG KONG

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996. See China.

HUNGARY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1995, 1997, 2004, 2007–2018.

In 1946, historian John Lukacs (1924–2019) emigrated to the United States because he did not want to live in Communist-dominated Hungary. From partly Jewish origin, he had lived in hiding after the German occupation of Hungary in 1944. He wrote mainly about the history of World War II.⁷⁹

On 28 December 2018, the authorities removed a statue of Imre Nagy (1896–1958), pro-reform Communist and hero of the 1956 anti-Soviet uprising executed in 1958, from Martyrs' Square in front of the parliament building (where it was erected in 1996) to Jaszai Mari Square, a northern location of ⁷⁸ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 260.

⁷⁹ NRC Handelsblad (5 December 2008) 7; "John Lukacs, Iconoclastic Scholar of History, Dies at 95." Washington Post (6 May 2019).

Budapest. It would be replaced by a monument to the victims of the Red Terror (a purge of anti-Communist forces by a short-lived Communist regime in 1919), which replicated one that stood there during the pro-Nazi rule of wartime Admiral Miklós Horthy (1868–1957), who fueled anti-Semitism. Some critics accused Prime Minister Viktor Orbán’s nationalist government of revising Hungary’s history, while its supporters argued that the aim was to return parts of Budapest to their pre-World War Two appearance, before the decades of Communist rule (1949–1989). On 16 June 1989, Orbán—then an anti-Communist activist—had addressed a rally celebrating Nagy’s reburial and rehabilitation.⁸⁰

See also Romania.

⁸⁰ “Hungary Removes Statue of Anti-Soviet Hero Imre Nagy,” BBC News (28 December 2018); Benjamin Novak, “Hungarians Fume as Statue of Former Leader Is Downgraded,” New York Times (28 December 2018).

INDIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–1997, 2000–2018.

On 16 October 2018, historian Ramachandra Guha, public intellectual and author of a two-volume biography of Mahatma Gandhi, announced that he had accepted a position at the private Ahmedabad University (AU), Gujarat, as a professor of humanities, but on 1 November he tweeted that he would not join the new position due to “circumstances beyond his control.” Pravin Desai, a leader of the student wing—Akhil Bharatiya Vidyarthi Parishad (ABVP)—of the local Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP), had declared to the press that ABVP had submitted a memorandum to AU on 19 October saying that it did not want Guha to teach at the university because he wrote “anti-national” books. They said that Guha’s writings “encouraged divisive tendencies, alienation in the name of independence of the individual, freeing terrorists in the name of independence of the individual, and separating Jammu and Kashmir from the Indian union.” They also referred to him as a Communist. Guha has been an outspoken critic of Hindu nationalist politics (represented by Prime Minister Narendra Modi’s BJP). Hours before refusing the teaching offer, Guha had compared Modi to Emperor Jean-Bédél Bokassa, the Central African Republic’s ruler (1966–1976) infamous for his cruelty, in a tweet. In late October, Guha had also criticized the Modi government over an expensive statue for Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, which was the world’s tallest statue.⁸¹

On 7 June 2019, Ram Puniyani ([1945]–), a former IIT Bombay (Indian Institute of Technology Bombay) professor and social worker known for his anti-Hindutva views, informed Mumbai police that on 6 June 2019 he got threat calls from an unidentified person who told him to stop the work that he was doing or that he would face the consequences (“dekh lenge.”) Puniyani had his own YouTube channel where he spoke on rationalist and anti-Hindutva issues. In some of his recent YouTube videos, Puniyani had criticized cow vigilantes and lynchings. He had also spoken about Pragya Singh Thakur’s assertion that Mahatma Gandhi’s murderer, Nathuram Godse, was a “patriot.” The video was titled “2nd Assassination of Mahatma Gandhi by Calling Nathuram Godse as Patriotic.” Puniyani had received similar threats a few years ago.⁸²

See also Ghana, Malawi.

⁸¹ Soutik Biswas, “Ramachandra Guha: How the Right Wing Hounded out a Gandhi Biographer,” BBC News (3 November 2018); Shuriah Niazi, “International Historian Bows to Right-Wing Pressure,” University World News (8 November 2018).

⁸² “Ex-IIT Professor Ram Puniyani Says He Got Threat Calls for Anti-Hindutva Stance,” Telegraph (8 June 2019).

INDONESIA

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2001–2002, 2004–2013, 2015–2018.

In August 2018, the national police chief, General Tito Karnavian, announced that police would reopen their investigation into the murder in 2004 of human rights defender Munir Thalib. Investigations and prosecutions in the case to date have failed to uncover the full circumstances of Munir’s killing or target the most senior officials believed responsible.⁸³

See also Netherlands.

IRAN

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996–2018.

In 1979, in the aftermath of the Iranian Revolution, the work of historian Ehsan Yarshater (1920–2018), Columbia University’s first chairman of Iranian Studies (1961–) and founder of its Center for Iranian Studies (1968–), was cut short. He was forced to suspend publication of the Encyclopedia Iranica, founded and edited (1972–2017) by him. Yarshater, who never returned to Iran after the revolution, had restarted the encyclopedia at Columbia University with a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities in the early 1980s.⁸⁴

On 29 August 2018, the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention concluded that Iran had no legal basis for the arrest and detention of American-Chinese Ph.D. history student Xiyue Wang, and that he should be released immediately. Mary Beth Norton, president of the American Historical Association, wrote a letter to Ayatollah Ali Khamenei expressing “deep concern” about Wang’s ten-year prison sentence. [See also NCH Annual Report 2018.]⁸⁵

⁸³ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 286.

⁸⁴ Amir-Hussein Radjy, “Ehsan Yarshater, Iran Scholar with a Monumental Vision, Dies at 98,” New York Times (18 September 2018).

⁸⁵ Website about Xiyue Wang: <https://sites.google.com/view/freexiyuewang>; United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, Opinion No. 52/2018 concerning Xiyue Wang \(Islamic Republic of Iran\) (29 August 2018); Middle East Studies Association, Letter to Ayatollah Ali Khamenei re Xiyue Wang (5 September 2018); Princeton University, “U.N. Committee Calls for Immediate Release of Princeton Graduate Student Imprisoned in Iran” (10 September 2018); “Statement from Wife of Xiyue Wang in Response to UN Committee Opinion Letter,” Facebook (10 September 2018); Scholars at Risk, Free to Think: Report of the Scholars at Risk Academic Freedom Monitoring Project (New York: SAR, 2018), 35; Jennifer Griffin & Lucas Tomlinson, “Wife of US Scholar Imprisoned in Iran Speaks Out: ‘His Only Crime Is He’s American’,” Fox News (15 January 2019); “UN Experts Urge Iran to Release Imprisoned American Scholar Xiyue Wang” (press

See also Argentina, United States, Yemen.

IRAQ

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2000–2018.

Correction: historian Bashar Awad Marouf [see NCH Annual Report 2014] was not killed in December 2013. He went into exile in Jordan. Apologies for this error.

Under international law some of the brutal crimes perpetrated by Islamic State (ISIS) since 2014 amounted to war crimes and possibly to crimes against humanity or genocide. In 2018, Iraq failed to pass legislation to make war crimes and crimes against humanity specific offenses under domestic law. Judges instead prosecuted ISIS suspects with the single charge of ISIS affiliation, under domestic counterterrorism legislation. The trials were generally rushed, based on a defendant's confession, and did not involve victim participation. Authorities did little to protect, gather, and use in criminal prosecutions evidence found at mass gravesites left by ISIS. The Iraqi government and Kurdistan Regional Government (KRG) conducted thousands of trials of ISIS suspects without a strategy to prioritize the worst abuses under Iraqi and international law.

Iraq also passed Law No. 20, Compensating the Victims of Military Operations, Military Mistakes and Terrorist Actions in 2009, creating governmental commissions to compensate Iraqis affected by terrorism, military operations, and military errors. Compensation commissions in areas that fell under ISIS control in 2014 had received thousands of compensation requests but had yet to pay out any claims from 2014 onward.

Based on a United Nations (UN) Security Council resolution adopted in September 2017, a UN investigative team was created to document serious crimes committed by ISIS in Iraq. By the end of 2018, the team had yet to properly launch investigations in Iraq.⁸⁶ release; 7 May 2019); "Wife Pleads for Release of Princeton Student Incarcerated in Iran While Doing Research on Dissertation," Committee of Concerned Scientists (9 June 2019); Laura Dean, "The Threat of War Brings New Fears to an American Hostage in Iran," New Yorker (24 June 2019); "UN Experts Urge Iran to Release Imprisoned American Scholar Xiyue Wang" (press release, 7 May 2019); Hua Qu, "My Husband Is Unjustly Imprisoned in Iran: The International Community Must Help," Washington Post (24 May 2019); NCH Campaign (2018; including two follow-ups).

See also Germany, United States.

⁸⁶ Human Rights Watch, World Report 2019: Events of 2018 (New York: Seven Stories Press, 2019), 297–298.

IRELAND

Previous Annual Report entries: 2000, 2002, 2004, 2006, 2013, 2015–2016.

ISRAEL

Previous Annual Report entries: 1996, 1998, 2000–2003, 2008–2014, 2016–2018.

On 27 June 2018, the Prime Ministers of Israel (Benjamin Netanyahu) and Poland (Mateusz Morawiecki) issued a joint declaration following the adaptation of the so-called Holocaust law in Poland [see NCH Annual Report 2018]. The semi-official Polish PKO Foundation placed full-page ads with the declaration in newspapers around the world. Critics said, however, that the declaration downplayed the role of many Poles who willingly cooperated with the Nazis. While it appeared to give the same prominence to those Poles who helped Jews and those who persecuted them, Yad Vashem stated on 5 July 2018 that “Poles’ assistance to Jews during the Holocaust was relatively rare, and attacks against and even the murder of Jews were widespread phenomena.” Others charged that it inaccurately compared anti-Semitism with anti-Polonism in the passage: “Both governments vehemently condemn all forms of anti-Semitism ... Both governments also express their rejection of anti-Polonism and other negative national stereotypes.” Education Minister Naftali Bennett rejected the joint statement as factually inaccurate and said that it would not be taught in Israel schools. He further called on Netanyahu to rescind it or bring it to a vote in the cabinet for approval. Opposition leaders joined Bennett’s calls. Leading Israeli Holocaust historian Yehuda Bauer called it “a betrayal of the memory of the Holocaust and the interest of the Jewish people.” In a reaction to all the accusations, Netanyahu said: “Regarding the Polish law, the goal of the contacts with the Polish government was to abrogate the criminal clauses in the Polish law that cast a pall of fear over research and free discourse regarding the Holocaust. This goal has been achieved.” On Wednesday 11 July 2018, the Knesset would debate a motion to hold a declarative vote denouncing the joint statement.⁸⁷

On 1 August 2018, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu reportedly called Swiss Foreign Minister Ignazio Cassis and asked that Switzerland stop funding Akevot, the Institute for Israeli-Palestinian Conflict Research, founded in 2014. A week later, Israeli Ambassador to Switzerland Jacob Keidar met ⁸⁷ “Joint Declaration of Prime Ministers of the State of Israel and the Republic of Poland” (27 June 2018); Raoul Wootliff and TOI Staff, Raphael Ahren, “Poles Launch Global Drive to Promote Holocaust Law Deal, Roiling Israeli Critics.” Times of Israel (5 July 2018); “Amid Criticism of Poland Holocaust deal, PM Says He’ll ‘Listen to Historians’.” Times of Israel (8 July 2018).

in Bern with officials from the Swiss Foreign Ministry's Middle East desk, handing over an unsigned document containing the same request and alleging that "[t]his Institute [Akevot] aims to locate evidence of policies or decisions in the archives of the State of Israel that led, in the opinion of the researchers at the Institute, to human rights violations and transfer the findings to the alleged victims ... The purpose—legal warfare against the State of Israel inside Israel and abroad." The document repeated allegations by right-wing organizations against Akevot, including some found in a report published by the group Ad Kan (founded in 2015) in July 2018. According to the newspaper Haaretz, Ad Kan's 38-page report contained a series of "deceptions and inaccuracies," including ill-founded allegations that Akevot "gather[ed] intelligence for the Swiss and Norwegian governments and [stole] Israeli secrets by working together with state archivists and putting its own people on the Supreme Council of Archives."⁸⁸

In the summer of 2018, the State Archives (a branch of the Prime Minister's Office) published a catalog of some 300,000 classified files (with their names, dates, and origin within the state bureaucracy), including more than 2,000 documents from before the state was founded in 1948. The very existence of the files had been kept a secret until recently; 125 files dated back to the 1800s. One-fifth of the files deemed most sensitive were excluded from the disclosure. The oldest item, a Foreign Ministry document entitled "Parker Report," dated back to 1821. Documents from most ministries appeared in the catalog, with the exception of the Defense Ministry (aside from one cache of records produced during Israel's first, short-lived occupation of Gaza in 1956), the military, the Mossad, and the Shin Bet security service. Almost three quarters of the files came from the Israel Police (28.2 percent), the Foreign Ministry (24.2 percent), and the Prime Minister's Office (21 percent).⁸⁹

In early October 2018, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu announced his intention to extend the secrecy of information stored in security service archives from 70 to 90 years, including materials contained in the Shin Bet and Mossad archives, the archives of the Atomic Energy Commission, nuclear research centers, the Institute for Biological Research, and the Army Intelligence Division. They included records about the Deir Yassin massacre in April 1948. [See also NCH Annual Report 2010]. The Supreme Council of Archives, a body within the Israel State Archives that advised the Office of the Prime Minister on matters of classification, recommended against extending the classification period by more than five years. In December 2018, an amendment to the classification regulations stipulated to effectively keep the documents secret for 90 years. The existence of the amendment was revealed publicly for the first time on 4 February 2019, when Netanyahu's office said that its goal was to protect Israel's assets and informants who remain alive, or their descendants in foreign countries. In 2010, Netanyahu had signed a similar order extending the confidentiality of archives from 50 to 70 years.⁹⁰

⁸⁸ Chaim Levinson & Noa Landau, "How a Right-wing NGO's Agenda Became Israeli Government Policy," Haaretz (12 October 2018); Akevot, Ad Kan's smear campaign against Akevot Institute (August 2018).

⁸⁹ Asaf Shalev, "More than 100 Files from the 1800s Are Still Classified in Israel's Archives," +972 Magazine (15 February 2019).

See also Argentina, Ecuador, Poland, Romania.

ITALY

Previous Annual Report entries: 1998, 2001, 2003, 2008, 2010, 2012, 2016–2018.

On 10 December 2018, the police said they were investigating the theft of 20 memorial plaques commemorating the Holocaust. The small brass plaques—dedicated to members of a Jewish family, De Consiglio—were dug out from Rome's pavements during the night.⁹¹

In mid-May 2019, history teacher Rosa Maria Dell'Aria ([1955]–) was suspended for fifteen days on half pay after an investigation by the education ministry's provincial authority in Palermo, Sicily, found that she had not "supervised" her students' work at Vittorio Emanuele III school. In January 2019, two students, aged fifteen and sixteen, had made a video as part of a project for International Holocaust Remembrance Day comparing current events to anti-Semitic persecution. The video compared a security decree drafted by rightist interior minister and leader of the political party Lega, Matteo Salvini, and approved by parliament in December 2018, to Benito Mussolini's 1938 racial laws. The 1938 racial laws led to the expulsion of 6,500 Jewish schoolchildren and about 700 professors, many of whom were deported to concentration camps. Salvini's law left hundreds of asylum seekers in legal limbo by removing humanitarian protection for those not eligible for refugee status. Many, including thousands of students and members of the opposition Democratic Party, protested the suspension. Marco Anello, the head of the education ministry's provincial authority in Palermo, defended the suspension: "Comparing the security decree to a racial law means offending not only Salvini but also the Italian state."⁹²

⁹⁰ "Netanyahu Bans Publication of Archive Materials on Deir Yassin Massacre," Palestine News Network (4 October 2018); Joseph Fitsanakis, "Israel Extends Intelligence Document Classification Period to 90 Years," IntelNews (6 February 2019).

⁹¹ Paul Kirby, "Anti-Semitism Pervades European Life. Says EU Report," BBC News (10 December 2018).

